The prices of coffins, it is stated by undertakers, have grown higher and higher each year. The living are being literally pillaged through their love for the dead, and funerals have everywhere become exceedingly costly. It is asserted among undertakers that the growing popularity of incineration is due, in a large measure, to the great expense of a modern funeral. If incineration should become cheaper the coffin trust would have a dangerous rival.

TARS DESIRE CHANGE IN STYLE OF THEIR TOGS

JACK TARS of the United States have made such a protest against the headgear and blouse they wear ashore and on dress occasions aboard ship that to meet the clamor of the enlisted men the navy department has appointed a committee on changes in the uniforms.

Capt. Hugo Osterhaus, commander of the battleship Connecticut, is chairman of this committee. He has sent out a statement to the captains of all war ships in the north Atlantic squadron and to the commander of every ship in the service, asking for suggestions.

The enlisted men are desirous of obtaining coats and visor caps. Many of them want the wide, flaring trousers, the world-round, immemorial cut peculiar to sailor men, changed to the ordinary pattern, but the principal grievance relates to the blouses and the old-fashioned pancake caps. These caps are said by all seamen to be useless on a windy day, as they cannot be kept on the head.

The protest over the blouse is considered justified. In the first place the seamen object to the wide collar which blows up around their ears on windy days. They want shorter neck-arches and coats cut like those of the marines.

Should the sailors' demands be granted seamen will wear coats for the first time in the history of the American navy. The proposed changes would affect the 30,000 seamen in the navy and would entail a large outlay. It is believed that a change in the trousers will not be made at once, but that the tars will be supplied with coats and visor caps.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

POSTMAN TO POSTMASTER

From letter carrier to postmaster of New York city, the most important position in the postal service outside of Washington. Such has been the remarkable career of Edward M. Morgan, whom President Roosevelt recently selected as successor to William R. Willcox who resigned to become a member of the new York city public utilities commission.

For 34 years he has been an employe of the post office, for nine years he has been assistant postmaster and the virtual head of the great organization which handles more mail than any other post office in America.

Mr. Morgan was born in Marshall, Mich., November 16, 1855. He entered the local postal service as a carrier July 1, 1873, continuing in that branch of the service for five years, after which he was transferred to the clerical force. His advancement in this branch of the service was rapid, and within a year after he was transferred to it he became chief clerk of Branch B. He continued in that position for four years, winning the regard of his superiors by his marked ability as an organizer, and careful attention to his duties, and in January, 1883, he was made superintendent of Branch I.

In this position Mr. Morgan displayed marked ability as an organizer, and the manner in which the affairs of the station were conducted attracted such general attention that when the local authorities decided to reorganize Branch E, where the discipline had become lax, the task was at once given to him

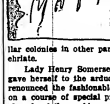
Mr. Morgan filled that position until July, 1889, when Postmaster Van Cott appointed him general superintendent of city delivery. This is regarded as one of the most important positions in the service, involving the control of the entire delivery system and the supervision of the carrier force.

STRONG FRIEND OF KOREA

Homer B. Hulbert, who has come to America to plead with this country to stand by its old treaty of special friendship for Korea, is one of the most interesting men in the far east. He is an American born, and when to say, the man who is upholding the Japanese side of the controversy, W. D. Stevens, adviser to the Mikado's government, is an American, too. It has been a duel between these two men, and although Hulbert is beaten for the time being he is a man who does not know the meaning of the word surrender.

Mr. Hulbert was a missionary and was sent to Korea by the United States government when that country made an appeal for teachers. An active man of nervous temperament, his duties as teacher did not occupy all his time and he turned to literature. He published numerous educational works in the vernacular and two books in English on Korea. He also edited the Korean Review, a little blue-backed monthly very similar in appearance to the publications gotten out by some of the university undergraduates.

ONCE POWER IN LABOR WORLD



Terence V. Powderly, once the leading figure in the labor world as organizer and general master workman of the Knights of Labor, the arbiter of loournerable labor disputes and a power in politics where the labor vote was concerned, has disappeared so completely from public view of late years that when his name appeared in an answer to a frivolous request for information by an actress seeking advertising, most people had forgotten that he has been for years filling a comfortable government job as chief of the bureau of information for the immigration department.

His was a spectacular career. At the age of 13 he began to earn his own living as a switch tender, and by reason of his expert mechanic. At the age of 29 he was elected mayor of Scranton, Pa., on the labor ticket and was twice reelected later. He was master workman of the Knights of Labor from 1879 to 1893, and during that time he was a power to be reckoned with, not only in labor disputes but in politics as well. After he retired from the organization it was soon disrupted. In such high esteem was he held in those days that he was elected as honorary member of the G. A. R. posts in 17 different states.

It was regarded by many as inconsistent that whyle Powderly was grand master of the Knights of Labor, which enlisted lawyers from membership, he was actually studying law by mail, but so it was, and he was admitted to the bar of Pennsylvania in 1894, and to the bar of the supreme court in 1901.

In 1897 he was given a government billet taking the author of "Thirty Years of Labor" and many other economic works, the man who had controlled scores of thousands of workingmen, subsided from public view, reappearing only for a moment in 1902 with a scheme for a co-operative mining company in Trenton, N. J. This was to be the forerunner of a number of other cooperative schemes, but it probably never materialized, for nothing more has been heard of it, and Powderly is still holding a government job.

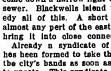
LADY SOMERSET RETIRES

The retirement of Lady Henry Somerset from active public life is an event of great interest to women, not only in the United States, where she is widely known, but also in Great Britain and among women of other foreign lands.

Lady Somerset signalized her birthday anniversary recently by taking up the author-ity permanently at the Duxhurst Farm Colony, near Reigate, England, where are brought daily women and girls of the underworld of London police courts, for possible reclamation. The population of the colony is entirely feminine. It was through Lady Henry Somerset's initiative and enterprise about ten years ago that this model colony was started. It has been so successful that the British government has established a number of similar colonies in other parts of the kingdom for similar treatment of the unchriate.

Lady Henry Somerset is 57 years of age. It is just 20 years since she gave herself to the arduous labors of current social reforms. For this she renounced the fashionable set, of which she had been the life, and entered on a course of special preparation, taking lessons in elocution, studying at close hand the problems of the poor and degenerate, and giving herself with all her large wealth and influence to the work for humanity. She was closely associated with Frances Willard during the last seven years of that great reformer's life.

Gleanings of Gotham



Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

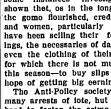
NEW YORK.—Blackwells island, of which is known the world over as the site of New York's penal institutions, poorhouse and city hospitals, may soon be a thing of the past. It has become too small to accommodate the hordes of petty criminels and miserably poor and sick of the metropolis and large establishments are proposed somewhere outside of the city, where the prisoners and patients may be made in a measure self-supporting by farm work. In place of the prisons and poorhouses will be established pleasure palaces for the teeming millions of the great east side. Within another year the great Blackwells island bridge over the East river will be opened for use and this will render access to the island easy for the east side poor. The proposition is to turn the big prison and almshouse buildings into buildings for pleasure and make the Island a popular resort to be owned and conducted entirely by the city.

No city in the world possesses so many magnificent pleasure grounds as New York and yet there is no city in the world where so large a proportion of its population is unable to reach these fresh air spots. To Central park is a five-cent care fere. To Coney Island is a 25-cent heet ride. To any of the resorts about the city the fare is prohibitive to a majority of the residents of the east side, the people who are most shut in and who most need the benefit of a little air that does not come down a narrow light well or up a sewer. Blackwells island would remedy all of this. A short walk from almost any part of the east side would bring it into close connection.

Already a syndicate of politicians has been formed to take the island off the city's hands as soon as it is ready to vacate. This syndicate proposes to cut the place into town lots, erect great apartment houses all over it and make it another section of the east side. Greed and humanity have entered into a battle for possession of the desired plot and no person yet knows which will win the victory.

ROMANCE IN FASHIONABLE LIFE OF NEW YORK CITY

CONVERSATION in the fashionable clubs the other night had a touch of delightful excitement when the news went about that that general society favorite and "all round good fellow," Mr. Frenk Gray Griswold, and that charming and wealthy young widow, Mrs. Augustus Cass Canfield, were engaged to be married. Naturally, society everywhere will be tremendously interested in the news, but the engagement after all is in no sense a surprise to many men and women in society who have known of Mr. Griswold's admiration for and devotion to Mrs. Canfield.



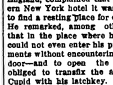
Their marriage is to be solemnized within the next few weeks on the continent, and soon afterward Mr. Griswold will bring his bride to New York and without fell will proceed immediately to Narragansett Pier, where his mother, Mrs. George Griswold, and his sister, Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, are spending the summer.

Mrs. Canfield is a decidedly beautiful, talented and gracious young woman, and there has been no more highly esteemed and popular hostess in society than she. She is a fine horsewoman, rides to the hounds, handles the ribbons with the skill of a man and will make a most congenial wife for Mr. Griswold, whose tastes, as all his friends know, also run in the way of horses and outdoor sports.

Mrs. Canfield, whose first husband, Mr. Augustus Cass Canfield, died more than three years ago in Aiken, S. C., when e member of the winter colony there, was before her marriage Miss Josephine Houghteling, of Chicago. She went abroad last spring, and has spent the greater part of the time in Paris and London.

Mr. Griswold is one of the best known bachelors in fashionable life in New York and is a great social favorite.

POLICY GAME REVIVED DESPITE RECENT CRUSADE



NOBODY ever can calculate, even roughly, how much money has been saved the poor of New York by the efforts of Norton Goddard, who spent thousands of dollars of his own money and devoted several years of his own time to wiping out the genre of policy, the meanest form of gambling in the city. It is to his great credit, too, that he provided the means for an unending fight against the vice.

Stringent as is the law which he got through the legislature, and desperately severe as was the campaign to hunt out the offenders, policy is such a profitable game to those who run it that it was certain it would spring up of intervals. So the Goddard anti-policy society has been busy ever since the great reform, and every now and then has detected and punished offenders. Recently, however, it has developed that policy playing has been growing astonishingly. The gamblers hove worked in the face of great dongers, for the penalties are severe, and had rumored many scores of East side tenements. In some instances investigation has shown that, on in the losing ago when the gomo flourished, credulous men and women, particularly the latter, have been selling their few belongings, the necessaries of daily life, and even the clothing of their children—for while there is not much need in this season—to buy slips with the hope of getting big earnings.

The Anti-Policy society has made many arrests of late, but it has been hard to fasten the crime on anyone, for it is apparent that the gamblers aro scattering the supervision, which heretofore was centralized, to lessen the chances of discovery.

SIMPLICITY TO BE RULE IN NEW GOTHAM HOTEL

THE farmer who, on his first visit to New York, had a room at the Waldorf-Astoria and later explained his failure to put his boots into the shoe closet so the night porter could polish them while he slept by saying: "Gosh, I was afraid he'd gild 'em," doubtless was greatly impressed by the splendor of that famous hostelry; but it is conceivable that he had remained there long he would have been obsessed by that visional feast.

There has been more or less fault finding with the astonishingly magnificent decorations of most of the big New York hotels, and the new fiber of a large new one now being built has announced that the walls will be wholly devoid of paintings as well as other superfluous adornments.

It has been said by travelers that though the New York hotels are splendid they do not approximate to the idea of a normal dwelling place; in fact, that the managers seem to have made them as unhomelike as possible. Mr. Mallock, here recently from England, complained that in modern New York hotel it was impossible to find a resting place for eye or mind. He remarked, among other things, that in the place where he lodged he could not even enter his private apartment without encountering Art at the door—and to open the door was obliged to transfix the abdomen of Cupid with his latchkey.

The manager who says the hotel he is building will be undecorated is taking a long chance, because it is so radical for New York, and the result will be watched with interest.

SECRETARY ROOT FAST RECOVERING

REGAINING HIS HEALTH AND ENERGY AT WRESTLER MULDOON'S FARM.

No Occasion for Worry—Has Spent Three Weeks at Sanitarium Unknown to Public—Received Ons Visit from the President.

New York, Aug. 24.—Secretary of State Elihu Root, who has already spent three weeks at the farm-sanitarium of William C. Muldoon, ex-champion wrestler, near White Plains, taking Mr. Muldoon's course of athletic treatment for a severe attack of nervous exhaustion, expects to complete his cure in two weeks more. He is now well on the road to complete recovery, and all reason for apprehension about his health seems to have disappeared.

On the quiet farm among the West Chester hills, so secluded that the secretary of state was enabled to pass three weeks there and be visited by the president of the United States before his whereabouts were discovered by the public, Mr. Root has fleshed up, put on a healthy coat of tan, lost the drawn, worried look of the early summer, and will go back to Washington, as Mr. Muldoon phrases it, "the strongest member of the cabinet, not even barring Taft."

Now Full of Energy.

During the first two weeks of his stay he gained a pound a day, acquiring therewith such a stock of energy that he was able Friday to ride 18 miles, walk three miles and in addition to the usual course of exercise with the big medicine ball, box 15 vigorous minutes with Muldoon.

When visited Friday on the veranda of the Muldoon residence, his face showed good color, his eyes were clear and his hand steady. He looked a trifle tired but otherwise well. Mr. Root asked to be excused from talking about his health, but his appearance was a sufficient contradiction of the exaggerated reports of a complete breakdown. His physician visited him but left without making any arrangements for his return.

Had Nervous Exhaustion.

According to Mr. Muldoon, Secretary Root, when he arrived, was suffering from nervous exhaustion, the result of overwork and strain.

"His was very nervous," said the exathlete, "more so than I ordinarily care to see patients. His brain was tired; he was anxious about the world about things which never happened and never could happen. He was very weak then, and when he goes back he'll be the strongest member of the cabinet. He is taking a course of exercise suited to his age and strength and goes at his work with the energy you would expect from a man who has come to the front as he has. He knows something about boxing, too; seems to have learned it as a boy and never forgotten."

During his stay at White Plains, Mr. Root has been reading as much as possible from mental work. It was part of the agreement with Muldoon that no one should be allowed to see him except his secretary, his physician and Mrs. Root, and until Friday this rule had been rigidly lived up to—in favor of President Roosevelt, who during the first week of Mr. Root's stay motored over with his family to pay a brief call. Though no special effort had been made to secrecy, Mr. Root's presence had been quite well noticed. He had ridden almost daily with the other patients over the roads about White Plains, several times passing through the town, and had received his private secretary for the transaction of necessary state department business. His presence at the sanitarium became known through the filling at the local telegraph office of dispatches for the state department.

PEOPLE MUST BE RULERS.

President Says He Will Continue to Prosecute Rich Malefactors.

Provincetown, Mass., Aug. 21.—The laying of the cornerstone of the Cape Cod Pilgrims' Memorial monument here Tuesday gave President Roosevelt his first opportunity of the summer to break silence upon public questions, and the 40-minute speech which he delivered from a platform on top of Town Hill was one of vigor and directness upon matters of national importance.

The feature of his address was his advocacy of a national incorporation law and his stand in relation to violators of the law, especially corporations. With emphasis he declared that the administration would not waver in the determination "to punish wrong malefactors of great wealth." Continuing he said: "There will be no change in the policy we have steadily pursued; no let up in effort to secure the honest observance of the law, for I regard this contest as one to deter mine who shall rule this government —the people through their governmental agents, or a few ruthless and determined men whose wealth makes them particularly formidable because they hide behind the breastworks of corporate organization."

La Crosse Has "Boosting Day."

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 22.—Business was entirely suspended in La Crosse to-day to give the people an opportunity to get together for a monster "Boosting" celebration. Fifteen thousand people attended "Booster" exercises at Myrick park.

WILL EXPOSE BIG GRAFT

PENNSYLVANIA EX-OFFICIAL TO MAKE CONFESSION.

Dead Senator Implicated by Statement Given Out by James M. Shumaker.

Johnstown, Pa., Aug. 22.—James M. Shumaker, former superintendent of public buildings and grounds at Harrisburg and implicated by the report of the capitol investigation commission, has declared that he will make full confession of all he knows in connection with the capitol graft scandal. He claims the manipulation of funds was engineered by a high official of the state at Harrisburg to cover up a shortage of the state treasury.

Shumaker lives in Johnstown. When he was subpoenaed to appear before the capitol investigating commission he pleaded illness and remained secluded in his house. Now he is apparently ready to divulge important secrets when the trials begin in September.

Shumaker's statement, given out by one of his closest personal and political friends, is as follows:

"I am going to tell the witness stand to tell everything. I will not keep back a single secret, and when I get through I will show that a man high in official life in Harrisburg ought to go to the penitentiary.

"I have committed an wrong. The probers may be after me, but I will go after the man they are protecting. I will not spare him. I am going to tell everything I know. I do not propose to suffer for the sins of a scoundrel who knew the colossal graft, but refused to stop it, as I urged.

"I know what the graft was for, that it was to cover a treasury shortage, and save the name of a former United States senator from Pennsylvania, now dead. I am anxious to go on the stand and the sooner the better for me.

"I want to gat myself right before the people, for I am an innocent man."

MORE TROUBLE IN FRISCO.

New Police Commissioners Named—Old Ones Resist Removal.

San Francisco, Aug. 22.—Mayor Taylor Wednesday appointed as police commissioners to displace those grossly incompetency in office. The three appointees went at once to the office of the county clerk to be sworn in.

A. D. Cutler, vice president of the Metropolitan Trust company, will be appointed to the fourth vacancy in the board as soon as created by the removal of William H. Hagerty, who the has has evaded service of notification of ouster. It is reported Hagerty intends to leave for San Pedro, Cal., and Moore "stand pat" on their declaration that they will recognize no board to function other than the courts, and that they and Chief Dinan will resist with force any attempt to oust them and take possession of the board's records.

LABORITES MAY RETALIATE.

Likely to Sue the Employers' Association for Conspiracy.

Washington, Aug. 22.—Following a meeting of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor Wednesday, President Gompers said that most probably the federation would bring a counter-suit against the National Manufacturers' association, headed by J. W. Van Cleave, charging that body with conspiracy.

He stated that the association recently met in New York with the object of devising means for the injury of organized labor and that it has been made evident that there is to be concerted effort against that interest.

Mr. Gompers in an interview charged that the recent Van Cleave injunction proceedings against boycotting and publication of unfair lists were instigated by the Manufacturers' association which, he said, recently decided to raise $1,500,000 to crush organized labor.

INSANE PRISONERS ARE SHOT.

Desperate Outbreak in Clinton Prison at Dannemora, N. Y.

Schnectady, N. Y., Aug. 22.—One of the worst outbreaks among the insane prisoners in the history of Clinton prison at Dannemora occurred Wednesday night. As a result Isaac DuBois, one of the inmates, is dead, shot through the heart by a guard.

The insane prisoners were being marshalled for bed when, at a given signal, they rushed into the two big lower dormitories and slammed the doors in the faces of the guards. Having locked the doors they proceeded to set about making their escape by smashing the doors and sawing the bars. The guards were hastily rallied to use rifles and pistols and it was after midnight before the uprising was quelled.

Try to Dynamite Train.

Cripple Creek, Col., Aug. 22.—An attempt was made about noon Thursday to blow up the incoming Short Line passenger train with dynamite at St. Peter's Dome, midway between Cripple Creek and Colorado Springs. Every window in the last car was broken.

ROMANCE CLOSES IN DOUBLE CRIME

NEW YORK MAN MURDERS HIS WIFE AND THEN COMMITS SUICIDE.

Tragedy After Quarrel—Julius Teich Sought Girl Over Two Continents, Found and Married Her, Only to Slay Her in Fit of Anger.

New York, Aug. 22.—After a search that lasted five years and covered 15,000 miles on two continents, Julius Teich found the girl he loved, induced her to marry him, only to kill her in a fit of anger after two months of wedded life and then, repentant, to take his own life.

Pistol shots Wednesday aroused the occupants of the apartment house in West One Hundred Twenty-sixth street where Teich and his bride lived, and when the police, who were hastily summoned, broke into the flat they found both Teich and his wife unconscious. Both died within a few minutes.

Romance Began in Germany.

Emily Hierer lived in Germany with her parents when she first met Teich, who was a silk weaver. Teich fell in love with the girl and wanted her to marry him. But he was possessed of a violent temper and Emily feared him. Her parents also objected to the marriage. But Teich was insistent so the girl left Germany secretly to escape him and came to America.

This was five years ago. For two years Teich searched Germany for her but failed to find her. Then her parents admitted to him that she was in America but refused to tell him where. Nothing daunted, the young man came to America and renewed his search. He learned New York for months but failed to find her. Then he went to Minneapolis, St. Louis, Philadelphia and Scranton where he thought the girl had friends, but without result.

Found Emily in New York.

He returned to New York a few months ago and accidentally met Emily on the street. She was living there with an aunt and, in spite of her aunt's objection, Emily finally consented to marry the man who had been so faithful in his search for her. They were married two months ago.

Neighbors in the apartment house say that there was a quarrel in the Teich apartment Wednesday morning because Emily refused to get up to prepare for the breakfast Julius had prepared. There were sharp words and a pistol shot. Then pleading words for forgiveness from Julius, followed by another shot. Then the police broke in the door and hurried the unconscious man and woman to a hospital, where both died.

EDDY CASE SUDDENLY ENDS.

"Next Friends" File Motion to Dismiss Their Suit.

Concord, N. H., Aug. 22.—A sudden, though not wholly unexpected, ending of the masters' hearing in connection with the suit to equity brought by relatives for an accounting of the property of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, leader of the Christian Science faith, came in the superior courtroom here Wednesday.

Former Senator William E. Chandler, senior counsel for the relatives, or "next friends," announced to the board of masters that they had filed a motion with the superior court to dismiss their action.

Cholera in China.

Berlin, Aug. 23.—A special dispatch from Shanghai says that cholera has broken out among the Chinese there and that several Europeans have succumbed to the disease. Comprehensive preventive measures have been adopted in the foreign quarter. Several cities of Chinese and Japanese coast towns are infected, but the spread of cholera to Europe through ocean steamers is regarded as improbable.

Morgan Home from Europe.

New York, Aug. 22.—J. Pierpont Morgan arrived here from Europe on the steamer Oceanic.

MORE MONEY IN LOW FARES

EFFECT OF THE TWO-CENT LAW IN MINNESOTA SHOWN.

Passenger Revenues of Railways Show Marked Increase Except in Three Instances.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 24.—Though the injunction suits now in the federal court in which the two-cent law has been made, and in anticipation of trouble, Attorney General Young and his assistants have just completed figures covering the passenger law that are startling.

The figures are the roads' own compilations, furnished at the request of the railway and warehouse commission, and show that the two-cent passenger law, instead of being confiscatory, is directly the reverse. The figures have furnished the commission are the passenger revenues for the months of May and June, and compared with an average two months' business for the previous year, show a marked increase for all roads with the exception of three, the Soo, Minneapolis & St. Louis and the Great Western.

Figures are given for local passenger business only, and entire Minnesota business which includes state and interstate business, starting and ending in Minnesota. It is the former, though, that will enter into the state's argument, which will be made in relation of the arguments of the railways which will be heard in the federal court before Judge Lochren September 3.

Topeka, Kan., Aug. 24.—Frank Grat tan, newly appointed attorney for the state board of railway commissioners, is out in a statement favoring the calling of a special session of the legislature by Gov. Hoch for the purpose of the passing of a flat two-cent-a-mile passenger fare in the state of Kansas. Recently Mr. Grattan held that it would be good policy for Kansas to await the action of other states where a test case is in the courts before ordering a two-cent fare.

CANNON TO QUIT THE WEED.

Speaker Says He Is Trying to Stop Smoking Cigars.

Plattsburg, N. Y., Aug. 24.—Speaker Cannon is here rusticating and, according to his own unwinking statement, struggling with the demon habit of smoking. For 40 years the speaker has been smoking from 12 to 15 cigars a day. He says that now he smokes three or four, but refrains from saying how many more.

Although the speaker is seen to smoke only three or four cigars a day, his friends believe that he will go back on his record from the fact that he disappears at frequent intervals during the day in the direction of the woods. The really wise ones say that he will quit smoking all right—when he is dead.

CORTELYOU'S NEW MONEY PLAN.

To Deposit Funds Each Week at Points Throughout Country.

New York, Aug. 24.—Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou announced Friday a new plan of depositing government funds in New York, Boston and other cities to afford relief to the money market in the approaching crop movement period.

Mr. Cortelyou will, commencing next week, place each week, at each point in the country, a certain amount of funds, government funds to such an amount as he deems sufficient to prevent an acute monetary stringency and possible panic when the demand for money is greatest at the height of the crop moving period.

New Professor for Notre Dame.

South Bend, Ind., Aug. 24.—Dr. James C. Monoghan, of Washington, D. C., has been appointed to the chair of economics at Notre Dame university. He is at present chief of the consular reports of the bureau of statistics at Washington. Dr. Monoghan Friday telegraphed his acceptance of the appointment.

GOV. VARDAMAN IS ASKED FOR TROOPS

THREE WESTERN UNION OFFICES IN MISSISSIPPI SAID TO NEED PROTECTION.

Men Driven from Two—Citizens of Greenwood Threaten Manager—Small Challenges Companies to Admit Committee to Operating Rooms.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 23.—Supt. Terhune of the Western Union Telegraph company Thursday appealed to Gov. Vardaman to furnish protection for the offices of the Western Union at Holly Springs, Grenada and Greenwood, stating that operators have been forced to quit at the two offices first named and citizens of Greenwood are offering threats and indignities to the manager at that place.

The governor replied that Supt. Terhune should appeal to the courts, and if they are unable to enforce the law he will adopt special measures for protection.

Small Challenges Companies.

Chicago, Aug. 23.—Officials of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies were called upon Thursday to prove to the public their oft-repeated claims that they are handling all their business satisfactorily.

President Small of the Telegraphers' union said the companies were not telling the truth, and he challenged them to throw open their operating rooms for inspection by an impartial committee of business men, that the public might know the real facts about existing conditions.

Mr. Small says such a committee will find the operating rooms filled with managers of branch offices, company officials and dummies, with here and there a "real operator," and that only such business as makes the best showing of results—the lickers and the work of the great business houses —is being cared for, while the public at large is not getting service.

Help for the Strikers.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—President Sylvester J. Small of the Commercial Telegraphers' union received assurance from President H. B. Perham of the Order of Railway Telegraphers' union Wednesday that the financial support of the railroad men had already been asked.

President Perham Tuesday addressed a letter to the members of the union requesting a voluntary subscription to aid the commercial men now on strike. He told President Small that the first request for assistance would yield at least $100,000.

Can Last Until Dec. 1.

The strike leader at noon Wednesday declared that he had his forces on strike were able to hold out until Dec. 1, without further financial assistance. Local officers of the union received requests from several railroads asking for experienced operators. Many of the telegraphers have been offered more lucrative positions.

Telegrams and letters from brokers in all parts of the country are coming in that union headquarters concerning their action in securing contracts with the broker firms and preserving the brokers' leased wire system.

Many Railway Positions Open.

Twice as many railway telegraph positions as there are striking telegraphers must be filled before Jan. 1, according to estimates made by officials of the Commercial Telegraphers' union. The estimates are based upon a new interstate commerce law going into effect at the beginning of 1908 under which the time on duty of railway telegraphers is shortened to a maximum of nine hours a day.

This law, it is generally conceded, will necessitate an increase of from 50 to 60 per cent in the force of railway telegraphers, without any large number of men, except commercial telegraphers, now available to fill the new positions.

Mob Attacks Postal Office.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 21.—An armed mob attacked the office of the Postal Telegraph company at Ashley, Ariz., early Tuesday and broke every window in the building with a rain of bullets. The lives of four of the employes were endangered, but so far as known no one was injured.

"BLACK HAND" KILLS TWO MEN.

Double Murder Committed on the Streets of Coaldale, Pa.

Coaldale, Pa., Aug. 24.—A double murder for which the "Black Hand" is held responsible was committed on the streets of this place Friday. While Frank Peknolas and Samuel Ambrose were walking together along Front street they were fired upon and several men and before they could offer resistance they were stabbed to death. Peknolas' throat was cut and Ambrose received a knife wound that pierced his heart. It is known that Peknolas and Ambrose had expressed fear of vengeance at the hands of enemies.

"Union" Pastors Get $5 for Funerals.

Coffeyville, Kan., Aug. 22.—The ministers of this city have formed a "union" and adopted a uniform price of five dollars to be exacted from persons not members of their congregations for a funeral sermon.

Berkshire Hog Sells for $6,500.

Janesville, Wis., Aug. 24.—"Star Masterpiece," a Berkshire hog formerly owned by the Wisconsin state university, was sold at the Whitehall, Ill., hog sale Friday to residents of Kirksville, Ill., for $6,500.

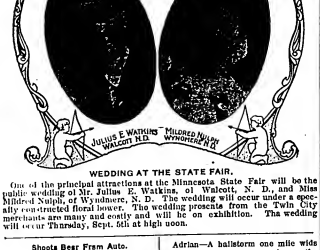
MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

After Standard Oil.

St. Paul.—Within a few days the State of Minnesota will institute proceedings against the Standard Oil company in an attempt to oust the company from the state because of alleged violations of the Hinton anti-discrimination law passed last winter. Attorney General E. T. Young is authority for the statement that the suit will be instituted in a few days in the district court of Ramsey or Hennepin county.



Since the filing of the complaint with Secretary of State Schmal in May an investigation has been made quietly of the evidence which could be produced in the event of the suit being brought. The investigation included analyses of the grade of oil sold at various points in which it is alleged there was a discrimination in prices, and of the other evidence which could be produced to prove the sale of the oil at each of the places at the various prices alleged in the complaint.

Cistern Blew Up.

Mrr James McWalters, 156 Russell avenue north, was the victim of an unusual accident during the recent storm. She is of the Minneapolis city hospital and probably will die.

During the storm Mrs. McWalters noticed that the cistern under the house was running over. She raised up a trap door in the kitchen floor to investigate. A can of gasoline which had been in the kitchen had leaked and the oil ran down into the cistern and was floating on the water.

Mrs. McWalters struck a match in order to look into the cistern. The match burned her fingers and she dropped it. There was an explosion which nearly wrecked the kitchen. The flames burst up in Mrs. McWalters' face and she was badly burned about the head, shoulders and arms.

WEDDING AT THE STATE FAIR.

One of the principal attractions at the Minnesota State Fair will be the public wedding of Mr. Julius E. Watkins, of Walcott, N. D., and Miss Mildred Naujok, of Wyndmere, N. D. The wedding will occur under a specially constructed floral bower. The wedding presents from the Twin City merchants are many and costly and will be on exhibition. The wedding will occur Thursday, Sept. 6th at high noon.

Shoots Bear From Auto.

Duluth.—Victor Huot and Edward Fleckrant, two business men of Duluth, went bear hunting in an automobile to the blueberry patches on the Miller Trunk road, near the Whiteface and Fairface rivers. They got one bear near the Fairface river.

They were moving slowly along the road in their machine, when a large bear was seen approaching, some distance from them. Mr. Huot was handling the machine. He tooted the horn when the bear was sighted and the animal, with a start of surprise, reared upon its hind legs in the road. The machine, at the same moment, came to a stop.

Without getting out of his seat, Mr. Fleckrant raised his rifle and shot the bear. The distance was about fifty yards.

NEWS NOTES.

Virginia.—Two men were killed and one injured as the result of a broken rail on the main line of the Great Northern near here into yesterday.

Duluth.—Allen R. Chamberlain, a department manager for the Panton & White store, fell over dead in a row-boat on the Duluth harbor while out in company with his seven-year-old son. The boy rowed his dead father to the shore.

St. Paul.—State Treasurer C. C. Dinbart received the June settlement from the county treasurer of Big Stone county. The amount was $192,965.05, of which $190,138.02 was the regular June collections and $2,827.06 was collections of amounts due on sales of state lands in that county.

Wanamingon.—Olaf Haugen, a graduate of the Minnesota agricultural school, had an accident while working on his father's farm here. He was tripped from a load of bundles in such a way as to fracture his left arm.

Sauk Center.—George Kopala, a wealthy farmer, while shooting chickens with a revolver accidentally shot himself in the leg, causing a serious wound.

Little Falls.—William Crossfield, a resident of the west side, killed his dog last night because the animal had become infected with rabies.

Partner Was Killed.

Tower.—G. R. Tyrkling, of Duluth, had a harrowing experience in the woods, about thirty miles from this place, during a recent storm. Mr. Tyrkling is a land locater and with Joseph Johnson was making a trip in search of land.

"I was taking Johnson to see some claims in that territory," said Mr. Tyrkling, "and we were about ten miles from our destination, when a storm suddenly arose. We pitched our tent and got inside and had only just been comfortably seated when a flash of lightning, followed by a terrific crash of thunder, rendered me unconscious. When I regained my consciousness I was unable to move a muscle and was stretched out full length on my back. My head was turned so that I could see Johnson in the same position. I realized at once that he was dead. I thought that would be my fate in a few moments.

"The bolt struck us shortly after noon, and it was not until midnight that I began to feel the blood circulating through my limbs. About 2 o'clock in the morning I was able to rise to my feet and walk around a little. I made my way back to Tower. Before I left I piled stones all around the tent so that wild animals could not devour the body of my friend."

A NARROW ESCAPE.

She raised her blond head from his shoulder for a moment.

"Do you believa that exercise and lotions and toilet preparations will improve a woman's looks?" she asked.

He pressed her blonde curls back upon his chest.

"They couldn't improve the looks of some women," he said.

"Whose," she asked.

"Well, yours and Violet Cochrane's, for instance," he replied thoughtlessly.

"I don't understand you," she said, raising her head for the second time and chilling him with a look. "We are not at all alike."

"I mean," he replied, turning her head for the second time and thinking quickly, "that your looks couldn't be improved because they are perfect as they are, and that hers couldn't be improved because no amount of work could make her pretty."

She sighed a great sigh of contentment and relief, while he drew a deep breath.

How He Did It.

"So he proposed to you while you were in swimming together? How did he do it?"

"Well, I was wading out where it was begining to be pretty deep, and suddenly I feared that I was going to be carried off my feet, and I shrieked."

"Yes?"

"He happened to be near, and, reaching over, he asked, 'Won't you give me your hand?' It was very sudden, of course, but I had really liked him from the moment he first looked into my eyes."—Chicago Record-Hereld.

His Chief Reliance.

Professor (to graduating class in college)—Young men, there is one more question I would like to ask, and that is, what books have helped you most in your struggiee for an education?

Young Scadds (promptly speaking up from the foot of the class)—Dad's check-book has helped me about as much as any of 'em so far.—Judge.

Suggestion far Bachsiars.

William—Well, old man, I haven't seen you for an age. And how do you find matfimony suits you?

THIRST WAS FIRST THOUGHT.

Familiar Sound Cause of Young Man's Bad Break.

John C. Risley of Detroit, at the New York convention of the International Society of Hotel and Restaurant Employes, was discussing notes for its condemnation of the tipping system —said to a raporter:

"The point is this: that we waiters get rich off our tips. The public is very ignorant in this matter. When I think of its dense ignorance I am reminded of a political meeting I attended last April. There was a chap at this meeting who knew nothing of parliamentary procedure, and, besides that, he was half full. Well, in the course of the meeting there was a lot of excitement and shouting. It grew worse and worse. The chairman, in the end, had to hammer on the table and yell:

"'Order! Order!'

"Peer for me,' said the ignorant young man."

FOR SELFISH ENDS.

The Efforts Being Made by the American Medical Association.

The Political activity of the American Medical Association has become so pronounced as to cause comment in political circles especially as the association is the head of Doctors of the "Regular" or Allopathic school, of which the Association is chiefly composed. The passage of many of such laws as will not only prevent the sale of so-called "Patent" medicines, but will restrict the practice of medicine and healing to the "schoole" now recognized. This in many states would prevent the growing practice of Osteopathy, and in nearly avery state would prevent the healers of the various Science and mental science belief from practicing those sclences in which the faith of so many intelligent people is so deeply rooted.

The American Medical Association has a "Committee on Legislation," and the committee has correspondents in practically every township — some 16,000 correspondents in all. The committee met last session of the American Medical Association held in June of this year expressed a hope that a large number of physicians then heretofore will offer themselves as candidates for Congress at the next opportunity. In its annual report this Committee said: "To meet the growing demands of the movement, however, particularly in the work of active participation in State legislation le undertaken, a larger executive committee has been employed."

This is almost tha first time in the history of the United States that any professional class has frankly avowed the purpose of capturing legislatures and dominating legislation in their own selfish interests.

The American Medical Association has about 65,000 members of whom 17,000 are "fully constituted members" and the rest are 'members because of their affiliation with state or local societies. The Association owns real estata in Chicago valued at $111,781.91 and its total assecte are $291,567.89. The liabilities, at the time of the annual report which was made at the June meeting, amounted to only $12,000. The excess of assets over liabilitiee is increasing at the rate of about $30,000 a year, and the purpose of the committee is to control absolutely the field of medicine, and by crushing all competitione by accurring the passage of prohibitive legislation, compel all of the people of the United States to pay a doctor's fee every time they most simple remedy is needed.

Deaths from X-Rays.

The death of Dr. Gilman, a surgeon of Rochester, from a disease due to the constant use of the X-rays makes the fourth victim to the use of this form of this cause, says the Chistian Advocate.

The others were an assistant of Thomse Edison, a Boston physician and a woman of San Francisco named Fleischmann. In the case of Dr. Weigel since 1904, when his right hand and all but tha thumb and a finger of the left hand were removed, there had been four operations in trying to savo his life. The first removed a part of the right shoulder; then a part of the muscles covering the right breast.

Mystery completely envelops the cause of death, the disease being unknown to medicel science, though it is believed to involve some great principia of life. Dr. Weigal was president of the Rochester Academy of Medicine and the American Orthopaedic society.

Punctured His Eloquence.

A lawyer in Johnstown, N. Y., while defending a little boy who had been arrested for stealing, by making a surreptitious entrance under the fair gronnde fence, drew for the jury a most pathetic picture of the prisoner's "poor old widowed mother with the tears coursing down her face and on her gray head bowed in sorrow at the thought of her little boy being incarcerated." The young attorney closed in at this point with "Please, sir, Mr. Lawyer, my mother ain't a widow."

"Shut up, there, you!" said the lawyer. "I'm trying this case, not you."—Law Notes.

Horrible Example.

"My dear," said Mrs. Strongmind, "I want you to accompany me to the town hall to-morrow evening."

"What for?" growled the meek and lowly other half of the combine.

"I am to lecture on the 'Dark Side of Married Life,'" explained Mrs. S., "and I want you to sit on the platform and pose as one of the illustrations."

AIR FLEET FOR ARMY.

NEW GIANT WAR BALLOON IS FIRST OF SERIES.

Made for Signal Service Department and is Largest in United States—Training Men to Acquire "Balloon Eye."

Boston.—The army is at last to have a formidable aerial fleet. It has just been made known that the giant war balloon completed a few weeks ago for the signal corps is but the first of a series of war balloons of great size to be manufactured under the direction of Brig. Gen. James Allen, the chief signal officer.

The new war balloon is the largest aerial craft ever ocen in the United States. The nearly globular gas envelope is 54 feet in diameter, holds 78,000 cubic feet of gas and is made of 2,700 separate pieces of a new combination of linen and percale, celected not only hecouse of superior durability but because it best resists the actinic rays of the sun.

Double etrength in the netting has been effected by making the meshes only half as large as hitherto, the entire netting weighing 280 pounds. The car carries the full crew of four men and an additional weight of 1,000 pounds. It is six feet long, five feet wide and four and one-half feet high.

A novel feature of the new balloon is the "ripping strip," 25 feet long, running down the side. When this is jerked a seam, so to speak, is opened in the side and completo deflation is effected in a half minute. This will be of great edvantage in quick field transfers, when the balloon, having been discovered by the enemy must be hurried out of the zone of danger. All of the gas having been let out in half a minute, it would then be a matter of a few minutes more to completely pack the envelope in the car and place the latter aboard tha waiting balloon wegon.

The new series of giant war balloons are to be used for instruction, service tests and experiments, and have not been designed primarily for war duty. Experience has proved that it requiree consoderable training and practica to fit men for usefulness as balloon observers.

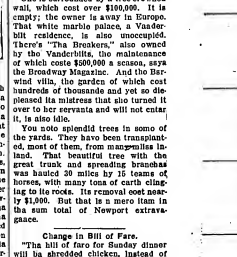
The effects upon men when raised aloft the first few times in a balloon car to a height of 1,000 feet or so frequently are of confused and distorted vision. A feeling akin to seasickness is often produced by the rocking motion. Objects on the earth's surface have an expanded appearance, and ideas of size and distances become distorted.

Hence the signal corps wishes to give each of its men as many practice flights as possible in order that they may acquire what is known as the "balloon eye."

U. S. Army Balloon Leaving House.

the balloon's ability to stay aloft after the wind has died down.

The new balloon and its prototypes will not be flown "captive" in the ordinary drills, but are designed for flights to great heights and over long distances.



Our new war balloons will be equipped with the most improved telephoto camera, which combins the functions of photographic and telescopic instruments. This instrument, first perfected by Dallmeyer, an English optician, was used by the Japanese as early as their war with China.

The new cam, with such cameras, be made of a fort, a city or a whole hittlefield from a height of two or three miles if the air is clear. It is discovered, too, that each comeras reveal many objects on the surface of the earth which escapes the naked eye.

BREATHING UNDER WATER.

Mystery of the Mermaid Scene in "Neptune's Daughter" Explained.

New York.—The management of the New York Hippodroms used a remarkably interesting device by which performeree engaged in the opectacia "Neptune's Daughter," were able to remain under water for a considerahla time, to appear above the surface at will and to disappear again. The principle is well shown in the combination of drawing and photograph. Each mermaid (there were in ecene each set of mermaids) had her own diving bell. Before the curtain rose the mermaide took their stand under the diving bella, which were then lowered into the water. When the signal came for a mermaid to rise to the surface she held her breath, ducked under the edge of the bell, a foot on the small platform shown at the side of the bell, and was raised to the surface by the attendant in the bell. The working of tha davice is easily illustrated. "Take a glass tumbler and plunge it into the water, with the mouth perpendicnlarly down. It will be found that very little water will rise in the tumbler; but as air is compressible, it could not entirely exclnda the water, which by its pressure contines the air a little." The bells are made of boilerplate, and have alchose connections, telephone and electric light. The mermaids are protected from cold by rubber under garments, and their grease-paints are waterproof. Directions to the performers are given by telephone and by red and green signal lights. Many have thought the scene an illusion produced by an arrangement of mirrors; this sionol enlighten them.

STRANGE WASTE OF WEALTH.

Palaces at Newport That Are Deserted by Their Owners.

Of all the appalling waste of wealth at Newport, there is none more inexplicable to the outside world than the leaving idle of enormous establishments that cost millions to build, and millions more to keep up. Some of these palaces bave surrounding lawns and gardens covering as much as ten acres; but most of them llo close together in bewildering succession. In Europe such magnificent structures would each own a spacious park of many hundred acres. The Newport villa is built, however, not for comfort, not in rhyme or reason, but purely for show. It is a stage setting, gorgeous surely, but suggesting neither solidity nor permanency.

One is surrounded by a tiara-crowned wall, which cost over $100,000. It is empty; the owner is away in Europe. That white marble palace, a Vanderbilt residence, is also unoccupied. There's "The Breakers," also owned by the Vanderbilts, the maintenance of which costs $500,000 a season, says the Broadway Magazine. And the Berwind villa, the garden of which cost hundreds of thousands and yet so displeased its mistress that she turned it over to her servants and will not enter it, is also idle.

You noto splendid trees in some of the yards. They have been transplanted, most of them, from manymiles inland. That beautiful tree with the great trunk and spreading branches was hauled 30 miles by 16 teams of horses, with many tons of earth clinging to its roots. Its removal cost her ly $1,000. But that is a mero item in tha sum total of Newport extravagance.

Change in Bill of Fare.

"Tha bill of fare for Sunday dinner will ha shredded chicken, instead of baked chicken," announced the old farmer to tha group of city boarders.

"Hm!" grunted one pessimist, "what caused the change?"

"What caused tha change? Why, by heck, one of tham thar racing automobiles just ran through my whola flock of poultry."

Had a Fellow Feeling.

"You were very lenient with that conductor," said the first passenger.

"Oh!" replied the other, "we're all liahls to maka mistakes."

"Ahl perhaps you were a conductor yourself once."

"No, sir; I'm a weather forecaster."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Do not forget that the biggest and best state fair ever held in Minnesota will be held next week at Hamlin, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis.

The county seat fight is again in the courts with round steep set for the October term. Thief River Falls are doing all they can to hurry matters and Red Lake Falls is doing what they can to delay matters, while the people up this way are not worring about it as it in no way harms our big crops.

The big crops in Red Lake and Polk counties this year are certainly worthy of stopping to look at by an eastern farmer that is on his way to Canada to take up land. We would suggest that emigration Agents keep the curtain of the ear window closed, for fear they take a look at our big crops and say, "I guess Northern Minnesota is good enough for me." Good by I get off here. Hope you will all have good luck in Canada."

The government engineers are surveying and taking levels for the proposed drainage ditches between the Clearwater and Red Lake Rivers this week, but no drainage can be done that will be of any practical benefit to this part of the country, until the channel of the Red Lake River is deepened. It is useless to dig ditches to run the water out of the river on to the land, for anyone can see that it comes out fast enough when the spring floods are on, without any help from ditches. The river above Highlanding has very low banks with meadow lands on both sides of it for miles, in fact all the way up to the outlet, and as soon as the river starts to rise it comes over everything these banks and the higher it rises the wider it gets, and last year the water ran from Red Lake River across into town of Deer Park and into the Clearwater river. Now if that use would ditches been of that time? But if the channel the Red Lake River had been four feet deeper the river would have taken care of the water and there would have been no flood.

Disappointed.

An aged colored man who had been in the News office sampled into the editorial rooms—yes, sampled is the word. He sat for several moments looking at the pneumatic tube stations up like horns of an orchestrion at the desks of the city and telegraph editors. Then was a burning sound as a copy boy pulled a lever, and the old man smiled as if expecting something pleasant, then took on a look of disappointment. A few minutes later the copy sent another piece of copy whizzing upstairs, and again the visitor's expression passed from satisfaction to disappointment, then bewilderment finally he accosted the telegraph editor.

"Scuse me, suh, but mout I ax yo' what dem things is?"

"Certainly he might and was outright glad.

"Well, I 'clah t' goodness!" he exclaimed. "I thought dey was some o' music box I'd'ertain yo' young w'ite whilst yo' worked?"—Baltimore American.

It Couldn't Be.

John Farrar quotes Tennyson as having related to him the remark of a lawyer who, after hearing a fine and plaintive sermon from an old style preacher, consoled his wife by saying: "Cheer up, my mind, Sally, that must be a lie. No constitution couldn't stand it."

America's Failings.

America has little of the economic ability of England, intellectual acuteness of Germany or social rhythm of France.—A. R. Winship in Armenia.

HIGHLANDING, WIN.

Our Town One Ahead.

Congressman Halvor Steenerson received a letter this morning from a lady living in one of the neighboring towns asking whether or not she is not entitled to a prize for having given birth to seven sons in succession and if so to advise her how to get it. In reply Congressman Steenerson recommends that she write a letter direct to the president who will doubtless see that the mother gets her reward.—Crookston Daily Journal.

Oh sucks that's nothing. We know a lady living right here in the town of Highlanding who has eight boys born in successsion, all living and healthy, the oldest being about 15 years old and the younges a little over one year old. No use to try to beat the town of Highlanding. Any prices addressed Eight boys, Sunbeam Minnesota will reach them.

A LESSON IN LAW.

Several Things the Philadelphia Drummer Didn't Know.

"Most of us think we know the law pretty well," said the Philadelphia drummer, "but I had a little experience to show me that there are several things in the statute books that I don't know. I was in a New England town and dropped into a barber shop to get shaved. There was only one barber, and he didn't look as if he knew putty. He turned out to be a pretty good shaver, however, and as I took a drink just before catching the stage I fell asleep in the chair. I slept for half an hour, and when I awoke he was through with me. The first thing I missed on getting out of the chair was my roll of money, next my watch, next my overcoat, next and lastly my scarfpin. I went for that barber for all I was worth, but he denied robbing me, and his face wore a smile. Then I got a gait on me and went to a lawyer's office.

"'Can you prove by a credible witness that you had $50 in cash when you entered the barber shop?' he asked.

"I couldn't.

"'Can you prove that your watch was taken in the shop instead of being lost on the street?'

"I couldn't.

"'Are you sure that you had your pin as you opened the door to enter?'

"I wasn't.

"'As to your overcoat,' continued the lawyer, 'have you a bill of sale of it, or can any one with you when you bought it? In other words, can you swear to the ownership in law of any particular overcoat?'

"I couldn't.

"'Then I can do nothing for you,' he said, and I went to a second lawyer to be told the same thing. I had left the shop without paying for my shave, and I was even told that the barber could arrest me for beating him out of 15 cents and have me fined $5. I believe I can quote Shakespeare correctly and distinguish between tea and sugar, but when it comes down to the law I am in it. It's too kinky."—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle

A Record "Break" (Billiard Term).

Master—What in thunder are you doing, John?

John—Well, sir, looks as if I was goin' to make a record break, sir!

Eyeglasses and Romances.

It is curious to observe that even the greatest realists do not venture to leave eyeglasses on their heroines. It is rather odd, too, seeing how many charming women do in real life wear them and are not debarred by them from the most dramatic careers and the most poignant emotions, but while the modern novelist has bestowed eyeglasses on everybody else he has not yet had the hardihood to put them on the nose of his heroine. Why?—Mrs. John Lane in London Outlook.

The Word Cigar.

The word cigar occurs in a German dictionary for the first time in 1813 and in the Dictionnaire of the French Academie in 1835. Kant used the word "zigarro" in 1798. In Spain at the present time the word "zigarro" means a cigarette, for which the Spaniards have the word "pitillos." Their name for a cigar is "un puro."

A PRIVATE DENTIST.

One Luxury This Man Will Have When He Gets Rich.

"If ever I get really rich," said the man with a toothache, "I shall have a private dentist. What do I want of a private dentist? Well, I'll tell you. I don't like to couch anyway to suffer from your teeth, but to me this suffering is made doubly distressing by the circumstances attendant upon my visit to the dentist's office.

"I arrive there to find the dentist somewhere away upon the teeth of some patient in his chair, and that always sort of disturbs me—to find somebody else being worked over and cared for while I wait in distress. I think I am entitled to all the care and sympathy. And maybe I find somebody else waiting, perhaps a friend of the person in the chair, or somebody waiting his turn, some ahead of time, and that disturbs me, for I like to wait with my pain in solitude.

"But the dentist gets through with the patient in the chair at last, and I take my place under his infernal tools. And I don't doubt that I get his concentrated and complete attention and skill while he is operating upon me, but I can't get away from the idea that he is working as rapidly as he can so as to be ready for the next patient.

"And then, with all my pain, I can't forget either that person in the waiting room or waiting his turn after me, and I can't without a particle of sympathy for me, and, in fact, rather humane of my presence and thinking of the dentist's choice. This is rather wounding to my self esteem.

"In fact, however I regard it, a visit to the dentist's office is always a jarring experience. My dentist is a man of the highest professional skill, and he is kind, I am sure I get his best care, but still all these familiar things that I have mentioned to you jar me, and I would avoid them all if I could. So when I get real rich I shall certainly have a private dentist."—Washington Post.

Samuel Warren's Vanity.

The vanity of Samuel Warren, the author of "Ten Thousand a Year," in his early years of authorship at least, was remarkable, and there is a story told of him to the effect that on one occasion at a friend's house he had to take down to dinner a lady whom he had not met before, and on some of their vacc ecited at table asked her if she had ever heard of Samuel Warren. "Oh, certainly," was the reply. "My husband prefers Warren's blacking to any other. We always use it."—Westminster Gazette.

Choice of Evils.

"Well, old man," said Blackson after the performance, "I certainly was surprised to see you in private the other night."

"Yes," replied Brightly, "but you see if I didn't appear on the stage I probably have to sit in the audience and be bored to death."—Philadelphia Press.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Goldsmith's Generosity.

A beggar once asked alms of Oliver Goldsmith as he walked with a friend up Fleet street, and he gave her a shilling. His companion, knowing something of the woman, censured the writer for his excess of humanity, saying that the shilling was misapplied, as she would spend it for liquor. "If it makes her happy in any way, my end is answered," replied Goldsmith.

Another proof that the doctor's generosity was not always regulated by discretion was at a time when, after much delay, a day was fixed to pay the £40 due his tailor. Goldsmith procured the money, but a friend calling upon him and relating a piteous tale of his goods being seized for rent, the thoughtless but benevolent author gave him all the money. The tailor called and was told that if he had come a little sooner he could have had the money, but that he had just parted with every shilling of it to a friend in distress, adding, "I would have been an unfeeling monster not to have relieved trouble when in my power."

Village Worthy—Grand an' healthy, I should think, sae.

E. G.—Then it's considered one of the healthiest quarters around here?

V. W.—I should think sae. There's no mackle sickness there.

E. G.—I should think not. Have you never been sick?

V. W.—Never!

E. G.—How do you account for that?

RHODA----MINN.

A REAL HEROINE

By Ella H. Stratton

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Forty-five years ago my great-grandfather Winslow left his comfortable home in the western part of the old Pine Tree state and, accompanied by his brother, determined to found a home for his family in the wilderness of the fertile Aroostook valley.

Railway facilities were not good in Maine 45 years ago; even stage accommodations were limited, and did not extend to the remote region to which he was bound to go.

Grandmother Ruth was the oldest of the family; then came Edward, a sturdy lad of 13; Joseph, but two years younger, and nearly as large; John, who was almost nine, and three girls, Sally, Molly, and little Jane, the latter not quite two years old.

The uncle's family, settled upon the next "lot" of land, was much the same.

In those woods were the homes of numerous wild beasts, many of them dangerous when startled or hungry.

More than once they had seen the black form of a bear hovering in the edge of the clearing, watching the fate the flock of sheep, doubtless with the thought of a mutton dinner. More than once they heard terrific screams beyond the clearing in the silent night, and though Great-grandfather Winslow knew the sound very well, he kept his own counsel, only commanding that the children should stay near the house in the day time and be within doors before nightfall.

He also purchased a new musket and loaded the old one, over the door, while every animal was safely housed at night.

He even drilled the boys in target shooting, and tried to have my Grandmother Ruth learn to fire a gun. Once she did attempt it, but her frightened face pleaded her cause so well that she was excused.

"I need not tell you that I obeyed my father faithfully," laughed Grandmother Ruth, when she told this story. "I seldom went more than two rods from the door, and I watched the others in nervous agony." A sickly neighbor was hired to help in the spring cleaning that spring, Mrs. Waldron, by name, an energetic Province woman.

"Law, now! You don't tell me that you ain't heard of the Injun Debil that's prowlin' these parts now," she said in surprise, when they mentioned those mysterious screams.

"What is it?" asked my great-grandfather, coming in that moment, suspecting the truth by his wife's terrified looks.

"The Injun Devil, Squire Winslow. You don't mean to say you didn't know the critter was 'round?" asked the gossip, curiously.

"No, I don't mean to say any such thing, for I did know it," he admitted reluctantly.

"Oh, father!" it was the terrified voice of my Grandmother Ruth.

"And that's why you bought the new musket! Why you kept the old one housed; and why you were so anxious that we should all stay near the house for awhile?" cried my great-grandmother, nervously.

"Just that, my dear," he replied, calmly. "It is always well to be prepared. But there isn't the slightest danger, mother. We will keep snug awhile, and the brute will soon go somewhere else. They never stay long in one place, I've been told."

But, when weeks passed and nothing more was heard of the animal, everyone concluded that he had graciously decided to leave them in quiet for awhile.

One fine morning, toward the last of June, my great-grandmother and aunt Jane, my great-grandfather and Joseph pushed his chair back from the breakfast table: "I think that your mother and I have earned a holiday, sh, Ruth? A new family has moved in and settled at the creek, two miles down the river—I suppose we ought to be neighborly. You boys must husk what little corn there is in the barn loft, then you can go over and ask your cousins to a candy-pull."

Then my great-grandfather and mother made preparations and started on their neighborly visit, with one last emphatically repeated caution not to leave the clearing until they returned.

The rest of the story will be better, perhaps, if told in Grandmother Ruth's own words, as she told it to us, her almost incredulous, but admiring grandchildren:

"When the boat went around the bend the boys rushed away to husk the corn, hurrying as fast as possible, with the thought of delicious, waxen maple candy to urge them on.

"I had the work nearly done up, and was almost ready to take my knitting and go out and sit under the great maple tree by the door, when by chance I glanced from the open window, and a sight met my gaze which seemed to freeze every drop of blood in my veins, and chain me to the spot.

"I stood and stared in speechless, helpless horror. I heard the soft purrs notes of the pair of robins which were building their nest in the great maple tree. I heard the cheerful lowing of the cattle, and Edward's triumphant shout that the corn was nearly finished, while a new fear came, the fear that it would be finished sooner than I wished.

"I heard the girls still merrily counting their needles, and shuddered when Sally cried out that she had only two more to knit before her stint was done. I heard something else—something which I can yet seem to hear—dear little Jane was softly singing to her dolly, as she sat on the bench under the maple tree, while not 20 feet before her crouched the tawny form of that panther.

"Three times he stole along and flattened his body for a fatal spring, and three times our darling was spared. I opened my lips to cry out, but they gave no sound. My whole heart went out in one voiceless, desperate prayer for little Jane's life.

"That agonized prayer was very strangely answered, my dears. It was then that I was enabled to do that which I had never imagined that I ever could do; I went silently and swiftly across the floor and took my father's heavy musket from its pegs.

"I rested it carefully upon the sill of the open window toward the panther, and raised it until it was aimed directly between the brute's gleaming eyes.

"I was not myself as I sighted along that polished barrel so coolly that I wondered how my father kept the steel lock from getting dull and rusty. Every nerve was like iron, and I felt as I would feel when under the mesmerism of another's will.

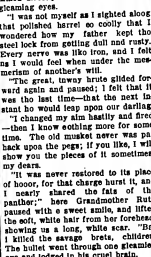
"The great, tawny brute glided forward again and paused; I felt that it was the last time—that the next instant its weight would pounce on darling. I changed my aim hastily and fired —then I knew nothing more for some time. The old musket never was put back upon the pegs; if you like, I will show you the pieces of it sometimes, my dears.

"It was never restored to its place of honor, for that charge burst it, and I nearly shared the fate of the panther; but Grandmother Ruth paused with a sweet smile, and lifted the soft, white hair from her forehead, showing us a long, white scar. "But I killed the savage brute, children. The bullet went through the gleaming eyes and lodged in his cruel brain.

"The boys came running from the loft with startled shouts, when they heard the report of the old British musket, and paused in amazement at the sight of that motionless form; little Jane screamed and sobbed at the danger which she had escaped, and which her childish imagination could not exaggerate.

"Edward took the little birch canoe and started for father and mother, paddling so excitedly that the little craft made dangerous progress.

"Joseph started for uncle's folks at a breakneck speed, shouting that I was killed, and John was divided between his anxiety for me and his admiring awe of the great, motionless figure by the tree.



"My uncle and aunt soon came, followed closely by my frightened, yet curious cousins. I learned all of this afterwards; I had not recovered consciousness when they came.

"I was sitting by the window when father and mother came in sight. The new neighbor was helping him pole the boat along, and my mother sat in the bow very calm but very pale. I watched them in a dazed way while they landed and came hurriedly up the path. I felt rather weak and trembly, and had a broad bandage around my head.

"My mother sat near us, hugging little Jane as if she could never let her go again, while uncle and aunt and the children were wondering, crying, laughing and talking in a strange chorus.

"I have never touched a gun since that day—I think that I never shall. I know that a stronger hand than mine aimed that old musket, a better power than that bullet crashing upon its errand of death and deliverance. I know that I never could have done such a deed by my own strength, never, my dears!"

"But we, who have not our dear grandmother's unquestioning faith, will ever think of her proudly as a real heroine, and not as the coward which she would have us remember.

RAPS FOR GREAT MEN.

Achievements Frequently Belittled by Their Contemporaries.

Learned men do not always appreciate the achievements of their fellows. It is related that a friend brought Milton's "Paradise Lost" to MacKenzie, the great Scotch mathematician, who remarked, when he had finished it:

"It's verra pretty; but, moe, what does it prove?"

An anecdote of Dean Buckland illustrates the antipathy felt 60 years or more ago by the old classical scholars at Oxford to the new scientific learning. They described it as "mischievous and absurd." When Buckland went to Rome for a long vacation one year an older don is said to have exclaimed: "Well, Buckland has gone to Italy. Thank heaven, we shall hear no more of this silly geology!"

James Russell Lowell, while minister at the Court of St. James, remarked one day to a friend, a prominent British statesman, that he was going to Enfield in search of the grave of Charles Lamb. "That reminds me of the judgment of Lamb by one of his contemporaries," said the statesman. Said he: "Lamb was a flighty writer of silly papers, in which there is no mention of political questions of the day."

Paganini, the great violinist, while in England was referred to by a great lyrist, writing to a friend, as "a poor fiddler who had driven the town mad with his squeaks and scrapes."

A good story is told of Henry Clay in his zenith of his popularity and fame. Meeting an old schoolmate at a reception he expressed regret that another friend, a mutual acquaintance, whose career promised to be brilliant, had given up his life to the raising of pigs and making a farmer. The friend presently met the gentleman referred to, who exclaimed, with a shake of the head:

"Poor Harry Clay! He might have made a good stock grower, and be a comfortable planter now if he had not wasted his time in politics."

Even "the father of his country" did not escape detraction, as we all know. Tradition has it that old John Adams once stood before a picture of Washington, at which he shook his fist and exclaimed:

"You old humbug! If you had not kept your mouth closed you'd have been found out!"

Hen's Daily Street Car Ride.

Afraid of being called a "nature faker," Motorman Bratchey, of the Berkshire street railway, running between North Adams and Cheshire, Mass., kept to himself sometime the trick of a chicken of fancy pedigree which he owns.

The other day, however, a rural passenger who chanced to be a farmer in the front vestibule with Bratchey exclaimed in surprise when a chicken suddenly swooped down on the fender, sod after riding there a few minutes came flying up into the vestibule with a squawk of satisfaction.

"By heck!" said the astonished ferryager, "I never seen that afore, an' I've got more'n 300 chickens."

"I'll bet you didn't," rejoined the motorman, and then he told how the chicken, whose name is Marietta, has been taking these tripe on his car, from his home, four miles south of the city, through the principal streets of North Adams and back for sometime now. Bratchey never slows down for Marietta, but she is an expert at making flying connections with the fender, and never forgets to be grace ful about it, either.

Following Her Lead.

A Denver woman went to a swell dinner the other day, says the Post of that city. She was seated on the right of the hostess. There were eight people at the table. Before her she found a long array of knives, forks and spoons, and, being possessed a little unsophisticated, she began to work over the problem of using the right ones for the right courses.

Being next to the hostess, she knew she would have to begin eating each course first. However, when the first one began she stopped worrying and used whatever knife, fork or spoon she thought best to be used. She was delighted to find that everybody else at the table did exactly as she did; when it was all over she learned from four or five women present that they didn't know what to eat with, either, and that they had simply followed her lead.

Hidden Treasure In Bible.

"It's awfully dangerous," said he, "hiding your money away in a book, but if you must, hide it in a Bible. Nobody ever looks in a Bible, you know. Once I was visiting at a house and happened to pick up an old Bible lying on the table and turned the leaves over carelessly. What was my amazement to see drop out from between two pages a $20 bill. My heart was not less amazed. She couldn't remember putting it there. She thought it had perhaps been put there by her grandmother who had long since died."

Increasing Size of Ships.

Some idea of the size of ocean-going ships may be obtained from the following: In 1840 the length of the largest ship in existence was 200 feet; in 1855, 375 feet; in 1881, 525 feet; in 1906, 675 feet; in 1907, 706 feet. The largest ship in existence was 200 feet; in 1855, 375 feet; in 1881, 525 feet; in 1906, 675 feet; in 1907, 706 feet. The largest ship in construction is that of the Lusitania and Mauritania now building and already these is talk of ships that will be 1,000 feet long.

Infants' Shoes

The soft little embroidered shoes so popular just now are very expensive to buy, but fascinating, as well as cheap to make. It is quite the fad to have them match the cap, both in material and design. With a cashmere cap, for instance, would go cashmere shoes, while sheer handkerchief linan is used for the lingerie cap. For lining the latter a firm, heavy silk is needed, with more "body" than that lining the cap.

Equally suitable is fine French flannel, white colored silk or even an art linen (not too heavy) for this dimsitive footgear. For slightly older children the shoes are often made up in the heavy linens in pale shades of pink, blue and even red.

When the embroidery, which should be done exactly as on the cap, is finished, cut out the pattern carefully, following the dotted lines. Sew up the backs in a tiny seam, bind it if the shoe is not to be lined. Then join the notches of the top to the notches in the sole, setting very neatly together. The lining is made exactly like the outside and fastened to it.

The two small straps are pieces of the material buttonholed, and sewed by the diagonal line to the top of the shoe at each side after it is made up. These fasten around the ankle with a button and buttonhole.

Such small shoes may be charmingly developed at almost to cost out of odd remnants of silk. They make very attractive little birth gifts and are now much more generally given than socks.

IDEAS FOR HOSTESS

Attractive Booth Seen Recently at an Entertainment for Charity—Birthday Party for Baby.

Entertainments for charity, both elaborate and simple, are engrossing the attention of society folk et all the summer resorts.

A most attractive booth at one of these affairs is worthy of description; it may be carried out in very little expense, such is an idea to be considered. It was called "The Morning Glory Fair." The space occupied was triangular and the foundation of sides and front was constructed of bamboo poles, interlaced over this was a bewildering tangle of morning glories to delicate lavender, pink, blue and white. The attendants were thin girls in the same colors with lingerie hats trimmed with wreaths of morning glories.

Under a large umbrella, which was completely covered with "glories," ten and waters were served. Each guest was presented with a morning glory clipped from the trellis. These blossoms pinned to coat or hat and gown served to advertise "morning glory" tee all over the grounds. They were made of crepe tissue paper of various hues.

Birthday Party for Baby.

This pretty party was given for a one-year-old boy. The invitations were all sent out in the form of little sun bonnets of pink and blue, with the ribbon (pink for girls, blue for the boys).

There were beaten biscuits cut in rounds, plenty of salted and wee white sandwiches. At the dining table the large birthday cake with its one pink candle was the centerpiece and the sandwiches sent around it while orange sherbet was served to them. From the overhead light fixture wooden hoops with bells inside hung suspended by ribbons. They were souvenirs of the happy occasion and were inscribed with the name of the birthday boy and the date. Teddy bears, a stuffed kitty and dog were placed at the baby table as well as much beloved rag doll who rejoiced in the name of "Polly Ann."

For a Porch Party.

The porch party is a most acceptable form of summer entertainment. One given recently not only provided a delightful evening for guests and hostess but resulted in furnishing a joyous surprise to 35 children at one of the Fresh Air Sanitariums.

"Black-eyed Susans" were the exclusive decoration, and very effective they looked, being in ivy. They were massed in great bunches in brown jugs and bamboo holders and the effect was charming. The invitation cards were ornamented by one great flower done in water-colors and said: "Thimbles, but no work."

After reading a jolly tale from one of the magazines the hostess produced some lemonade made of red denim, which were to be filled from a jar of hesses and the ends sewed up. These were taken to the children the next day by the hostess and as many of her guests as could arrange to go. It was pathetic to witness the joy of the children when told the bags were to take home. Possession means much to these waifs, many of whom are practically homeless and friendless. At 11 o'clock fruit punch and home made cookies were passed, the party breaking up at noon. These morning affairs from "10 to 12" are much in favor this season.

FOLLOW COAT LINES

Bolaros with Short Sleeves Are Now Much Worn with the Most Dressy Costumes.

Vague little bolaros with short sleeves that fall in with the coat lines, giving much the effect of a cape or pelerine, are the thing most in vogue for the linen coat and skirt frock of somewhat dressy character.

In one of these frocks the sleeve of the loose coat is really not a complete sleeve, but a full flounce cleverly set on the bolero over the top of the arm and shoulder point, and the French designers are exerting their skill in the planning of such original sleeve and loose bolero arrangements.

A model which is in reality little more than a cleverly cut triple cape with the arm passing between the outside shortest cape and the one next below it, is much used, and in other models five of the cape are outside of the arm and but one beneath it.

SMART LITTLE BOLERO

We show a very smart little bolero here that may be made of the same material as the skirt, or in silk. It is devoid of trimming, except the one heavy cord to confine coat vest, and the few buttons, which should be pretty and good. The plastron front, and the stripe into which the fullness is gathered, also the shaped part of sleeves, are all neatly machine-stitched near the edge on the right side. The collar and vest era of white silk, embroidered with colore to suit the material.

The hat is of natural colored satin straw, trimmed with silk and roses.

Materials required for the bolero: One and three-fourths yard 46 inches wide, five-eighths yard white silk, eight buttons.

A Novel Coat.

Summar coats we must have nowadays, however useless they may prove to be in the summer season. The French-est and most original one that has yet been shown is made an almost exact duplicate of one of Madame Butterfly's costume; but, instead of being of white linto which the fullness is gathered, also the shaped part of sleeves, are all neatly machine-stitched near the edge on the right side. The collar and vest era of white silk, embroidered with colore to suit the material.

Summar coats we must have nowadays, however useless they may prove to be in the summer season. The French-est and most original one that has yet been shown is made an almost exact duplicate of one of Madame Butterfly's costume; but, instead of being of white satin, the dark gray ground is of flimsy lace, and it is daintily covered with an exquisite design in palest gray embroidery. The gown over which it is worn is of pale gray messaline braided and no doubt girls may make use of their own ingenuity when it comes to designing wedding pale gown for the winter coats.

MAN-A-LIN

MAN-A-LIN Is An Excellent Remedy for Constipation

There are many ailments directly dependent upon constipation, such as biliousness, discolored and pimpled skin, inactive liver, dyspepsia, overworked kidneys and headache.

Remove constipation and all of these ailments disappear.

MAN-A-LIN can be relied upon to produce a gentle action of the bowels, making pills and drastic cathartics entirely unnecessary.

A dose or two of Man-a-lin is advisable in slight febrile attacks, in grippe, colds and influenza.

But here the son rudely interrupted.

"Footprints?" he sneered. "Who wants to leave footprints?"

"Then what would you leave, my boy?" the old man inquired.

"Tracks," said the youth, haughtily. "Tracks of my 90-horse power racer, to be sure. Am I a dog or a working man that I should leave mere footprints?"

Nature's Gift Wasted.

A Scotchman who recently took the street car trip on the scenic route, the New York side of Niagara river, was much disgusted with the hawkers of views and "Teddy bears," who make the afternoon hideous and do their best to spoil nature's grandeur. As he alighted from the car he looked angrily at the shouting venders and then at the Whirlpool rapids. "What's the use of having a big river like that," he asked, "if you don't drown those fellows in it?"

No Peace Conference.

"Are you going to strike, mr?" asked the little boy, as he trambingly gazed upon the uplifted shingle.

"That's just what I'm going to do."

"Can't we arbitrate, ma, before you strike?"

"I am just going to arbitrata," she said, as the shingle descended and raised a cloud of dust from the seat of a pair of pantaloons; "I am just going to arbitrate, my son, and this shingle is the board of arbitration."

The Trade Union as a Civilizing Factor

By WILL J. FRENCH

IT IS now a recognized axiom that all successful effort comes as the result of organization. While reform movements have come or more individuals responsible for their existence, it is the concentration of purpose added to numbers that wins. The modern trade union has been criticised, justly and unjustly, but its underly ing principles are founded on the doctrino of the greatest good to the greatest number, and the laudable desire to remedy conditions at times intolerable and always capable of improvement.

The labor movement sometimes needs to be saved from its friends. Restriction of membership, high initiation fees, the false idea that men have not an equal right to live add work, with hero and there an organization refusing them admittance, and other abuses that might be named, are recognized by the student of the questions of the day as wrong. We might as well be candid. It pays, even though it may not always be popular. But recognizing shortcomings—and what individual or organization is without them?—the effort to pull down the structure of trade unionism instead of helping to remedy its defects, calls for a dispassionate review of the results attained by combination.

The trade union is an important factor in assisting workers to improved conditions. "Equal pay for equal work" has long been the slogan of those trades and callings shared between the sexes. The injustice of taking advantage of the weak simply because of the want of strength is apparent to all fair-minded persons.

The trade union is ever vigilant in opposition to child labor. This appalling system of making money at the expense of sapping the life blood of members of the coming generation is a source of regret and wonder—not only to our own citizens, but also to investigators from foreign lands. Lack of education is a menace to any country. Stuntico of physique degrades a people. Occasionally the exigency of circumstances impels parents to add to the family income, but the duty of the state is imperative. Laws remedying this condition of affairs are lobbied against by interests not exactly impersonal or patriotic, and their defeat is sometimes encompassed by illegitimate means. The glass workers' association of Muncie, in southern New Jersey, has taken 75 children from the unhealthy work of the glass factories and sent them to school, at the same time paying the small salaries they were accustomed to. In one of the southern states a typographical union is paying for the education of future citizens of this republic who were a few months ago employed in a mine—shut out from the sunlight, from the pleasures of childhood and from the opportunities that have an upward trend. Of the disinterestedness of those associated with the labor movement in preserving the children of both sexes other instances might be named did space permit. Suffice it to say that the trade unionist stands with those forces that buva for their object the elevation and not the degradation of childhood.

Day of the Common Man

IN contrast to the holiday of labor as celebrated in Europe on the first of May, the American Labor day, is a peaceful family day. In Europe workingmen are not yet secure in the enjoyment of their rights, and the first of May is made the occasion of demonstrations of a political nature often ending in bloodshed and always exciting apprehensions among the forces of tranquility. In America the day is merely an opportunity for workingmen to prolong their weekly holiday from Saturday noon to Tuesday morning. Coming midway between independence day and Thanksgiving day it is an agreeable break in the continuity of work. There is a little parading, but all the organizations of workingmen take part in that. Picnics and sports, family gatherings, and excursions of young people are the features of the day.

Labor no longer has to assert itself to have its rights and its dignity recognized. It is of more value to the older workmen to have a day to spend with his family or to the young workman to have a day with the people of his own age than to spend the day parading in insisting upon rights which nobody disputes and in displaying a numerical strength which can be exercised by so much more effectively in other ways.

The children take an especial pleasure in Labor day because in most places it delays for 24 hours the opening of the schoolrooms in which they are to spend the larger part of the next ten months. It is the last day of vacation, and it's a goldly taken away from the first week of school, almost as if in defiance of the school hell. With their fathers and big brothers equally free from tasks, the vocation closes in a big celebration, in a blaze of glory.

Then work begins again for old and young. Summer is over. Pleasant days will come, but the heart must not heed the call of the open sky. There is much to be done, much treasure to be stored up for the future; for the child, knowledge; for the workman, skill in his trade and provision for the needs of his family. It is seems strange that Labor day should be celebrated as a holiday, but this day is certain, on the other hand, that those who labor best appreciate most the setting apart of this one day in honor of honest toil. Saints have their days, and so have heroes and kings. Labor is the saint, the hero and king, and every one who works can claim a share of the honor if not of the holiday.

In the Bond of Toil

THE MARTIN'S philosophy. "You can't lay off Labor day unless yer a workin' man," has much in it. Labor day is one of those occurrences that fulfils its name. Its spirit is a recognition of labor in the sense of honest work, the cause of those that in ordinary course make a living by toil; it is the notion of all, whether called upon unbroadly to the nature of the case—of having their toil fruitful enough to relieve them from steady application to it; so it speaks to and stands for the great mass of men as they have been since society was organized and as they will be while it lasts. In this sense it does not stand strictly for those that work no less exactingly but that are not classed as laboring men—as Mr. Martin acutely notes. But it stands for them in a sense—the sense in which it recognizes the solidarity of all work. There is a bond of union, it is the union of all, though called laboring men or not, who give value received in the personal sacrifice of strenuous physical endeavor.

There is a difference here between the toil of mind and body. Twain in one of his books speaks with vitriolic scorn of those that toil with the mind comparing themselves with those that wield a pick or shovel or tend a machine. The nature of his distinction — though he does not say it — is that with other forms of work there is the element of creation. They have risen to the point where the individuality of the worker counts appreciably. This of course is so in all labor. But in the great mass of bodily toil the man is merely the link of intelligence that unities forces and one is in a broad sense the same as another. And it is this impersonal, impregnable, indefeasible quality in toil that the workingman as we use the term, knows and feels from his earliest to his latest day. Now to give to him that thus does and suffers a recognition higher that he has been wont to have—it is for this America stands. That task is among the brightest of its ideals. One advance toward the hope of its approximation has come the national feast day of Labor day. It stands as a sign that as a people we remember the lot of mankind and mean to dignify it.—Indianapolis News.

The States and Labor Day.

Labor day was enacted into law at different periods since 1887. The following are the states and the dates of the enactments:

Alabama, Dec. 12, 1892; California, March 23, 1893; Colorado, March 15, 1887; Connecticut, March 26, 1939; Delaware, Feb. 14, 1893; District of Columbia and territories, June 28, 1894; Florida, April 29, 1893; Georgia, Oct. 18, 1851; Illinois, June 17, 1893; Indiana, March 9, 1891; Iowa, April 6, 1894; Kansas, March 4, 1891; Louisiana, July 7, 1893; Maine, Feb. 19, 1891; Massachusetts, May 11, 1887; Minnesota, April 22, 1893; Missouri, April 9, 1895; Montana, March 29, 1939; Nebraska, March 29, 1899; New Hampshire, March 21, 1891; New Jersey, April 6, 1887; New York, May 6, 1887; Ohio, April 28, 1890; Oregon, Feb. 21, 1887; Pennsylvania, April 25, 1889; Rhode Island, May 28, 1892; South Carolina, December 22, 1891; Tennessee, March 14, 1891; Texas, February 11, 1893; Utah, February 22, 1892; Virginia, February 5, 1892; Washington, February 24, 1891; Wisconsin, April 19, 1893.

SUMMER SHELTER FOR HOGS.

If You Have Not Provided One Do So Now.

Hogs must have shelter while on pasture. In many localities trees often afford suitable protection from the sun, making artificial shade unnecessary. Where there are no trees, it would be well to plant them, but in the meantime the hogs must be shielded from the hot sun.

One plan is to take the furrowing peas to the pasture field and put up on suitable supports high enough to allow the hogs to move about under them. If set out a distance from the fence there is always sure to be shade. Besides furnishing a place for the hogs to go during the hottest part of the day and also affording protection from cold rains in the early fall the peas are up off of the ground making decay less rapid. Another convenient shelter is shown by Farm and Home built in a corner of the pasture. This can be made as long as necessary to suit the requirements. The back of the shed can be boarded up or not to suit the plans of the owner. Where the hogs are left out late in the fall, however, the back and one side should be temporarily boarded up to give protection on chilly nights or during cold driving rains.

CARE OF MARE AND FOAL.

A Little Extra Trouble Will Prove Profitable.

Colts are valuable nowadays. A good one will sell at weaning time for almost as much as a matured horse three or four years ago. Mr. W. L. Honour gave some sensible advice about the mare and foal in his talk before Wisconsin farmers. He says it is well to keep pretty close watch of the mare at foaling time. You may save the colt by a little help. After it comes it may need a little assistance to get the first milk from the mother, not usually, but sometimes that is the case, and you can well afford to give the help. Thoroughly disinfect the navel cord, and do it frequently until it is healed. The greatest loss among young colts is due to the so-called navel disease which results in dullness, swollen joints and frequently death.

Feed the mare liberally while she is raising the colt. Oats and bran and pasture are the best feed. The colt will learn to eat some grain and bran at an early age if you will give him a chance, and will do well as a result. If you must work the mare, keep the colt in the barn during the day, letting it to the mother three or four times during the day, if possible. I like to wean my colts at about four months of age. If they have been taught to eat grain, they will have the chilt without any loss of flesh or impairment of the growth. A little cow's milk (skim milk is best) will be amazingly to keep the colt going along at this time. Feed liberally of oats and bran, about all the colt will eat, and keep him a-going in this way until he is a year old, when he should be thrifty and strong, weighing from 850 to 1,000 pounds. He will not be much trouble to you after this time.

SHEEP AND HORSE NOTES.

Great big stallions and small mares should never be mated to breed.

While the blood horse may do well enough to work, they should never be used for breeding purposes.

A flock of 50 breeding ewes sheep is good size for the man conducting a general system of farming.

Taking everything into consideration, the draft mare is the most profitable one for the farmer to raise.

Your sheep may need a pair of hoofs trimmed if you didn't attend to this. Do you notice any of them walking lame?

The best place to mark sheep is on the rump. Venetian red and linseed oil will make a distinctive mark. Never use tar.

Men who do not like sheep should not keep them, but at present prices wouldn't it pay to stretch a point so as to take advantage of the profits along with the other fellows?

Two Litters a Year.

It pays to raise two litters of pigs a season, though few farmers do this. The advantages lies in the double use of the money invested in stock, buildings and appliances. Often it requires no greater expense for hiring labor to raise two litters of pigs than one. Many of our farmers, however, are not well enough supplied with equipments to dare risk the raising of pigs in the winter. The greatest obstacle they find is the lack of a protein feed in the fall and winter. This problem should be worked out on as many farms as possible on account of the added profit.

WHAT THE WOMEN WORE.

Of Course the Story Teller Didn't Really Mean Just That.

A gentleman recently returned from that quiet little Maryland resort, Ocean City, has a tale to tell of conditions that are really sensational. And the worst of it was that he did not know they were sensational at all. He was out calling the other evening, and the conversation started with the shirtwaist man, who, the returned wanderer said, used to be found in great quantities at the summer resort. Then he told about the habit everybody has down there and contracted of going without hats. Also he was said to be told it to an interested company:

"Over on everybody down there going about just the same. The men never wear coats; they go about in just their shirts and trousers, and the women are just like them."

Ons Comforting Thought in the Death of the Chickens.

A lady who had recently moved to the suburbs had her very fond of her first brood of chickens. Going out one afternoon she left the household in charge of her elder son, Tommy, before her return a thunderstorm came up. The youngster forgot the chicks during the storm, and when dinnyed after it passed to find that heir of them had been drowned. Though grieved at the loss, she thought it her host to make a clean breast of the calamity rather than leave it to be discovered.

"Mamma," he said, contritely, when his mother had returned, "mommn, six of the chickens era dead."

"Dead!" cried his mother. "Six! How did they die?"

The boy saw his chnnce.

"I think—I think they died happy," he said.—Harper's Weekly.

BAD DREAMS

Frequently Due to Coffee Drinking.

One of the common symptoms of coffee poisoning is the bad dreams that spoil what should be restful sleep. A man who found the reason says:

"Formerly I was a slave to coffee. I was like a morphine fiend, could not sleep at night, would eat and toss in my bed and when I did get to sleep was disturbed by dreams and hobgoblins. I would wake up with headaches and feel bad all day, so nervous I could not attend to business. My writing looked like that of a fiend, and my belchings from the stomach, indigestion, heartburn and palpitation of the heart, constipation, kidneys and all the kidneys, etc.

"Finally I began to feel I had all the troubles that human flesh could suffer, but when a friend advised me to leave off coffee I felt as if he had insulted me. I could not bear the idea, it had such a hold on me and I refused to follow his advice.

"But it turned out that no advice was ever given at a more needed time for I finally consented to try Postum and with the going of coffee and the coming of Postum all my troubles have gone and health has returned. I eat and sleep well now, nerves steadied down and I write a fair hand (as you can see), can attend to business again and rejoice that I am free from the monster coffee."

Ten days' trial of Postum in place of coffee will bring sound, restful, refreshing sleep. "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. Some physicians call it "a little health classic."

Merchants Visit Milwaukee.

Come to the city of beautiful parks, clean streets, fine buildings, huge factories, immense jobbing houses and hospitable people. Need your cuns during the Annual Fall Buying Season where you can bring your fanilies and combine business with pleasure.

Many recent laws in Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, Missouri, and neighboring states, by which passenger fares are reduced to two cents a mile, offer great advantages to merchants in this territory who wish to come to Milwaukee. After August 15, 1907, merchants may buy a regular ticket to Milwaukee at a rate of two cents a mile (the lowest rate now given for any occasion) and will not be required to secure certificates or be restricted to certain dates. This offers decided advantages to Milwaukee patrons. While in Milwaukee call for information at the Milwaukee Association of Jobbers and Manufacturers, 45-49 University Bldg.

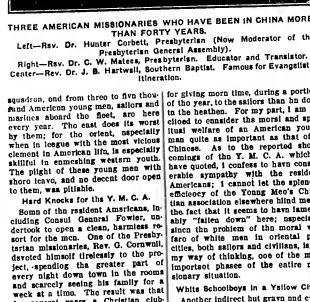
ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the Al...rican Foreign Missionary from a Purely Dispassionate, Secular and Scientific Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

LURE OF THE EAST AWAITS JACK TAR AT CHEFOO.

Chefoo, China.—Readers of war dispatches know this city mainly as the habitat of "the Chefoo liar," which is not without significance, since many of the most disreputable elements of American life are to be found here. A visitor pining for a sight of his native colors will find them displayed by low dives whose very appearance indicates their character. These bear such names as "The Jolly Jack Tar," "The Stars and Stripes Forever Saloon," "The Old Kentucky Home," etc. Over one of these resorts there flies a larger American flag than that which floats above the consulate on the hill.



The explanation for all this is simple. During the summer, this beautiful harbor is the resort of the Asiatic squadron, and from three to five thousand American young men, sailors and marines aboard the fleet, are in this port every year. The rest does its work by them; for the orient, especially when in league with the most vicious element in American life, is especially skillful in enmeshing western youth. The plight of these young men with shore leave, and no decent door open to them, was pitiable.

Hard Knocks for the Y. M. C. A.

Some of the resident Americans, including Consul General Fowler, undertook to open a clean, harmless resort for the men. One of the Presbyterian missionaries, Rev. G. Cornwall, devoted himself tirelessly to the project, spending the greater part of every night down town in the rooms and scarcely seeing his family for a week at a time. The result was that for several years a Christian clubroom and lodging-house were maintained successfully and amid self-supporting.

Later this enterprise was greatly enlarged and a much more spacious clubhouse opened. The work had been given the name of the Young Men's Christian association, although previously receiving no recognition or support from the general organization bearing that name. Last summer, though, three months of the time of an association secretary and the promise of $1,000 was secured from the International Y. M. C. A. committee, to which the public contributes literally, called the naval branch. What is it doing, these men scornfully ask, when it can neglect entirely the men of the second largest American fleet?

As a consequence, they say, of the association's attitude, the Americans in Chefoo, some of whom are not members of any church and had supported the work from patriotic and humanitarian motives, declare that they will no longer give their time and money to it, since the Christian organization which avowedly exists for this purpose refuses to take on the work. Missionary Cornwell, however, is the sort of man who will hold to the task even though others give it up. I have heard other missionaries criticise him for giving more time, during a portion of the year, to the sailors than he does to the heathen. For my part, I am inclined to consider the moral and spiritual welfare of an American young man quite as important as that of a Chinese. As to the reported shortcomings of the Y. M. C. A. which I have quoted, I confess to have considerable sympathy with the resident Americans; I cannot see the splendid efficiency of the Young Men's Christian association elsewhere blind me to the fact that it seems to have lamentably "fallen down" here; especially since the problem of the moral welfare of white men in oriental port cities, both sailors and civilians, is, to my way of thinking, one of the most important phases of the entire missionary situation.

THREE AMERICAN MISSIONARIES WHO HAVE BEEN IN CHINA MORE THAN FORTY YEARS.

Right—Rev. Dr. C. W. Mateer, Presbyterian. Educator and Translator.

White Schoolboys in a Yellow City.

Another indirect but grave and ever-present missionary problem, to which even missionary workers give little thought, is that of the children of the missionaries themselves. The famous China Inland Mission school at Chefoo makes the topic pertinent here. It never occurs to an Anglo-Saxon at home that a white child cannot well be reared with yellow children. His first thought would doubtless be, like my own, that it is rather funny to see, as I have seen, a missionary's son with a yellow playmate perched on a temple drum, beating it in honor of a heathen festival, while each mounted missionary's child. It is not usually that American and British children should be trained in this school. A short time ago, in a refined American home in Korea, I heard a sweet little girl of six use a native word which doubled up the servants with laughter. She does not know its meaning; neither will any body translate it to her parents; but it is doubtless of inexpressible vileness. Not to speak of such moral bacteria—and to overlook entirely the material germs in that beancake, for the forest is the home of gold-metal germs—it is found by missionary parents unwise to rear children in the east, because they fail to get the Anglo-Saxon viewpoint atmosphere, heat of mind, or whatever else you may call it. It is the unanimous opinion of all white people out here, whatever their calling, that boys and girls must go home to school by the time they have reached the age of 13 or 14, or earlier. Herein lies the hardship of missionary life. People regard missionaries as heroes and martyrs for undergoing difficulties which scarcely exist at all, but physical suffering the missionary has few. The separation of families is the one heavy trial. "If people will insist on pitying us," said one missionary, "let them pity us for the right things."

An English School at Chefoo.

To meet the peculiar conditions of the missionary children, the China Inland mission has established at Chefoo a school which, in equipment and efficiency, ranks as the best school in China and Japan. He insisted that all missionaries of the China inland mission, yet its certificate admits boys into the English universities. It is patronized by missionaries of all bodies throughout the far east, and there are 94 sons of missionaries now enrolled, preparing for college, and 63 daughters of missionaries. The students are required to leave at the age of 16 years. The preparatory department has 57 children under nine years and over five.

This indicates the peculiar circumstances of the missionary's lot. Most of the China inland missionaries dwell in native houses. In small interior cities, towns and villages, where there are no other foreigners. For the sake of the health of the children, it is necessary to send them away at the early age. Members of this mission do not have to pay for the instruction or maintenance of their children at Chefoo. The latter place is considered a health resort, and the China inland mission sanitarium is situated here. Hither the missionaries come for their summer vacation, in order to be with their children. The school has only one month of vacation in hot weather, and it begins its day's routine with a "morning swim" at 5:30.

Despite the rigid school regulations, which, for example, prevent the students from speaking to the Chinese, the youngsters have a good time. Their long vacation, of two months, occurs in midwinter, when, presumably, the germs are frozen up, and they may live in Chinese cities with the minimum of danger to health. This school, it may be added, is only one illustration of the completeness of the China Inland Mission organization; it looks after its more than 800 missionaries with a comprehensiveness and paternalism such as I have found in no other mission.

A Group of Famous Veterans.

The present official head of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America is still a resident of Chefoo. At the general assembly held in Des Moines, last May, Rev. Dr. Hunter Corbett, veteran missionary who has been in China for more than 40 years, was elected moderator, and he is now visiting the churches throughout the United States. He will return to China to March. Although he has received the highest honor within the gift of his denomination, Dr. Corbett will resume his work of preaching here in a street chapel, in connection with which a museum is maintained, in order to attract the natives. Dr. Corbett also does a great deal of country work.

Another veteran missionary at Chefoo is Rev. Dr. J. B. Hartwell, of the Southern Baptist mission, which denomination maintains work here. Dr. Hartwell has, in nearly half a century of service, made a name for himself as an indefatigable itinerant evangelist, going about through the country, living in inns, traveling by mule, and preaching wherever he could make an opportunity.

A third man famous throughout missionary circles everywhere, is here, in Rev. Dr. Calvin W. Mateer, Presbyterian, whose work has been along educational and literary lines. His translations are a permanent contribution to Chinese literature. He still, like the two associates just mentioned, is strong and busy.

There is scarcely any name better known to Chinese missionary annals than that of the late Rev. Dr. J. Livingston Navius, eminent as a preacher, author and educator. Dr. Nevius' versatile activities include the importation of many fruits, which he instructed the native how to grow and graft. Now these are an important commodity throughout north-ern China, and foreigners say that they are indebted for the presence of fruits to Dr. Nevius and other missionaries. Dr. Nevius is buried in the American cemetery, near the Presbyterian compound. Mrs. Nevius, the wife of Dr. Nevius, is still in active service of the Presbyterian board here, conducting two day schools of 20 pupils each, besides doing considerable literary work.

HELPING THE TOWN

HINTS AS TO MAKING THE HOME MARKET BETTER.

HANDLING OF FARM PRODUCE

How Merchants and Farmers Can Co-Operate to Their Mutual Advantage in a Business Way.

Many agricultural towns could be vastly improved by affording farmers better markets for the produce that they have to dispose of. In the raidus of every country village there is sufficient butter and eggs and other products to be marketed, the handling of which would make a profitable business.

This custom that has prevailed for many years of storekeepers indiscriminately handling produce does not appear to be to the best interests of towns or it may be said, to the best interests for the farmers. In the first place the average storekeeper has no facilities for the proper handling of perishable products. He may not receive sufficient to enable him to dispose of the product to the greatest advantage. Therefore instead of making any profit upon what he handles, many times he is the loser and takes his compensation in the trade that may be given him by the farmers who bring in the produce.

It is important to a town whether It is reputed to be a good produce market or otherwise. Where the farmer can receive a cent or two more for his butter and eggs he is likely to turn his attention. In some towns there are regular buyers of produce, but often these methods are such as to be unsatisfactory and result in the loss of trade to the place.

Merchants generally exchange goods for whatever produce may be brought to them. In many places they will not pay cash, and it has been known where cash has been paid that it immediately found its way to some other town where goods was purchased.

Each town that has any considerable patronage from the farming community surrounding it, should have a small cold storage plant. One plan that has found practicable in many towns is the organization of a produce company in which merchants of the town as well as the farmers are stockholders. These concerns provide every facility for the proper packing and storage of eggs and butter and other perishable produce, and sometimes include a butter and cheese plant. Where such companies are operated the merchants refuse to handle produce, and they have only such to sell to the produce company.

By paying from a cent to two cents a dozen more for eggs or per pound for butter these produce companies have been wonderfully helpful to bring trade to the place. Not alone do they benefit the town by bringing additional patronage to the merchants, but the business can be highly profitable if managed rightly. It requires but little capital to start such an establishment. It is well when organization is taken up to limit the amount of stock that any stockholder may have to one or two shares of a par value of $50 or $100. An effort should be made to secure as many stockholders as possible shareholders. Also to secure as many shareholders among the farmers as possible. It is to be understood that instead of paying cash, farmers pay for their shares of stock in the produce company in market prices. With all the merchants in the town interested to the success of the company, and the farmers throughout the country also shareholders and participants in profits that may be made, it will be soon found that the produce company will be handling all the produce business that originates in the community.

In many localities where this plan has been put in operation the farmers have discovered that they could receive better prices for their butter and cream and eggs than under the old system. Being associated in a way with the business interests of the place they become more interested in the growth of the town and are more inclined to work in harmony with the merchants to every anything that has the improvement of the home town in view. One of the desirable things about this plan is its tendency to lessen the practice of residents of rural communities trading with mail order houses and department stores in the large cities. Another admirable feature is the addition of an additional labor-saving industry to the town and the keeping of the earnings of the people in circulation in the community.

Reliable Sign of Death.

A Frenchman has received a prize for discovering a reliable sign of death. The test consists of the subcutaneous injection of a solution of fluorescine, which, if the blood is still circulating, in the course of a few hours causes the skin to turn yellow.

Wise Parson.

"Parson, somebody dared us to get married, and we never take a dare. Here we are."

"Well, my young friends. I dare you to go home and endeavor to cultivate some common sense."

WHERE THE MERCHANT FAILS.

An Iowa Farmer Tells Him He Should Advertise, and How.

An Iowa farmer contributes to the Des Moines Capitol the following very pertinent suggestion as to why the mail order houses succeed in getting the business of the rural communities away from local merchants:

"If the mail order houses get $1,000 out of this county each month that belonge to the home merchants the fault is with the merchants themselves. The mail order houses advertise and give us prices on everything they offer for sale. They tell us what they have and what they want for it. Of course we get soaked once in awhile and if we do we can try some other house. Most of the home merchants who advertise at all don't quote prices. They neglect to tell us what we want to know—the price. Of course we can go to the store and ask the price of this article, and that, but you know how it is—one doesn't know so well exactly what he wants to buy when he gets in a store or when he is athome. And there is where the mail order houses make their hit. They send us their advertising matter into homes and we read it when we haven't anything else to do and every member of the family who reade their stuff usually finds something that he or some other member of the family wants and many orders are made up and sent out just at such times.

"Right here is where the home merchant fails down. If he talked up his business to us in our homes the same as the mail order houses do the people would be in to see him the next time they come to town and in many cases extra trips would be made to get the thioge at once that we didn't know we wanted until they were brought to our attention.

"The home merchant can save the expense of gutting up a catalogue. We people send the home papers more carefully than we do the catalogue, and if the merchant wants to talk business with us let him put his talk in the home papers, and put it in so that we know he means business. The home merchant likely, nine times out of ten, sells his goods as cheap as the mell order houses, and I believe on many things they are much cheaper, but how are we to know if he doesn't tell us about it.

"The merchant must not think that even his best customers know his goods so well that they can tell what he has without being shown.

"It is none of my business how the home merchant runs his business, but I don't like to see these conets in the papers all the time about us fellows who get a little stuff shipped in once in awhile and never anything sold on the other side. There are always two sides of a question, and I have given you mine. If it is worth anything to you can take it."

BANKERS GETTING WISE.

They See Danger in the Mail-Order System of Business.

It is only lately that bankers of the west have come to a realization that the mail-order system of business is a serious injury to them, killing off the business of their towns, taking out of circulation money that ought to be kept in local bank deposits and otherwise interfering with town progress.

The trouble has been with many bankers that they failed to consider the buying-goods-away-from-home not a proper thing of particular concern to them. Wheo Farmer Smith would buy a draft for $100 to send to Chicago, the banker got his ten cents exchange and thought he was that much ahead, never for the least what that if he could keep the money from being sent from home that $100 would be on deposit in his bank and make a dollar or two of profit. It was only when the catalogue houses had begun to get hold of the people of country towns and farming communities that the bankers took a vital interest.

Theo again some bankers have such an exalted idea of their position in their towns that the goods to be had from the local merchoats ore not good eonugh for themselves and families. Such a bank example before the people by sending awey themsclves for what they desire in the way of staples and luxuries. Bankers are conservative; and are not forward in making suggestions to their patrons as to what they should do with their money, but in this matter it appears sufficiently important to justify the exercise of a little influence. The banker can command in behalf of home patronage it is the business of the town and surrounding country that affords a profit to the bank. The greater this volume of business can be made the better for the banker and every interest of the town, and the farmers and other laborers as well.

What, Indeed?

A duchess requiring a lady's maid had an interview with one, to whom, after having examined her appearance, she said: "Of course, you will be able to dress my hair for me?" "Oh, yes," replied the girl; "it never takes me more than half an hour to dress a lady's hair." "Half an hour, child!" exclaimed the duchess, in accents of terror, "and what on earth, then, should I be able to do with my extra half all the remainder of the morning?"

Sporting Gossip.

H. Chandler Egan of Exmoor for the fourth time le western amateur golf champion. Defeating Herbert F. Jones of Wheaton 5 up 4 to play in the 36 hole finals of the ninth annual Western Golf association tourney at the Chicago Golf club, the Exmoor player who has twice held the national honors, won back in decisive fashion the oectlonel title he captured in 1902, 1904 and 1905. The result gives the Egan-Exmoor combination a claim to all club and family championship records. Including the 1903 tournament, which Chandler's cousin, Walter E. Egan, won, the "trust" has gobbled up five out of six successive events. Egan, while not playing his top game, wee in "chemplon" form for a great part of the trip. Jones repeatedly erred on the puttiog green and in his short approach game. Egan won 1 up at the end of the first nine holes in the morning and 3 up at the half-way mork. He was still 3 up at the twenty-seventh hole. Jones took the twenty-eighth, and lost the metch when Egan won the next three.

George Stovall and Frank Delehanty, who were suspended by the Cleveland American league baseball club several days ago, will become members of the Reading, Pe., club of the Atlantic league, according to an announcement made by the management of the Reading club. The Atlantic is an outlaw league. According to the manager of the Reading club Stovall and Delehanty have accepted the club's terms and will receive more money for their services than ever has been paid baseball playars to a local club. The Reading club has a rivel in the Reading club of the Tri-state league and the struggle for public favor has led the former to make extraordinary effort to edd to its strength. Stovall, up to the time of his suspension as the result of throwing a chair at Lajoie, had done good work for the Cleveland team this season, and the move putoute than any other first hasoman of the American league, next to "Hal" Chase, and had a fielding percentage of .980. While he had not a very lofty batting percentage, he was capable of doing strong work with the stick.

There was one man, at the intercollegiate regatta at Poughkeepsie who had a perfect right to say, "I helped win the race," if any one of four varsity eights won the principal contest. It was John Hoyle, of Ithaca. He built the toothpick-like cedar shells in which Cornell, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Annapolis rowed the heart-breaking four mile course on the Hudson and under the high railway bridge. Seventeen years ago Johnnie Hoyle was a boat builder's helper in Ithaca. He decided to go into the construction of racing shells. An eight-oared boat which he turned out attracted the attention of Charlie Courtney, the Cornell coach, and Courtney invited young Hoyle to work. Hoyle was accepted a regular salary from the Cornell navy, but a few years ago he opened his own shop and has never turned out many winning boats. This was his banner year, with four of the crews in the big regatta sowing "Hoyles." He has taken up every innovation in racing craft that came along, and tried it out thoroughly. He spent two years on aluminum boats, building one wlianer for Cornell and an identical sister, which Penn sank in the Schuylkill. He has come back to old reliable cedar strips, and all of the boats this year are of that material. The dimensions of college racing craft vary slightly, according to the ideas of the various coaches. Hoyle holds that the best boat for the Poughkeepsie course, where provision must be made for tide rips and swells, is 61 feet in length, 23 inches breadth, and nine inches depth amidships. For the eight, Jerky stroke used by Annapolis, he built a shorter, stiffer craft. As the big college crews demand a new boat for every varsity crew, Hoyle finds contracts which keep him busy the year round. Of course, a shell is not worn out in one race, and is used a second year by the freshmen crews or sold to western rowing colleges. This it came about that a Hoyle shell won the recent match between the University of Washington and Stanford, on Lake Washington, at Seattle.

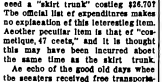
SENATE "THIRSTS" COST $76 APIECE LAST YEAR



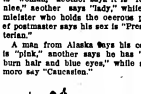
WASHINGTON.—Senators are a thirsty lot. The report of Charles G. Bennett, secretary of the United States senate, shows that during the last fiscal year that august body consumed 860 cases of mineral water, costing $4,504.70. Then there was $2,025.87 for carbonized mineral water, and $318.97 for lemons and sugar for the famous senate lemonade, making a total of $6,849.54 for drinkables, and not a drop of anything "hard," as far as the official list shows. Since there are 90 senators, the per capita consumption is about $76. It should be remembered also that while there are some senators who drink a great deal of mineral waters there are also some who drink very little, and there is much curiosity here as to who drank the most last year.

But why is the name of all that is unparliamentary did any senator seed a "skirt trunk" costing $26.70? The official list of expenditures makes no explanation of this interesting item. Another peculiar item is that of "cosmetique, 47 cents," and it is thought this may have been incurred about the same time as the skirt trunk.

As echo of the good old days when the senators received free transportation from the railroads and were then enabled to pocket the 20 cents a mile allowed by the government is contained in the item "Pass cases, $9.20." There are 888 worth of feather dusters on the list, but it is promised that this will not occur again, and it is realized that more effective weapons are required in strife with the president. For sponges the senate made the modest outlay of $510.21, according to published figures.

For the large number of baldheads in the senate a remarkable quantity of preparations for the hair was used. Here are some of the entries: Bay rum, $30.25; witch hazel, $14; hair tonic, $33.57; brilliantine, $1.30.

It is easy to guess that all these articles are utilized by the senators and their families, but it is puzzling to understand who makes way with the hundreds of bushels and pounds of oats, flaxseed meal, bran meal, rock salt, etc., and certainly do not eat axle grease, soap, rosin, tar, spool cotton, cheese cloth, pemice stone, Georgia pine, screen hinges, brass tacks, wire head nails, monkey wrenches and paste filers, nor is it reasonable to suppose that these solons drink mustang liniment, petroleum, turpentine, arnica, mahogany varnish, and a lot of other stuff that is bought in wholesale lots. These probably were bought for the horses that are used to draw the senate mail wagons, and for the vehicles themselves.



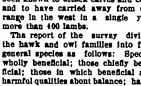
AMUSING ANSWERS BY UNCLE SAM'S EMPLOYES

AMUSING answers are pouring in at the post office department from government employes replying to a dozen questions, including one as to their "marital relations."

One veteran says his "marital condition is very "limit." Another man, who is younger, gives the reply that his married life is "hell." Still others think the question should bring forth a story of their domestic woes and pour out their souls. One said his relations were "all right, but my wife is dead." Another said they were "very good; my wife is at the point of death." Yet another insists that his "marital condition is very good, since he has been a widower for ten years."

One woman announces that her sex is "woman," another says it is "feminine," and another says "lady," while a minister who holds the onerous post of postmaster says his sex is "Presbyterian."

A man from Alaska says his color is "pink," another says he has "auburn hair and blue eyes," while still more say "Caucasian."



THE BIOLOGICAL BUREAU DEFENDS HAWKS and OWLS

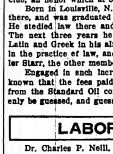
A DEFENSE of hawks and owls is made by the biological survey in a recent report from that bureau. It is declared that both of these bird families have been condemned by the farmers of the country without discrimination because some of their species are destroyers of valuable things. Mitigating circumstances are found for some otherwise harmless birds because of a lack of proper food in the country where they live.

Incidentally, tales of eagles carrying off children are declared to have little "foundation in fact," but the bald eagle, the emblem of the United States, is, nevertheless, said to be "unfortunately fond of lambs, pigs and poultry, and in the more thickly inhabited regions probably does a much damage as the golden eagle." The golden eagle, say the experts, has been known to attack calves and colts and to have carried away from one range in the west in a single year more than 100 lambs.

The report of the survey divides the hawk and owl families into four groups because of a lack of proper study. Species wholly beneficial; those chiefly beneficial; those in which beneficial and harmful qualities about balance; harmful species. Some of these birds may be good citizens in one locality and extremely "undesirable citizens" in another.

ST. GAUDENS' COINS NOT CONVENIENT FOR HANDLING

NEW designs for coins which were to have been minted in Philadelphia which Augustus St. Gaudens, the distinguished sculptor, made a few days before his death, have been found unsuitable in their present shape for execution with the machinery in use at the mint. Hence, contrary to a current report, the government has not accepted any of them. The general approval which was expressed by the president is not conclusive in an official sense. The law requires that they shall be accepted by the secretary of the treasury and the director of the mint before being adopted.



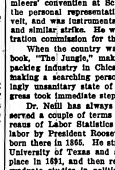
The projection of the sculptures upon the coins is too high for convenience of handling at banks or other large business establishments. Coins cannot be well "stacked" unless one will lie perfectly flat and snug upon another, and this is impossible where the bas reliefs in the middle are higher than the rim. A pile of the St. Gaudens coins would topple over.

It was St. Gaudens' idea which found special favor with President Roosevelt, to return to the classical style of coinage. Ancient coins are mostly remarkable for strange projections of the sculptured form.

This designs made by St. Gaudens have been pronounced extremely beautiful. The American Numismatic society has urgently advocated a more artistic scheme of coinage than that which has been in use in the United States for half a century or more. St. Gaudens, under the provisions of the act of congress authorizing the new coinage, retained the chief general characteristics of the old pieces, but gave them in addition an artistic realization.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

INVENTED "IMMUNITY BATH"



John Stocker Miller had gained substantial fame long before he attracted national attention as the lawyer who procured freedom for the packers under his now celebrated "immunity bath" pleas before Judge J. Otis Humphrey. His retention by the Standard Oil company as the corporation representative in the case in which the Indiana child of the parent concern has been found guilty of receiving concessions from the Chicago & Alton railroad is but one of many evidences that Mr. Miller is regarded as one of the leading corporation attorneys in Chicago, if not in the country.

Mr. Miller is a man of wide range of experience, for during his career he has been not only a professor of Greek, Latin and mathematics, but has served as corporation counsel of Chicago and has been honored by Chicagoans with the presidency of the Union League club, an honor which at once proclaims his class as a Chicago citizen.

Born in Louisville, N. Y., May 24, 1847, he attended school and academy there, and was graduated at St. Lawrence university, Canton, N. Y., in 1869. He studied law there and was admitted to the bar in 1871. Oglenburg in 1870. The next three years he spent as professor of mathematics and later of Latin and Greek in his alma mater. Coming to Chicago in 1874, he engaged in the practice of law, and at present is a member of the firm of Peck, Miller Starr, the other members being George R. Peck and Merritt Starr.

Engaged in such lucrative practice as he is able to draw to him, it is known that the fees paid Mr. Miller are large. Just what he will receive from the Standard Oil company for his present activities in its behalf can only be guessed, and guesses range from $25,000 to $50,000 as a retaining fee.

LABOR COMMISSIONER

Dr. Charles P. Neill, United States commissioner of labor, who recently tried to effect a settlement of the telegraph operators' strike, has been in the thick of every labor fight, but he is far from being the stormy petrel which that statement would seem to indicate, for his constant endeavor has been to restore harmony. He has been fairly successful, too, for he took a conspicuous part in the settlement of the coal strike of 1902, a strike that caused untold misery and discomfort among the people of the United States, and he has aided in settling up numerous smaller strikes since then. He attended the coal miners' convention at Scranton, Pa., in 1906, as the personal representative of President Roosevelt, and was instrumental in preventing another and similar strike. He was recorder of the arbitration commission for the strike in the Alabama mines in 1903.

When the country was horrified by the publication of Upton Sinclair's book, "The Jungle," making the most horrible disclosures concerning the packing industry in Chicago, Dr. Neill was sent by President Roosevelt to making a searching personal investigation. His description of the exceedingly unsanitary state of affairs was so powerful and convincing that congress took immediate steps to remedy the evil.

Dr. Neill has always been a close student of labor problems and has served a couple of terms as president of the Association of Officials of Bureaus of Labor Statistics of America. He was appointed commissioner of labor by President Roosevelt in January, 1905. He is a native of Illinois, born there in 1865. He studied at the University of Notre Dame, Ind., at the University of Texas and at Georgetown university, graduating from the latter institution in 1897. He was appointed instructor of economics at the Catholic University of America in 1895; was promoted to associate professor in 1897, and was appointed to the chair of economics as full professor in 1900, and has held this post up to the present time.

LEADS WAR ON MOORS

Gen. Georges Picquart, minister of war for France, is one of the bulkiest men in public life today. Besides the ordinary duties of his department, he has still to do with the enforcement of the laws against the Catholic church, an enforcement which has on many occasions necessitated the use of the military, and now he has charge of the campaign against Morocco, for unless the Moors make a complete surrender it is likely to be his. He was at the head of the secret intelligence department of the French army for years, and has spent much time in Africa. It was to Africa that he was sent, to get him out of the way when he was preparing the evidence to show that Capt. Dreyfus was being made a scapegoat for the corrupt military ring that was running the time. Picquart was then a colonel. He procured evidence to convict the conspirators, and after 11 years secured the acquittal of Dreyfus and his reinstatement in the army, while the leaders of the conspiracy committed suicide. Picquart was himself reinstated and Clemenceau made him minister of war.

TO WRITE WAR HISTORY

Rear Admiral French E. Chadwick who, since his retirement from the United States navy 18 months ago, has been collecting material in Spain for a history of the Spanish-American war and the causes that led up to it, has returned to the United States to begin his work. He was captain of the armored cruiser New York, Admiral Sampson's flagship at the battle of Santiago, the only occasion in which the Atlantic squadron engaged in battle, and he was unfortunate enough to be miles away at the time. Admiral Sampson had gone down the coast on official business when he received the signal that the bottled up Spanish fleet was coming out. The New York put about and raced back to the scene of action with dense volumes of smoke pouring from her funnels, anxious to take part in the engagement. But the Spanish ships were headed the other way, and before the New York could get into the line of the Spanish ships was on the rocks, a battered mass of metal.

Admiral Chadwick has been officially thanked for his services, once for "extraordinary ability and judgment" during six years of service as naval attache in Europe, and again for his conduct at Tangier, where he went with an American squadron in 1904 to secure the release of Perlicardis from Brandit Raisuli, the same, who afterwards captured Cald McLean.

Admiral Chadwick entered the navy in 1861, when he was only 17 years of age, and has since served in every rank, retiring as admiral last year. He is the auditor of several works on naval subjects.

Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

BUY VILLAGE LOTS STILL HIDDEN BY THE WAVES

NEW YORK.—The demand for home sites in the suburbs of New York city is promoting the reclamation of thousands of acres of land in parts of Long Island which have been nothing but sloughs for generations.

Indeed, in some places, land has been built right out of the water. At Arverne, for instance, a realty company is doing a work that is as interesting to the summer visitors as the building of a skyscraper in New York is to a rustic.

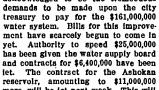
The land is at a point where a creek came in and has an area of five thousand city lots, or more than a hundred square blocks. The contractor first has his big sand pump dip into Jamaica bay and suck up thousands of gallons of sand and water each hour.

Tons of earth are spread over each block. The sand then is permitted to drain until it is comparatively dry, when sedge is placed on it to prevent it from blowing away. After this earth mingled with fertilizer is placed on the sedge and seeded to grass.

Already several blocks are green. Streets and avenues have been laid out throughout the property and trees have been planted. Buyers are taking up the lots rapidly—some, indeed, in blocks that still are under water.

MANY BUILDINGS RAZED TO MAKE WAY FOR OTHERS

SO GREAT is the demand for ground space in New York that 618 buildings some of them quite modern, were razed during the past twelve months to make way for skyscrapers. The structures destroyed cost fully $12,000,000, yet the compensation for this destruction of property are as remarkable as the story of the losses. Colleges, many of fine decorations find treasures in the dismantled buildings, which are preserved in newer and finer dwellings, churches and public institutions. The property destroyed is replaced by modern edifices worth at least eight times what the old buildings cost. Adopting the records for the last year as a basis it will be seen that nearly two structures fell prey to the wreckers every day in the year. Of the 618 the section north and west of Central Park contributed the most. The rise of the great apartment houses in upper Manhattan meant the sacrifice of hundreds of dwellings. A few of them were old country residences, but the majority belonged to the newer growth of the last 10 or 15 years. The destruction every year of buildings costing $12,000,000 seems to be heavy sacrifice for even a great city like New York to make to progress. As a matter of fact, the loss is insignificant when compared with the tremendous gain. The $18,000,000 worth of demolished structures are replaced with buildings worth $100,000,000. Fully 250,000 tons of structural steel were put into the new buildings erected in this city last year. This does not mean much to the layman until he realizes that if put together the steel would build 100 large office buildings in the financial district, six great bridges spanning the East river in lower Manhattan and five stations like the Pennsylvania terminal. The steel costs $76 a ton. Therefore New York pays $17,500,000 a year for structural steel alone.



FATHER KNICKERBOCKER BROKE; CREDIT ALSO BAD

WITH a small army of unpaid contractors clamoring for their money and heavy interest charges piling up every day, and with the comptroller's office refusing to register any more new contracts except for work absolutely necessary, it is admitted that the city has been brought face to face with a serious problem as a result of its failure to sell bonds. Numbers of the bonds have been given to contractors in payment for work, and some of these men have put them up as collateral for loans. One of the contractors complained to-day that such is the pressure for money that he had been able to borrow only 85 per cent of the value of the bonds. Another contractor took his bonds of small denominations and announced that he was using them to pay off his creditors.

Money for the pay roll is provided by the sale of revenue bonds, which are issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes and are retired on Oct. 1. It was declared that such is the demand for money in Wall street that the city has been able to dispose of only a modest quantity of these desirable investments. What the city may have to borrow on the rate of interest in order to provide the money for its running expenses is said to be not unlikely.

A serious phase of the situation is acknowledged to be the numerous demands to be made upon the city treasury to pay for the $161,000,000 worth of corporate stock which investment have scarcely begun to come in yet. Authority to spend $25,000,000 has been given the water supply board and contracts for $6,400,000 have been let. The contract for the Ashokan reservoir, amounting to $13,000,000 more, will be let next week. This will make $37,000,000 for which bonds will have to be sold. City officials certainly have a good time ahead.

SCHOOL BOARD TO TRAIN WOMEN OF THE EAST SIDE

NOT content with furnishing summer playgrounds and outdoor gymnasiums for the seed of school children, who otherwise would have to resort to the streets for their pastimes, the New York board of education has established kindergartens for mothers. This is the very latest and newest wrinkle in the educational line. The board of education has come to the conclusion that the training of children must begin with the mothers, and part of its summer work is directed to the training of the women of the east side and other crowded portions of the greater city. Of all the progressive steps taken by the school authorities in this city the new form of kindergarten is one of the most remarkable and interesting. That it will be fruitful there is already every reason to believe. Primarily it is just a summer kindergarten with a maternal annex. No boys older than six years are admitted. They are sent to the other playgrounds conducted by the board of education. No girls older than the kindergarten age are permitted to attend unless they bring babies with them. That it can be seen that a baby is a regular ticket of admission. The purpose of this kindergarten course is to bring the children and the "little mothers" in the proper care and the bringing up of children. And labor consisting the material by which the object-lessons are furnished. The mothers are instructed in the care, feeding and dressing of the little ones, and when a practical point needs illustration a real, live and kicking baby is brought for the purpose of demonstration.

MAGOON TO STAMP OUT YELLOW FEVER

TAKES SANITATION OF THE ISLAND OF CUBA INTO HIS OWN HANDS.

Pest Mosquito Must Go—Municipalities Being Unable to Eradicate the Disease, Governor Creates a National Health Department.

Washington, Aug. 27.—Despairing of the ability of the Cuban municipalities to keep the cities clean and free from yellow fever, the central government has at last formally undertaken that task. Chief Surgeon Gorgas called the war department Monday upon his return from Cienfuegos, which he says is at present the only place where yellow fever prevails, that Gov. Magoon had signed the decree nationalizing the sanitation.

From this time on the work of disinfection and the extermination of the yellow fever mosquito will proceed under the direction of officers appointed by Gov. Magoon, in most cases surgeons of the army or marine hospital service.

Will Soon Eradicate Pest.

In the opinion of Gov. Magoon, as set out in a cablegram received at the war department Monday, the yellow fever will be eradicated within six weeks. There may be a few sporadic cases during the period, but there is no danger of an epidemic. Surgeon Kean reports five new cases in Cienfuegos, making ten in all, but these were among civilians. All of the soldiers who were at first affected, with one exception, have been discharged as cured, and that one is convalescent.

Provisions of the Decree.

Havana, Aug. 27.—A decree creating a national department of sanitation has been signed by Gov. Magoon, and is to become effective upon the completion of the reorganization. The permanent of the department will consist of one chief and a national board of five members holding office for four years. This board will have full control of the sanitation of Cuba, supplanting all local boards.

Up to the present time the inefficiency of the local sanitary authorities and their failure to report yellow fever cases has thwarted all the efforts to stamp out the disease. Major J. E. Kean, of the medical corps, reported four months ago upon the urgent necessity of national control in sanitary matters and this has been emphasized by the recent outbreak of yellow fever among the American troops at Cienfuegos.

NELSON MORRIS IS DEAD.

Chicago Packer Succumbs to Chronic Heart Disease.

Chicago, Aug. 28.—Nelson Morris, the third member of the famous "big four" Chicago big packers, died Tuesday morning at his home, 1801 Indiana avenue, in his sixty-eighth year. Philip D. Armour and Gustavus F. Swift preceded him to the grave, and Michael Cudahy is the only survivor of the city's pioneers in the packing industry.

Mr. Morris' death resulted from a chronic affection of the heart, with a kidney complication, which had its origin some time ago. The members of the family all were with him when the end came, those at the bedside being the widow, the oldest daughter, Mrs. M. L. Rothschild: Edward and Ira Nelson Morris, the sons, who are now at the head of the company, and the youngest daughter, Mrs. Henry C. Schwab.

LION MANGLES A WOMAN.

Terrible Occurrence in Luna Park Resort, Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 28.—Torn, bruised and suffering from shock, Mrs. Anna A. Hinkle, 55 years old, of 73 Vanbrasm street, this city, lies at her home in a precarious condition as the result of an attack by a lion at Luna park, a summer resort in this city, late Tuesday.

Mrs. Hinkle was rescued almost from the jaws of death while she lay on the ground where the animal had thrown her, and while scores of spectators were firing a fusillade of bullets into the blood-crazed beast who, meanwhile, was biting and clawing at the woman's body.

Steamship Turns Turtle at Dock.

San Francisco, Aug. 27.—The Pacific Mail Steamship company's steamer Acapulco, Capt. D. C. Prass, turned turtle Monday and sank at the company's docks in this city. All the passengers and crew escaped, but it is believed that the cargo, consisting of general merchandise, will be almost a total loss, as the hull of the vessel lies in about 15 feet of water. The vessel was scheduled to sail for Panama and way ports at one o'clock Monday afternoon and was taking on her last supply of coal when the accident occurred.

Cathedral to Hold a Jubilee.

New York, Aug. 28.—St. Patrick's cathedral is to be remodeled in its interior, and with the splendid new altars and the other gifts which are being made by wealthy Roman Catholics $500,000 will have been expended before the transformation is complete. The movement for the erection of a cathedral was begun 50 years ago, and the formal ceremony of consecration, as near as possible, will be in the nature of a semi-centennial jubilee.

DEATH IN THREE TORNADOES

FURIOUS STORMS IN WISCONSIN AND EASTERN OHIO.

Four Persons Are Killed and Numerous Buildings Destroyed in Several Localities.

Ladysmith, Wis., Aug. 27.—A tornado struck the home of L. V. Moore, four miles north of the city, carried the building several rods and demolished it. Harry Moore, 20 years old, had his head so badly crushed that he died three hours later. Mrs. Moore and her little daughter Ida were seriously injured.

The storm also hit the home of George Warren, picking up the log house and landing it several rods away. The family of five were left seated on the floor uninjured, except a slight cut from flying glass sustained by one of the children.

Whitehall, Wis., Aug. 27.—A tornado swept through the country north and east of here late Saturday afternoon, near Waterfield, was destroyed and a two-year-old child killed. The child was torn from its mother's arms and carried nearly a quarter of a mile.

TRAIN RUNS INTO STREET CAR.

Only One Seriously Injured Out of Sixty-Five Passengers.

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 28.—One man was dangerously injured and 65 persons narrowly escaped death in an accident on a railroad crossing at North La Crosse Tuesday. A street car was hit by a railroad train at the crossing. A great panic ensued among the passengers and for a time it was feared that many had been killed and numbers sent to the Lutheran hospital dispatched to the scene.

Most of the passengers, however, had miraculously escaped injury. Jas. Gaskell, aged 60, had both legs broken and crushed and he was taken to a hospital in a serious condition. Many other passengers received only scratches.

DOUBLE KILLING IN HOTEL.

Indiana Man Shoots His Wife and Himself in Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 27.—Charles A. Andrews, 40 years old, of South Bend, Ind., shot and killed his wife, and then committed suicide, in the Saratoga hotel, just after one o'clock Monday afternoon.

There is much mystery as to the cause of the crime, though there is evidence that both persons had been bowed under some grief. The couple came to the hotel on Saturday, and little more than that was known about them.

$40,000,000 Gotham Loan.

New York, Aug. 28.—Announcement that the city of New York had decided to ask for bids on September 10 for the biggest bond offering ever made by the city created a stir in the financial district. The bond issue amounts to $40,000,000 and interest of four and one-half per cent is offered.

The financial interest did not at first take kindly to the prospect of such a heavy demand on its resources, but reports quickly spread that many of the leading financial houses had joined in the organization of a syndicate to bid for the entire issue. This restore a feeling of confidence.

Demands of the Metal Workers.

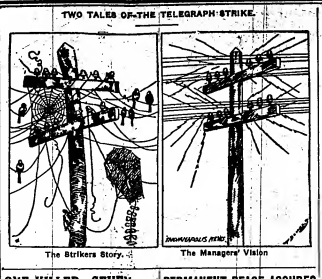
Cincinnati, Aug. 27.—A demand for an eight-hour day and a 20 per cent increase in wages was decided on by the Metal Polishers, Buffers, Platers, Brass Molders and Brass and Silver Workers' union at their national convention, which adjourned Sunday night, although the time was not made public until Monday. The union is said to have a membership of 28,000. The executive committee of the union will determine the date upon which the demands will be presented to the employers.

Postcard Offender is Caught.

Philadelphia, Aug. 28.—Charged by United States postal inspectors with the wholesale selling of objectionable postal cards, Gustav P. Lang of this city, who traded under the name of the P. C. Novelty company, was arrested and held in bail for trial. The arrest of Lang is regarded as the most important capture yet made in the crusade against the objectionable cards.

Michigan Professor Is Dead.

Ocean Park, Me., Aug. 28.—Kingsbury Batchelder, professor of Greek in Hillsdale college, Michigan, died Tuesday at a cottage here, where he was spending the summer. He was 67 years old. Death was due to cancer.



Knabenshaw's Airship Bursts.

Greenville, O., Aug. 28.—Knabenshaw's airship, while 2,000 feet above the fair grounds burst a jet at six o'clock Tuesday night and dropped like a rocket. The aeronaut escaped unhurt.

Massachusetts Editor Drowned.

Worcester, Mass., Aug. 28.—Eugene Moriarty, editor and proprietor of the Worcester Post and a prominent Democrat, was drowned while bathing in Lake Quinsigamond late Tuesday.

ONE KILLED, SEVEN INJURED IN WRECK

CLOVER LEAF PASSENGER TRAIN CRASHES INTO BOX CAR AT BOWMAN, ILL.

Names of the Victims — Secretary Taft's Train Derailed at Spring Hill, Kan.—Hocking Valley Freight Train Runs Off Trestle.

Charleston, Ill., Aug. 28.—One man was killed and seven passengers dangerously injured in the wreck of a Clover Leaf passenger train at Bowman, 12 miles north of here, Tuesday. Two cars jumped a switch and crashed into a box car.

P. E. Conkling of Texarkana, Tex., was instantly killed.

The injured are: Shirdan Rose, Kentland, Ind., head cut and internally injured; C. Provins, New Douglas, Ill., head badly bruised; Nelans Anderson, Ashmore, Ill., head injured, leg broken; J. N. Green, Dana, Ind., ribs broken; James Green, Dana, Ind., leg and head injured; Charles Whipman, Toledo, O., head seriously cut; Harley Ferguson, Ashmore, Ill., chest crushed.

The injured were taken to Brocton and Charleston.

Secretary Taft in a Wreck.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 28.—Passenger train No. 102, on the St. Louis & San Francisco railroad, carrying Secretary of War Taft, was wrecked at five p. m. Tuesday, near the depot at Spring Hill, Kan. None of the passengers or trainmen was hurt.

A switch flew open after the engine and baggage car had passed. The mail car was derailed and dragged 500 feet over the ties. The passengers were shaken up, although the train was running slowly. Secretary Taft aided in reassuring timid passengers.

Changed Kansas City Program.

Mr. Taft was en route from Springfield, Mo., to Kansas City when the wreck occurred. His train was due here at 5:30, but the wreck delayed him three hours, necessitating a change in the plans for his entertainment here. An automobile tour of the boulevards of the city was abandoned and a public reception at the Hotel Baltimore was held at a later hour than the time first scheduled.

United States Senator Warner and other prominent Missouri Republicans were in the Taft party. Spring Hill is 25 miles south west of this city.

Freight Wreck on Bridge.

Gallipolis, O., Aug. 28.—A southbound freight train on the Hocking Valley railroad went off a trestle near Dundee Tuesday, causing one of the worst wrecks in the history of the southern division of that road. Seven train and trestle took fire and were consumed, including several cars of oil and merchandise. A broken rail is supposed to have caused the wreck. The train crew all escaped by jumping. Traffic over the road was delayed many hours.

WOMEN MAY STOP STRIKE.

Miss Gould Summons Brother After Conferring with Mrs. Mackay.

New York, Aug. 29.—The New York papers announce that Helen Gould, Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay and Mrs. J. G. Phelps Stokes, representing the women stockholders in the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies, held a secret conference late last week on the strike situation, and took action looking to a settlement of the difficulty. After the conference, according to the published stories, Miss Gould cabled to her brother, George J., who is in Europe, to come home at once. It is reported that he sailed last Sunday.

Two Killed on Grade Crossing.

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 28.—Clifford Atwood, the three-year-old son of the proprietor of a hotel at Montour, 14 miles east of here, was instantly killed by a Northwestern freight train at the Main street crossing. Palquadi Zella, aged 25 years, an Italian track laborer, who attempted to rescue the child, was also instantly killed.

Wealthy Wisconsin Man Dies.

Ashland, Wis., Aug. 28.—Col. Isaac Wing, of Hayfield, suddenly died Tuesday. Col. Wing was one of the wealthiest men in the northern part of the state and was noted for his gifts to charity. He was closer to Senator Spooner than any other man in Wisconsin. He spent his winters in Washington.

PERMANENT PEACE ASSURED

CENTRAL AMERICAN CONFERENCE WILL BE ARRANGED.

Presidents Roosevelt and Diaz Send Simultaneous Notes to Heads of Five Republics.

Washington, Aug. 29.—President Roosevelt and President Diaz simultaneously have telegraphed notes to the presidents of the five republics of Central America offering the good offices of the United States and Mexico in bringing about a conference of the republics for a discussion of plans to maintain peace.

The announcement that this action had been taken was made Wednesday by Acting Secretary Adee, at the state department. It was stated also that the notes would not be made public here until they had been received by the Central American governments, and probably not until replies had been received. The exact time of sending the notes was not made known, but it is possible that replies from some of the countries already have reached Washington.

Mr. Adee late Wednesday received Minister Godoy, chargé d'affaires of the Nicaraguan embassy, and has conferred at length concerning the steps taken looking to the settlement of Central American disputes and ending the almost incessant warfare between the republics. Neither would admit that the Central American republics had been invited to hold the conference at Washington, but Senor Corea, the Nicaraguan minister, is authority for the statement that such an invitation soon will be extended. In fact, he telegraphed President Zelaya to that effect.

In diplomatic circles here it is said that none of the Central American republics can afford to decline to accept the proffers of mediation made by the United States and Mexico, and that this means that permanent peace practically is assured.

FIGHT FOR $500,000 ESTATE.

Nephews of Mrs. Harris of Cincinnati, Will Contest Her Will.

Cincinnati, Aug. 29.—The will of Mrs. Catherine Harris, who left nearly a million dollars to a half-brother residing in Topoka, Kan., is to be contested by her nephews, it was announced Wednesday.

Mrs. Herris was the widow of Col. Leonard Harris, former mayor and internal revenue collector and a recognized political leader, and managed her own estate.

The appraisers reported Wednesday that the bulk of the estate is taxable, that it does not own a single bit of bad paper, real estate now a bond. A clause in connection with this estate is that it does not yield a cent of interest for the public treasury, as Mrs. Herris had invested only in non-taxable stocks and in securities that stood far above par.

Child Convicted of Murder.

Oil City, Pa., Aug. 29.—McKinley Richmond, a negro, aged ten years, was found guilty of murder in the first degree at Clarion, this county, here, Wednesday. On account of the youth of the boy, the court waived the extreme penalty of the law and ordered him sent to the Morganza reform institute for an indefinite period. The boy killed a little younger sister with a Flobert rifle last May because she struck him with a stone.

New Arrests in Irish Disputs.

Longford, Ireland, Aug. 29.—Mr. Mc Kenna, the Irish nationalist candidate for election to parliament for South Longford, and 17 of his supporters were arrested on charges similar to those on which James F. Farrell, Irish nationalist member for South Longford, and 40 others were arrested and committed for trial, namely, "Participation in an unlawful assembly likely to cause a riot."

Czar Congratulates Stolypin.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 28.—In telegraphing congratulations to Premier Stolypin, on the anniversary of the attempt to blow up the villa of the premier with bombs the czar says: "I offer a thankful prayer to God, who saved your life, that he may crown your work with success."

COLLAPSE OF THE QUEBEC BRIDGE

THE GREAT STRUCTURE CRUMBLES AND DROPS WITHOUT ANY WARNING.

Few If any of the Ninety Imperilled Workmen Escape Death in the Waters of St. Lawrence. Steamer Near Danger.

Quebec, Aug. 30.—The great Quebec bridge collapsed late yesterday and now the vast mass of steel lies a tumbled wreck across the St. Lawrence channel. A careful estimate places the loss of life at eighty-four.

The bridge fell at exactly 5:37 this evening, just as many of the workers were preparing to leave.

The accident was so terrible in its effectiveness in wiping out the lives of the men employed that very little is known as to the cause of the disaster.

Get Warning Too Late.

The bridge was about a mile and a half in length and half of it, from the south shore to midstream, crumpled up and dropped into the water. More than ninety men were at work on the section of the structure and the whistle had just blown at 5:30 for the men to quit work for the day, when there came a grinding sound from the bridge midstream.

The man turned to see what had happened, and an instant later the cry went up:

"The bridge is falling."

The men made a rush shoreward but the distance was too great for them to cover.

The falling section of the bridge dragged others after it and the seeping timbers and cables boomed like artillery.

Only ninety-two men working on the bridge, eight have been rescued. Of the other eighty-four, sixteen have been taken from the water dead and it is feared that the great majority of the others have been either drowned or crushed by the falling girders.

The horror of the situation was increased by the fact that there were a number of wounded men pinned in the wreckage near the shore. Their groans and shrieks could be plainly heard by the crowds who had gathered at the water's edge, but nothing could be done to help them.

Tugs and steamers immediately available and by feeble light of lanterns it was impossible to locate some of the sufferers.

The steamer Glenmont had just cleared the bridge when the first section fell. The water thrown up by the debris came clear over the bridge of the steamer.

The captain at once lowered boats. The small boats piled backward and forward over the sunken wreckage for half an hour but there was no sign of life.

A few floating timbers and the trunks ends of the bridge toward the north shore were the only signs that anything unusual had happened. There was not a ripple on the smooth surface of the St. Lawrence as it swept along toward the gulf.

Those who were drowned were employes of the Phoenixville Bridge company and of subcontractors of Quebec and Montreal.

Body Dug Up.

Minot, N. D.—In order to quiet empleasant rumor of neiger, who feared that Thornton Burright, a farmer living twenty-five miles from Kenmare, had been murdered, Coroner Ekrem ordered the body exhumed and held an inquest, deciding that he came to his death by the kick of a horse. The case has been pending since March 23, when Burright was discovered in his barn lying in a pool of blood. It was generally conceded at that time that he had been killed by his horse, but neighbors suspected foul play.

Must Appear in Court.

Mandan, N. D.—Mayor Harman and members of the city council have been served with a writ of mandamus issued by Judge Winchester, which requires them to appear in court and show cause why they should not be compelled to issue a call for a special election for the purpose of submitting to the voters within the next forty-ten days the question of whether the city shall adopt the commission system of government.

Making More Money.

St. Paul—The railroads of Minnesota are deriving a greater revenue from theirs passenger business since the 2-cent rate went into effect than they did last year upon a 3-cent basis. This contention will be made by Attorney General E. T. Young when the railroad stockholders' rate suits come up for argument before Judge Lochren in the federal court on Sept. 3, and in support of the argument a statement prepared by the railroad commission will be presented. This statement shows the passenger receipts of the railroads for May and June, the first two months the 2-cent rate became operative, and compares the total with the average receipts for two months of last year, or one-sixth of the total for that year.

The statement shows that, on this basis of comparison, the receipts from passenger business under the 2-cent rate exceeded those for a like period last year under the 3-cent rate, except on the Soo Line, Willmar & Sioux Falls, Chicago Great Western and Minneapolis & St. Louis roads on the purely local business, and on all, except the Willmar & Sioux Falls, Minneapolis & St. Louis and the Rock Island roads, on the entire Minnesota business.

But while there was a slight falling off in the receipts on some of the roads, the total for all the roads, on the entire Minnesota business was that of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul missing, shows a total increase of $126,220, which if maintained for the whole year, would mean an increase in the passenger receipts for the year of $757,320.

Fine Imposed.

Minneapolis—Judge Page Morris imposed a fine of $20,000 upon the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway company, and ordered its former general freight agent, Hiram M. Pearce, to pay a $2,000 fine, in the United States district court in Minneapolis. The Omaha road, conjointly with its former general freight agent, was convicted in the same court, April 11, of granting rebates to the Spencer Grain company. The indictment contained fifty counts.

In imposing sentence, Judge Morris explained that while it was clear to him that he would be within his right to impose a separate fine for each offense proved, he could not bring himself to believe that the payment of a fine on each carload of grain constituted a separate offense. Each shipment, the court reasoned, whether made up of one or many carloads, with the subsequent payment of the rebate, could be treated as a separate offense.

Peculiar Accident.

Courtland—A peculiar accident occurred near here when a team attached to a blazing load of bundles ran away. Peter Fosenmeier was using the team to haul bundles to a threshing outfit at work on Daniel Williams' farm, and while the horses were standing near the engine a spark from the smokestack fell into the load, which instantly ignited.

The team started at full speed across the field and into the roadway for home, with the bundles burning furiously, the flames streaming out behind like the tail of a comet. The driver was thrown out at the beginning of the wild run, and the frenzied horses continued for two miles, when they reached home. By this time all that remained of the load, hayrack and wagon was the two front wheels. The horses were badly burned.

BRIEF NOTES.

St. Paul—A group of sporting men had planned to pull off a heavyweight prize fight, but in some way the authorities became aware of the game and steps were taken to stop it.

La Crosse—Owners of launches and motor boats in all of the little cities along the river between Dubuque and St. Paul have taken up a proposition to organize a motor boat club for the protection of members' property.

Mankato—Henry, the 15-year-old son of Ole Rykhus, while standing on a springboard talking with his two younger brothers, was taken with an epileptic fit and fell into the Minnesota river. His brothers at once pulled him out, as the water was only three feet deep, but he was dead.

Glyndon—Two persons were killed and their bodies burned to a crisp as the result of a collision between a mixed freight and cattle train and a work train near this city.

Hastings—The body of an unknown man was found in a slough.

St. Paul—Jacob Finkiestein, grocer, 928 Rice st., was blown through the front window of his store by the explosion of a can of gasoline, but was uninjured.

Princeton—L. J. Swanson, aged sixty-four, shot and killed himself at East Grand Forks this morning at 8 o'clock. He was visiting with his son, W. Swanson, and it is believed that he was despondent because of family troubles. He lived at Rosean, Minn., where he lived on a claim.

Minneapolis—Judge William Lochren in the federal court late yesterday granted the petition of the Minneapolis Street Railway company for an injunction against the publication by the city of an ordinance passed in February directing the street railway company to issue six-fare tickets for Redwood Falls—Hold up somewhere for thirteen years, a $2 draft on a bank that has long since gone out of business has turned up. It was drawn on the old Bank of Redwood Falls, May 3, 1894, in favor of F. A. Gray, and made payable at the Importers' and Traders' National bank, New York. Gray indorsed the draft to Charles McClave, and it was finally signed by the latter and presented for payment. It is thought that McClave must have mislaid it, and after the lapse of thirteen years found it. The draft was paid.

Duluth—The Pittsburg company's steamer Pierpont Morgan, Capt. Chambers, loaded 11,500 tons of ore at the Minsabe docks yesterday afternoon in three and one-half hours and made two shifts to load. This is said to be the record for quick loading at these ore docks and is very close to the tonnage record of the steamer D. G. Kerr.

Duluth—Patrick McDonnell, a well-known contractor of this city, whipped two lumberjacks and put them to flight in a local cafe this evening because they had used coarse language to the young woman cashier.

Two Dainty Blouses

OUR artist has sketched two charming designs for transforming remnants into smart blouses. The standing figure shows a particularly graceful arrangement of lace and ribbon overnet. The blouse itself is of cremm net, with a collar-band and deep V of lace back and front; over this are very broad pointed revers made of heavy lace mounted on ribbon, and they are continued in long ends, which fall down the skirt from under a wide belt of the ribbon which rises high at the back, and is ornamented with fancy buttons. The puffed sleeves of net are quite covered by the flounce of wide lace that falls from the shoulders, and if desired the net sleeves could easily be continued with lace into the long mittens which are gaining ground every day. Thus it will be seen how easily a few odd lengths of cornee or fine lace and net, and a few yards of beautiful ribbon, can be translated into a most effective and graceful garment. The blouse worn by the second figure in the illustration is even prenier in its combination of lace, net and ribbon. The chief feature is the original little waistcont and epaulettes of chine ribbon with a narrow border of black satin. Over the waistcoat comes n wide strip of filet lace, which passes over the shoulders and cuts squarely across the front and back. The under chimisette is of tucked ring-spot net, ss are the sleeves, which are tied with a narrow ribbon to match that of the waistcont and epaulettes; and the wide waist-belt is of the chine ribbon. Such ornamental blouses as these would do admirably for afternoon teas or bridge parties; and their cost would be infinitesimal if manufactured out of remnants which can be picked up for next to nothing at the sales.

THE PLAITED SKIRT

Garment Has So Many Advantages That It Is Sure to Remain in Favor.

Women who have invested in plaited skirts need have no fear that the skirts will be wasted. Plaited skirts, for utilitarian purposes, are sure to remain in high favor throughout the fall at least. They lend themselves so conveniently to the hiding of various kinds of defects. The flat bone of the knees makes the thin woman look less thin, and on the other hand it makes the stout woman look less large around the hips. There is a tendency to reduce that flare below the knees, but both the thin women and the stout women are sure to set their faces against it. When a plaited skirt is correctly made it is a joy forever.

Plaited skirts prevail in all the lightweight cloth costumes being made up for the open air horse shows, race meets and floral parades of late summer and early autumn. The box of plaits first to gain favor, the side plaits, are being used most. With them are seen bias bands, slightly wider than of old, and more distinctly outlined by stitching and pipings. Even more jaunty than it used to be is the short box coat, though the back, while by no means tight, is slightly fitted and clings somewhat to the figure. The sleeves of these coats show a bit more of the gloves than the sleeves of suits meant for knock-about wear, and the cuffs are not so severe. But coat sleeves are not short. They are steadily growing longer; only in the box coat they are pushed toward the elbow to give place for the long wrisied gloves worn with the white and light colored short coat costumes. The hats that accompany these costumes are broad and much bepimmed.

Short women, however, must not wear these short coats. Models as they look on a woman of the right figure, tall and slender, they become absurd on dobby women. Such women, if sensible, have skirts that touch the ground, and coats of proportionate length.

GOWNS FOR AUTUMN

Embroidered Pongees Sure to Be Popular—Make Up Well and Are Inexpensive.

Embroidered pongees are popular for early autumn costumes, or will be. They make up into elaborate costumes that belie their comparative inexpensiveness so admirably that many women prefer them to serge suits. In the pattern pongee suits plaits do not appear. The skirts are gored and flare widely about the feet.

The pongee coat must always be lined, unless the prospective wearer wants a saggy coat. As a rule, girls and young matrons wear it short and elderly women prefer long pongee coats. Etons with elaborately trimmed sleeves and vestees are seen in pongees, and so are box coats with embroidered collar, cuffs and pocket flaps, but the short pony with three-quarter sleeves and deep turnback cuffs that suggest the Louis XV period is seen most frequently. With some of the pongees, instead of embroidery, silk cording is used for trimmings, and the suit is relieved by a little jacket of netted silk trimmed with silk Hercules or soutache braiding and mounted over white taffeta.

One of the smartest costumes seen recently was a tan pongee worn by a young girl. It had no absolutely plain skirt with eleven gores, and a coat, quite as plain, made box fashion, lined with white taffeta and fastened with pongee covered buttons the size of a silver quarter.

PLAID SILK COAT

Now that fancy silk coats are the correct thing, one sees all sorts of models, some of them exceedingly good looking. Our sketch pictures a showy coat in black and white plaid silk taffeta, with inlaid collar of black velvet, bordered by bands of plain white taffeta, which is also used for the belt. A band of black embroidered white silk trims the short and unique sleeves.

A MILLIONAIRE IN JAIL

CONVICT INHERITS WEALTH BUT CANNOT SPEND IT.

Pasquale Monaldi of Italy Sentenced to Fifteen Years' Imprisonment for Murder, Comes Into Riches.

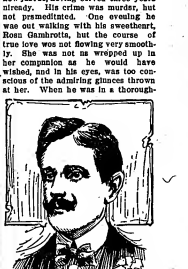
Seldom has there been afforded a more striking illustration of the irony of fortune then that which has befallen a young Italian. He has suddenly become enormously wealthy, but the unexpected recees of riches only adds to his misery. He cannot spend a cent of it on himself. He has to work hard without pay and subsist on the plainest fare, although money enough is his to enable him to wallow in luxuries were he only to get it.

Pasquale Monaldi is a millionaire, but he still remains a convict.

Not long ago he was working wearily at breaking stones under the African sun on the island of Lampdusa, between Malta and Tripoli, wondering why he had been sent into the world if the end was the four walls of a prison during the best years of his life, when a companion, seeing his dejection, undertook to cheer him up by predicting that something would certainly happen.

"Yes," said the other contemptuously, "I can die, that's whet can happen."

The same mood followed him to his cell, and it was with a smothered oath that he looked up when a rattling at his door announced a visitor. Two men walked solemnly into the narrow cell, and standing before the convict asked him if he had not felt in his bones that something was going to happen.



"Happen," exclaimed Pasquale roused to fury by the second harping on the same theme, "don't bother me with happenings, what I want is to be left in peace!"

"Very well, then," said the visitor, "I shall have your millions and leave you in peace!"

After halting the poor fellow some time longer until he was rapidly losing his head, he was told that an aunt, whose very existence he had forgotten, had just died, leaving millioes, and that he, Pasquale, the poor convict, was her only heir.

"What are you torturing me for?" he cried, "that would be the limit! Millions outside and I—a prisoner! I will not believe in such ill luck."

But, all the same, it was true. Pasquale's aunt, Berta Forinni, went when young to South America with her parents, where she married a miner. This miner discovered a silver mine, and died leaving her rich. The now old and childless woman had just pessed to her long rest, and her nephew is the only survivor of the whole family.

ly had temper they met a certain Giuseppe Bottego, his most feared rival, who greeted the girl familiarly, all three stopping to talk.

Rosa her free jokes passed between Rosa and Giuseppe, which ended hy the latter catching her about the waist, and, with a rivalsl feel, planted a resounding kiss on her red lips. She, taken ohock, screamed, and furiously demended if Pasquale would stand by and see her thus treated.

Pasquale on his side saw red, and drawing his knife struck swiftly at the offender, sending the blede straight into his heart. It was all over in a moment. The man sank dead to the pavement, while the murderer and girl, hoping to get away in the darkness and loneliness of the road, turned to ruo, but were stopped.

All this came out at the trial, which ended in Pasquale being sentenced to 15 years' penal servitude, the bitterness of his fate being intensified by the knowledge thot Rosa was a heartless flirt, who would speedily dry her eyes and console herself with another lover.

And the millions? They will be administered by some one appointed by the courts, and if he is honest Pasquale will find them waiting for him when he comes out. If he should turn out dishoneet, Pasquale may find himself ee penolless es wheo he first donned the convict's garb.

WHIP-CRACKING IN CHURCH.

Old Custom Believed to Have Been Penance for a Murder.

London.—Whip-cracking in church was a custom formerly practiced, though not without protest, at Caletor, Lincolnshire, on Palm Sunday. Many attempts were made to suppress it, and about 70 years ago the lord of the Manor presented a petition to the hoose of lords with thet object. "A cert whip of the fashion of several centuries since," ran the document, "called a gad-whip, with four pieces of wych-elm bound round the stock, and a tenther purse attached to the extremity of the stock containing 30 ponces, is, during divine service, cracked in the church porch, and while the second lesson is reading is brought into the church and held over the reading desk by the person who carries it." A local tradition inclines to the view that the custom was originally a penance for a murder, and that the lord of the manor of Hudson could exact some penalty from the Lord of the manor of Broughton if it were omitted. For many years the attempt to put an end to the custom failed, hut in 1846 the objectionable practice was allowed to lapse.

Whip-Cracking in Church Porch.

College Graduates in the World.

One of the Yale professors has been making a study of the occupations of Yale graduates by classes. He finds among other things, that a constantly lessening number are entering the ministry, and a steadily increasing number are studying law. The law now claims more than twice as many as any other profession. Next to it comes finance. Fewer than one-twelfth of the graduates enter the ministry, in spite of the fact that one of the purposes for which Yale wne founded was "to train godly young men for the Christian ministry." But, side by side with these facts, it is also noted that charitable and philanthropic work—the giving both of money and of service—is yerrly cleiming a larger share of the interest of educated men and women. Perhaps that is where the "godly young men" of to-day are golog. —Youth's Companloo.

MAY RUN FOR CONGRESS.

Gen. Corbin Willing to Enter Contest If People Wish it.

Cincinnati.—Congress has no parliculer attraction for Lieut. Gen. Henry Clark Corbin, but he announced the other day that he would be willing to run in the Sixth Ohio district, and to serve, if elected, if the people desired him as a candidate. He made this announcement when he was told that his friends at Batavia, O., desired to nominate him in the Fifth district hes had a factional fight on its hande for some time, and it is considered that the nomination of Gen. Corbin would bring about hormony among the Republicans. Gen. Corbin sold that he was not ambitious and was not asking anything. "I am a plain American citizen," he said, "and accustomed to obey orders. I would do anything to serve my people if they wished it so."

ELIAS STEENERSON, IS O.K.

The Olberg Journal in commenting on the springing of the name of Hon. Halvor Steenerson for the next candidate of the republican party for governor, very sensibly remarks.

"HALVOR, the genial and progressive congressman from the Ninth district is conceded throughout the state to be the logical and stongest gubernatorial timber the republicans can muster. This is a fact, and therefore the Journal two years ago originally advocated his candidacy for the governorship, but the people in his district felt that they could not spare him from congress, where he has taken connoil and is ranked among the foremost statesmen in the house. Here we are again under very simular conditions as those of two years ago. Now the vital question is, can and will the people in the Ninth district afford to make the change at this time. After due consideration and thoughtful reflection we are in a position to answer, we believe not, although we would be very higly pleased to see our "Tall Pine" in Minnesota's gubernatorial chair. His work out out at Washington, not alone for his District and State, but for the Nation at large are of such character and importance that we can not at this time make the change no matter how flattering the offer. M [illegible] has other men that can place Minnesota in the republican column. But if the district will consent to let Halvor become the republican nominee for governor the Journal will be found in line. For only there is Elias Steenerson, Cooksston's popular postmaster, who has on several occasions shewn the mettle he is composed of, relateing to public questions. There we have Samuel G. Iverson, our present State Auditor, who would if given the nomination sweep the state with such magnificent majorities from stem to stern that would cause the democrats to wonder in amazement what had become of Johnson and his "Johnsonism." The republicans have all varities of gubernatorial timber, good stong, sound and shining timber if only made use of, in the proper manner. Let public sentiment crystalize on these two, Elias Steenerson and Samuel G. Iverson, and nominate one of them and you have the next republican governor of Minnesota."

The above is all right at this time, but by the time the conventions are called next summer, "The Interests" will have gotten in their work for an instructed delagation to the state convention for some candidate that represents some certain interests. Then the delegates will put on their muzzle and go down and nominate him, and that's all.

The Farmers boat was compelled to stop running last week on account of the low water, in the Red Lake River, but the conditions of weather that made the river unfit for navigation has placed the roads in fine condition between here and Thief River Falls, so we can get to town by team. If floods come and make the roads bad we can let the horses stand in the barn and steam up the boat, as there is sure to be plenty of water in the river when we have heavy rains.

Decision Recalled.

Congressman Halvor Steenerson has received word from the Secretary of the Interior in answer to the letter he sent to the department, relative to the Nesland case in which the land office regected commutation proof on ceded Indian land. The Secretary has recalled the decision.

Tollef B. Nesland owned a claim near Bunkeberg on which he made his final proof showing eight months residence on the land. The proof was regected because he failed to show fourteen months actual residence on the months actual residence on the land. Congressman Steenerson took the matter up with the Secretary of the Interior, and as a result of his effort the Secretary has recalled his decision. This looks as though there was a good chance for all those having made commutation proof on reservation lands getting their proof accepted where they can prove eight months actual residence.

BROILING.

If the fire should be too hot, sprinkle salt over it.

Birds and other things which need to be baked should be broiled inside first.

Always grease the gridiron well and have it hot before the meat is placed on it.

Never put your fork in the lean part of meat on the gridiron, so it allows the juice to escape.

Fish should be buttered and sprinkled with flour, which will prevent the skin from adhering to the gridiron.

Remember that a hot, clear fire is necessary for broiling all small articles. They should be turned often to be cooked evenly without being burned.

Cover the gridiron with a tin pan or a baking pan. The scopper the meat is cooked without burning the better. The pan holds the heat and often prevents a stray line of smoke from touching the meat.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Paying Through the Nose.

"Paying through the nose" is to be indirectly swindled as a transaction at to pay an exorbitant price for a thing in consideration of long credit. A variant is "to be bested through the nose." "Nosed" here has the meaning of cheated, deceived.

At this instant he bores me with some trick.—Shirley: VIII., 1, 1.

One that hath gulled you, that hath bored you, etc.—Life of T. Cromwell, 1602, II. ii. 103.

And Howell in his "Instruction For Forren Travell" (1650), page 59, "had known divers Dutch gentlemen grossly gulld by this cheat (the selling of bread) prescribe to young travelers in Italy), and some English lord also through the nose this way by paying excessive prices for them."—Notes and Queries.

Oldest of British Sports.

Hawking is the oldest of all British sports. To the uninitiated the most marvelous feature of hawking is the manner in which the hawks themselves, naturally the wildest and wariest of the feathered tribe, have been trained to surrender their liberty for liberty and return literally like a bolt from the blue in obedience to the will of the falconer. The latter seems the more remarkable when one learns that the best birds are those which have attained maturity in a wild state. —London Ladies' Field.

Circus Folks Most Moral.

Notwithstanding the absence of the artificial safeguards that a convention of society has ordained, circus performers are, as a class, the most moral folk on the face of the earth. An old circus man expressed the fact in this way:

"For 200 years there has not been a domestic scandal nor a divorce among us when both husband and wife were from recognized circus families. In every case where there has been a scandal either one or the other has been an outsider."—Everybody's Magazine.

A Few Edged Care.

A story is told of the wonderful cure from deafness of a patient who was recommended to hear a Wagner opera and to sit near the orchestra by the bandsmen. The physician accompanied his patient and sat beside him. Suddenly, while the crash of the instruments was at its loudest, the deaf man found he could hear. "Doctor, he almost shrieked, "I can hear!" The doctor gave no sign that he noticed the remark. "I tell you, doctor," repeated the patient in ecstacy, "you have saved me! I have recovered my hearing!" Still the physician was silent. He had become deaf himself.—Harper's Weekly.

Intimation.

"Do the insolent fellow refused to pay his rent?"

"He did not say so in words, but he intimated it."

"How so?"

"He kicked me downstairs."—Paris Journal.

LAWYERS IN ENGLAND.

The Difference Between the Barrister and the Solicitor.

The barrister in England is the very [illegible] of the earth. He it is who makes laws, who goes into parliament, who sits on the bench, who considers himself seven or eight degrees higher up in the social scale than any other or middle class mortal, and with all this he has absolutely no opportunity to honor his clients. That ancient, much abused thing called custom in this country has created for the lawyers a separate and distinct limbo, which may be compared in a measure to the life of the bee. One is the drone and the other the queen. The drone is the solicitor, who sits in an office working up a case, consulting clients, drawing deeds, controlling estate transactions and conducting the business of people who are unfortunate enough to be saddled under the trust deeds. The solicitor, who has his own tradition to work on, he does not ever get to himself any glory whatever. Except in police and county court cases, he is persona non grata in the courts of the judges, "he is not seen." If he has a case on hand, he is obliged to take it to a barrister when in such he may place have heard of the matter in dispute before, done his wig and gown, provided him part of the fee and given him a brief. The solicitor is the tradesmen of his profession. The solicitor remains the old time family adviser, to whom all sorts of foolish people bring their title deeds, their stock certificates, their government bonds and all such documents which have in tendency to lead them into temptation, and that is why so many solicitors, when they don't marry, find it impossible to resist the desire to take that which is not theirs.—London Letter in Town and Country.

Safest Place in Trains.

"I have one rule for my family when they travel," said the conductor of the suburban train, "and that is for them never to ride in the rear coach or the first one and, preferably, not in the coach next to the last or first. The reason for it is so obvious that I should think the foremost and last cars of a train would have been patronized by anybody who reads of railroad accidents. If there is a smashup, those are the coaches that suffer. It seems strange that some kind of a baffler is not put behind the locomotive tender and at the rear of the train. How many lives would be saved by a device of the kind one has only to study the statistics of railroad accidents to figure out for himself."—New York Press

How He Got a Drink.

An Indiana traveling man told a story the other day of an incident on the road. He was in the smoking car of an express train reading his paper when a man rushed in from the car behind the smoker, evidently in great agitation and said: "Has anybody in this car any whisky? A woman in the car behind has fainted!" Instantly dozens of flasks were produced. The man who had asked for it picked out the largest one, drew the cork and put the bottle to his lips. With a long, satisfied sigh, he handed the flask back and remarked, "That did me a lot of good, and I needed it, for it always makes me feel queer to see a woman faint away!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Notice for Publication.

Land Office at Crookston, Minnesota Aug. 13, 1907.

Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final Commutation proof in support of his claim and that said proof will be made before J. M. Bishop, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minn. on September 23rd, 1907, viz:

Eva Shosten, widow of Anton W. Shosten, Deceased.

H. E. No. 607, Red Lake Subscriber the Lot 1 & N. ½ of S.W.¼ & S. E. ¼ of S.W.¼ of Sec. 31 Tp. 153 N. R. 40 W.

E. J. MONTAGUE, Register.

His Modest Claim.

A claim for damages against a railroad company is so often a license for exorbitant charges that a simple bill such as was received by an American railroad company many years ago, even apart from its humorous aspect, is refreshing. It ran as follows:

To ——— and ——— Railroad company in John Smith Dr.

July 18, 1877.—To sundrie your Locomotive into my wife; as per Doctors bill for the same $14.00
To smashing her box and spilling her hat 2.87
To upsetting my deer horn (wagon) and breaking it 6.00
To burning me 5.00
$27.87

There is authority for stating that the claim was paid immediately.—Scrap Book.

Her Chilly Retort.

The late Dr. —— of Malden, after pouring forth the story of his undying love in the most touching manner for over an hour to a young woman who he hoped would become his fourth wife, was refused the second time. He started for the door; but, looking around, he said in a most tender voice: "By heavens, you are the coldest woman I ever saw!"

The young woman looked up and answered sweetly:

"Oh, no, doctor; you have seen three colder than I!"—Boston Herald.

A Curious Notice.

This curious official notice was once published in Germany: "At the request of Herr William Leigeon of Insterburg, the widow Lisas Leigeon, who was drowned in May, 1900, on a journey from Stockholm to Hamburg in the Kaiser Friedrich, is hereby called upon by the courts to appear and report himself on or before April 1, 1903, under pain of being declared dead."

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

He may cut off one trip a week the same as he did on the route from High Landing to Hilda, for it don't do for the government to go to much expense for providing mail to a man that is poking his eyes out in the brush on this reservation. But how would it be if we joined the Socialist party, Wheeled up and all move to town? Then we could have mail delivered to our door three times a day, but the welth of America would soon be on the decrease, instead of the increase.

About Payments.

We have not published any opinion up to the present time, regarding the failure of some of the settlers on these lands not making their payments when they were due, to the government We have kept silent for the reason that we did not know what to say, but now we can say with confidence that we are right, that no settler who is making his home on this land, with his family, and farming it in good faith, as the government intended they should when they took it, need have no fear that his Big Uncle Samuel will jump on him and take his home away from him, just because he was to poor to make his payments promptly when due. We regret that our information came so late for publication this week, but we quote one paragraph to give the actual settler an idea about how the dartment feel regarding the matter. They say:

"The land department is now seeking to administer its laws favorably to ACTUAL FARMERS and against speculators, and apparently can see no reason why a person who applies for a homestead entry and swares that it is agricultural land and that he takes it for the purpose should not live upon it, make a farm of it, and do his share in building roads, schools, churches ect., and make of the place a habitable region in place of making proof on slight residence and moving away, leaving the country a wilderness to go into the hands of speculators."

How Some Mutes Mapp.

Statistics compiled by authorities on the condition of the deaf and dumb in this country present one significant fact in regard to the matrimonial affairs of that body of citizens. It is revealed therein that while many women deprived of the power of speech have been sought in marriage by men whose five senses were unimpaired only a few women whose tongues were in good working order have consented to tie themselves to men who could not hear what was being said. Quite find in these revelations matter for many caustic diatribes pertaining to the conversational and listening powers of the sexes. Whether or not these sarcastic observations contain an explanation of the comparative willingness and unwillingness of men and women to marry mutes is a question, but this fact is undisputed.

How Woxall Was Named.

Near Schwenksville, Pa., is a village that bears the name of Woxall. This wonderful name was the result of an error upon the part of the postoffice department in Washington. The place was known many years ago as "Croppestettel," or "Crowtown," and later as Mechanicsville, but when a postoffice was established there in 1868 neither of these names was satisfactory, and it was decided to choose a new cognomen. Many were the suggestions submitted to the postoffice department, but all were found to be too nearly like the name of some other postoffice to be acceptable. One day the village storekeeper saw the word "Noxall" upon a piece of calico and called the attention of several friends to it. At once all agreed that "Noxall" would be a fine name for their town. So the postoffice authorities were notified. Soon a letter came from Washington approving the name that had been chosen, but in the letter it was spelled "Woxall." So Woxall became the name of the village.—Philadelphia Record.

A Prearranged Match

By Genevieve Hays

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Miss Murray paused, brush in hand, as no ominous sound reached her ears from so adjoining room—a sound that had grown distressingly familiar since her arrival at the Courtlands' and which always betokened a disturbance in the domestic atmosphere of that place.

"They're at it again," she comment-ed, carelessly, nodding to the bright, insouciant face in the glass and bringing the brush down vigorously upon the wealth of hair falling about her like a silken shroud. "They quarrel incessantly, day and night, and keep one in a delightful state of uncertainty as to which it will be—a skirmish or a battle royal. And, considering the little peculiarity, it seems that I was not given a room farther removed from theirs. Fortunately, life on Brother John's has accustomed me to such a state of affairs—but poor Dennis!

Genise Murray was an orphan. The greater part of her life had been spent of boarding school. At 18 she returned home to find that her brother—to whose care had been intrusted her share of her father's estate—had lost all her money in an unlucky speculation. She was penniless.

John Murray briefly stated this fact to his sister and suggested that one alternative—to marry rich.

"As yet no one knows of this unfortunate loss. You are still considered an heiress, and are handsome enough to marry where you choose. I have here no invitation from the Courtlands for you to spend a month or so with them. They are wealthy and have but one child—an unmarried son.

Sho was Alone and was Singing When Dennis Entered.

"I say, cords well and win him. It is the only chance I can give you."

And Genise Murray accepted the invitation as she did the advice, without comment. Three weeks' endurance with her sister-in-law's uncertain temper and her brother's morose silence advised the wisdom of obtaining a temporary release from both, even if such were to be accomplished only by a visit to a certain not-to-be-fastidioned resident locality.

"But if John thinks I am willing to take my chances in the matrimonial market after the insight he and Rosa's mood have given me into wedded bliss, he is mistaken," soliloquized Miss Murray, as she paused to look trunk packing to mend a pair of torn gloves, "and so I shall tell this unfortunate young gentleman who is offered me—without his knowledge—in lieu of my lost fortune."

So when Dennis Courtland lo obedience to parental commands drove to the station to meet the girl who might prove o desirable consort.

"In the rolo of sweet simplicity," he commented, grimly, eoting her dainty costumo of navi-blo gray. "If women euly wouldn't make their wiles so apparent—"

Then he broke off in amazement at what she was saylop:

"Pressed drive slow, Mr. Courtland; I wish to talk to you."

Evidently doesn't intend to lose any time," thought Dennis, gravitally, as he acquiesced stiffly with her request.

Flashing an inquisitive glance into that haughty, defiaot face, Genise Murray concluded that the woman who embarked in a matrimonial venture with this young man would have anything but a smooth sail through life; though aloof she only said:

"We are strangers, and to some extent will be expected to entertain each other to the coming weeks, so it is best that we should have an understanding to the beginoiog. You may not know it—but—my brother sent me down here to marry you."

No other woman could say things in Miss Murray's inimitable manner. "Your brother's wishes coincide with my parents'; they are anxious for me to marry you."

"And of course you made up your mind to hate me at once."

Dennis winced and stammered.

"Don't trouble yourself to deny the charge," laughed his companion, vivaciously. "It would not be true to nature were it otherwise! But your parents did not know that I am utterly penniless. John lost all my money in some unfortunate speculation, and his only ideas of atonement are to send me in search of a rich husband—and you were his first offering."

"Lost—all—your fortune?" stammered Dennis. "Why, the colonel never suspected this. He has repeatedly explained to me what a solid foundation your money would be to our totteriog credit. Do you know that we are on the eve of bankruptcy?"

Then they laughed, these two, as if this were the best joke of the season!

Miss Murray was the first to speak.

"It is too delicious," she gasped, sweeping a bit of flimy cobweb across her eyes. "Suppose they had really succeeded in their pleasantry—wouldn't the awakening have been terrible! Whatever else fate has in store for us, we are fortunate in missing that. But I must tell you why I accepted the invitation here simply for a change! Life was unbearable at Brother John's, and I told myself that I would come—give you my confidence if you were worthy of it (which the first glance assured me that you were), secure a few weeks' rest, and by some time to collect my scattered thoughts and decide upon some plan of action for the future. Was not my decision a wise one?"

"Ask yourself that question at the end of a week," answered Dennis, with an awkward laugh. "I am afreid you have escped Charybdis only to be wrecked at last upon Scylla! Ours is not what would be termed a happy family. The colonel and his wife were never known to agree on any subject, and they are always—coversing."

"Do they—quarrel?" asked Miss Murray, in an awed undertone.

"Fearfully," answered Dennis, grimly, rather enjoying his companion's perturbed face.

"Before people?"

"Before people."

"Well," she said, reflectively, "entering upon such a life will not be as difficult as if one had not served an apprenticeship beforehand, and I am already fortified, so you will have no occasion to feel annoyed about me. I hear you have a lovely place. I will enjoy that, while whatever others think, you will know that I have no designs upon you. But I shall expect you to be my friend and make my visit as pleasant as possible; will you?"

"I shall do everything lo my power," he answered fervently, actually smiling upon her in a manner that, had they seen it, would have enraged the feminine admirers who had vainly tried to make some impression upon his obdurate heart.

Thus was their friendship established.

Io the weeks that followed Deonis Courtland fulfilled his promise.

Gray clouds swept over the sky, and a little child entered Miss Murray's heart as she made ready for her departure and said she was glad she was going. She said it reluctantly, though no one had contradicted her—and added that gloomy weather always had made her miserable, always!

And with this apology for an aching heart, Miss Murray made a most becoming tollette and went down to spend her last evening with the Courtlands.

She was all alons and was singing when Dennis entered, sweet, old-fashioned ballads that our grandmothers knew and loved.

A dull red fire, a warm room scented with chrysanthemums, a young girl sloging—the face or the voice, which was the sweetest? He could not tell. But from that long, the melody of which would echo down all the years of his after life, had been made up to him now song for him by "this lost woman of his youth yet ao possessed."

He roused himself at last to realize that she was going. He gazed longingly into her face. He held her hands with a mighty strength, then pressed them geotly to his lips.

"Why, Dennis, you don't—"

"But I do," he answered, with a laogh that was half a sob. "I love you, Genise! I would die for you!"

But Miss Murray remained silent, her hands resting passively in his, her eyes fixed wonderingly on the handsome, soldierly figure, the pale face and the glossy, cropped head.

"That Dennis loved her—her! was something almost beyond the young lady's comprehension, and that the knowledge of this fact should thrill her with soch wild, strange joy, was something almost equally incomprehensible.

The man was waiting for an answer. She must speak.

"I—I—know it—you," she cried, desperately, all of her tact and graceful aplomb deserting her at this crisis.

"You are willing to trust me?" he questioned.

"Yes."

"For life?"

"For life," whispered Miss Murray, in delicious confusion, but utter content.

And this answer she has never regretted.

TRIED IT.

"What!" cried the genial Popkins, clapping his friend Jobson on the back, "you are in love with Maud Dawson, and too bashful to propose to her! Thiok shame of yourself, man! Just you follow my plan. I was out walkiog one night with a lady, who is now my wife, and we came to a Jewsler's shop and I pointed to the engagement rings in the window and said, 'Wouldn't you like one of these?' and she said, 'Yes,' and so it was all settled."

"Capital idea!" cried the bashful Jobson. "I'll try it this very night."

Twenty-four hoors later the two friends met once more.

"Well, Jobson," cried Popkins, "did the plao work?"

"Work," groaned Jobson, "I should think it did! Just listen. I took Maud along High street and stopped at Goldstein's, the jeweler's, and I pointed to the engagement rings in the window and asked her if she would like one, and she smiled and blushed and put her hand on my arm and said, 'Oh, yes, dear George. I would like that one,' and 'that one' was 15 guineas!"

Profit by the Experience of One Who Has Found Relief.

James R. Keeler, retired farmer, of Fenner St., Canenovia, N. Y., says: "About fifteen years ago I suffered with my back and kidneys. I doctored and used many remedies without getting relief. Beginning with Doan's Kidney Pills, I found relief from the first box, and two boxes restored me to good, sound condition. My wife and many of my friends have used Doan's Kidney Pills with good results and I can earnestly recommend them."

GIFT NOT ALL A GIFT.

Generosity That Was Purely the Result of Accident.

A miscloosory bishop told this story about F. Marion Crawford, the famous novelist:

"Mr. Crawford went to school," he said, "to Concord, and one day he was taken to call on a Concord clergyman's.

"The clergyman had a misclosory box on his drawing room table, and, time banging heavily on the boy's hande, he amused himself with trying whether a silver half—it was all the money he had in the world, and he had cooverted it loto, that gigantic coin for safety—would go loto the slit in the box's top.

"It was a close fit, but unfortunately it did go, and the coin slipped out of the embryo author's fingers. There was a terrible crash of silver falling among the coppers—and then the boy, as the novelists say, 'knew no more.'

"When he came to himself he found the clergyman and his family in raptures over his generosity."

She Experimented.

A little girl of five was taken to church one Sunday, and listened with unexpected attention to the sermon, which graphically told the story of the stilling of the tempest on the Sea of Galilee, and how Christ walked on the waves. In the afternoon her mother missed her and began an anxious search of the house. As she neared the bathroom she heard sounds of splashing, and hurried to the door to behold a small, excited face peering over the rim of the big white tub, and to hear a small, excited voice exclaim: "Say, mamma, I'm walking on the water le quite n trick."

Not Entire.

The sercoant, after painfully extricating himself from the branches of a balloon, limped to the nearest farmhouse.

"Madam," he said to the woman who answered his knock, "can you accommodate with a night's lodging a sailorman who has been wrecked?"

"I'd be glad to," she hesitated, "but you are an entire stranger to—"

"Not an entire one," he interrupted, with some acerbity. "For I have left my left ear, three teeth, and certain portions of my nose back there with the ruined car."

Evil of Tipping System.

Although there is a great effort made to keep secret the thefte in hotels and restaurants in New York, it is quite evident they are on a rapid increase. The manager of a large restaurant says the chances of having servants depend almost entirely upon patrons for their pay lowers their moral standard and causes them to look on those they are supposed to serve as their legitimate prey.

FEET OUT.

She Had Curious Habits.

When a person has to keep the feet out from under the clothes during the coldest nights in winter because of the heat and prickly sensation, it is time that coffee, which causes the trouble, be left off.

There is no end to the nervous condition that coffee will produce. It shows io one way in coe person and in another way in another. In this case the lady tells what it did for her:

"I have had to lie awake half the night with my feet and limbs out of bed in the coldest nights, and felt afraid to sleep for fear of catching cold. I have been troubled for years with twitching and jerking of the lower limbs, and for most of the time I have been unable to go to church or to places of amusement for that awful feeling that I must keep on the move.

"When it was brought to my attention that coffee caused so many nervous diseases, I concluded to drop coffee and take Postum Food Coffee to see if my trouble was caused by coffee drinking.

"I only drank one cap of coffee for breakfast but that was enough to do the business for me. When I quit it my troubles vanished in an almost miraculous way. Now I have no more of the jerking and twitching and can sleep with any amount of bedding over me and sleep all night, in sound, peaceful rest.

"Postum Food Coffee is absolutely worth its weight in gold to me."

NOT THE TIME TO STOP.

Manager Saw the Possibilities in the Situation.

Jim Johnstone, the famous baseball umpire, said recently in New York that baseball crowds were far kinder to umpires than they used to be.

"This le true of theater crowds, too," said Mr. Johnstooe. "Why, with provincial touring companies in the past, maltreotment was regularly expected. In fact, the companies prelud by it to more ways than one.

"I know of a company that was playing 'The Brokeo Vow' lo Paiot Rock, a one night stand. The audience didn't like 'The Brokeo Vow,' and eggs, cabbagoe and potatoes rained upon the stage.

"Still the piny went on. The hero raved through his endless speeches, dodging an occoo or a baseball every other minute, and pretty soro from these missiles that he hodn't been able to dodge.

"But doolly a gallery oudltor lo a paoorama of rags and soorn hurled a heavy hoot, and the actor, thoroughly alarmed, slarted to retreat.

"'Keep on playing, you fool,' hissed the manager from the wings, as he hooked to the hoot with an umbrella. 'Keep on till we get the other one.'"

CHILDREN TORTURED.

Girl Had Running Sores from Eczema —Boy Tortured by Poison Oak— Both Cured by Cuticura.

"Last year, after having my little girl treated by a very prominent physician for on obstioate case of eczema, I resorted to the Cuticura Remedies, and was so well pleased with the almost instantaneous relief afforded that we discarded the physician's prescription and relied entirely on the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Pills. When we commenced with the Cuticura Remedies her feet and limbs were covered with runoiog sores. In about six weeks we had her completely well, and there has been no recurrence of the trouble.

"In July of this year a little boy in our family poisoned his hoode and arms with poison oak, and in twenty-four hours his hande and arms were a mass of torturing sores. We used only the Cuticura Remedies, and in about three weeks his hands and arms healed up. Mrs. Lizzie Vincent Thomas, Fairmont, Welden's Ridge Tenn., Oct. 13, 1905."

MOTHERHOOD

The first requisite of a good mother is good health. The experience of maternity should not be approached without careful physical preparation, as a woman who is in good physical condition transmits to her children the blessings of a good constitution.

Preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from nature's roots and herbs, more successfully than by any other medicine known. It gives power and strength to the entire feminine organism, caring displacements, alleration and inflammation, and the result is less suffering and more children healthy at birth. For more than thirty years has been the friend of American mothers in preparing for childbirth.

MRS. JAMES CHESTER

Note that Mrs. James Chester, of 427 W. 35th St., New York says to this letter:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"I was every expectant mother and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a condition that my first baby came at 8½ months, but by the use of its great value at this trying period of a woman's life urged me to try it and I did so, and the result was enough to convince me that if I should ever be in the way again I would take it. I recovered quickly and am in the best of health now."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a successful remedy for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments of women.

It has cured almost every form of Female Complaints, Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation, Ulcerations and Organic Diseases of Women and is invaluable in preparing for Childbirth and during the Change of Life.

HE HAD TO HAVE FRUIT.

Grapes Beyond His Purse, Boy Took Humble Substitute.

James Wilson, the secretary of agriculture, was discussing in Washington the aid which his department gives the American farmer. Mr. Wilson pointed out the benefit that had been derived from the introdoction of durum wheat, of the wheat-testing machine, and of the method of extracting potash from granite.

"In fact," said Mr. Wilson, smiling, "I believe that eventually our finest products will be cheap enough to be within the reach of all. Then the story of the boy and the hot-house grapes will be as dead and antiquated as the theatre hat stories of the past.

"The boy—he was a bootblack—entered a grocer's store one day, and, pointing to some superb grapes, said:

"'Wot's the price o' them there, mister?'

"One dollar a pound, my lad,' the clerk replied.

"A look of anguish passed over the boy's face, and he said, hastily:

"'Then give us a cent's worth o' carrots. I'm dead nuts on fruit.'"

PRESCRIPTIONS IN LATIN.

The Public Should Have Them Translated by the Druggists.

What virtue is there in the secrecy with which the doctor hedges about his profession?

"Professional etiquette" occupies a prominent place in the curriculum of every medical school, and when duly analyzed "professional etiquette" seems to mean "doing what is best for the doctor, individually and collectivoly."

Among the things that "is best for the doctor" is the writing of the prescriptions in Latin, and thus keeping the public in ignorance not only of what it is taking for its ills, but forcing a call upon the doctor each time a prescription is needed.

In plain and understandable English the writing of prescriptions in Latin makes business for the doctors.

Let us say that you have the ague. You had it last year and the year before. Each time you have visited the doctor and he has prescribed for you—in Latin. You have never known what he has given you for the disease, and so each time you are forced to go to him again and give him an opportunity to repeat his prescription—in Latin, and his fee—in dollars.

If you ask the doctor why he uses Latin in writing his prescriptions, why no writes "aqua" when he means water, he will give you a technical disscration on the purity of the Latin language, and the fact that all words are derived from it, etc. it will be a dissertation that you may not be able to answer, but it will hardly convince you.

It would be a good thing for the public to divise a little code of ethics of its own; ethics that will be "a good thing for the public individually and collectively."

Let us apply one of the rules of this code of ethics to you, the individual.

You call in the physician when you have the ague, the grippe, or any of the other ills to which human flesh is heir, and which you may have again some day. The doctor prescribes—in Latin, and you take this, to you meaningless scribble to the druggist to bave it compounded. Right here is where you come in, if you are wise. Say to the druggist that you want a translation of that prescription. It is your privilege to know what you are taking. While the doctor's code of ethics may not recognize this right it is yours just the same.

With the translated prescription in your possession you have two distinct advantages. You know what you are taking, and should you wish to call some other doctor at some time you will be able to tell him what drugs you have been putting into your system, and also if you should have the same disease again you can save yourself a visit to the doctor, and his fee, by taking this translated prescription to the druggist once more and having it refilled.

A Knock.

"Jimmy," said the father, "there's a rip in your bathing suit. Go and sew it up."

"But papa," growled the boy, "mother will sow it for me."

"Never mind. I want you to learn to sew yourself. For," said the father, "some day you will get married, and then you won't have any mother—you will only have a wife."

"The Carthaginian mercenaries," he said, "caused their prisoners in a cement that, as it hardened, contracted. You can't imagine how uncomfortable this was."

"Oh, yes, I can," she answered. "I once had on a tight bathing suit when it began to shrink."

THE DAIRY

TREAD POWERS IN DAIRY.

Uniform Rate of Speed Secured by Use of Heavy Fly Wheel.

While the small gasoline engines adapted to running cream separators have been hailed with delight by many dairymen, the old tread power is still a very economical and reliable source of power. With a heavy sheep, dog or the dairy herd built, good power can be produced to run the separator and churn at practically no cost except for the feed.

One difficulty has been to secure a uniform rate of speed, but this is solved if a fly wheel is attached to the tread. While the sketch shows a direct drive from tread to separator, a more desirable arrangement is to have the tread located in a room adjoining the separator room, where the attendant will not be exposed to the breath of the animal.

CAUSE OF GAS IN THE CHURN.

An Explanation of This Peculiar Phenomenon in Handling Cream.

Frequently in churning gas will so accumulate after several rounds and create a pressure inside sufficiently great to produce a popping report at the moment the cover with the cork is removed. This delights the children and calls for an explanation such as is suggested in the following:

"What causes the compressure of air in a churn? I have often noticed that after several rounds and create a pressure inside sufficiently great to produce a popping report at the moment the cover with the cork is removed. This delights the children and calls for an explanation such as is suggested in the following:

"What causes the compressure of air in a churn? I have often noticed that after several rounds of churning churn one would find the cream oozing out at tin sides of the cover. In taking out the cork at the bottom the gas would escape with force."

The compressure of air is due to the formation of gas produced by certain bacteria. These organisms exist in the cream when it is being soured for churning. The gas is a by-product, simply speaking, and as it forms by fermentation or other processes induced by bad germs. It is held in the body of the cream, being unable to rise and escape on account of the density of the mass.

The maximum amount of gas is naturally contained in the cream just at churning time. A little is liberated in stirring and pouring. Cream that has been agitated with a paddle dasher ing the ripening process will often show bubbles on the surface. This is the same gas as is detected in the churn. The greater the viscosity of the cream the larger will be the bubbles before they break says Coleman's Rural World. The presence of this phenomenon indicates that more cleanliness could be practiced. The object of the gas is that it is liable to impart more or less of a strong or undesirable flavor in cream of firstclass purity.

Buy a Good Separator.

When a separator is to be purchased, see that it is a good one. There are many cheap and worthless machines on the market that will simply disgust the buyers when they come to use them. The separators advertised in the Farmers' Review are not of this class, but are of the class that will give satisfaction for many years to come. The buyer of a separator should remember that when a separator is offered him at a price far below what the regular companies can make them for, something must be the matter with it. This is more generally that the cheap machine is manufactured at a very low cost out of poor material and inferiorness in adjustment. Without that exactness a separator is of no value.

Did You Ever.

Did you ever stop to figure out how much you loan by not knowing exactly what your cows are doing from day to day? Do you ever sit down and study hard as to why your herd gave 200 pounds of milk one night and morning and only 275 pounds the second night and morning following? Did you ever add a fresh cow to your herd and find at the end of a week that you were getting only as much milk as you were before the fresh cow was added, though you had fully counted upon maintaining the original flow and being better off by just one cow's milk? How often were you successful in getting the herd back to its former flow under these circumstances?

The Far-Sighted Farmer.

The far-sighted farmers are planning on having an abundance of roughsas for the cows next winter. With plenty of hay, corn fodder, millet (although millet is not an extra good feed to produce milk) straw, etc., supplemented with a light grain ration, if the present high prices of grain prevail, they will be able to make money out of their cows next winter. The prevailing sentiment is in favor of more cows, and in this the farmers are right in their day and generation."

WHAT IS IN MILK.

Much is Known, But Much More Remains to Be Found Out.

When milk is examined with the microscope it is found that it is composed largely of hatter globules as well as the various forms of casein. An analysis of milk shows that chemically it contains water, fat, casein, sugar, phosphate of lime, phosphate of magnesia, phosphate of iron, chloride of potassium, chloride of sodium, and some soda combined with cream. The milk sugar forms a very considerable part of the whole and is sometimes put at as much as four per cent. Water constitutes from 80 to 87 per cent. of the whole weight. The kind of milk furnished is controlled somewhat by the age of the animal furnishing it, though the richness is due very largely to the breeding of the cow; that is, some cows produce offspring that give rich milk rather than milk of inferior quality. The various salts that enter into milk probably constitute more of a factor in its palatibility than we now know, says Farmers' Review. In fact, there is much about milk that has never been searched out by scientists. For instance, what valnn has the phosphate of iron, which is present in milk only in the extent of seven one-thousandths of one per cent? It is probable that each of these elements plays a considerable role. There is the chloride of sodium (salt). It is present in normal milk to the extent of 24 one-thousandths of one per cent, and yet it seems to be quite essential. Cows have been deprived of salt to the extent of greatly reducing their milk flow, but just how this was connected with the salt we do not yet know.

There are many things in milk that are worth finding out. Some day we may learn that the food the cows must have certain things in them that we now deem of no particular nutritive value. The study of milk has not yet reached the stage where it yields data to settle all the questions that seem so difficult. One of the points which as yet little studied is the sugar, in milk, which often exceeds the fat content. Is there any relation existing between the fat and the sugar? A study of the two in conjunction might yield some results of great commercial value.

MARKETING BUTTER.

The Suitability Dependent Largely Upon Its Appearance.

Experience has taught me that a package to be attractive must be clean, and the most conservative buyers will often pick a better grade of goods in a clean, neat package in preference to a good article in an unattractive package, declares a writer in Farm and Home. Buyers will invariably pick the best looking product and pay a premium for it.

In packing butter for the retail or grocer's trade, if made to sufficient quantities, I use a good sized tub which has previously been soaked in a strong brine from 16 to 24 hours, with the sides and bottom lined with parchment paper and a cloth circle on the top. After adding the cloth circle, I always add a thin layer of salt on top of it, as it holds the cloth in place and keeps the air from the butter. The cover should be well fastened on with small strips of tin.

If I were in position to cater to a retail trade or direct to the consumer, I would put up my butter in either one or two-pound prints, wrapping them in parchment paper which bore my own trade mark or design so that the consumer would always know my product as uniform quality and always clean.

One dealer has handled my goods for 12 years and has gained customers who refuse to accept any other. Occasionally during the winter months our market is not sufficient to supply the demand and he has to fill orders from other sources. Just as often as he does, he has complaints. Always put a good article in an attractive package and you will have no trouble in disposing of it, but a poor package means dissatisfied customers and a loss to the producer.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Dr. B. Halsted Scott, of Chicago, Ills., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr. Wm. J McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The demand that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

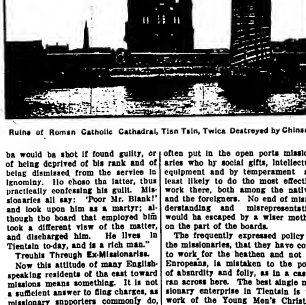
CRITICISM OF MISSIONS RAMPANT IN PORT CITIES.

Tientsin, China.—Here is the place to come to learn "the other side" of foreign missions. This city and Shanghai are doubtless the two greatest centers of anti-missionary sentiment in the world. The critical claims of missions and missionaries most commonly heard have to do with China and with China's people. Three out of four stories reflecting upon missions are located in China, and two out of three are likely to concern Peking and its neighborhood.

Now, that means Tientsin. The foreign population of Peking is very small, including few persons besides legationers and missionaries. But Tientsin, the port of Peking and of North China, has the second largest foreign population in the empire. It is a city of imposing European buildings, of foreign stores, of modern streets and homes, of clubs and churches—in short, it is a bit of the west which greets a traveler like an oasis in the desert of the east.



A Missionary Charged with Graft.

On the ship between Chefoo and Tientsin I was talking over a variety of far eastern topics with a British merchant who had lived for more than 20 years in Tientsin. He was plainly a gentleman, a man of family, of breeding and social standing, and in all respects his views had been temperate. Without his knowing my interest in the subject, the conversation drifted to missionaries. "Really, some one should look into this missionary whoorarr rank of second lieutenant. At every village he would demand a large sum of money, in the name of the commanding officer, which he would quietly pocket himself. At length word of this reached the British authorities, and the missionary was asked for an explanation. His lately denied everything. Then he was given his choice of standing a fair court-martial, with the assurance that other port cities, contains a number of ex-missionaries who have been dismissed from board service, or who have of their own will retired to enter business. There is nothing dishonorable in the latter practice, although it is a clear violation of accepted missionary ethics. The onus of the shortcomings of all these, who are naturally still called "missionaries," attaches to the missionary body, the membership of which, I have been repeatedly assured, look with utmost disfavor upon the entrance of any one of their number into money making pursuits.

The wiser way would be for the missionaries openly to disavow responsibility for the course of all except bona fide members of established missions, and hospitably to meet honest criticism with frank explanations and with respect for the motives of the critics; instead of maintaining an attitude of silence, seclusion and self-sufficiency. In the matter of the social relations between the foreign community and the missionaries, the latter appear to be more blameworthy than the former. It is a their business to be friendly with all men and to guard the good reputation of their work. Yet in truth they sometimes seem the more censorious of the two. Some of the sweeping assertions of the missionary opponents and the evil lives of non-missionary foreigners are as unfounded as many of the criticisms which the latter make of the missionaries. Investigation reveals the fact that in Tientsin more than a dollar and a half of the moral welfare of the Anglo-Saxon young men and for the reclamation of those who have strayed, by the non-missionary residents than by the missionaries themselves.

Where the Missionaries Are at Fault.

An interested critic could probably prove the charges of narrowness, exclusiveness and censoriousness against many members of the missionary body here, admitting the noteworthy exceptions. All this might be comprehended within the phrase, general unfitness for missionary work in a port city. It is a singular lack of perception on the part of the mission boards in America and Europe which this of the contention of the missionary, that he came to work for natives and not for foreigners, cannot be duplicated. But it is nevertheless significant.

A Missionary Rebellion.

Since this article is dealing with missionary shortcomings, it is proper to tell the story of a missionary rebellion which has its focus in Tientsin. In the southern part of this province is an independent undertaking called the "South Chihli mission," begun ten years ago by Rev. E. W. Houlding, an American Congregationalist. The mission is not related to any church or denomination, its support coming chiefly from independent city missions and from Congregational churches in the west and middle west of the United States. Mr. Houlding, it appears, has the gift of glowingly portraying China's needs and last year he received more than $30,000 for the work of his mission. During the past eight years he has brought out 69 adult missionaries, most of them coming at their own expense and putting all their worldly possessions into a common mission fund, from which they could never withdraw them.

Troubles in the mission have been almost constant, and now former members of the mission are ont in a public circular, which they are sending widely to America, making various charges against the mission and its head. It is reported that the American consul general is taking steps to require Mr. Houlding to provide return passage to America for his missionaries, since a number of them have become a charge on the consulate. For it appears, according to this circular, that of the 69 missionaries brought out, three have died and 38 have left the mission in dissatisfaction. Most of these have remained in China, in connection with other missions; some have gone into business here, and some have returned to America.

The circular charges Mr. Houlding with lack of proper qualifications for leadership, with denying the missionaries a voice in the management of the mission; with running a court of absolute monarchy, all the property being in his own name; and with making representations concerning the work which are not borne out by the facts. The signers of the circular say that they have made the utmost effort in his presentation of the real situation, and they hint at more serious evils. Some of the many stories current here are ludicrous. One member of the mission was British, and liked his cup of afternoon tea. The mission thought this a wicked and sinful indulgence. When he persisted in the practice, they held a mission prayer meeting over him, to show him the evil of his course! Another member was similarly disciplined for being too fond of peanuts! All this while grave evils were existing in the conduct of the mission.

Stranded Missionaries.

One hears many stories in the east concerning Independent missions without substantial and responsible bodies back of them at home. Especially are tales told of the "faith" missions. Zealous and unqualified enthusiasts come out on "faith," and the other missionaries and foreigners have to support them to keep them from starving, until they can secure work or provision is made for their return to America. I have repeatedly been told instances of this sort concerning a Scandinavian mission whose people come chiefly from Minnesota. Some of the independent missionaries who do manage to get along, are obliged to give a large part of their time to cultivating their American constituency.

These missionaries who come out with no other equipment than enthusiasm make strange blunders. The party of Swedes, whose advent is a pronounced memory in missionary circles, bore such a musical instrument. They would play and sing hymns along the street, to the entertainment of the Chinese. The young people wrote home glowing accounts of the crowds they gathered by their street concerts, and realizing at all that in China such performances as theirs are always attributed only to evil characters and the basest of motives. Instead of doing good, they actually did only harm.

Akin to these, are the religious fadists who enter the foreign fields, representing some special tenet or doctrine. These make it their chief effort to reach the genuine heathen, but confine themselves to proselyting among the entire Christendom. An easter mission work is that done by a holiness sect in America which publishes a paper called "The Gospel Trumpet." It appeals for funds to evangelize the heathen, and then spends the money for sending copies of the paper to missionaries of the various denominations, already on the field! Thus, every missionary in Japan receives "The Gospel Trumpet," and none, so far as I could learn, ever reads it.

THE SCHOOLHOUSES

WHAT THEY MEAN TO THE PEOPLE OF THE COMMUNITY.

AND HOW THEY ARE BUILT

It is the Money That Stays at Home Which Makes Good Ones Possible —A Simple System That Works.

Your schoolhouses. Those of the town and those of the country district. You know what they mean to you and to your children.

They represent the difference between ignorance and enlightenment. They mean to your children the difference between signing their names with a mark or in writing. They represent the difference between the civilization of the twentieth century, as this country knows it, and the barbarism of benighted Asia or Africa. You want the schoolhouse, do you not?

You would willingly make sacrifices to keep it, would you not?

You glory in the free educational system of this country, do you not?

But, Mr. Citizen, did you ever sit down and consider carefully what it is that makes possible the schoolhouses of this country; the schoolhouses that stand as beacon lights on the tops of a thousand hills; the schoolhouses that carry cheer and enlightenment to the hearthstones of the homes of a thousand valleys?

It is the taxes you and your neighbor, and your neighbor's neighbor pay into the school fund year after year, is it not?

And why do you pay it?

Because you own property—real estate, bonds and mortgages—and because that property is valuable.

What makes your real estate valuable?

It is the prosperity of the community. As the community grows and prospers the value of your property increases. As your property increases in value and you write your wealth in thousands instead of hundreds, the amount you pay into the school fund increases. When the school fund increases the old building does place to a new and more modern structure, in which your children and your neighbor's children receive their instruction. And, again, the erection of the new building bot adds more to the value of your property.

It is an endless chain system that builds villages out of cross roads, and cities out of villages.

Who are you, Mr. Citizen, and who is your neighbor and your neighbor's neighbor? Are you not the men who make up the community in which you live, and it is only when you work collectively that you accomplish results—that you build up new schoolhouses.

And how shall you work collectively?

By a simple system of boosting one another. You will say, have to sell—your neighbor buys them of you. He, you will say, has dry goods to sell—you buy them of him. It is the system of mutual help that makes the town grow into the city, that increases the price of real estate in the town and in the community surrounding it, that builds new schoolhouses.

The dollar that is unnecessarily sent away from home never bought so much as a nail for a schoolhouse, never so much as a shingle on its roof.

But the dollars that are unnecessarily sent away from home send back to the community which they left only rain. It is these dollars that prevent the replacing of the leaking roof, the broken door hinge or the worn out desk.

It is the dollars that are unnecessarily sent away from home by you, and your neighbor, and your neighbor's neighbor that decrease the value of your, and your neighbor's, and your neighbor's neighbor's real estate. That make the school fund grow less year after year. That forces the discharge of the competent teacher for a less competent one. That reduces the standing of your schools in the educational system of the country.

Work it backwards, send your money for the things you need away from home instead of spending it at home, and the system that builds villages out of cross roads, and cities out of villages, that increases the value of your real estate and permits you to write your wealth in four figures where previously three figures were enough, and you will make of the driving little city but a village, and of the village but a cross roads.

Do you not believe, Mr. Citizen, and do you not think your neighbor and your neighbor's neighbor should believe, that it pays best to keep the dollars in the home community? Keep the system moving forwards, help to make a city of your village. Boost your town's interests and you boost your own.

GAMES OF SHARPERS.

Some of the Methods Used for Securing Money Dishonestly.

Millions upon millions of dollars are fraudulently taken from the pockets of the people year after year through the operation of confidence men. The schemes used by these men are numerous. Nearly all are based upon the fact that the avarage person is always willing to take the best of a bargain. During the past few months swindlers have been operating in different parts of the country, and their method, while a modification of an old swindling game, has some new features worthy of notice. Their usual procedure is to locate farmers who are said well known to local bankers and loan men. They approach the farmer and offer the purchase of seeding to purchase farming land, manage in some way to secure his signature. This is generally done by inducing him to write a letter, or to sign some statement. Once the signature is secured, a fictitious deed to the farmer's land is prepared and this is fixed up in such a manner as to show the seal of some notary or other officer. Then with this deed the swindler is in position to negotiate a loan upon the land. This land, farmers have succesfully worked in a number of western states.

Residents of agricultural districts should be continually on their guard against the signing of receipts or say kind of contract which may be translated to them by strangers. Within the past year some smooth swindlers have succeeded in securing checks of dollars on fraudulent notes, securing from farmers, who were foolish enough to take the trial washing machines, refrigerators, etc., and to give their receipts for the same. These receipts turning up later as negotiable notes.

The writer of checks cannot be too careful in filling in the amounts. The favorite methods of the check receivar is to insert after the words "six," "seven," "eight" or "nine" the letter "y" or "ty" and change the ciphers in the check accordingly. Thus it can ha seen that a check written for eight dollors, by the addition of the letter "y" can he made to read for eighty dollors and the changing of the amount, if it be in numerals, by the addition of cipher, makes the forgery, when well executed, hard to discover.

Tha Reason.

TOWN BOOSTING TIPS.

The visitor who trips over your broken sidewalk will not have a very high opinion of your town as a place of business.

The home town is the best place for the boys if you will make the home town interesting. Keeping the money at home will do this. It means home opportunities for your children.

Don't drive around the hole in the road by Beardsley House. Fill it up.

The home market for the farm products is the saving clause in our system of government. Take away the home market and the farms will soon become unprofitable and valueless.

No city mail-order house will extend credit to you when times are hard, or crops fail. Could you consistently ask it of your home merchant when you send your money to the city during the days of prosperity?

Encourage small factories to locate by means of a bonus, but by keeping the children in the home town that they may become factory employes, and get a home opportunity to raise in the world.

Do not begrudge the money paid for taxes when it is used for roads and town improvements. Such an expenditure is like bread cast upon the waters—it will return many fold.

Roof Gardens for Berlin.

It is proposed to introduce roof gardens in Berlin. A good many doctors and professors are doing all they can in favor of the scheme, and are agitating for the gardens, particularly in the narrower city thoroughfares. The idea would not be difficult to carry out, the houses being mostly all of one height, and it is already possible in many parts to walk from one house to the next along a good broad roof track.

Bird Parched on His Gun.

"Whlpoor-will, whip-poor-will."

Before daybreak a bird's notes awoke Louis Reutter, who had sought rest at Lake Wonkontkonk, a few miles from Winsted, Conn. Reutter became peevish, got his shotgun and fired at the whip-poor-will, perched on a tree outside his bedroom.

Reutter, until recently proprietor of the Beardsley House, was nearly asleep when—

"Whip-poor-will, whip-poor-will."

Quite angry, Reutter shot at the bird again. The third time he fired at the whip-poor-will flew to him, slightly on his gunbarrel and sang sweetly:

"Whip-poor-will."

Reutter went to the lake and plunged in to cool himself off.

Lots of Sociability.

It is estimated that 3,000 marriages are performed daily throughout the world. Yet, every one is "the social event of the season."

Sporting Gossip.

Englishmen are much concerned over what they term "the temporary ages from supremacy of English athletics." This to British sportsmen is a lamentable condition of efaire, but they find little solace from the immediate future of any change for the better. The decedence of British sporting prowess has been a gradual process for the last decade, until et present out of the list of principel championships England holds but eight out of 33. In brenches where the Britishers were for years considered invincible foreigners, particularly Americans, have forced them to strike their colors. It is a matter of record that America holds more championship records than any other country. In athletic record America leods with ten, against five for England and one for Ireland. These events include the regular programme of events, although American athletes hold innumerable records at intermediate distances. The following list will show the holders of the most important championships and records in the world of sport:

Ameteur Golf—J. Bell, Royel Liverpool, England; professional golf—Arnaud Massey, La Boulle, France; rugby football—South Afrlca and New Zealand; rowing—Grand Challenge cup, Sport Nalzue de Grand, Belgium; lawn tennis—Men's championship—N. Barney Oldfield is going to retire from the auto racing game. He is getting old, he confesses. Also, he says that his retirement is not going to be like those of several other artists. country, Barney says. "Now I'm a professional," confessed Oldfield, "and I'm out for the coin. Here's a shock some of these people who think that automobile racing ought to be just a gentleman's game, when I get right down to hardpan as to money matters. It's the money I'm looking for, though. I've been in auto racing since it was first to finish. I was the first in this country, and now I'm the last. The game is dying out there. It costs the manufacturers too much to build the expensive racing cars and to keep them in repair. The game is better than ever in Europe, but I won't go over there. I'm getting pretty old, and I guess this season will be my last." Barney says he will quit, holding the record of every track he has ever raced on. He holds the record for fastest time on a circular track," he said. "This was made in Los Angeles in 1904, when I made a mile in 55 seconds. This record has held ever since."

"Wild Bill" Donovan says he is using fewer curves in his pitching this season than ever before. It is the most successful of many famous baseball seasons for him.

CONGRESSMEN PLANNING TRIP TO THE ISTHMUS

WASHINGTON.—A sub-committee of the committee on appropriations of the next congress will go to the isthmus in November to investigate Secretary Taft's canal estimates for 1908, if present plans are carried out.

The proposed visit is the outcome of a suggestion from Representative James A. Tawney of Minnesota, chairman of the appropriations committee in the last congress, who was at the isthmus following the adjournment last March. He believes it will be to the best interests of the service, as well as to those directly and indirectly in charge of the administration of the forces at work there, if the members of the appropriations committee having in charge the preparation of the sundry civil bill go to the isthmus with the estimates for the next fiscal year and consider them carefully with the officials having supervision of expenditures for all kinds of work being done.

The suggestion has met with a hearty response from those identified with the commission's work, who believe that a great deal of good will result from a heart to heart talk between the congressmen who prepare the appropriation and the officials who spend it, and that it will clear away in advance any misapprehensions or misunderstandings that may exist as to the fitness and propriety of allotting the money estimated to be necessary for the year's work. Of particular importance is the proposed visit regarded at the present time, when the question is now before the president whether the commission can lawfully expend during the present fiscal year any more money than was specifically appropriated.

ARMY COURTS-MARTIAL FEWER THAN LAST YEAR

THERE was a decrease of 683 trials of officers and men of the army by courts-martial for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, as compared with the previous year, according to the report of Maj. Porter, the acting judge advocate of the army.

Thirty-four officers were tried by court martial and nine were acquitted. Last year four officers were dismissed from the service as compared with 14 during the previous year. The number of enlisted men tried was 2,879 and 395 were acquitted. The total number of officers and men tried was 8,918.

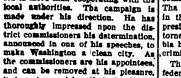
Among the enlisted men 1,101 were tried for desertion, 722 on the charge of absence without leave, 223 for drunkenness, 328 for larceny, 241 for disobedience to non-commissioned officers, and 211 for disobeying superior officers.

The report dwells upon the evil results following the passage of the anti-canteen act, which, it is said, "has undoubtedly caused the location near military reservations of resorts for the sale of intoxicating liquors." These places are considered highly detrimental to military discipline.

BIG GROWTH IS SHOWN IN THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

EVER since that day, nearly three centuries ago, when a spotted calf went for a walk through the fields of a Massachusetts Bay colony, and so laid out the first street in New England, old Florida and her fertile have been of much importance in the domestic and commercial life of America. This is the cow's only recorded use as street-makers, but as producers of the great milk, butter and cheese supply of the nation they have a series of long and successful years back of them.

The dairy industry of the United States is a congenial study for those who like statistics. The growth has been tremendous. There are more than 21,000,000 cows milked in the United States every day, each gives 3,500 pounds of milk a year, making the annual output of this country about 70,000,000,000 pounds of milk. It is disposed of in various ways. A little over half of it is required for the making of butter, 1,000,000,000 pounds of it goes into condensed milk, 3,000,000,000 into cheese, and the 6,000 factories which belong to the calves, or divided among the people of the country, each of whom should receive seven-tenths of a pound of milk o day—a good-sized tumbler full.



If the cows were all told off and assigned to specific duty in this dairy products business, 6,400,000 of them would be required to furnish the milk, condensed milk and cream; 10,900,000 would confine their attention solely to butter, and would each be expected to furnish 151½ pounds a year. 840,600 would be assigned to the cheese industry, and the remaining number would have the raising of the calves.

As each individual in the United States is supposed to eat 20 pounds of butter each year, the Brindle family cannot quite supply it, so we still import something like 45,000 pounds to make up the deficiency. One-third of the nation's output of butter comes from the farms where 3,500,000 farmers and their families, still churn it, pack it in firkins or tubs and deliver it to the nearest shipping point. Over 1,000 factories make the rest of the 1,500,000,000 pounds that we use annually.

Perpetual Scintillations.

The necessity of perpetually scintillating is one of the most wearing demands of the age.

CRUSADE ON GAMBLERS IS LED BY ROOSEVELT

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT is interested deeply in the crusade against gambling in the District of Columbia. He is more than cooperating with the local authorities. The campaign is made under his direction. He has thoroughly impressed upon the district commissioners his determination, announced in one of his speeches, to make Washington a clean city. As the commissioners are his appointees, and can be removed at his pleasure, it is not surprising that the incumbents show zeal in the work cut out for them.

In a raid on alleged bucket-shops recently secret service officers were conspicuous. The explanation of the presence of federal officers is that the president is determined that the local laws shall be enforced and that gambling shall be suppressed. The metropolitan police and detective forces are sufficiently strong, numerically, to do the work, but to see that it was performed thoroughly secret service men were detailed. Whether they have been assigned to keep tab on local police is not known. It is known, however, that much of the evidence upon which the raids were made was gathered by the federal detectives.

No cry will be raised by the district commissioners of federal interference. The prosecutions which are to follow in the courts will be directed by a presidential appointee, the district attorney, who in the District of Columbia has charge of all cases before the criminal courts.

The president also is giving hearty federal cooperation in the efforts to make Washington a clean city from a sanitary point of view. The health officers of the government are assisting the district health office and from the marine hospital service work is being done in this direction.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

HEAD OF WESTERN UNION.

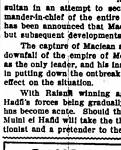
Lieut. Col. Robert C. Clowry, president of the Western Union, is charged by O. D. Banks, of Salt Lake City, with being "the meanest man in the world," and President Small, the strike leader, quotes the charge approvingly. He says that the agreement entered into after the last strike was willfully violated, by Col. Clowry's subordinates, and that many of the operators were never taken back, or were so harassed that they had finally to quit.

Col. Clowry may not be popular with the strikers, but he certainly is with the directors of the company. It is 56 years ago that he entered the office of the company in Joliet, Ill., and asked for a job as messenger, offering to work for six months for nothing, in order to learn telegraphy. At the end of six months he was given an office in Lockport, and from that time his rise has been steady, till he occupied his fiftieth year of service by rising to the position of president of the company. His rule has always been to do more than the company paid him for, and it is a rule he applies to others as well as himself.

When the civil war broke out he offered his services to the government and was given charge of a department with the rank of captain. His work commended itself to the government and he retired from the army at the close of the war with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Col. Clowry has always been a lonely man since his wife died in early life, leaving him without a single child; He gave up society then and has never taken to it since.

SECURED DIAMOND FOR KING

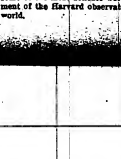


Gen. Louis Botha, the rugged Boer leader who is now premier of the Transvaal colony of the British empire, has attracted the attention of the world again by his act in securing a $1,000,000 gift for King Edward.

The Transvaal assembly, by a vote of 42 to 19, passed a resolution introduced by Botha, authorizing the colony to purchase the $1,000,000 diamond, the largest in the world, and the presentation of it to the king as a thank offering because he granted a constitution and self-government to the South African colony conquered by British less than ten years ago.

This resolution of Premier Botha recalls the stirring days of the Boer war. Premier Botha as Gen. Botha was one of the bitterest foes of the English government during that terrible struggle. His fighting and management of the troops of Cronje and Spion Kop, two of the most serious reverses suffered by the British in the South African war, made him a great hero. He succeeded Gen. Joubert in command of the Transvaal army on the death of the old hero of Majuba Hill, and was at that time mentioned as a possible candidate for the presidency, though he was then but 36 years old.

Botha had no military experience when the war broke out, but he rose from the ranks to commander-in-chief within six months after taking the field. He had been a sheep raiser, but became a soldier by necessity and a successful tactician by instinct. He was the youngest general in the ranks of the Boer soldiers. Daring allied with caution was his motto.



MOORISH PRETENDER

Mulai El Hafid, brother of the sultan of Morocco, and vicaroy of several provinces, has been declared sultan by the Arab tribes now in revolt in Spanish Africa kingdom and is recognized as the leader of "holy war" on the foreigners. Several important chiefs are marching their forces to join his command. The whole country is in excitement and the real ruler is cooped up in Fez between the pretendar to the throne, who is confined to the city, and the coast, and Raisuli, the bandit, who is on the other side in the mountainous country.

The situation is becoming serious on account of the success of those two warring factions and a cablegram to the war department at Washington advises that Raisuli has completely defeated the large force sent against him by the reigning sultan in an attempt to secure the release of Kaid Maclean, who is commander-in-chief of the entire Moorish army. Word from London suddenly has become acute. Should the empire fall there seems to be little doubt that Mulai el Hafid will take the throne as ruler. He has always been an insurrectionist and a pretender to the throne.

SAYS MARS "TEASES HIM"

Prof. Edward Charles Pickering, Harvard's leading astronomer and scientist, has startled the world of astronomy and astro-physics by declaring that "Mars teases" him and that he has "abandoned any further investigations" of that much-mooted planet.

Prof. Pickering has been connected with Harvard since 1877. He was born in Boston, July 19, 1846. He is one of the best-educated men of the time, and established the first physical laboratory in the United States. The study of light and spectra of the stars have been special features of his work. He has more than 1,000,000 measures of the light of the stars. By establishing an auxiliary station at Arequipa, Peru, southern stars also are observed, extending the work from pole to pole. He is the author of "Elements of Physical Manipulation" and 50 volumes of annals and other publications of Harvard college observatory.

He received the appointment of chairman of the Carnegie institution at Washington, a fitting tribute to the valued work he has accomplished in astronomy and the sciences. In 1886 he was honored by the R. A. S. with its gold medal for his photometric researches.

His measurements of the light of Jupiter's satellites while in process of eclipse and of the satellites of Mars and other very faint objects, make up some of the most delicate work done in this branch of science. His development of the Harvard observatories has made them renowned throughout the world.

Around the Metropolis

What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

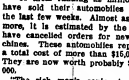
BROADWAY "BREAD LINE" WILL SOON BE REMOVED

NEW YORK.—Fleischmann's famous "bread line" will soon disappear from Broadway. The bakery which for many years has nightly given a wagonload of bread to suffering and starving pilgrims, after the bells on Grace church next door tolled the hour of midnight will be razed in the spring and the bakery will occupy a lorgar and more modern building uptown near Central Park.

The "bread line" is beyond a question. Greater New York's sweetest charity. Many years ago when Fleischmann, the wealthy baker, died a provision was found in his will that "no man should be turned away who asked for bread at my bakeshop." As a result the "bread line" was established. The bakary is located at Broadway and Eleventh street next to Grace church, with the St. Denis hotel opposite, and Wanamaker's store on the corner. At nine o'clock every night the bread line begins to form and precisely at midnight a half dozen attaches of the bakery begin to distribute bread and rolls to sometimes as many as 500 men and women. And as these most famished wanderers shuffle up to the door of the bakery with last in hand or aprons stretched to receive a half loaf of bread or a few rolls there is no better place in the world to study human nature, for the line is a heterogeneous one—every class and type of humanity is represented, from the professional yeggmen and tramp to the educated man and woman who through adverse circumstances and drink have been reduced to poverty.

The shuffling and the compactness of the line remind one of the lock step —the prison penal march—and it is safe to say that many of the men who walk in the line to get a morsel of food have served time. But that makes no difference. The criminal is as welcome to the bread as the most worthy Christian. The man in the line are all strangers to each other. They come from everywhere and all are too hungry and fatigued to talk. When the bread and rolls are given to the pilgrims in the line they manfully hurry to Union Square and devour their frugal meal. When the bakery is removed to the uptown district the charity will be continued.

LITTLE ASTOR BABY TO INHERIT VAST FORTUNE



THE son which was born recently to Mrs. Waldorf Astor in England eventually will come into possession of a fortune conservatively estimated at $200,000,000. This is now held by his grandfather, William Waldorf Astor, who expatriated himself from the United States, where his forefathers grew rich, and became a British subject.

The new baby's father, Waldorf Astor, elder son of William Waldorf Astor, is about 21 years old. He has never renounced his American citizenship, but he was educated in England, lived there and is to all purposes an Englishman.

The greater part of the $300,000,000 Astor estate is real estate in the city of New York. It is the largest estate in New York. The next largest is that of the Goelets. Although falling considerably below the Astors, it is still one of the greatest estates in the world.

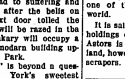
It is said that the only person whose holdings of land exceed those of the Astors is the king of Belgians. His land, however, is not covered with skyscrapers. It is in Africa.

WALL STREET "PANIC" IS HARD ON AUTO BUSINESS

MORE than 2,000 New Yorkers, some of them ranking as millionaires, have sold their automobiles within the last few weeks. Almost as many more, it is estimated by the trade, have cancelled orders for new machines. These automobiles represent a total cost of more than $15,000,000. They are now worth probably $7,000,000.

"The rich man's panic in Wall street has made all the trouble," said an auto dealer the other day. He showed a telegram from a stock broker in Broad street which read:

"Sorry, but sickness in family compels me to spend summer in mountains. Please cancel my order for that $7,500 machine."



"There's no sickness in his family," said the dealer. "He's been stung in the market."

Every dealer in high-priced machines, American or imported, has stories to tell of orders cancelled by New Yorkers supposed to be rich enough to afford any luxury.

Now is the time for the New Yorker to buy an auto cheap. The second-hand dealers are doing a tremendous business. A $9,500 car sold the other day for $5,000. A $4,500 machine was disposed of for $1,200. A $3,000 automobile, right from the factory, ordered by a Wall street speculator who had to forfeit his deposit, was offered for $1,000. Machines can be bought for cash for almost any price.

There have been eight failures up to date this season of automobile manufacturing concerns, with more than $22,000,000 capital, and this fact has put maker and dealer on the anxious seat. It came out at the time of the last failure that out of an output of 400 machines at one plant more than 200 had been turned back.

TALLEST BUILDING IN THE WORLD NEARLY COMPLETED

RISING in the sky-line of New York far above all the other skyscrapers of the downtown district, the lofty Singer building, fast nearing completion, already exceeds in height the Washington monument, whose solid shaft of granite rises 555 feet above the ground.

A few more stories remain to be built and when the towering pile of steel and masonry is finished, it will be 17 stories high and 612 feet from the sidewalk on Broadway to the pinnacle. The giant skyscraper will be the highest occupied building in the world and will overstop all other existing structures except the Eiffel tower in Paris. When completed o timo boli will drop every hour from o pola on top of the building and at night the flaming hour globe will be illuminated by three lights, which will play upoo it constantly.

The foundation of this colossal building is set in solid bedrock 90 feet below the lavel of the sidewalk. On the bedrock were built colssons of cement. A heavy steel body laid over the colssons forms the lowest floor of the structure, 14 floors of which comprise the main section of the building, from which rises the tower to 47 stories, with its scores of office rooms. The engineers say the total weight of steel and masonry in the tower is 16,365 tons, while nearly 10,000 tons of steel have been used in the framework. Eighteen elevators will carry the 2,000 tonants to their offices.

Fifteen thousand incandescent lights, sufficient, the engineers say, to light a town of 25,000 inhabitants, will illuminate the rooms and hallways for safe office workers. Fifteen miles of pipo will be required for steam and water purposes. An immenso copper lantern will form the pinnacle of the building, from which at night a powerful searchlight will flash forth, furnishing a beacon to mariners, and will be visible more than 60 miles at sea.

TWELVE PERISH IN RAILROAD WRECK

ROCK ISLAND EXPRESS TRAIN JUMPS TRACK AND CRASHES INTO A FREIGHT.

Dozen Others Are Injured—Horrible Accident at Norris, Ia.—Smoking Car of Passenger Is Telescoped and Utterly Demolished.

Waterloo, Ia., Sept. 7.—Twelve persons were killed and 12 others injured in the wreck of an express train on the Rock Island railroad at Norris, Ia., Friday. The express train, which was northbound, jumped the track while going at full speed and collided with a freight train standing on the siding.

The dead: F. B. Citrer, Waterloo, Ia.; Will Goodman, Waterloo, Ia.; John N. Watson, Waterloo, Ia.; C. L. Landphere, Shell Rock, Ia.; W. Ray Johnson, Dike, Ia.; B. R. Christy, Minneapolis, Minn.; Lepovan Toja, Hammond, Ia.; laborer, name unknown, Hammond, Ia.; W. H. Meyers, baggageman, Burlington, Ia.; three unknown men.

The injured: J. A. Newall, Illinois Central conductor, Waterloo, Ia.; John Shaw, Waterloo, Ia.; Dr. C. J. Keefe, Marble Rock, Ia.; J. H. Douglas, Waterloo, Ia.; Thomas Evenson, Mora, Minn.; O. H. Martin, mail clerk, West Liberty, Ia.; Edward Stepplerre, Minneapolis, Minn.; Trocoln Crismen, St. Paul, Minn.; H. McMahon, fireman, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Albert Mason, engineer, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; A. L. Wellver, lineman, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; F. Kinch, engineer, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

Victims in Smoker.

The injured were brought to Waterloo and placed in the Presbyterian hospital.

Nearly all of the dead and injured were in the smoking car, which was immediately behind the baggage and mail cars. The smoking car was completely demolished, there not being left one piece of wood large enough to make a top for an ordinary kitchen table.

The northbound express was ten minutes late at Norris siding, which is a small station three miles north of Cedar Falls, Ia., and there a southbound freight train was awaiting the express, which came thundering along at a terrific speed in an effort to make up time.

Crashed Into Freight Train.

Just as the engine of the express was about to pass the freight engine the trucks of the express jumped the track and the engine crashed with terrible force into the engine of the freight, wrecking both engines and telescoping the baggage and mail cars and demolishing the smoking car. The passengers in the two day coaches following the smoker escaped with only a violent shaking up.

Rescuers were immediately at hand to care for the injured and to take the dead from among the wreckage.

Dr. Keefe's Heroism.

Sitting in the midst of the wreckage was Dr. Charles J. Keefe, who, although badly injured, little realized how seriously he was hurt. With heroic fortitude, while suffering intense pain, he waved the rescuers aside and directed them to the assistance of those whom he thought were in a more serious condition than himself, for in front of him and behind him on all sides were men writhing and groaning in the agony of their sufferings.

Physicians and hospital attendants were hastily taken to Norris on a special train made up in this city and, pending their arrival, such medical relief as the little station afforded was given the injured.

PICKPOCKETS FIGHT CONDUCTOR

Lively Encounter with Thieves on a Rock Island Train.

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 7.—Three armed crooks, who had picked the pockets of a number of Rock Island passengers at the station in Lincoln, and attempted to continue their game on the train, engaged in a desperate encounter with Conductor Henry Duval on the Rocky Mountain limited, near Alvo station, about one o'clock Friday morning.

After standing off Conductor Duval with a knife, the men leaped from the moving train, about eight miles west of Alvo, and escaped in the darkness. The Rock Island special agents have been sent to the vicinity of their escape with good descriptions of the men.

Passengers had reported being robbed at Lincoln and later Conductor Duval discovered the crooks attempting to rob men who were asleep in the chair car. He tried to capture them, but in vain. The first reports were to the effect that the train had been held up.

Two-Cent Rate Ordered in Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., Sept. 5.—At a late hour Wednesday afternoon the state board of railroad commissioners ordered that the railroads of Kansas put in a flat two-cent fare rate, beginning October 1. The decision of the board was unanimous. The railroads gave no intimation of what action they might take.

America Has Leased Bay.

Berlin, Sept. 6.—A dispatch from Shanghai says that the United States has taken a five-year lease of Nerwik Bay, south of Vladivostok, and has leased for next winter the floating dry dock at Vladivostok.

MRS. PHILLIPS ARRESTED

STARTLING TURN IN CLEVELAND MURDER CASE.

Widow of Coal Operator Is Accused by the Police of Killing Her Husband.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 5.—Developments in the investigation into the death of John J. Phillips, coal operator, broker, banker and clubman, came thick and fast Wednesday and took a sensational turn late in the afternoon when Mrs. Phillips, widow of the deceased, was taken into custody by Chief of Police Stamberger, of the aristocratic suburb, East Cleveland.

The warrant accuses Mrs. Phillips of killing her husband, the charge being second degree murder.

Mrs. Phillips has been in a highly nervous state since the tragedy early Monday morning, after which announcement was made that her husband had been shot and mortally wounded by a burglar. Wednesday afternoon she collapsed and was not able to attend the funeral, which took place from the house, with only immediate relatives present.

It was shortly following this that Chief Stamberger announced that, after a conference with Deputy Coroner Houck, who had conducted the inquest, Prosecutor Mooney and others, he had taken the widow into custody, and that four deputies would guard her in her home till she recovered sufficiently to be taken before a justice of the peace.

The police are reticent in the case, and whether they really believe Mrs. Phillips culpable in the murder or whether they merely believe that she can give facts concerning the tragedy which would solve the mystery surrounding it, does not appear at this time.

HINDUS ARE DRIVEN OUT.

Whits Mill Hands at Bellingham Expel East Indians.

Bellingham, Wash., Sept. 6.—Six badly beaten Hindus are in the hospital, 400 frightened and half-naked Sikhs are in jail and the corridors of the city hall, guarded by policemen, and somewhere between Bellingham and the British Columbia line are 750 natives of India, beaten, hungry and half-clothed, making their way along the Great Northern railway bound for Canadian territory and the protection of the British flag.

The long-expected cry, "Drive out the Hindus," was heard throughout the city and along the water front Wednesday night. The police were helpless. All authority was paralyzed and for five hours a mob of half a thousand white men raided the mills where the Hindus were working, battered down doors of lodging houses and, dragging the invaders from their beds, escorted them to the city limits with orders to keep on going.

FIVE YEARS FOR LOUIS GLASS.

San Francisco Telephone Man Is Sentenced for Bribery.

San Francisco, Sept. 5.—Five years for Louis Glass, was the news message that sped with incredible rapidity to all parts of the city Wednesday morning from the Temple Sherith Israel at California and Webster streets, where was imposed the sentence that brought to a dramatic close the second trial of the vice president and former general manager of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph company, convicted last week of the crime of bribery, a crime whose extreme punishment under the law of this state is 14 years. Only a small crowd, made up for the most part of lawyers and newspaper men, witnessed the imposition of sentence.

TEN DEAD IN HOTEL FIRE.

Serious Loss of Life in Disaster at Shelton, Wash.

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 6.—Ten persons are known to have lost their lives in the burning of the Webb hotel at Shelton, 20 miles from here, early Thursday morning. Another person is dying and yet others may be found in the ruins.

The fire was discovered about 1:40 in the morning. It had started in the hotel annex, probably from a lighted cigar dropped in the sample room. The hotel was a three-story structure. The top floor was occupied by lodgers, but the exact number is not known.

Double Tracking Is Stopped.

Washington, Sept. 6.—It was announced at the Southern railway headquarters in this city Thursday that, owing to recent adverse railroad rate legislation in several southern states and to "general conditions," the double tracking of the Southern railway between Chattanooga and Ooltewah Junction, in Tennessee, and north of Greensboro, N. C., had been ordered stopped, pending further instructions.

Warship Coming to St. Louis.

Washington, Sept. 6.—Acting Secretary Newberry has ordered the tug Lebanon to tow the converted yacht Huntress from League Island, Pa., to Pensacola, Fla. There the Huntress will be formally turned over to the naval militia of Missouri, a crew from which will take the vessel to St. Louis.

Postal Clerks Re-elect Rogers.

Peoria, Ill., Sept. 6.—Frank T. Rogers, of Chicago, was re-elected president of the National Postal Clerks' association, Thursday, defeating John J. Fitzgerald, of Paterson, N. J.

WITH GOETHALS ON THE JOB.

Uncle Sam Has Got to Go Some to Keep Up With Him.

RECEIVER NAMED FOR IRON COMPANY

ONE OF BANK WRECKER E. L. HARPER'S CONCERNS IN TROUBLE.

Plan of His Creditors—They Are Said to Wish to Uncover His Assets—His Obligations Are Several Millions.

Bristol, Va., Sept. 5.—Judge A. K. Skeen of the United States court here Wednesday appointed Col. L. O. Pettit of Big Stone Gap receiver of the Union Iron and Steel corporation of New York, owning furnaces in Virginia, Ohio, Michigan and New Jersey.

The receiver was appointed on petition of the Norton Coal company, of Norton, Va., and no statement of assets and liabilities is obtainable at this time, owing to the fact that efforts are being made to adjust the claim. For this reason other creditors have not joined in the petition.

Organized by Cincinnati Man.

The Union Iron and Steel corporation is an offshoot of the Union Steel and Chain corporation—the latter a $60,000,000 concern—organized several years ago by Edward L. Harper, formerly of Cincinnati.

It is reported that the receivership is a plan of the creditors of E. L. Harper to uncover his assets. Obligations aggregating several million dollars are held by Cincinnati and Chicago bankers against Harper, as a result of the failure of the Fidelity bank of Cincinnati about 20 years ago. Harper, it was alleged, wrecked this institution in an attempt to corner the wheat market. For this he was sentenced to eight years in the Ohio penitentiary and shortly after his release he merged a number of furnaces and steel plants into the Union Steel and Chain company, of which he has since been president, and of which the Union Iron and Steel company is subsidiary.

Failed to Go Into Bankruptcy.

About 18 months ago Harper filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States court here, but his right to release from the old obligations was successfully contested by his creditors, headed by the banking firm of Edwin Green & Co., of Chicago. In the hearing before the referee he contended that he was insolvent, though he failed to establish his insolvency, and was not discharged. The hearing disclosed the fact that he was receiving a large salary as president of the steel and iron corporations.

Edward L. Harper, Jr., general manager of the company, has made formal transfer of the business to the receiver and the furnaces and mines are still in operation. President Harper is said to be hurrying to Virginia with a view to adjusting the matter and securing the discharge of the receiver. The temporary financial embarrassment of the corporation is said to be partly attributed to the death of Treasurer Holmes, which occurred in New York last week.

WILHELMINA BACHE FREE.

Served 16 Years for Murder She Probably Didn't Commit.

Madison, Wis., Sept. 7.—With every possible indication that she was not guilty of the crime of murder, for which she has already served 16 years of a life sentence in the state prison, Wilhelmina Bache was released from Waupun prison Friday. Her life sentence for the murder of Michael Sell, of Shawano county, was commuted by Gov. Davidson. She went to the penitentiary when she was 17 years old.

Cavalry Team Wins Dryden Trophy.

Seagirt, N. J., Sept. 7.—The $3,000 Dryden trophy and $150 cash, the most coveted prize offered at the New Jersey Rifle association's tournament, was won Friday in an exciting finish by the United States cavalry team which scored 1,001 points. The next contestant was the Massachusetts team with 977. The second prize is $100.

BIG FAILURE ON 'CHANGE

WATSON & CO., GRAIN AND STOCKS, FORCED TO WALL.

Firm Has Offices in Western Cities and Several Members Are Minneapolis Men.

New York, Sept. 6.—The failure of Watson & Co., members of the New York Stock and Produce exchanges and of the Chicago board of trade, was announced in these exchanges Thursday. No cause was assigned for the failure nor was any estimate of the liabilities and assets made public.

The firm has had extensive connections in the west, maintaining offices in Duluth, Minneapolis, Fargo and Winnipeg. It is said to have carried on one of the biggest grain brokerage businesses in the country besides trading actively in railroad stocks, particularly those of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railroads.

W. Frank Newell, manager of the firm's New York office, was named as assignee. The doors of the office in Broad street were closed after the announcement of the failure. Herber B. Shoemaker, counsel for the assignee, said that expert accountants had been put to work on the books and that a statement of the financial condition of the firm would soon be issued. He said also that the banks holding Watson & Co.'s loans have shown a disposition to give the firm an opportunity to extricate itself from its difficulties. The members of the firm are Louis T. Watson, Henry P. Watson, Charles E. Anderson and Herschel V. Jones. Louis T. Watson is the only member of the firm residing in this city, the others being residents of Minneapolis.

Announcement of the failure on the stock exchange had been discounted by the traders, many of whom had a warning of it and had sold or made contracts to sell stocks in anticipation of a decline. This was said to be the cause of the weakness of the market during the morning. The effect of the failure having been discounted before it was announced, prices advanced as soon as the news became known, speculators for the decline being compelled to buy at higher prices in order to fill their earlier contracts to sell.

On the grain market there was a decline of two cents per bushel upon the announcement of the failure, but this was recovered later in the day.

ROBBERS DYNAMITE A BANK.

They Take $8,000 from Institution in Frankfort, S. D.

Frankfort, S. D., Sept. 7.—The James River bank, at this place, was dynamited between two and four o'clock Friday morning and the robbers escaped with $8,000 in cash and valuable papers.

Seven charges of dynamite were used in blowing up the vault and the safe. Persons aroused by the explosion were prevented from interfering by guards who were stationed at the front and rear of the bank. Frank Fitzpatrick, a hotel guest, who sought to break through the line of guards, was shot. His wound is not dangerous. Many shots were fired to hold onlookers at bay.

After looting the bank the robbers broke into a section house on the Chicago & Northwestern railway and secured a handcar on which they made their escape.

Famous Composer Dead.

Bergen, Norway, Sept. 5.—Edward Hagerup Greig, the composer, died here Wednesday. He intended sailing for Christiania Tuesday and his baggage was already on board a steamer, when he complained of feeling ill and the symptoms appearing serious he was removed to a hospital, where he died.

Eastern Star Closes Convention.

Milwaukee, Sept. 7.—At the closing session of the general grand chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, Mrs. Retta Mills was elected right worthy conductress. The next triennial convention meets in Jacksonville, Fla.

FIRM'S HEAD GONE; RECEIVER APPOINTED

PRESIDENT GALE OF ERIE HEATING COMPANY SAID TO HAVE APPROPRIATED $100,000.

CRANE COMPANY CHIEF CREDITOR

Practical Owner of Big Establishment Mysteriously Disappears—Last Heard of in Duluth—Involuntary Bankruptcy Plea Brings Action.

Chicago, Sept. 9.—Frederick A. Gale, president of the Erie Heating company, 225 Railway Exchange building, has appropriated "a large sum of money" from the assets of his company and has disappeared with it, it is charged by creditors. They filed a petition in bankruptcy Saturday against the concern in the United States district court and obtained the appointment of a receiver. The American Trust and Savings bank was appointed receiver by Referee in Bankruptcy S. C. Eastman in the absence of a district court judge.

Appropriations Reach $100,000.

The last heard of Gale's whereabouts, according to the creditors' attorneys, was to the effect that he was in Duluth, Minn. W. C. Rigby, of the law firm of Rubens, Rischer & Mosser, filed the petition for the creditors in the district court and asked for the appointment of a receiver. It was asserted by Attorney Charles C. Gilbert, who has been working on the case with Mr. Rigby, that Gale's appropriations amount to approximately $100,000.

Gale Heard of in Duluth.

"Has Mr. Gale absconded?" Mr. Gilbert was asked.

"Well, the last we heard of him he was in Duluth and I guess he won't come back to Chicago very soon."

Gale was formerly president of the Erie City Iron works and had offices at 34-36 Monroe street three years ago. It is said that he disposed of this concern, however, and organized the Erie Heating company, selling small amounts of stock, but retaining the majority stock holdings in his own name. It is said that he virtually owned the concern. Miss Anna Nelson is secretary of the company.

Crane Company as Creditor.

The chief creditor named in the bankruptcy petition is the Crane company, of which Richard T. Crane is president. The Crane company has a claim of $3,480.97 for gas and steam-fitters' supplies sold to Gale on an open account, according to the petition. The other complaining creditors are: The Ball Engine company, with a claim of $2,644.71, and Kohler Bros., whose claim is $541.87. The known liabilities are only $35,000, but it is believed that the amount will prove to be larger.

Assets Practically Nothing.

It is declared by the creditors' attorneys that the assets are practically nothing. The audit of the heating company's books has shown, it was declared, that the liabilities are $35,000, but that it has since been found that there are debts that are not shown on the books.

Says Gale Assigned Assets.

Miss Nelson expressed ignorance of the filing of the petition and the appointment of a receiver. She said that several months ago she and Mr. Gale had made an assignment of the company's assets to the creditors, but refused to say what they were. Mr. Gale was not in, she said, but she would not say whether she knows his whereabouts.

The Unique Adventure of Mr. Bish

By Howard Louis Conard

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"Stand quietly, spenk softly, produce."

These were the words addressed to Mr. Pinckney Bish, as he stepped into one of the darkest shadows of the elevated railway.

Mr. Bish raised his eyes to o level with the voice and perceived, in front of him, a man and a gun—the muzzle of the gun pointed toward his right lung and the man a e commanding position behind the gun.

"I rise to a question of personal privilege," began Mr. Bish, fresh from the deliberations of the "Hot Air" club.

"The gentleman is out of order," suavely remarked the man behind the gun. "Shell out!"

"But, Mr. Speaker," persisted Mr. Bish, feeling a very natural distentsation to part company with the two $20 gold pieces in his purse and his nine-dollar gold watch.

"The proposition is not debatnble," interrupted the man holding the gun—which he pressed closely against Mr. Bish's flowered waistcoat—"and I warn you that filibustering to delay action will not be permitted. Prompt compliance with my request will save you piece of mind and, possibly, a perforated masonry. Dig up."

Although a born temporizer, Mr. Bish, feeling impelled to heed the mild admonition, began "digging" and, with reasonable alacrity, passed over to the person back of the "shooter," o pigskin purse containing the aforementioned gold pieces.

"I thank you, sir," chirped the collector. "Now the watch, please."

The watch followed the coins. The re-plpient glanced at it with the eye of a expert, and remarked: "Quite a novelty of a chronometer, but good for a few drinks. Again I thank you, and now deolines the 'mesting allygiant.'"

"Speaking of drinks, my friend," broke in Mr. Bish, without moving on at all, "you remarked that the 'tinker' was good for a few drinks. f must say to you, as man to man, as one gentleman to another, that I resent tenaciously o ter equity in tho aforesaid drinks.

"Now, I have a suggestion to make. We met—unexpectedly to me—on a matter of business. You have conducted your business in the most gentlemnnly nnnner. That it has been profitable to you and unprofitable to me is neither here nor there. Death, in which one man is winner and the other loser, are common. You have gilded trade with the charm of consummate art; and I say to you frankly, the incident is closed with perfect good feeling, on my part.

"The suggestion I wont to make is this: That we odjourn to some genteel thirst parlor, or some such emb, and that you there set off to me, in proper form, with the neocouniment of good fellowship, my equity in this liquid delight represented by the watch."

The hold-up man chuckled. "Upon my soul," said he, "you're a thoroughbred if I ever met up with one. I accept your proposition with pleasure. One moment, please!" He carefully placed the gun in his right hip pocket, folded up his small block mask and tucked it away in an inside pocket and led the way to Clark street.

They passed a blind man, to whom Mr. Bish was in the habit of giving a quarter every Saturday night, and a shadow passed over his face as he felt in his pocket.

"Permit me," said the hold-up man; and reaching in front of Mr. Bish dropped two quarters in the blind man's cup.

Presently the two men entered a place, noted alike for the superior quality of its good cheer and its genteel quiet, and took seats on opposite sides of a table, in a private room. The hold-up man pushed the button.

A smiling, white-conted, white-aproned youth of color was present in answer to the bell.

"Scoteh highball, pleose," said Mr. Bish.

"Make it two," said the hold-up man.

Thereafter, each time the youth of color responded to the ringing of the bell, the gentlemen simply signified, by nod or word of mouth, the same and "highballs" followed each other in unbroken succession.

"Thank you, Mr. Highfoot, thank yon, said Mr. Bish; and the glasses clinked and were drained; to be, at once, and with a smile, filled anew. Then, as he beamed on the man on the other side of the table, he continued: "You are, at this moment, doing me a far greater favor than you know, Mr. Lightfoot. I will explain. For many years, sir, it has been my unvarying custom to go to my rooms, between the hours of one and two a. m. every Sunday morning, in a state intoxicated, sir—I seldom become inchriated to the point of intoxication—but loadod, sir; comfortably loaded. Half an hour ago it looked as though I should be compelled to forego the pleasure to-night, and meet my record. Now, however, there is no reason to fear that I shall not reach my apartments at the usual time and in my usual condition."

After the fourth "highball," Mr. Bish lay back in his chair, for a little space of time, saying nothing, doing nothing but contemplate the joy of having the liquor percolate through his system.

Mr. Lightfoot took a five-dollar gold piece out of his pocket and twirled it on the table. Mr. Bish caught the glint of the gold and it feaned into flame his passion for the dice box. "Shako you the dies for it," he said, straightening up and addressing his drink mate.

"Yes; and sm I to shnke for my own money?" Mr. Lightfoot nsked with a smile.

"I beg pardon, Mr. Golightly—I mean Mr. Lightfoot," said Mr., Bish, thickly and confusedly. "Most lamentable mishtake. Must a thought my money was up. Tell you what'll do. Fit put up my check against the gold piece. Is that a go?"

"Certainly, my friend," replied Mr. Lightfoot. "Should's have mentioned it nt all, you know, except that the rules of the game require it.

"All right and here goes," announced Mr. Bish, steadying himself for the play and taking the first "shake."

He left four aces up and Lightfoot quit with a five full on fours.

"Horsh on you," Bish remarked to Lightfoot, and the other nodded.

Lightfoot won the next throw, which caused Bish to remark, sententiously, "Horse on you."

Bish won the next throw, and with it the coin.

"Great gamo, Mr. Hotfoot—I mean, Mr. Lightfoot," said Mr. Bish, as he got up from his chair, unsteadily, testing the size of his "load" and taking a turn round the room to see that his legs were still with him. "Lez 'shake' again."

Lightfoot assented readily. He was no less gddicted to dicing than Bish, and delighted in the rattle of the bones. Bish laid the five-dollar coin on the table and Lightfoot "covered" it with a five-spot.

Nobody "supt tah" on the games that followed, nobody knew how many were played, or which time the white-coated beverage benner announced that closing time had arrived, and that business must be suspended. Mr. Bish was just $40 "to the good," Mr. Lightfoot did not mention it, and Mr. Bish seemed oblivious of the fact, but, strangely enough, this was just the amount Mr. Bish hod possed to Mr. Lightfoot in the transaction under the cleveted.

There was time for just one more drink. "Have one with us," said Bish. Lightfoot agreed, and the last two highballs were drank quickly and in silence.

When Mr. Bish stood on his feet, prepartory to storting homeward and, a few minutes later, when he and Mr. Lightfoot emerged from the side room and started for the street, it was evident that the purpose of the Hot Air Club hod acquired his conventional Sunday morning load.

They walked arm in arm to the cnrb, hailed o passing cab and Mr. Bish gave the driver his card. Then they each offered a box of cigars to the other.

"Sorry to leove you old man," hiccoughed Mr. Bish 'as he rolled into the cab, after n fashion peculiarly his own. Lightfoot was a long practice. "Did you good night and God hiesh you. Hope to meet you again," oddling, as he closed the door, "in a social way, sir; not in a business way."

OLD TIME MUSTER PASSING.

Improved Conditions Have Done Away with Hand Fire Engines.

The old time fireman's muster is fast becoming o thing of the past and its gradual disappearance from the land is the result of the progressiveness of the age. Years ago, before there were so many other forms of entertainment and fewer excuses for public gatherings, when the band tnh was the most commonly used piece of fire fighting apparatus, the muster was a feature of every year to which the firemen looked with eager eyes. There they would form in some excitement in putting on the red shirt and the white leather belt, donning the fire hat and taking the pet machine to some nearby town or city. Thera was the parade, the noonday collation, the trial in the afternoon, when all took hold of the brakes and "broke her down," and the boll in the evening. The increased demand for better fire protection, has, however, sent the band machines to the rear and in their places has ambitioned the water system and the steamers. There's nothing very exciting in the playing from a hydrant or a steamer, and what is more few cities nowadays care to allow their apparatus to be carted obont the state for muster purposes. As a result of these changes the old time musters have become a thing of the past, and the next generation will little realize what the word really meant in the days of their granddads.—Pittsburg Leader.

Make Use of Locusts.

J. W. Palmer, the director of agriculture in the Orange River Colony, who has returned to Bloemfontein after a holiday jn England, states that a large London firm is prepared to receive consignments from South Africa of locusts for use in the preparation of bird and poultry food.

Beforehand.

"And so, young man, you wish to marry my daughter?"

"Yes, sir. Wa love each other, and—"

"Of course. But are yon sure that you can give her the allmony to which she has been accustomed?"

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Dairy Industry.

Minneapolis—The growth of the dairy industry in Minnesota, from 142 struggling creameries in 1886 to 850 or more prosperous creameries, shows its importance in the state. Much attention to this growth is called by W. W. Wall, secretary of the state dairy and food department, in a letter to L. B. Arnold, assistant land commissioner of the Duluth & Iron Range Railway company. The letter was written in answer to a letter received from Mr. Arnold in which he told of the efforts being made by that company to induce settlers to take up the lands owned by the company in St. Louis county. One of the chief inducements offered is the exceptional adaptability of the land for dairying purposes.

That Minnesota occupies the top rank in the quality of the butter produced is quite generally known throuout the state, but the extent of the business is not so much a matter of common knowledge. While the exact figures of the production of butter this year, of course, era not obtainable as yet, the growth of the business in the last three years indicates that it undoubtedly will reach a total of about 100,000,000 pounds, and when the uniform high grado of this prodnct is considered the value of the industry to the state will be readily realised.

A Close Call.

Minneapolis—Using a mattress and bedding as fire extinguishers Engineer Thomas Gallagher saved the lives of five persons who were trapped by fire in their rooms in the third floor of L. O. Aldrich's lodging house, 226 Washington avenue south.

The fire was started by the explosion of a kerosene lamp in the hall. The bottom was blown out of the lamp and the blazing oil thrown over the floor between the stairway and the front rooms was ablaze in a second and escape was impossible.

The front rooms were occupied by Mr. and Mrs. G. Dolan and their baby and Mrs. Mary Wilson and her baby. Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Vaughon, etata fair visitors, who occupied a side room, ran down the stairs in order to summon help and found the hall in flames, but were driven back and all rushed to the window opening on Washington avenue and screamed for help.

State Finances.

St. Paul—The state of Minnesota had $2,012,712.82 cash on hand to begin business with September 2. This is according to the statement prepared by the state treasurer, C. C. Dinsbart, for the close of August. Distributed this is an unusually large amount of money in the treasury aven for this time of year.

The balances on hand in the various funds are as follows:

Revenue fund, $568,376.47; soldiers relief, $28,237.89; trading tax, $43,765.57; state road and bridge, $125,812.70; permonent school fund, $12,627.45; general school fund, $232,654.63; permanent university, $10,800.82; general university, $64,441.22; internal improvement, $25,191.85; interest on improvement land, $52,099.03; university campus, $71,945; swamp land fund, $31,845.71; swamp land indemnity, $2,586.41; hay inspection fund, $2,766.86; grain inspection, $47,370.49; total, $2,012,712.82.

No Prize Fights or Booze.

St. Paul—The Minnesota river is not to be used hy excursion boats for prize fights or Sunday booze parties.

Governor Johnson wrote to the sheriffs of Hennepin, Ramsey, Washington, Dakota, Scott and Carver counties, notifying them to prevent a prize fight which was advertised as the main attraction on an excursion steamer. Paul Sunday morning at 10:30, to go up the Minnesota. The participants were to be two colored exponents of "Griff" Jones and Ben Thomble of Minneapolis. The sheriffs were asked to prevent any such exhibition of last. The fight was finally pulled off at Diamond Bluff, Wisconsin.

Rural Carriers Organize.

Faribault—The rural letter carriers of Rice county have organized with the following officers: Carrier Temple of Morristown, president; Carrier Ferguson of Northfield, vice president; Carrier Sellers of Faribault, secretary, and Carrier Hawley of Faribault, treasurer. Betterment of the postal service and a united blending together of forces for the general good of the carriers seemed to be the chief object of the gathering. The organization will hold its next meeting at Northfield on Nov. 9.

TAUGHT BY UNCLE SAM

OLD TREASURY OFFICIALS WIN SUCCESS IN BANKS.

More Than One Employe of Government's Financial Department Has Entered Some Big Institution and "Made Good."

Washington.—Uncle Sam's financial system must be sound, for the men who hold prominent treasury positions are most sought after material. The department of which Mr. Cortelyou is now the head has developed into a sort of breeding place for chieftains of the great banks of the country.

From the time a man becomes secretary of the treasury or even gains one of the assistant places, he becomes o marked man on part of the big financial institutions.

Immediately they oil went him, and he must be liberally supplied with cash and patriotism to refuse the kind of offers they make. Salaries they extend far outclose the comparatively modest payment that Uncle Sam allows. It is small wonder, therefore, that one by one they succumb and quit Washington for New York, Chicago and other financial centers.

The recent selection of George E. Roberts, director of the mint, to be president of the strong Commercial bank of Chicago, is an instance of this tendency. Perhaps the directors figured that if he were skillful enough to make money for Uncle Sam, he ought to know how to take care of it for them. Hence the election.

Despite his ability, Mr. Roberts might never hlve come to this preferment but for the prominence that political life gove him.

This le a good practical argument for a young man to get into politics, and act honestly in the public service, not for the immedlete return, but for the chance it will make for him with big financeiel interests where a salary of $25,000 is considered very modest. The man whom Mr. Roberts succeeds made his fame in Washington. He was James H. Eckles, comptroller of the treasury under President Cleveland. He resigned in 1898 to accept the presidency of the Commercial bank, and he held this post to the time of his death recently.

Another comptroller of the treasury, Edward S. Lacey, locked to Chicago like the kind of stuff to which financiers are made, and he was attracted from Washington to assume control of the Bankers' National bank. This was 15 years ago, but his services have become so valuable that to-day he is still in charge, bit at a much increased salary over tha figura he was paid when he fret came from Washington.

BISHOP OF LONDON IS COMING.

Dr. Ingham to Attend Tercentennial of American Episcopacy.

London.—Rt. Rev. Arthur Foley Winnington Ingram, lord bishop of London, has announced his intention of ottcuding tho three hundredth anniversary celebration of the founding of the Episcopal church in America, which is to be held at Richmond, Va., in October. He will be accompanied by Rt. Rev. Dr. Henry Montgomery of London, secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

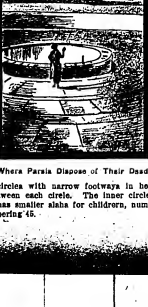
terest in the progress of the Episcopal church in the United States and has watched its growth with great pleasure. He will be one of the guests of honor, according to the invitation extended to him, and he is preparing an address to be delivered at the tercentennial. Bishop Ingram is a high churchman.

Dr. Montgomery was brought from Tasmania, where he held a bishopric, to become the secretary of the great English religious society for the spreading of gospel teachings throughout the world. He has held the office of secretary for six years and under his direction the organization has increased tremendously. While he was bishop of Tasmania it is said he traveled 180 days a year on horseback visiting his many parishes and looking for the development and extension of the church in miners' camps and new settlements.

Fine Work on Botany.

What is probably the finest work on botany ever published has recently been issued from a Leipsig press to the order of the Brazilian government. It consists of 40 volumes, comprising 120 parts, with 20,733 pages, dealing with 40,000 species of flora found in Brazil. The work was begun in 1819 by Martius, and has been built up by no less than 65 authors.



PERSIAN TOWER OF SILENCE.

Place Where Dead Are Laid Rarely Seen by White Man.

London.—The accompanying picture is made from a photograph taken on the hill top of the Persian "Tower of Silence" in central Persia, where the Parels dispose of their dead. It is very rarely that a white man has the opportunity of seeing the interior of a tower of silence, indeed, once it is dedicated, not even o living Parsi may enter.

The tower is built of mud upon a rocky hill, and whitened inside and out with gatch," a sort of native lime, much used in all Persian buildings. The doorway is built half way up the exterior wall in the side of a single block of native granite, turning on o pivot, and is only olout four feet by three and a half feet. The tower ohown here was finished and dedicated in April, but the doorway has since been destroyed by the Arabanmedans, who did considerable damage to the tower itself as well. Therefore, before it can be used, the world it must be ceremoniously cleansed and rededicated.

The inside tower is paved with granite slabs, on which the bodies of the dead are laid. The two outer circles consist of 86 slnbs, and there are five circles with narrow footways in between each circle. The inner circle has smaller slabs for children, numbering 45.

FRANK A. VANDERLIP.

(Vice President of National City Bank, New York.)

Frank A. Vanderlip, once a machinist, later a newspaper man, who first came into prominence as the business associate of Lyman Gage, is another example of o United States treasury official taken from the public service because a private corporation needed his work.

A place had to be especially created for him in the National City Bank of New York, famous as the institution from which the Standard Oil company handles its banking business. This bnnk hes o capital of $25,000,000, and its deposits are eight times as great, while makes it the leading financial institution of the United States. The office of vice president, formerly morely an honorary title, was developed into a place second only in power to the president of Mr. Vanderlip.

In the change from Uncle Sam to a private corporation as no employer Mr. Vanderlip followed the lead of his old chieftain, Lyman H. Gage, former secretary of the treasury.

Gage, when appointed to the place of president McKinley was highly rated in Illinois as o financier of first rank, but the remainder of the country, while it knew his name, had never ronked him among the giants.

But from the time he took hold of the nation's finances he found himself a much-sought for man, and eventually he espitulated, and took the presidency of the United States Trust company.

The man who came after Mr. Gage in the high office of guardian of the country's cash, Leslie M. Shaw, of Iowo, had an experience much similar to that of Mr. Gage

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

It is surprising how many men there are in this state who are of the opinion, that they could easily defeat Johnson for governor, if given the republican nomination, but them and their wives are about the only ones that think so. We have been up against Johnson and the Johnson Manufacturing Co.,in two campaigns and our party got badly defeated in one and "skunked" in the other, so we begin to be of the opinion that he is not easily beaten.

"The big head" is a popular way of expressing a common and very frequent ailment.

It arises from various sources, but the real foundation is lack of sense. A little or big office often develops it in some people.—Ex.

Yes we have one official in this county that has the "big head" so bad that he can not get a hat to fit him, but we are firmly convinced, that when he "trots" the second heat, against Hunt, and THE SUNBEAM, he will discover that he is in a race.

Some of the officials of the department of the Interior take quite an active interest in the building of roads, schools, and churches on this reservation, but them "water sympathetic ducks" never loose an opportunity to put every $5, bill, that belongs, up this way, that might be used to help improve and build up the country, into Thief River Falls. Anyone that is not all familiar with the situation knows that these are facts, and them, that do not understand how the deal is worked can get posted by reading This SUNBEAM, posted for a few months.

"This is Think."

Not in a thousand years will blood forget blood, even in this great nation of ours.

The salmon had been winding all morning through open country. Now it was approaching close woodland and high grass. The captain of the company, acting as advance guard, knew that trouble was probably lying ahead. He called to him the sergeant—he and he had been serving through all the days of the fine time when a "beef" man was needed.

"Sergeant O'Hare," he said, "I want you to pick out from the company any six men you choose and go ahead as a point. You can have anybody you want—only choose the best you know. I think we will be fired on from those low hills."

Sergeant O'Hare's eyes searched the company.

"Sullivan!" he called. "McCarthy! O'Donnell! Mortarity! Metlinski!" He hesitated. His glance wandered uneasily up and down the line. Big, honest Swedes, burly Germans, lanky Yankees, there were in plenty. But where—oh, yes, there on the left of the line—that bright eyed, new-nosed, red-headed little beggar, nodding and imploring attention with his twisted up face. The sergeant's brow cleared.

"Lynch!" he called, with a sigh of relief. "This is mine, sorr," he added, turning to the captain.—Outing.

The Remarkable Part.

One day some Americans on a visit to Wales expressed a wish to see a certain old and historic church. The incumbent was only too pleased to show them around, especially as he believed it would end in a donation being given to his parochial funds. He is as proud of the school as he is of the church and finished up by asking them in there also and twitting them to question the scholars.

One of the party accepted the invitation.

"Can you tell me, little boy," he said to one lad, "who George Washington was?"

"Iss, surr," said he; "he was a 'Merryean gen'ral."

"Quite right," said the American. "And can you tell me what George Washington was remarkable for?"

"Iss, surr; he was remarkable 'cos he was a 'Merryean an' told the truvth."

The American didn't question further.—Cassell's Magazine.

FEAR OF GHOSTS.

Harmless Visitors From Whom We All Shrink in Terror.

Deep down in the heart of man there abides a firm belief in the power of the dead to walk upon the earth, and affright, if such be their pleasure, the sons of the living. Wise folks, versed in the sciences and fortified in mind against faith in aught that savors of the supernatural, laugh ideas of the kind to scorn, yet hardly one of them will dare to walk alone through a graveyard in the night, or if one be found so bold he will surely hasten his footsteps, unable wholly to subdue the fear of sheeted spectors which may rise from the grass grown graves or emerge from moonlit tombs and follow on, for, strangely enough, the dead, if not actually hostile to the living, are esteemed dangerous and dreadful to encounter.

It would be to the fashion, says a writer in Lippincott's Magazine, to sweep away all such notions by saying that they had their origin in the childhood of the race and that they sprang from fear of the unknown. This supposition was the easiest way to dispose of them, but was it fair? This subject possesses intense interest for a great majority of mankind, and, though the existence of ghosts is unproved, there is undeniably a vast deal of testimony in their behalf that deserves serious and respectful consideration. Fortunately, within the last few years the attitude of science toward the problem has altogether changed, and actuated by a new spirit of inquiry, the wise men have been engaged, thoughtfully and without prejudice, in studying it out.

While it cannot be said that any final and definite conclusions have as yet been reached, an immense amount of evidence has been sifted, enough to show pretty conclusively that one result of the intelligent exercise of the Cock Lane ghost, with clanking chain and attributes disagreeably savage five of the grave, has no basis in fact. On the other hand, there are certain phantasms, altogether different in their character, which, in behalf a mass of testimony is adduced far greater than would be required to establish complete proof in any or many cases in a court of law. Nothing short of absolute demonstration in such a matter can be satisfactory, but the evidence in question certainly staggers incredulity.

One fear of phantoms appears to spring from a dread of the unknown, the mysterious and the intangible. That it be a groundless terror is proved by the fact that to many thousands of persons of different spiritual temperament subjected during the last few years to psychic investigation not a single instance has been found in which the injury was inflicted by the ghost upon the person or persons to whom it presented itself. So that, even if we are not to accept apparitions as veritable, we ought to regard them with curiosity rather than with apprehension, and to attempt at least to avoid such supernatural evidence as should poverty seek an opportunity to be invited for the sake of observing for our own phenomena so intensely interesting.

Exchange In Neckties.

A South Penn square business man has created a din of it, he and his wife, but there is most attaching to it in this case. His wife insists on buying his neckties and shoes on November and red or green spots on a pale shimmering like silver will only be an opportunity to be invited for the sake of observing for our own phenomena so intensely interesting.

Hats With Tempers.

There are hats with tempers, as every woman is aware—the hats that "go on" beautifully one day (or great service in the hat shop five minutes before they are bought) and which in the next refuse to assume the right pose and poise for love or money. There are few conditions more trying than to fall under the ban of a hat's displeasure. The only thing to be done is to put it away for a week or so and wait till it has recovered from its temper, like a naughty child. One cannot argue with a hat and smacking is not to be recommended. — London Queen.

Self Praise.

Lady (buying presents, to friend)—Now, I wonder if that is the sort of tie that would be considered good taste by a man?

Shopman—Er—I selected it myself from a very large stock.—Punch.

LAWYERS IN ENGLAND,

The Difference Between the Barrister and the Solicitor.

The barrister in England is the very [illegible] of the earth. He it is who makes [illegible] laws, who goes into parliament, [illegible] on the bench, who considers [illegible] screen or eight degrees higher [illegible] in the social scale than any other [illegible] or middle class mortal, and with [illegible] he has absolutely no responsibility toward his clients. That ancient, much abused thing called custom in the country has created for the law [illegible] and distinct limbs, which are compared in a measure to the [illegible] of the bee. One is the drone and [illegible] the queen. The drone is the [illegible] man, who sits in his office working up a case, consulting clients, drawing [illegible], controlling estate transactions but [illegible] the luxuries of people who are unfortunate enough to be saddled under the trust deeds. The solicitor [illegible] has his own tradition to work out, does not ever get to himself any glory whatever. Except in police and magistrate courts, he is a person non grata, so, in the words of the judges, "he is not seen." If he has a case on hand, he is advised to take it to a barrister, who thinks he may never have heard of the matter in dispute before. And he sits and carefully proceeds into court and accepts till it is black and blue, as if he knew all about it, for which he draws a most prodigious fee, quite big enough to enable him to appear nicely mounted in the park every morning. If he spoils the case, there is no chance for redress, because the barrister is merely a gentleman who as fiction goes [illegible] a stance to be a friend in need. All the sons of failure falls upon the poor solicitor. There are no barristers in prison, but there are a good many solicitors who wear the broad arrow which is the first symptom of the barrister. The solicitor remains the obliging fat individual, to whom all sorts of foolish people bring their tried deeds, their stock certificates, their grave moral doubts and all such dangerous things as have a tendency to set a client the desire to take that which is not theirs.—London Letter in Town and Country.

Safest Place In Trains.

"I have one rule for my family when they travel," said the conductor of the suburban train, "and that is for them never to ride in the rear coach or the first one and, preferably, not in the coach next to the last or first. The reason for it is so obvious that I should think the foremost and last cars of a train would have scant patronage from anybody who reads of railroad accidents. If there is a smashup, those are the coaches that suffer. It seems strange that some kind of a buffer is not put behind the locomotive tender and at the rear of the train. How many lives would be saved by a device of the kind one has only to study the statistics of railroad accidents to figure out for himself."—New York Press

How He Got a Drink.

An Indiana traveling man told a story the other day of an incident on the road. He was in the smoking car of an express train reading his paper when a man rushed in from the car behind the smoker, evidently in great agitation and said: "Has anybody in this car any whisky? A woman in the car behind has fainted!" Instantly dozens of flasks were produced. The man who had asked for it picked out the largest one, drew the cork and put the bottle to his lips. With a long sad-faced sigh, he handed the flask back and remarked, "That did me a lot of good, and I needed it, for it always makes me feel queer to see a woman faint away!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Complaint.

His Modest Claim.

A claim for damages against a railroad company is so often a license for exorbitant charges that a simple bill, such as was received by an American railroad company many years ago, even apart from its humorous aspect, is refreshing. It ran as follows:

To ——— and ——— Railroad company to John Smith	Dr.
July 18, 1877.—To running your Locomotive into my wife, as per Doctor's bill for curing her	$10.00
To smashing her hat and spilling her hat	2.87
To upsetting my deer horn (wagon) and breaking it	5.00
To burying me	5.00
	$23.87

There is authority for stating that the claim was paid immediately. — Scrap Book.

Her Chilly Retort.

The late Dr. ——— of Maldon, after pouring forth the story of his undying love in the most touching manner for over an hour to a young woman who he hoped would become his fourth wife, was refused the second time. He started for the door looking cooling, he said in a most thunderous tone, "By heavens, you are the coldest woman I ever saw!"

The young woman looked up and answered sweetly:

"Oh, no, doctor; you have seen three colder than I!"—Boston Herald.

A Curious Notice.

This curious official notice was once published in Germany: "At the request of Count Wilhelm Leignen, the knock the seaman, Johan Leignon, who was drowned in May, 1869, on a journey from Stockholm to Hamburg in the Kaiser Friedrich, is hereby called upon by the courts to appear and report himself on or before April 1, 1881, under pain of being declared dead."

Financial Note.

Jerrold—Could you pay me that 10 shillings you owe me? I owe Johnson eighteen money and must pay him. Hobart—Well, I'll tell you what. You pay Johnson what you owe him, and then I'll borrow 10 shillings of Johnson and pay you.

Unjust.

Fluffy Young Thing (at the play)—I believe this man in front of us is trying to help what we're saying. Man In Front (turning around)—You do me an injustice, my dear young lady. I am trying not to hear it.—Chicago Tribune.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing color. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

How Wexall Was Named.

Near Schenckville, Pa., is a village that bears the name of Wexall. This wonderful name was the result of an error upon the part of the postoffice department in Washington. The place was known many years ago as "Crespesteel," or "Crowtown," and later as Mechanicsville, but when a postoffice was established there in 1858 neither of these names was satisfactory, and it was decided to choose a new cognomen. Many were the suggestions submitted to the postoffice department, but all were found to be too nearly like the name of some other postoffice to be acceptable. One day the village storekeeper saw the word "Nexall" upon a piece of coiled rope and called the attention of several friends to it. At once all agreed that "Nexall" would be a fine name for their town. So the postoffice authorities were notified. Soon a letter came from Washington approving the name that had been chosen, but in the letter it was spelled "Wexall." So Wexall became the name of the village.—Philadelphia Record.

Too Much to Ask.

A traveler in the highlands observed while at a tavern in a small village a very beautiful collie. At his request the owner was pointed out to him, and he asked the man what he would take for the dog.

"Ye'll be taking him to America?" the Scot asked cautiously.

"Certainly, if you sell him to me."

"I no coud part wie Rob," the dog's owner then said sympathetically. "I'm mackle fond-like o' him." And liberal offers were no inducement.

To his astonishment, the traveler later saw the dog sold to a drover for half what he had offered and after the drover had disappeared requested an explanation. "You said that you could not sell him," he remarked.

A twinkle came into the highlander's eyes.

"No; I didna say I'd no sell him. I said I couldna part wie him," he said. "Rob'll be hame in two or three days fra noo, but I couldna ask him to swim across the ocean. No; that wodn' be too muckle to ask."—Harper's Weekly.

A WAY OF WISDOM

BY ADDIE DUNHAM HUXFORD

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"So Dave Allcrook has come back again from Colorado as poor as he went—dead broke, I hear. Well, I didn't think he'd make his fortune there, any more than he did in Australia; he isn't the kind that ever gets to the top of the heap."

Farmer Howden's tone betrays rather more of satisfaction with his own perspicacity than of pity for the "poor devil" of whom he speaks. It is the way of the world, we all know, to "kick a man when he's down."

"He's been unfortunate, 'tis true." Widow Burrell's voice is a shade more compassionate, though she has a profound respect for the opinion of her neighbor and good friend, Farmer Howden. "They say it's capital he's always lacked to make his plans succeed—but he's willing enough to work, so he can't be altogether shiftless."

"He's been a rolling stone; no wonder he's gathered no moss," rejoins the farmer, oracularly. "I suppose he'll be back to get work at anything now, for awhile anyway," thoughts he always Dave Allcrook swinging the scythe in his new mowdower running pleasantly through his practical mind.

While they have different opinions of Dave Allcrook's character, Miss Genie's hired him on her place, to take charge of everything—workingmen, horses, she calls it—you know she oversees the farm herself. She's got to have some one in Ezra's place, since he's laid up with the rheumatism, and I'm quite sure that if Dave shoulder down and sticks to the business he'll get into a good, permanent position; for I've heard Miss Genie say that she intended to position of Ezra off as soon as she could get a man in his place."

While those her friends and neighbors gossip kindly about her, Genie Moray goes her way, serenely, fancy-free and independent, asking no interlocutor. An only child, the broad lands and fine blooded stock comprising the prosperous dairy farm of which she is the wise and happy mistress, come to her from a careful father.

Nobody knows what bright, kindly memories of the old days when she went to school with blue-eyed Dave, rise up in Genie Moray's heart and move her to give him this good situation on her farm, except in authority only to herself; but she lives on simply in the old ways, neither seeking nor avoiding him, but seeing a good deal of him, naturally, and being unavoidably much in his company, as he makes one of the family circle.

Her frequent jaunts about the farm are usually with him, on a matter of course, but there is a general ease in the first Sunday when he accompanies her and her mother to church, sitting with them in the family pew. But it is done so quietly and simply there is no room for comment, and as for Dave himself, his conduct is simply irreproachable; the more Miss Genie goes to know him, so much the more she likes and trusts him and approves of his present course.

Till one day when he has been six months in her employ; in fact, she has just paid him his second quarter's salary, and he stands before her twisting the bills nervously together and fairly ill at ease, whereas light-hearted Dave's natural manner is debonair and well poised, without one trace of awkwardness. At last:

"I don't want to take this money, Miss Genie; it isn't quite fair, for I think perhaps—I shall be leaving—you—soon."

"Oh, Dave!" Miss Genie's tone is one of surprised remonstrance, with a slight shade of reproof. "You've only been here one-half year, and you're doing so well; are you dissatisfied in any way, or have you something better in view?"

"Neither, but," another embarrassed cough, then he bursts forth in a breathless sort of way: "Miss Genie, are you going to marry Mr. Roberts? Tell me truly, please!"

"Why, Dave!" Miss Genie's face flushes a little, and there is a fine resonch in her voice. "It is not like you to ask such a very singular question."

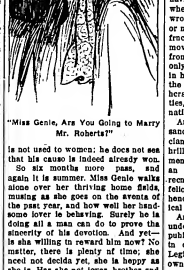
"I beg your pardon, but still, are you? I must know, because, if you are—"

He says no more then, but the eloquent blood rushes up all over his handsome, sun-browned face, crimsoning even the broad white forehead.

"If I am, you will leave me at short notice, I suppose," Miss Genie says at last, quietly, so quietly as to suggest some emotion strongly repressed. Well, Dave, since you have asked, I will answer you—no, I am not going to marry Mr. Roberts—for one thing, he is never asked me." She chooses to more the fact that she has several times stayed off this gentleman in a sly tantamount to a decided rejection, and that it is well known that he her devoted admirer still. "And if I should ask, I would have to say no, but that is all; your position is in no sort danger. I am still likely to need a reman, as far as I can see."

She smiles in a bright and friendly way, trying to turn it off so, but he is not let her.

"Oh, Miss Genie, you know I wasn't thinking of that at all, only I heard I was going to marry him—and I couldn't stay where I'd have to see it—no I couldn't, for I love you myself. I love you dearly—dearly, Miss Genie, my darling—"



He catches her hand and tries to draw her close, but she swings off from him, throwing back her shoulders and looking up at him fondlessly, with a brave, bright smile, though her lips quiver and her eyes are dim with tears.

"Dave, Dave!" she cries, childishly. "Not another word like that if you want to be friends. Why, you silly boy, don't you know I'm a year and a half, yes, nearly two years older than you are?"

"I know it, yes; but what of that? It is less than nothing between us two."

"To tell you the truth, Dave, I don't want to say 'no' to you, for I do like you very much indeed;" his eyes begin to kindle and his face to glow with pleasure, but with no effort she keeps down a rebellious blush or so, and goes on calmly: "Nor am I quite prepared to say 'yes' to your suit. In fact, you must wait, must give me time. I have known but little of you for little years. The case stands thus: My affections are disengaged, quite so, if, in the course of a year or two, I find that I can love you, and feel assured that your love for me is true and lasting, well, I think I could then be happier with you, perhaps, than living my life alone as I have done. Meanwhile, let everything be as if we had not spoken together of this today. Matters are very well just as they have been. We are not unhappily situated, either of us. I don't want to hear a word on this subject if you accept my terms. Are you willing?"

She holds out a gracious hand to him. He takes it in both his and stands a moment looking down a most miserable feeling of despair that clutches at his throat. Poor Dave! he is not used to women; he does not see that his cause is indeed already won.

So six months more pass, and again it is summer. Miss Genie walks alone over her thriving home fields, musing as she goes on the events of the past year, and how well her handsome lover is behaving. Surely he is doing all a man can do to prove the sincerity of his devotion, and yet—is she willing to reward him now? No matter, there is plenty of time; she need not decide yet, she is sure she is. Has she not lover, brother and friend in one?

She climbs the stile into the "far pasture" and goes absently toward the river. A moment or two and a fearful snort and bellowing roar strike terror to her very heart. She looks around and stands still, to see the huge form of the dreaded "yellow bull" bearing swiftly down upon her, his wicked head lowered, and his curly red-gold locks waving in the wind.

Then she loses her head and starts to run in the wrong direction. That moment some one's strong arm clasps her, she is guided to the nearest fence and thrown bodily over it, just in time to save her from the furious charge the angry bull makes.

Dave Allcrook springs over after her as quickly as may be, but not unhurt.

He staggers to her and stoops in lift her up, but his strength fails he sinks down beside her the blood pouring from a gaping wound in his side.

"I am glad I was here to die for you, Miss Genie darling," she hears him murmur. "I've often wished I could, lately. Don't cry, dear," as she, kneeling beside him, rains bitter tears on the death-white face she lifts to her bosom. "I'd truly rather have it so—like this—than live on as we were. I love you so, and bringing the lips against her tear-wet face, he faints dead away.

Then follow long, sad days when Miss Genie, with awakened heart, fears she must lose him just when life seems sweetest, but health and happiness prevail in his favor, he "heals him of his grievous wound," and in very autumn there is a quiet wedding that brings joy to two loving hearts that care not what "Mrs. Grundy" may say, and afterwards everything runs on just as before—it is Miss Genie's way and time only proves its wisdom.

JUST A GENTLE HINT.

One Remedy Appearances Indicated Nahleman Had Never Tried.

The earl of Surrey, afterward seventh duke of Norfolk, who was a notorious gourmand and hard drinker and a leading member of the Beefsteak club, was so far from cleanly in his person that his servants used to avail themselves of his fits of drunkenness—which were pretty frequent, by the way—for the purpose of washing him. On these occasions they stripped him as they would a corpse and performed the needful ablutions.

He was equally notorious for his horror of clean linen. One day, on his complaining to Dudley North at his club that he had become a perfect martyr to rheumatism and tried every possible remedy without success, the latter wittily replied:

"Pray, my lord, did you ever try a clean shirt?"

BRUTALITY OF MEDICAL ETHICS.

A Great Surgeon Barred from Membership in Medical Association.

(From the National Druggist for June, 1907.)

Dr. Augustus Charles Bernays, who died a few days ago in St. Louis, was, probably, the foremost surgeon in the United States. His fame was extensive with the civilized world. He was not only an operator of the highest order, but a tireless and exhaustive worker in the field of original surgery. He performed the first successful Caesarian section in 1839 in St. Louis, and also the first successful coeliotomy for gunshot wound of the abdomen and the first gallstone operation in Missouri. A record held by Dr. Bernays has never been equaled: Out of eighty-one successive cases of appendicitis which necessitated operations, seventy-one in succession were with perfectly satisfactory results, the seventy-second patient failing of recovery, but the subsequent nine cases were successfully treated.

And yet, with such a record, regardless as was his skill, varied and extensive as was his learning, wonderful as were his accomplishments, he was not considered by the American Medical Association, as worthy of membership in that organization.

No charges were ever brought against him which, in the remotest degree, reflected on his qualifications as a surgeon; his moral character was never the subject of attack; he was never accused of having done anything unbecoming a man or a gentleman. The head and front of his offending had this extent—no more!" He dared to think! He refused to mold his opinions and to govern his actions by the arbitrary rules which those whom he knew to be his inferiors had set up for his guidance! In other words, he could not regard the Code of Ethics of the American Medical Association as being inspired, or having any binding authority on him where his judgment told him it was wrong. And so, twenty years ago or more, on account of some trivial infraction of this sacred "Code," a movement was started to expel him from the local association, which was only defeated by his hasty secession in his resignation. As membership in the A. M. A. is dependent upon membership in the State and Local societies, his name was dropped by the national organization.

And so, though he had saved thousands of lives; though other physicians had profited by his art; this brilliant surgeon; this great and good men, has, during all these years, been an outcast—a medical "scab;" not recognized as "ethical" or worthy of fellowship by that body of physicians headed together in the American Medical Association!

And this is the association which, under pretenses of working for the public good, is, in fact, by any means in control Congress and the State Legislatures in the interest of their own selfish schemes, which is trying to create a Cabinet position and to place one of its members in that position; which is endeavoring by law to exclude from the use of the mails, all manufacturers of medicines who do not comply with the absurd requirements that they choose to set up; which, in short, is trying to put upon the statute books of State and nation laws that will, in effect, establish a kind of medical priesthood, to which only their own members will be eligible with power and control over the health and lives of the people!

God help the druggists, the then manufacturers, physicians not members of their guild, and the people generally, if this association ever succeeds in its undertaking. If it does, it will, after the fashion of the labor unions, dictate a "closed shop," and say to doctors who prefer to be independent, "You must join our union or failing to do so, compel them to get out of the business. It will say what medicines shall be taken, and how they shall be made. It will pledge the people about with a lot of petty regulations under pretense of protecting the public health, and a medical hierarchy will be established to tyrannize over the people.

Let no man call this a false alarm. If there are those who are inclined to do so, let them read the journal of the A. M. A. Let them scan the proceedings of the association, held always behind closed doors, and carefully edited, as they are before they are published in its official organ. If they will do this they will see that we are not trying to create a bugaboo to frighten their timid souls.

Sends Emigrants to Canada.

The Salvation Army in England is sending emigrants to Canada in batches of 600 monthly.

In Light Colors

The first is pretty in gray sollenne. The treined skirt has a series of pin tucks worked round the lower part, on which are placed square applique of lace. Up center front is a wide band of insertion with three tucks each side. The under-bodice is finely tucked in stripes that are trimmed with applique; the over-bodice is merely stitched at the edges; two frills of lace finish the sleeves. Hat of pale pink chip, trimmed with chiffon, and clusters of pink-tipped daisies. Material required, nine yards 46 inches wide.

The second is in pale blue voile; the skirt trimmed with narrow bands of silk and pleated lace; a blouse of white crepe de Chine is worn with it; over this is e zounve made with e silk lining of the same color as the voile; it has short sleeves, which, like the zouave itself, is edged with pleated lace. Pale blue satin straw hat, trimmed with ostrich feathers. Materials required for the dress, eight yards 46 inches wide, two and one-half yards silk on the cross, about 24 yards pleated lace.

For No. 3 a mauve chiffon taffetas is used. The skirt is trimmed with folds; the bodice has a deep yoke and puffed sleeves of pleco lace, with oversleeves of taffetas. The bretelles are composed of folds of taffeta; straps of the some trim the yoke. Hat of white crinoline, trimmed with a cluster of shaded mauve feathers. Materials required for the dress, 18 yards 22 inches wide, ona one and one-half yards lace.

THE COARSE LINENS

In Same Cases They Undoubtedly Have an Advantage Over the Finer Weaves.

Although the lingerie frocks of fashion are mode of the finest possible linens, fancy seems to be in favor of the coerser weaves for wraps. These support better the very heavy trimmings much in vogue, and, although they look odd over such flimy frocks, the combination is decidedly artistic and in the very best possible taste.

The coerser linens are sometimes used for entire suits, developed upon tailored lines. One of Francis's new models shows something unusual in the way of a collar. It is nonexistence, except at the armholes, and follows the lines nt the figura rather closely. The points do not overlap, but they meet so closely that the bowknot of setin run under the inlold collar of meire holds them together and below the waist line tha coat is trimmed with linen buttons. The pockets have four of them, nine trimmed with buttons, and'e row of buttons runs down the center of the sleeves from shoulder to wrist.

Tha skirt is plaited all around the figure, hut not in the regular way. The plaits are formed in groups of three, with a wide hox-plait in the center. Around the bottom thara is a stitched-on band, cut after the Roman key design, except that the upper part is closed, leaving an open space between the hands of the design.

Golog back to thin gowna, a charming model noted a few ago is of thia geuze in wide white and blue stripes, the hiue folded in long plaits, and trimmed at the hottom with a hand of blue taffeta.

Filet on Cloth.

Important among the senson's decorations are tha various filet laces. They are so open to variety, in fact, that they are appropriately employed with cloth, nlnon or silk, and where the mesh is large and plain a design is usually supplied in heavy floss silk. When consorted with Shantung, Chinese or linen threads take the place of the heavy silk floss.

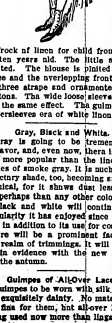
Emphasizing the value of the rather long, full-skirted hanqued coat is a number of models in striped cloth are shown. As a rule, they are simply trimmed, perhaps with stitched-on loops of braid, stitched at one edge only and snguamented with crochet silk and finished with heavy festooned corde and long silk tassels.

The French Woman's Shoes.

A French woman chooses her shoes for her various gowns, just as she does her gloves or hat. With her short walking skirt and fur stilettos she is "Americaine" generally going in for moderately heavy, polished, rubber shoes. With her long-skirt tailmade gown she wears high-heeled, patent leather, pointed toed, buttoned shoes in winter and in spring very high heeled low shoes.

With her afternoon toilette she wears a great point of being exquisitely shod. A wide range is open to her selection here. French women are so careful about keeping their shoes in trim that many of them scorn the idea of wearing slippers or low shoes in the daytime.

THE PRESENT COIFFURE



Puffs and Curls Have Not Been Seen in Such Profusion for Very Many Years.

On every side one sees evidence of the violent outbreak of puffs, curls and double twists, which constitute the bulwark of strength in the fashionable coiffura of the day.

Curls are no longer the dernier cri, however, for puffs have usurped their place and offer possibilities in the way of natural effect not to be obtained by any other form of adornment. They can he bought separtioly or in clusters.

They require very little skill in adjustment, and any one with an idea of harmony of line can make them look as though they grew where they sera placed. The heoutles of Charles II.'s reign had a great advantage in the coiffura of that period, which consisted of a wonderfully nrtistic massing of the drooping and flowing curls, but not since then has there been a more flattering coiffure than that of to-dey.

CHILD'S LINEN FROCK

Frock nf linen for child from eight to ten years nld. The little skirt is plaited. The blouse is shirred at the sldee and the nverlepping front is cut in three srapes and ornamented with buttons. The wide loose sleeves carry nut the same effect. The gulmpe and undersleeves ora of white linon.

Gray, Black and White.

Gray is going to be tremendously in favor, and, even now, there is nothing more popular than the linen costumes of smoke gray. It is such a satisfactory shade, too, becoming and economical, for it shows dust less readily perhaps than any other color.

Black and white will continue the popularity it has enjoyed since spring, and in addition to the use for costumes entire will be a prominent factor in the realm of trimmings. It will be often in evidence gray. The new shades for the autumn.

Guimpes of All Over Lace.

Guimpes to be worn with silk gowns are exquisitely dainty. No material is too fine for them, but all-over lace is being used now more than lingerie.

A Case of STOMACH CATARRH.

Miss Mory O'Brien, 806 Myrtle Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"Peruna cured me in five weeks of catarrh of the stomach, after suffering for four years and doctoring without effect. In common with other grateful ones who love been benefited by your discovery, I say. All hail to Peruna."

Mr. H. J. Henneman, Cokiend, Neb., writes: "I wnited before writing to you about my sickness, catarrh of the stomach, which I had over a year ago.

"There were people who told me it would not stay cured, but I am sure that I am cured, for I do not feel any more ill effects, have a good appetite and am getting fat. So I am, and will say to all, I am cured for good.

"I thank you for your kindness.

"Peruna will be tur house medcine hereafter."

Cotarrh of the stomach is also known in common parlance as dyspepsia, gastritis and indigestion. No medicine will be of any permanent benefit except it reaches the catarrhal condition.

Gained Strength and Flesh.

Miss Julia Butler, R. R. 4, Appleton, Wis., writes she has catarrh in her stomoch, causing loss of sleep and appetite, with frequent severe pains after eating. She took Peruna, her appetite returned, she gained strength, flesh and perfect health.

POULTRY and BEES

WORK FOR SECTION HONEY.

Money Can Be Made by Handling it in This Form.

While honey cut out of large frames is quite popular in some regions, and sold under the name of bulk honey, and when larger quantities of comb honey can thus be produced than in any other way, the greater part of comb honey is produced in small boxes called sections, holding about one pound each, as shown in cut. The kind most in use is 4¼x4¼x1⅞ inches, outside measure. My preference, says Farm and Home, is for the T super, although it is not most generally in use.

The grade of comb honey founded, ten used in sections is called thin super, although some use extra thin super, and the amount used varies all the way from a triangular piece measuring one inch on each side up to enough to fill the section practically full. I consider it economy to use the larger amount, a bottom started five-eighths of an inch deep, and a top starter coming down within one-eighth inch of this, the starting coming within about one-sixteenth of an inch of the wood at each side. When the sections are thus filled with foundation there is no need of an excluder to keep the queen out of the super.

Bees do not so readily begin work in section supers as in extracting supers with combs that have been previously used. In order to start work more promptly, it is advisable to use in the first super of the season one or more batt sections. These are sections that had been partly filled at the close of the previous season, and the honey then emptied out by the bees after the sections were taken from the hives. A single batt in the middle of a super will answer, and in poor season I have had 100 or more of these batts filled and sealed and not another section touched.

If only when supers are thus given, the bees would start to work in them, and keep at work in them, what a blessing! But alas, just about the time work is fairly started in the surplus apartments, some colony will take a notion to swarm, stopping all surplus work, and if left in its own devices sends out a second swarm several days after the first, and then at intervals of a day or two other swarms, sometimes five or six in all, the last of them being mere handfuls, and only a vexation. Other colonies will take the same notion, and the season ends with a large proportion of worthless colonies and little or no surplus honey.

Although it is not an easy thing to prevent each colony from swarming at least once, it is well to know some of the things that tend to prevent excessive swarming. First of all comes abundance of room, and here attracted honey has the advantage. C. P. Dadant, one of the heaviest producers of extracted honey in the country, uses very large hives, with no excluders, and not more than one colony in 20 swarms.

Keeping down the temperature is important. Place the hives in shade where there is a free circulation of air, as under shade trees. Also let there be plenty of ventilation of the hive itself by means of large entrances, or by raising the hive on blocks. When working for extracted honey, an opening of one-quarter in the entire width of the hive may be allowed to each story.

Make Chicken House Snug.

Cracks in the chicken house are not good things to have in the winter, when a cold wind drives snow through them, and there can be better things in the summer, when the festive mite must have a place of shelter. However, it is next to impossible to build with hard pine lumber and not have cracks. The best thing to do is to keep them from the outside, with battens, to keep out the cold, and stop them with crude oil or coal tar from the inside, to keep out the mites.

Salt the Old Roosters.

Again let me say it—salt the old roosters. The very next time you go to town, crate the old fellow up and take them along. They are only bearing with you now and giving nothing for their board. They rush in and gobble all the chickens' feed they can get, are often mean to the smaller chickens and are not even an ornament to the flock. Of course this does not refer to the pure breds at high scoring class, but in the lot usually found on the farms. The trouble is, too many of this kind are still found on the farms.

DRY FEEDING OF FOWLS.

Opinion of One Poultryman That It is Not as Good as Mash.

I notice in a report of the Ontario station that the feeding of mashes to poultry is discouraged. If one will but read the report they will see that in the feeding of the hens at that station the very necessity for feeding mashes is removed. The men that advocate the feeding of mashes are generally right, for they do that merely to lessen the work of the digestive organs in grinding up dry grain. I see, in looking over this report, that the manager of the poultry department says that he has been using sprouted grain in the place of the mashes.

Very well, that is just what we might expect. The idea in the feeding of mashes is carried out in the feeding of the sprouted grain. A little further on I see that he is also feeding soaked grain and finds soaked oats very good. There is another substitute for dry grain. Still further on I read that mangels and meat also are fed. The report says that "during very cold weather in the winter they fed occasionally a little corn, either in the morning or evening," and that this is fed usually in the litter.

Now the writers who oppose feeding mashes will take this report as an argument on their side, and I am willing to admit that in the establishment of the professional feeder or raiser of poultry there is little or no need for mashes. But I find that on the farm we do not have the great variety of food for poultry that is had in such establishments. On the ordinary farm the fowls get grain and water almost entirely during the whole season when the birds have no access to green things out of doors. They get the scraps from the table, but in a flock of perhaps 200 fowls the table scraps do not go far. So it is a good idea to induce every farmer keeping fowls under such conditions to feed a mash once a day preferably in the morning, for at that time the fowls will have empty crops and will make the most of the mash. At night the fowls, being perhaps not hungry, much of the mash may be left to freeze.

"If farmers can be induced to give a warm mash once a day it will save much sickness among the fowls, for most of the troubles come from indigestion. I have also found that most cases of indigestion are curable by feeding no corn or other cereals for awhile, but feeding soft foods. The mash is very easily made by putting the meal or middlings in a pail and pouring in boiling water at night, allowing it to stand in the cellar or the kitchen till morning. By morning this food will be all cooked.

MAKES CLEANING EASIER.

Put a Dropping Board Under Your Perches in Chicken House.

Why not have a dropping board in your chicken house and keep it clean? Fifteen minutes once a week will be time enough to clean after 100 hens.

Roosts and Dropping Board.

and you won't dread going into it. After cleaning the board cover it with ashes or slaked lime. Have roosts all on a level, says Missouri Valley Farmer, and the hens won't crowd.

CHICKEN CHAT.

Keep the feed dishes clean.

Nests should be kept clean, even tl sew straw has to be put in every day.

The demand for poultry products is such that there is no danger of an over-supply.

The success with poultry depends on the little things as much as on the large things.

Charcoal and grit are as important as food and water. Do not think of trying to raise chicks without both.

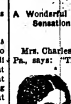
Many a country boy and girl might make a neat little sum of money yearly by keeping a flock of chickens.

Experiments in confining laying turkeys in small yards it does not greatly affect the fertility of the eggs.

It takes about a handful of grain to fill the crop of a bird at night. That is a safe guide to follow in feeding yarded fowls.

Pure, cool water is one of the essentials in keeping the flock healthy. Do not permit the birds to drink from stagnant pools.

A handful of black walnut leaves in the sitting hens' nests and a few limbs broken off and hung in the hen house keep the place free of all lice and mites.



While the United States produces more eggs than any other nation on the globe, we also import more than any other nation. There is no danger of overstocking the market when eggs are being imported.

The Cure-All.

The cure-all in the poultry yard is good management. Its principal virtue is that it is preventive. With it there is no need for stimulants, regulators and other quackshits.

WORN TO A SKELETON.

A Wonderful Restoration Caused a Sensation in a Pennsylvania Town.

Mrs. Charles N. Preston, of Elkland, Pa., says: "Three years ago I found that my housework was becoming a burden. I tired easily, had no ambition and was falling fast. My complexion got yellow, and I lost over 50 pounds. My thirst was terrible, and there was sugar in the kidney secretions.

My doctor kept me on a strict diet, but as his medicine was not helping me, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They helped me at once, and soon all traces of sugar disappeared. I have regained my former weight and am perfectly well."

A Pardonable Fault.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale, discussing a rather finchy attack that had been made on certain recent statements, smiled and said:

"But who or what is blameless? It is like the case of the Scottish hen. An old Scottish woman wished to sell a hen to a neighbor.

"'But tell me,' the neighbor said, 'is she a'thegither a good bird? Has she got nae faults, nae faults at all?'

"'Aweil, Morgot,' the other old woman admitted, 'she has got one fault. She will lay on the Lord's day.'"

FAMILY FOOD.

Crisp, Toothsome and Requires No Cooking.

A little boy down in N. C. asked his mother to write an account of how Grape-Nuts food was made in the family.

She says Grape-Nuts was first brought to her attention on a visit to Charlotte, where she visited the Mayor of that city who was using the food by the advice of his physician. She says:

"They derive so much good from it that they never pass a day without using it. While I was there I used the Food regularly. I gained about 15 pounds and felt so well that when I returned home I began using Grape-Nuts in our family regularly.

"My little 13 months old baby shortly after being weaned was very ill with dyspepsia and teething. She was sick nine weeks and was fearfully thing. She became so emaciated that it was painful to handle her and we thought we were going to lose her. One day a happy thought urged me to try Grape-Nuts soaked in a little warm milk.

"Well, it worked like a charm and she began taking it regularly and improvement set in at once. She is now getting well and round and fat as fast as possible on Grape-Nuts.

"Sometime ago several of the family were stricken with LaGrippe at the same time, and during the worst stages we could not relish anything in the shape of food but Grape-Nuts and oranges, everything else nauseated us.

"We all appreciate what your famous food has done for our family."

Little Son's Explanation Seemed to Cover the Case.

Little son, aged seven, whose training has been of the most painstaking and conscientious, rather took away his mother's breath in describing the dog's game of ball. He ended with:

"And, mother, Topsy caught the ball in her mouth, and then she just ran like h—l"

"Like what?" cried the startled mother.

"Why, like h—, don't you know, mother?" innocently.

"No, I don't believe I do. Just how is that, dear?" she asked faintly.

"Well, I don't know just what it means, myself," he confessed, "but it's a whole lot faster than 'lickety-split!'"

Suffered Three Years—Hands and Eye Most Affected—Now Well and Is Grateful to Cuticura.

"My wife was taken badly with eczema for three years, and she employed a doctor with no effect at all until she employed Cuticura Soap and Ointment. One of her hands and her left eye were badly affected, and when she would stop using Cuticura Soap and Ointment the eczema came back, but very slightly, but it did her a slight of good. Then we used the entire set of Cuticura Remedies and my wife is entirely recovered. She thanks Cuticura very much and will recommend it highly in our locality and in every nook and corner of our parish. I. M. Robert, Hydropolis, La., Jan. 5 and Sept. 1, 1906."

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the Conflicting Testimony from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

MYRIADS STARVING CHINESE SAVED BY MISSIONARIES.

Shanghai, China. — The whole world has heard of China's great famine, but there are no evidences, from this viewpoint, that the world knows of the connection of the missionaries therewith, which is an interesting story by itself, although it cannot be separated from the warp and woof of the tragic tale of this overwhelming calamity. By an interesting coincidence, just at the moment of Sir Ernest Shelton's attack upon missionaries in China, the latter are silently answering his and kindred criticisms, and justifying their presence in the interior of the estimated country by saving the lives of thousands, tons of thousands and hundreds of thousands of starving Chinese. I have returned from a month's tour of the famine district, which is so remote from the treaty ports that I was informed that no other traveler had ever been there before us; and I am prepared to say that the presence of the missionaries alone makes it possible for the world's relief to be administered, and that were it not for these Americans most of the myriads of starving people would be permitted to perish.

Missionaries to the Rescue.

Not all people in America clearly understand that there are practically no white men, except missionaries, living in China outside the treaty ports. They have no right to reside or do business elsewhere. The foreigners in the interior, with the exception of a few working on concessions, are only missionaries. These latter are likewise practically the only ones who spend laborious years in learning the Chinese language; who develop accessible business by means through English-speaking Chinese "shroffs" or "compradores," and who are the most gentlemanly nations, so that the missionaries alone among the foreigners understand the Chinese.

A Million Famine Refugees Have Been Living in Strawhuts Like These.

So it was, quite naturally, the missionaries who first called attention to the imminence of famine in Kiangsu, the North River country. During the spring and summer heavy rains fell throughout Kiangsu and Anhwei provinces, and in the adjacent parts of Shantung and Honan provinces. The Yellow river overflowed its banks, and the Grand canal and lesser streams, dikes breaking in many places. Since the land is at many places lower than the modern canals, one country was a long time submerged.

Despite the floods, the missionaries continued to traverse their fields, one of them, at least, nearly losing his life by drowning. Mirabeau, for example, of Antung, itinerated among the sufferers for six and seven miles at a time, in water above her waist, on one occasion she was barely out of a house before it collapsed. Native churches and parsonages, both alike built of mud or sun dried bricks, crumbled before the attacks of the waters. So before Dolton herself knew that there was to be a famine, the missionaries were sending home their pleas in the religious papers. A missionary relief committee was first in the field, but was later rendered unnecessary by large stronger general committee in Shanghai, which has had the missionaries who live in the district chiefly employed distributing its funds.

The Unspeakable Chinese.

Christendom can never understand the Chinese, not even when it sees them in his native element. The depth and callousness of his selfishness and materialism is simply beyond the field. In sharp contrast with the activity of the missionaries in behalf of the famishing and the hungry was the indifference of the Chinese officials. At first they reported that there was no famine. Then they tried to minimize it.

Then, when it became evident that relief funds were in sight, affording rich pickings to the rascals, they called the figures enormously. My own investigation confirms me in the belief that the missionary figures are conservative; 10,000,000 people, over 100,000 square miles, affected by the famine, and 4,000,000 menaced by actual starvation unless given aid.

A normal resident of a civilized and pantaloons of a Scotch laddie were highly entertaining to a great crowd of Chinese. Incidents could be multiplied by the score, all drawn from personal observation, showing the utter heedlessness on the part of the Chinese of a neighbor's suffering.

Chinese Grafters Hinder Help.

From the American consul-general here I learn that considerable is being said in America about the danger to missionaries at this time. This is only another adroit manifestation of the Chinese crafty, grafty politics.

PROSPERING IN THE FAMINE FIELD.

By an Ancient Chinese Custom, a Condemned Criminal May Exact Toll from All Traffic Entering the City Gate. This Thief is Taking Fuel from the Wheelbarrows of Famine Sufferers Who Have Torn Down Their Houses and Torn Up Their Trees to Sell.

The officials here are merely trying by these wiles to force the foreigners to place the disbursement of the relief funds in Chinese hands.

It is a matter of first-hand knowledge that the sentiment toward foreigners in the famine region is wholly friendly. I found the peasants expressing distrust and hatred of their own officials, and looking to the foreigners for help. With no escort whatever and with no Chinese-speaking companion, Mrs. Ellis and I traveled through hundreds of miles of the territory which the officials declare to be so dangerous. We went through the refugee concentration camps and even ventured to give assistance to especially needy cases, which, it has been ovvilably averred, would be almost certain death to any one attempting it. Absolutely alone, with no other foreigners near, nor any English-speaking Chinese, we attended a Chinese execution, and were the center of a mob of many thousands, gathered to gloat over and fiendishly enjoy the decapitation of criminals, and not so much as a hostile look did we receive, although a Chinese crowd is proverbially in its most dangerous mood at an execution.

All the missionaries in the afflicted area are absolutely unafraid; the only frightened one I met was a young southern Baptist at Chinkiang, which is an open port, with British police, and outside the famine belt; his credences has been a matter of jest among the fellow missionaries during the entire two years that he has been on the field. One of the missionary jokes is his request to a naval officer to keep a warship at Chinkiang!

The only aspect of this situation, though, is that these officials who predict trouble have the power to make their own prophecies come true. If, before this article is printed, or later, trouble occurs in the famine field it will probably be directly due to the avaricious officials who, by obstructing the free movements of the missionaries, and by various other tactics, are hindering the work of relief, all with the object of securing a "squeeze" for themselves. But the Shanghai relief committee, and Consul-General Rodgers, representing the American Red Cross, are unyielding, relief funds may be distributed only by missionaries, and by Chinese who work under their eyesight and direction. Moreover, they are frankly placing the responsibility on "the man higher up," thus involving Chinese "face," and if the officials do not soon cooperate in saving the lives of their own countrymen, they will at least give a clear track to the foreigners.

Young Americans to the Fore.

By a general system of comity among the missions, the territory which is now suffering from famine is allotted to the Southern Presbyterians. Thus it comes about that the only American missionaries actually at work within the 40,000 square miles belong to a single denomination. This fact illustrates the immensity of China as a mission field. There are other denominations working on the edges of the famine, Northern Presbyterians at Shantung, Northern Methodists, Southern Baptists, Quakers, Disciples and Presbyterians at Nanking, Yangchow and Chinkiang.

Within the affected zone there are three Roman Catholic missions, but these are manned by French priests. There are also a few China inland missions, but the authorities of this organization have taken the position that their missionaries shall not engage in relief work, except to care for their own members and adherents. Doughty Miss Read, at Antung, has apparently cut communications between herself and headquarters, for she, declining to be bound by any such narrow regulations, is working assiduously for all the needy as the best male missionary concerned. The Roman Catholics at first declined to cooperate in a general relief work, in which no sectarian distinctions or proselyting are permitted, but later they accepted the Shanghai committee's terms.

The situation is at present that the missionaries have to a great extent surrendered their regular religious work and have become organizers of relief and distributors of foodstuffs. No attempt is being made to turn this work to the advantage of the Christian. Indeed, most of the missionaries are standing up so straight that they are bending over backwards for they refuse to let Christian inquirers share in the relief funds that come from Shanghai. I heard a colleger offer to join my companion's church if he would only give her something to eat; he told her that such a step would simply remove her present chances of securing food.

At this writing the only form of relief work for the benefit of the famine victims that has been started—such as the doddering incompetence and blithering foolishness of the Chinese officials—is a road building operation at Suchien inaugurated and managed by blustering, big-hearted Dr. J. N. Bradley. Not a single Christian has been employed, and when a large number of the men presented themselves at church on Sunday, they were plainly told that they were under no obligation to come, and that their job would not be affected by their presence or their absence. Three hundred of the neediest men are engaged upon this work, and will be kept busy until the famine breaks, the Shanghai committee having provided the funds. Dr. Bradley could put a thousand men to work any day that the funds are forthcoming. He narrowly escaped with his life from the perfectly friendly mob which gathered at daybreak each morning in the hope of securing work tickets. As there were ten men to every ticket, the crush to secure that which literally meant life to many overwhelmed the stalwart doctor and he was crowded into unconsciousness.

The needy Christians are being helped by the missionaries out of their own funds; the number of converts is so small in this field that this is practicable. Every precaution is taken to prevent persons from joining the church from unworthy motives. What ever may have been true in the past, I find that to-day "rice Christians" are more odious in the eyes of the missionaries than of anybody else.

Time Brings Changes.

"When I was 15," remarked a justice of the supreme court, at the luncheon table, "I thought a man of 45 too old to need teeth. At 25 I regarded a man of 40 as about at the end of his string. To-day I know a mighty lively boys who have passed the age of 70."

MAKING A BLUFF

WELL-MEANING CITIZENS WHO WORK ALONG WRONG LINES.

KNOCKING THE HOME TOWN

Her Commercial Clubs Fail in Work Undertaken for the Improvement of Local Conditions.

In a western town not long since a Board of Trade was launched with a blare and a blowing for the purpose of organizing a Business Men's Association, or as its papers announced, a Commercial club. According to the Newspaper Reporta of the event the meeting was a Grand Success, and some 40 or 50 prominent citizens enrolled their names as members. Thus the Commercial club was started on its Career.

Among the active citizens and those who were foremost in advocating the club as an important Thing for the welfare of the Town, were a Minister and a Lawyer. The good clergyman was made the Secretary, a Banker of the town was elected President, and the Lawyer Treasurer. As is usual with such clubs, a Constitution and By-laws were adopted; an Executive Committee appointed, and also a Hustling Committee to add Things to the club. It was outlined that by harmony and co-operation the town could be boomed and made another Chicago. One of the Things desired was a Public Library. Among the other Things were a Manufactory, Cheaper Prices, a Creamery and another Elevator for the town, to compete with the one Elevator already located there.

Six months of careful labor on the part of the Commercial Club developed the fact that the efforts toward securing any of these Things were without results. There was no Library, the Creamery Proposition was considered unfavorable, as the farmers could secure more by shipping their cream to City Town than the Creamery could afford to pay, and as to the Elevator, only a part of the Stock necessary for it start was subscribed. The investigation revealed that out of this very same town each day an average of more than $200 was being sent to Outside Cities for Goods that might as well have been purchased at the home stores. It was discovered that the Minister, who was the Secretary of the Club, all the while he was Advocating Town Improvement, was quietly Working among the Members of his Flock to secure Orders for Groceries and other goods to send to a Chicago alleged co-operative concern. He was receiving five per cent. commission on all Purchases made. The Lawyer of the town, who was made the Treasurer of the Club, was sending away for the Clothes he wore, and for the reason, he could not find Carpets sufficiently good in his home town, and sent away the carpets to a Town in the East, and also a Piano that ornamented his home.

These misled Enterprising Citizens were working all along the wrong lines. While they were Anxious to Improve their Town, the Creamery —that, perhaps, would keep a few thousand dollars a year in the town—the Elevator was a mere matter of form, and would result in no saving or the bringing in of greater income, they overlooked the fact that the best and only means of retaining Business to the Town that was going away from it. The very one Interested with a Good Building Up of the Industries of the Place were foremost in turning over to other communities the Business that should be retained to improve the Home Trade, and make Wealthy the community.

Moral—It would be well for members of Commercial Clubs to take heed that the strongest and surest form for the Club to take is to Devise Means of Protecting Enterprises already, established instead of getting new Enterprises of Doubtful Utility.

FOR MAIL-ORDER TRADE.

Factories Where Adulterated and Misbranded Goods are Put Up.

A visit made a short time ago by the health officers of Chicago to a factory where canned goods were prepared for the mail-order trade, disclosed the fact that it was a mere artificial food factory. Tomato catsups were made from pumpkin pulp; the strawberry and raspberry jam was made from glucose, starch and the only evidence of fruits were a lot of dried apples, the juice of which were used as a base. The seed supposed to the berry seeds, was grass seed; the natural coloring was coal tar dyes, and in the whole thing was a fraud factory from start to finish. Several thousand cans of fruit were found. These were old, several years perhaps, and had been in the stores of the age. From these the labels were removed and new ones put on. These goods were sold "under the manufacturers' hands, until bought for a mere song by the mail-order concern.

Roof Gardens for Berlin.

It is proposed to introduce roof gardens in Berlin. A good many doctors and professors are doing all they can in favor of the scheme, and are agitating for the gardens, particularly in the narrower city thoroughfares. The idea would not be difficult to carry out; the houses being mostly all of one height, and it is already popular with the people of Berlin to take street in the best along a good broad roof track.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKETS.

How Agricultural Towns Can Assist in Preventing "Corners" in Produce.

Now and then complaint is heard of how the large packing houses and handlers of produce manipulate prices of eggs and poultry. These concerns are enabled to do this through their facilities for extensively handling goods and preserving them in their mammoth cold storage plants. Their system is to buy in the lowest market, and hold the produce until the demand is such that prices reach the top notch.

It is evident that were the business men of small towns to come out to some extent the plans of these large houses, the home market would be materially improved. In the agricultural towns merchants are the most extensive handlers of farmers' produce. This business is incidental to the mercantile business, and few merchants have proper facilities for the storing and proper care of perishable goods, therefore, immediately upon receiving supplies from the farmer, consignments are made to the commission houses in the large cities, and thus are the large commission men enabled to obtain control of the markets and to manipulate prices.

Each agricultural community produces enough poultry and eggs and miscellaneous dairy products to support a prosperous exclusive produce house. But when the articles that the farmers have for sale are distributed among a dozen or more stores, each acting independently, it is evident that highest market prices cannot be paid. The plan proposed for the organization of co-operative produce companies in each town has many desirable points in its favor. At small expense a cold-storage plant of adequate capacity to handle all perishable products of the community can be put in order. A plant of this kind, if rightly managed, would greatly improve the conditions of the local markets and higher prices could be paid for produce when the merchants could afford to pay for the same.

A number of towns in the middle west have adopted this system, and with success. Not alone have the home markets been greatly improved, but a greater volume of trade has been brought to the merchants. Should any plan be universally adopted in agricultural districts, it would lessen the opportunity for the manipulation of prices of produce, and the "cornering of the market" by the large commission and packing houses.

THERE MUST BE MERIT.

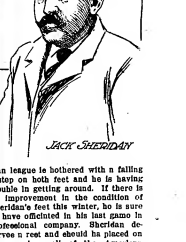
Drawing the Line in the Matter of Patronage of Home Institutions.

While it is the duty of every home loving and patriotic citizen to encourage and support home enterprises, it should be part of the principle that the home enterprise should be such as to merit support. The matter of service and of competition are important. It must be a public spirited citizen, indeed, who will willingly pay for merchants exorbitant prices for what is needed, when the same goods can be obtained to some nearby town for lower prices. The local bank should be patronized, if well conducted, and close in charge of it are also methodical ways as to not win the confidence of the people in the community. Under such circumstances little encouragement can be given those who will seek foreign institution when they have money to deposit.

While it may be true that the smaller towns and cities do not afford unlimited schemes in the line of conduct business, illustrations sufficient, now and then, present themselves to the people to make them cautious and perhaps prejudice them against patronizing some home institutions.

Then when it is found that insurance companies, investment concerns, banks and mercantile establishments put forth the pics of being home institutions and thus should be patronized, while in fact their methods of conduct are such as to not win the confidence of the people. Merit is an important factor in the home trade matter, and no agreement can be made which will justify the people of a community giving support to institutions that are not such which are managed in a way as to impose upon the residents of the community.

HELPING ALONG THE TRUSTS.



Sending Money Away from Rural Districts Assist in Making Them.

It appears as if the trusts are in the country to stay. The present attention of the government seems to merely mean a little more regulation. Trusts generally have their starting point in Wall street. It is to Wall street that the money earned by them goes. Much trust business means as much more for the coffers of the multi-millionaires. It is a sorry fact that the people of the country have been for years bamboozled by trust managers, and unknowingly have been compelled to donate toward their support. That the great mail-order concerns in Chicago have been backed up by Wall street capital has just become evident. Within the past few months Wall street financiers have decided to build up even greater the mail-order business, and one concern has had its capital increased to $40,000,000. It has been toward such a monster enterprise the people of the west have been turning their trade in the past several years, and by so doing have kept western communities from advancing.

Sporting Gossip.

The remarkable number of extra inning games of unusual length regorted in the middle west recently has raised, in the minds of a portion of the baseball public, suspicion as to the genuineness of some of these performances. In a few isolated cases those suspicions may be well grounded. There is a certain amount of prominence given games of unusual length, and considerable discussion created. Consequently there is some temptation for those connected with teams of small caliber to attract attention to themselves by this method. But it is not possible to do this falsely without the connivance of so many persons are truth is bound to leak out eventually. This is just what happened concerning that 25-inning game between Fargo and Grand Forks back in 1891. But "faking" cannot be done before a crowd of any proportions or with honest scorekeepers present without being exposed immediately. Consequently there is little ground for suspecting the authenticity of extended contests in any organized league, although fly night teams, playing independently, whose games are reported only by members of the tennis or their adherents, might be "feked" without immediate discovery. The real facts would be known eventually, however. There is small danger now of an epidemic of "inking." The frequency of long games recently has redneed interest in them, because they are no longer unusual. The real explanation of these long contests, especially in the minor leagues, seems to be a lack of batting. Experienced men and the scouts employed by major league club owners to look out for new talent find there is plenty of promising new pitching material in the smaller leagues, but a scarcity of players who can hit. One reason given is that the prominence and the salary of a successful pitcher tempt every youngster with pitching ability to develop it with a view to becoming a great man on the diamond. The art of batting is neglected in consequence, because every youngstar on the lots knows no pitcher is expected to be a batter. The result is that in a few years there will be so many good pitchers and so few batters that extra inning games will be of almost daily occurrence and will cease to excite interest. Then there will arise a demand for nine batting players with some batting in them, and to produce that the rulers of the game will have to devise means to handicap a lot of pitchers out of business and increase the batting.

This will in all probability be the last senson for "Jack" Sheridan of the American league as manpire. It will be remembered that Sheridan announced his retirement last season near the close of the campaign, and President Ban Johnson had to do some coaxing to get him to report this spring. At the time of his announcement, Sheridan said he wanted a rest after the many years of service. Now the greatest umpire in the Amer-an league le bothered with a falling instep on both feet and he is having trouble in getting around. If there is no improvement in the condition of Sheridan's feet this winter, he is sure to be counted in his last game in professional company. Sheridan deserves a rest and should be placed on the pension roll of the American league. He has been with Ban Johnson ever since the latter broke into baseball. Sheridan is known from one end of the country to the other, and many will be sorry to see him retire from the game.

"First no hit game I ever pitched," remarked Addie Joss. "I have pitched half a dozen one hit games, but this is the first time the opposing team failed to get even one single off me. Yes, I did pitch a no hit game, but the umpire robbed me of it. Remember the American league game I ever pitched? It was at St. Louis in 1902, and the only thing that St. Louis got that looked like a hit was a fly ball to right field that Harvey caught, but which Carruthers decided had been scooped. I'll never forgive Carruthers for that. Topsy Hartsel, bent me out of another here three years ago, making a triple with two men out in the ninth. Dick Harley kept me from having another at Detroit a few years ago, so the best I have got to my credit is a near-no-hit game."

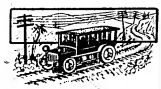
Gossip of People and Events Gathered in Washington

FORESTRY BUREAU RULES OVER MILLIONS OF ACRES



WASHINGTON.—The Forestry Bureau, which now administers more acres of land than any other institution in the world and is the landlord branch of the Federal Government, has just compiled its report covering statistics of grazing on the public lands of the great West. The figures will give some idea of the scale on which Uncle Sam has gone into the lead business, and are very comforting because of their very size, for if the existing policy is nameloated the vast areas of forest and mountain now embraced in reserves will for all time be administered in the interest of the entire people.

There are now more than 156,000,000 acres of land in the national forests. Grazing is permitted, but under strict regulations, made in order that the grass may not be destroyed by overfeeding. This, by the way, is what has caused most of the friction in the West. Owners of flocks and herds in that section of the country for years have been accustomed to grazing without restrictions of any kind. Many of them in time came to look upon the public domain as their very own, in an important ocese, and they were quick to resent any effort on the part of the government to conserve either forest or grazing land. But this friction is rapidly disappearing, as the western people are that without such conservation the range and forest in time will be destroyed.

A glance at the regulations governing grazing on the government forests will give the reader a very good idea of the government forest policy and how it is being administered. Stock men who desire to make use of the range apply for permits stating the kind of stock they have, the quantity of it and the location of the range they want. The forest officers then proceed to make allotments, apportioning the available pasture among the applicants on as equitable a basis as practicable.

TRACTION AUTOS TO BE USED IN WORK ON CANAL

TRACTION automobiles are the latest thing for the Panama canal, and their use, according to officials of the canal in Washington, presages the doom of the ancient and time-honored railroad velocipede, now used by track walkers and employes in chorge of switch lights in sparsely populated communities. It will be seen from the following that the use of automobiles on railroad tracks will become a fad if the railroads will stand for it.

The purchasing agent of the commission has advertised for two such machines for use on the railroad across the Isthmus of Panama capable of carrying ten persons each and able to make a speed of 40 miles an hour on a level track with the engine running at normal speed. The engine must be stout enough to climb a grade of eight per cent, and to increase their speed to 25 per cent above normal, or, in other words, to make 50 miles an hour. The car must burn ordinary stove gasolins and have a capecity to go 125 miles at full speed and load. It is the purpose of the commission to place these cars in the inspection department for the use of the chief engineer and his assistants, who now have to rely on passing passenger, freight, dirt or special trains in inspecting the work along the canal.

NEWSPAPERS FAST EATING UP OUR SPRUCE FORESTS

THE rapidity with which the newspaper is eating up the American spruce forests has caused some alarm among officials of the government, who have been looking into the thing. The conversion of spruce timber into paper is going on at the rate of 1,746,000 feet for every working day in the year. And most of this timber is cut in the United States, although a few wood pulp loge are imported from Canada.

During 1905 the newspaper demand alone cosumed 900,000 tons of manufactured white poper. This was one-third of the output of all the paper mills in the country. To make it required an army of 15,000 men, who drew $9,000,000 in wages. The mills used raw meterial amountieg to 1,300,000 corda.

The present tariff on lumber causes this enormous drain to fell almost entirely upon the forests of the United States. It has been suggested that it would be a wise political and economic move to remove this lumber duty, and let the paper mills begin to cet into the almost limitless forests of Canada.

Incidentally the price of paper would drop some, and the peper trust would not have quite the monopoly on affairs which it has to-day.

Increased size of newspapers and mogazines is said by government experts to the introduction of the typesetting machine.

During the 25 years from 1880 to 1905 the number of newspapers and periodicals of all classes in the United States practically doubled. During that time 10,000 publications were added. During the last decade the number of morning newspapers increased 11 per cent, while the number of evening newspapers increased 31.3 per cent.

During the last 20 years the evening newspapers have increased more rapidly than morning newspapers. A hundred years ago there were 359 newspepers in the United States, having an aggregate circulation of 22,320,700 copies per annum.

GOVERNMENT TO SUPPRESS TRAFFIC IN GIRL SLAVES

A SYSTEMATIC effort is to be made by the bureau of immigration to put an end to what is popularly known as "the white slave traffic," which, it is asserted, has been conducted, especially in cities on the Atlantic seaboard.

On recommendation of Robert Watchorn, immigration commissioner at Ellis Island, New York, Miss Helen M. Bullis has been appointed an immigration inspector for the particular purpose of developing information regarding this traffic. Miss Bullis recently has been connected with the Travelers' Aid Society, and has done much work along philanthropic and sociological lines.

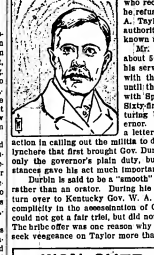
Commissioner Watchorn says that despite the scrutiny with which immigrants are examined as to their right to enter the United States many women of high English speaking races are being imported for immoral purposes. The method by which this is accomplished is so well devised that the victims of the importers nearly always avoid detection by reason of the thorough coaching they receive prior to their embarkation for this country.

Mr. Watchorn suggests that Miss Bullis is in position to furnish the department conclusive proof of the existence of this traffic. This would enable the immigration officials not only to deport those who have been brought unlawfully into the country, but also to punish those who are responsible for this sort of immigration.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

SEEKS POLE IN AIRSHIP

Walter Wellman, the widely known Washington newspaper correspondent and explorer, is the daring man who expects to surpass the wildest flights of Jules Verne's fancy by sailing to the north pole and back in an airship. He is one of the most talked of men in the country to-day.



Wellman is not the first to attempt the finding of the pole by the aerial route. Andree, the famous Swedish explorer, tried it with a huge gas bag. He was never heard from afterward. However, Mr. Wellman is not daunted by the failure of Andree's plan, but declares he will have the advantage of the dirigible balloon, an invention unheard of when Andree made his flight.

Mr. Wellman was born in Mentor, O., Nov. 2, 1858. He was educated in a Michigan country school. At the age of 14 he established a weekly newspaper at Sutton, Neb., and at the age of 21 he established the Cincinnati Evening Post. In 1893 he located the landing place of Columbus on Watling (San Salvador) island, and marked the spot with a monument. In 1894 he led an exploring party to the Arctic regions, reaching latitude 81 degrees, northeast of Spitzenbergen. In 1898-9 he led an expedition to Franz Josef Land, discovering many new islands and reaching latitude 82 degrees.

The pole is approximately 600 miles north of Spitzenbergen. Apparently a frozen sea covers the intervening area. Mr. Wellman has been planning for some time.

The balloon in which he hopes to reach the pole is the largest ever constructed, with the single exception of Count Zeppelin's. It is 184 feet long and 52 feet in diameter, with a cubic volume of 265,000 feet. The car is a framework of steel tubing, 110 feet long, the keel of the airship consisting of a steel tank of the same length and 18 inches in diameter. The tank contains 6,800 gallons of petrol, a quantity calculated to run the motor at a speed of 14 knots for 150 hours, giving a total radius of action of 2,500 miles, or more than double the distance from Spitzenbergen to the pole and back. The motor develope 70 horsepower and weighs 800 pounds. The steel car contains accommodation for ten men, 12 dogs, provisions and equipment.

REFUSED BIG BRIBE

Winfield T. Durbin, former governor of Indiana, who recently made the sensational statement that he refused a bribe of $93,000 to turn over William A. Taylor, Democratic refugee governor, to the authorities of that state, is one of the most widely known and respected man in the country.

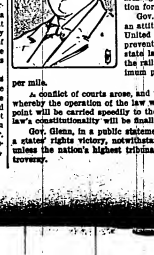
Mr. Durbin was born in Lawrenceburg, Ind., about 56 years ago. At the age of 15 he offered his services in defense of his country and served with the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Indiana until the close of the civil war. During the war with Spain he commanded the One Hundred and Sixty-first regiment. He was engaged in manufacturing business previous to his election as governor. He served two terms, 1901 to 1905. It was a letter of President Roosevelt's commending his action in calling out the militia to defend the Evansville jail against a mob of lynchers that first brought Gov. Durbin prominently before the nation. It was only the governor's plain duty, but Durbin's action in defending circumstances gave his act much importance.

Durbin is said to be a "smooth" politician and is known as a good "mixer," rather than an orator. During term of office he persistently refused to turn over to Kentucky Gov. W. A. Taylor of that state, who was accused of complicity in the assassination of Gov. Goebel. He was satisfied that Taylor could not get a fair trial, but left the decision to the executive at that time. The bribe offer was one reason why he was certain that the Kentuckians might seek vengeance on Taylor more than anything else.

WON OVER STANDARD OIL

Edwin W. Sims, district attorney of Chicago, who prosecuted the Standard Oil company in the suits which resulted in Judge K. M. Landis fining the company $29,000,000 for violations of the interstate commerce laws, spent his boyhood in Bay City, Mich., only going to Chicago, where he has been so successful, after his graduation from the University of Michigan in 1894.

Mr. Sims is the son of the Rev. Walter Sims and was born in Canada, where his father had a charge. When Edwin was five years old they moved to Detroit, going later to West Bay City, where Rev. Sims founded the West Side academy. Here it was that young Sims received his education from his father's hands, and also in the public schools.



While in school he took up newspaper work and finally landed a job on the old Bay City Post. He rapidly mounted and was city editor of that paper when he left to take up the study of law in the university.

He graduated in 1894, and at once went to Chicago.

Success smiled on him and he was admitted to the bar in record time. He became active in politics. He was elected president of the ward Republican club and secured the appointment as county attorney. He took the leadership of a branch of the Republican party in Cook county and was rewarded with the appointment as district attorney.

The agitation against the trusts gave him his opportunity, and the history he made in handling the Standard Oil cases against the greatest legal talent in the country has made him a national figure.

BOOMED FOR PRESIDENT

It has frequently been suggested that as the south furnishes the greater portion of the Democratic vote that the next candidate of that party for president should be a southerner.

Recent events have given Gov. Robert B. Glenn of North Carolina such prominence that many in his section have begun to boom him as the coming national standard-bearer of the Democracy, although the governor himself disclaims any ambition for that honor.

Gov. Glenn set himself in what appeared to be an attitude of opposition to federal authority, after United States Judge Pritchard had intervened to prevent the enforcement of an oppressive new state law requiring inter-conflectory penalties, the railroads of the Tarheel state to make a maximum passenger rate of not more than 2½ cents per mile.

A conflict of courts arose, and to remedy this a compromise was effected, whereby the operation of the law was postponed for a time, while the case in point will be carried speedily to the United States Supreme court, where the law's constitutionality will be finally determined.

Gov. Glenn, in a public statement, professed to regard this agreement as a states' rights victory, notwithstanding that there can be no such triumph unless the nation's highest tribunal decides in favor of his side of the controversy.

Around the Metropolis

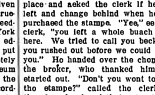
What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

MORE MONEY NEEDED TO FINISH BRANCH LIBRARIES

NEW YORK.—New York finds the magnificent gift of $5,200,000 made by Andrew Carnegie to build 78 branch libraries in this city is far from being enough. At the time the gift was made in 1901, it was supposed that number of branches would be ample to provide the reading public for many years. Only thirty-nine of these branches have been completed and the commission in charge of the work is already considering the advisability of a proposal for the erection of seventy-two more, making the total number of branches 100 instead of 78.

The figures give some idea of the growth of the great metropolis in the past six years. By the end of next year 56 of the new Carnegie branch buildings will be ready for use. About the same time the funds provided by Mr. Carnegie will be nearing exhaustion. The sum of $5,200,000 was given by Mr. Carnegie after the library trustees had figured what would be needed to equip every section of New York with a branch library. But the advance in building materials has put the figures of the estimate completely to the bed. Certain it is that the sum will come far short of finishing the 78 buildings first proposed and according to the revised estimates twenty-two more will be needed.

Where the money is to come from has not yet been determined, but New York feels certain Mr. Carnegie will not allow the work to ing for want of funds. The additional twenty-two buildings proposed will not be needed for some years yet and in the meantime the completion of the first 78 will be pushed forward and those remaining to be located and erected will be placed where they will accomodate the largest percentage of the population. A year from now the building commission expects to be able to furnish Mr. Carnegie with a complete report, showing just what has been done and what is to be done. The great philanthropist is expected to take the hint and the commission feels little doubt that a few more millions will be made available immediately if they are needed.

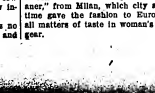


MENTAL STRAIN CAUSE OF SOME ECCENTRIC DOINGS

BROKERS and bankers of Wall street do some eccentric things sometimes when laboring under a mental strain as the result of the market. Several bankers and brokers were swapping "change" at a prominent hotel the other night, and a story was told of a wealthy speculator of Wall street who is notoriously stingy. When he smokes, which is seldom, he restricts himself to a black five-cent cigar. During a recent slump in the market this financier walked into the Astor house cigar store, pulled a handful of 50-cent cigars from a box lying on the counter, twisted them into pieces and threw them on the floor. When the cigar dealer stated that the chergo would be $2.50 he stood aghast with horror and denied all knowledge of the affair. It was with difficulty that he was convinced he had crushed five high-priced Havenos for his lapse into absent mindedness.

Then it was told of a Wall street broker who went into a restaurant, ate a hurried meal and walked up to the cashier's counter to pay his check. He went through his pockets one by one, but to his astonishment failed to find any money. He was forced to tell the cashier, who was a stranger, that the price of the meal would have to be charged to him. The cashier, who wee a good fellow, laughed and said, "All right, but you might leave the napkin behind." He left the restaurant wondering what could have become of his money, as he was sure that he had some change in his clothes when he left the office. Mentally he went back over his course and remembered that he had stopped at a stationery stors to buy some stamps. He sought out the place and asked the clerk if he had left and change behind when he had purchased the stamps. "Yes," said the clerk, "you left a whole bunch of it here. We tried to call you back, but you rushed out before we could reach you." He handed over the change to the broker, who thanked him and started out. "Don't you want to take your stamps?" called the clerk. It therefore developed that not only had he gone out without change but without the stamps he had paid for.

THEATRE FOR UPLIFT OF AMERICAN DRAMA PLANNED



ART circles are interested in the announcement of the plans of the building of the New theater, which is to be erected as a model and center for the development and production of the American drama, and which is to cost $1,700,000.

Those interested in the stimulation of dramotic art in this country have endorsed the New theater. The plans, which have just been filed, show that theater and school will occupy the block on Central Park West between Sixty-second and Sixty-third streets. The theater will have a great colonnade front facing Central park. There will be five entrances opening upon a vestibule, with two grand staircases leading to a second-story foyer, as in the Continental opera house.

The structure will be of light-colored decorative stone of Italian renaissance design and will be seven stories high in its main part, with an 11-story extension in the rear. There will be two galleries in addition to the parquet and, exclusive of the boxes, the auditorium will have a seating capacity of 2,500.

HUNS IN AMERICA SEND MILLIONS HOME YEARLY

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the establishment in this city of the Hungarian-American bank, which purposes to provide for, and develop financial and commercial relations between this country and Hungary.

The new institution is capitalized at $400,000. Half the capital, $200,000, was subscribed by the Central Credit Bank of Hungary. The remaining $200,000 of the capital stock has been taken up by the local interests associated chiefly with banking enterprises.

Ludwig Gyenes, director general of the Central Credit bank of Budapest, has been in New York for the last few weeks in the interests of the new institution.

There are in the United States no fewer than 2,600,000 Hungarians, and they send back to their friends and relatives in Hungary more than $50,000,000 every year, or about $20 a year each. The system of transmitting this vast sum is disorganized. The new bank aims to put this entire business upon a secure basis.

It will reach the Hungarians in this country, in New York, New Haven, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and other cities, through local agents, and it will have, furthermore, on the other side, banking connection with firms in Germany, Austria, Italy and France.

"Milliner" is a corruption of "Milaner," from Milan, which city at one time gave the fashion to Europe in all matters of taste in women's headgear.

CHARLES G. BURTON NEW CHIEF OF G. A. R.

MISSOURI MAN ELECTED OVER THREE COMPETITORS AT SARATOGA.

Other Officers Chosen—Next Year's Encampment to Be Held in Toledo —Parade Proves Fatal to Two of the Veterans.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 12.—Charles G. Burton, of Nevada, Mo., a former member of congress, was elected Thursday commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, which is holding its forty-first annual encampment here.

The new commander-in-chief was opposed by three candidates, Gen. John T. Wilder, of Knoxville, Tenn.; Charles Burrows, of Rutherford, N. J., and Patrick H. Coney, of Topeka, Kan. His plurality was more than 300.

Other officers elected by the encampment were as follows: Lewis C. Griffith, Troy, N. Y., senior vice commander; William M. Scott, Atlanta, Ga., junior vice commander; Dr. Leander Trexyhill, Baltimore, Md., surgeon general; Bishop Samuel Fallows, Chicago, chaplain-in-chief.

Toledo, O., was selected as the place of meeting for the next encampment. The date will be fixed by the national council of administration.

Busy Day for the Veterans.

The greater part of the day's session was devoted to the routine of the business. In the morning the report of the officers and the annual address of Commander-in-Chief Brown was presented; in the afternoon the reports of two committees were resolved and adopted. This included the resolutions of the committee on pension, which indorsed an effort to increase the pensions of veterans' widows to $12 per month, and that of the committee on the commander-in-chief's address, which approved all of his recommendations.

Annual Campfire.

At the sound of a bugle blown by Benjamin F. Simonds, of Troy, N. Y., who sounded the alarm when the firearms was first sighted at Newport News, the annual encampment campfire was called to order Thursday evening. The speakers included Gen. Louis Wagner, of Philadelphia, past commander-in-chief; Gen. Charles Black, of Washington, D. C., past commander-in-chief, and Bishop Samuel Fallows, of Chicago, the newly elected chaplain-in-chief.

The Woman's Relief Corps elected Mrs. Kate E. Jones, of Chicago, to the national president. The ladies of the G. A. R. elected as their national presiding officer, Mrs. Clara L. Sawyer, of South Portland, Me.

As a result of the parade Wednesday two veterans died Thursday. Assign S. Bruce, past commander of John E. Griswold post, of Troy, N. Y., was stricken on Broadway, dying shortly after, of heart disease caused by exposure and over-exertion. Eli S. Robinson, of Post No. 124, New York city, also was overcome and died.

March in Rainstorm.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 13.—The Grand Army of the Republic held its parade Wednesday—its forty-first—in memory of the days of war. Ten thousand veterans, the remnant of the once victorious army whose scores of thousands passed in review at the national capital when the war was over, braved a driving storm to march again beneath their battle flags.

Umbrellaful of the stress of storm, as in the days of "sixty-one," when youth and vigor and love of the flag knew no physical bounds, those that were left passed in review over a massed mile through village streets—as Saratoga suited to their gathering years. Thousands of spectators, with heads uncovered, watched the faltering lines bearing the old banners with unsteady hands.

Opening of Encampment.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 11.—With the formal welcome of Gov. Charles E. Hughes, of New York state, the forty-first national Grand Army of the Republic encampment was opened in the convention hall Tuesday evening. Ten thousand veterans, members of the Woman's Relief Corps, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic and other patriotic organizations filled the hall to overflowing.

Gov. Hughes and the Grand Army officers were given an ovation. Many speakers of note in the Grand Army made addresses, including Commander-in-Chief Robert Bruce Brown, of Zanesville, O.; James Tanner, of Washington, former commander-in-chief of the G. A. R.; Rev. John Ireland, chaplain-in-chief of the organization, and United States Senator Macomber, of South Dakota.

Jubilee Offering Presented.

Mrs. Carrie Sparklin, of St. Louis, national president of the Women's Relief Corps, presented to the Grand Army the silver jubilee offering, which was raised by the relief corps in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization. The gift was received by Commander Brown.

Baron Arrested for Forgery.

Denver, Col., Sept. 13.—Baron F. von Wiemar has been arrested at the Albany hotel, charged with forgery. The affair has created a sensation in the exclusive circles in which the baron has moved in Denver, and several friends have visited him in the city jail and told him that they would stand by him. The baron has confessed the forgery.

ORIENTALS PLANNED STRIKE

HINDUS REFUSED TO JOIN WITH JAPANESE AND CHINESE.

Vancouver Rioting Has Ceased But Steamer Loaded with Asiatics Is Warned Not to Land Them.

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 11.—A combined Chinese and Japanese organization of Vancouver has made overtures to the Hindus to join them in an industrial strike all along the British Columbian coast. The Hindus refused.

Late Monday night the police made a seizure of 59 Winchester rifles, together with thousands of rounds of ammunition, which had been purchased in the Westminster by Chinese. The shipment was consigned to Sam Kee, a wealthy Chinese merchant of Vancouver and a large property owner, whose buildings were damaged by Saturday night's mob.

K. Morikwa, Japanese consul, in great excitement went to Mayor Bethune Tuesday morning and demanded that he have the militia called out to protect his countrymen. He said an attempt was being made to burn every Japanese house in Vancouver, and that cotton waste saturated with oil had been found under the door of the Japanese Methodist mission church.

Mayor Bethune tried to reassure the consul, telling him that the authorities had the situation well in hand. Finally, to please the consul, the mayor agreed to intercept Col. Holmes, commanding the militia of this district, asking that the militia be ordered to hold themselves in readiness.

Tokio, Sept. 11.—The foreign office has received a dispatch from the Japanese consul general at Ottawa saying that the Canadian government will express regret for the occurrence at Vancouver and take steps to prevent further trouble. An official of the foreign office said: "We have the utmost confidence in the Canadian government, as we also have in that of America. Commissioner Ishii's dispatch says that the disturbance will soon be quelled, and that there is no reason to expect its repetition."

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 13.—At the arrival of the steamship Monteagle with a large number of Japanese, Chinese, and Hindoos on board, the captain was warned by the authorities that the authorities would not guarantee the safety of the immigrants. In the face of this warning the Monteagle steamed away for Victoria.

WILL CLOSE COPPER MINES.

Amalgamated Soon Will Shut Down at Butte, Mont.

New York, Sept. 12.—A crisis in the copper situation, due to a deadlock between the producer and the consumer, has resulted in a tremendous over-production of the metal, and the Amalgamated Copper company, the largest producer of copper in this country, will soon shut down its mines in and about Butte, Mont.

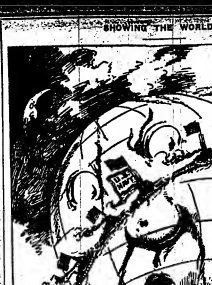
It is understood that suspension of operations there was made known Thursday by an interest closely identified with the company. Amalgamated stock fell over four points on the stock exchange when the news became known. Other stocks in the Amalgamated at the Butte mines will throw 10,000 men out of work. The Amalgamated has demanded assurance of its ability to obtaining an adequate supply of fuel at Butta and this is said to be a contributing cause for the shut down.

ADMITS GOODS WERE SMUGGLED.

Miss Olson, of Chicago, Confesses to Officials at Port Huron.

Port Huron, Mich., Sept. 12.—When arraigned Wednesday before United States Commissioner Harris on the charge of smuggling, Miss Anna Olson, of Chicago, who was detained by customs officers here Monday, together with Mrs. Lucy Rapp and Mrs. A. Hulbert, also of Chicago, admitted that the contents of the three canvas trunks which the party had were worth $5,000, were smuggled goods.

Miss Olson declared that the other two women had no part or interest in the goods, but were only helping her with the use of their trunks. She said she is in the ladies' furnishing goods business in Chicago and later Mrs. Hulbert and Mrs. Rapp also admitted that they are in the same business. They have been released on their personal recognizance.



HE LACKED COURAGE TO DIE.

New Orleans Defaulter Found Standing on River's Bank.

New Orleans, Sept. 12.—Charles E. Letten, chief clerk in the office of the First district court tax collector here, who disappeared several days ago, leaving a shortage of over $100,000, was discovered Thursday afternoon standing on the bank of the Mississippi trying to summon up courage enough to jump in the water and commit suicide. He said he had started toward the water several times, but each time his courage had failed him. He made a full confession.

BELOIT BANKER FATALLY INJURED.

Janesville, Wis., Sept. 12.—Walter M. Britton, president of a bank at Beloit, was probably fatally injured Wednesday and his wife and Mrs. Fred W. Strong were seriously injured when their touring car fell over a 35-foot embankment. Mr. Strong, also a bank president, escaped by jumping.

NEGRO TROOPS FOR NEW YORK STATE

GEN OLIVER ORDERS THE 24TH REGIMENT FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

May Arouse Protests—Other Communities Did Not Want the Colored Soldiers—Army Is Suffering Seriously for Lack of Officers.

Washington, Sept. 12.—Gen. Oliver, acting secretary of war, Thursday issued an order that will probably cause a commotion in New York, his home state. It provides for the relief of a number of regimenta that have been serving in the Philippines for more than the full allotted term of two years, and the point of interest is found in the fact that among the returning organizations is a negro regiment—the Twenty-fourth infantry.

With the dispatch to the Philippines of the Twenty-fifth infantry recently, the United States was left without negro troops except a few short term garrisons employed in the states at the West Point Military academy.

To Be Stationed in New York.

When the proposition was made about two months ago to return the negro troops, several strong protests were made to the department by congressmen and other prominent persons representing communities where it was reported these troops were to be posted. Gen. Oliver has settled the matter by ordering these soldiers into their own state.

As a matter of fact, on February 15th next, according to the terms of company sold down to $60.25, which company now stood in the Philippines is 61 points under the high record price of last year. The reason for the suspension at the Butte mines will throw 10,000 men out of work. The Amalgamated has demanded assurance of its ability to obtaining an adequate supply of fuel at Butta and this is said to be a contributing cause for the shut down.

More Officers Needed.

Six hundred officers of the army are now serving on detached service according to statements made at the war department. Their loss is seriously felt in their regular commands. With the result that a number of the army organizations are inadequately officered. An earnest effort is to be made by the military authorities to have congress remedy this condition of affairs by providing more officers, and Gen. Bell, the chief of staff, will soon tak np the matter with a view to recommending legislation for the purpose.

The war department Thursday directed the return to duty as an assistant military aide to the president of Capt. Frank McCoy. Third cavalry, who has been spending most of the summer in Yellowstone park with his troop. This means that there are not likely to be any more changes in the president's family of military and naval aides at present.

NO PAROLE FOR STENSLAND.

Chicago Bank Wrecker Must Serve Out His Full Term.

Joliet, Ill., Sept. 14.—Paul O. Stensland, former president of the collapsed Milwaukee Avenue State bank of Chicago, must serve out his full term in the Joliet penitentiary.

This was decided upon her Friday by the state board of pardons, which refused to grant the plea to release Stensland from the penalty of his conviction on the charge of forgery. Stensland will leave the prison after eight years and three months—if he maintains constant good behavior. Without the deductions for good behavior the maximum penalty is 14 years.

Physicians Indicted as Trust.

Dubuque, Ia., Sept. 14.—The grand jury of Bremer county Friday returned indictments against 14 physicians for violation of the state anti-trust law, the medical society having raised fees some time ago.

MAKES RECORD DAY'S RUN

LUSITANIA'S BEST REPORTED AS BEING 593 MILES.

Giant Cunarder Also Makes Quickest Trip But Doesn't Equal Average Speed of German Ships.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 13.—A wireless message stated that the Lusitania was 100 miles from the Nantucket lightship at nine o'clock Thursday night. She was expected to pass the lightship about one a. m. The weather was clear.

Halifax, N. S., Sept. 13.—The Marconi wireless station at Cape Sable was in touch with the Cunard liner Lusitania at six o'clock Thursday evening, Atlantic standard time. The Lusitania's position was reckoned at that hour to be 360 miles from New York. The Lucania was apparently in communication with the big turbine as the latter reported the Lucania 360 miles astern.

The average speed of the Lusitania throughout the voyage was announced at 23.56 knots per hour. The highest day's run was 593 miles, which, if also claimed on board the Lusitania, established a new world's record run for one day. Whether the word miles is used in this semi-official statement in a nautical sense is not fairly clear, but presumably this must be the case in order to reconcile the report with one sent out at Sable Island Thursday morning that the Lusitania was averaging 670 miles per day.

In the letter instance land miles were unmistakably implied, and this figure is equivalent to approximately 580 knots, or nautical miles.

TAFT SAILS FOR ORIENT.

Begins His Trip Across the Pacific in Good Spirits.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 12.—William H. Taft sailed at one o'clock Thursday in the steamship Minnesota. The last public appearance of the secretary of war was in a speech he made at the meeting in the morning of the State Medical association. He was in fine spirits and chatted and laughed in an animated way with the members of his party aboard the Minnesota, while a great crowd looked on from the docks and waved the handkerchiefs and hats and good wishes to the Oblean.

Accompanying Secretary Taft are prose representatives, his wife and son Charlie, his private secretary, Fred W. Carpenter, and Gen. Clarence Edwards, chief of the bureau of insular affairs. On the Minnesota also are Judge Thomas Burke and W. P. Backus, of this city, special commissioners to the orient for the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition; Thomas J. Pence, ambassador of the United States to Japan, and Peter Augustus Jay, first secretary of the ambassy.

WELLMAN STARTS; IS DRIVEN BACK

ARCTIC EXPLORER'S AIRSHIP AMERICA LANDS ON A GLACIER.

Storm Is Encountered.— Machinery Worked Well, But Gale Was Too Strong—Attempt to Reach Pole Abandoned for Year.

Tromsoe, Norway, Sept. 14.—Walter Wellman and his party, composing the Wellmen-Chicago Record-Herald polar axpedition, arrived here Thursday evening on the steamer Fridtjof from Spitzbergen.

Mr. Wellmen says the airship America left her shed September 2 and made an ascent in bad weather, but she proved so strong and behaved so well that a start north was immediately made. The airship, however, encountered a storm, was driven back and landed on top of a glacier. Everything was saved.

Airship Sents Steamer.

When the airship left the shed it was anchored to a steamer, the Express, which bolped to tow it to Virgo Bay Island, two miles northward to Camp Wellmen. Roisenberg and Vandman occupied the car. The motor was started to work splendidly and, when it was started, drove the America ahead of the steamer. It was found that the airship answered her helm well.

Beaten Back Over Mainland.

Off Vogel Bay Island the America was caught from her anchor ropes, but an increasing gale and a driving snowstorm beat her backward over the mainland of Spitzbergen. Seeing the hopelessness of attempting to battle with the rain, the valves were opened and the balloon quickly descended on a glacier.

The occupants of the car secured the balloon. A rescue party from the steamer reached the glacier an hour and a half later and had considerable difficulty in saving the airship. The balloon portion had to be cut in two and the car was taken to pieces in order to enable the rescuers to transport it over the ice hills and fissures to the sea. After two days' work this was successfully accomplished and on the evening of September 4 the members of the expedition got back to Virgo Island, whence they sailed for Tromsoe September 8. Mejl. Hersey is remaining in a fishing boat.

Trondhjem, Norway, Sept. 14.—Walter Wellman on arriving at Tromsoe announced that he had definitely abandoned for this year, after a disastrous trial of his airship, the proposed attempt to reach the north pole.

The airship ascent September 2 was in a strong northwesterly wind, which drove her southward over the land. It was found necessary to cut the balloon edrift from the other parts of the airship, but it was recovered after two days' search.

Mr. Wellmen says he will make another attempt, with a new airship, in 1908.

Cables Wife He Started.

Canton, O., Sept. 14.—Miss Walter Wellman, who is at the home of her sister, Mrs. George Clerk, in this city, received this cablegram Friday:

"Started. Encountered storm. Everything saved. Ship a success. Wellman."

Mrs. Wellman is inclined to believe from the tone of the cablegram the expedition is looking was on pending the but husband has no doubt of the ultimate success of the expedition.

STUDENTS BEATEN BY TOUGHS.

Purdue University Boys Suffer at Hands of City Hoodlums.

Lafayetta, Ind., Sept. 14.—In a riot between Purdue university students and city toughs here Friday, during which scores were seriously injured and 15 others were badly beaten.

Students have returned to the university from a deace in this city when they were attacked by a score of toughs. They were being driven to the car when one of the students ran to West Lafayetta and gave the alarm. A large crowd of students and citizens responded and in the fight that followed the six students were found unconscious. After a hot fight, during which the students and toughs alike were badly beaten, five of the latter were arrested. The most seriously injured are Fred Miller and M. J. McChesney, of Charleston, W. Va., students.

WILL CLOSE MINES ON SUNDAY.

General Shut Down by Amalgamated Copper Denied at Butte.

Butte, Mont., Sept. 14.—The mines of the Amalgamated Copper company will not be closed because of the glut of copper on the market, General Superintendent John Gillis, in a statement in the Inter-Mountain, says that while work will be suspended on the Bandaya hereafter, there will be no general close down.

Developments and exploitation will be stopped for the present, however and production curtailed about 15 per cent, 5,000,000 pounds per month. It is now about 20,000,000 pounds per month.

Break in Operators' Strike.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 14.—There was a decisive break in the local telegraphers' strike Friday when eight former striking operators, including the vice president of the local telegraphers' union, returned to work with the Postal Telegraph & Cable company.

State Fair.

Hamline—The 1907 Minnesota state fair closed after a most remarkable record. It was the best and biggest fair ever held in the country, the only drawback being the weather, which was the worst of the season in some respects. There were only two days of the six which were at all favorable, and the way the people turned out in bad weather was the best possible evidence of the merit of the exhibition and the permanence it has attained. It was the supreme test of the loyalty of Minnesotans and the excellence of the fair, and neither were found wanting.

State Employment Agency.

Duluth—Manager Louis Levy's report of the work of the three free employment bureaus of the state for the month of August, oxhibits a sustained demand for labor of the commoner sorts.

The Duluth office still leads in the item of male help, there having been 1,172 applications for work under that head, all of which were filled. But as regards female help the Duluth office is behind the others. Only 145 females applied for work, and 87 obtained it.

St. Paul makes the poorest showing on the whole. Of males, 358 applied for work and all were accommodated, while of females 154 asked for places and 117 got them.

At the Minneapolis office, 815 males and 620 females applied for work, and 797 males and 621 females found what they sought. Looking at the other side applications for male help were 861, of which 84 went begging, while applications for female help were 711, of which 90 remained unfilled, showing that work is considerably easier to get than help.

A Handy Device.

Madelia—Mrs. Sorah E. Wilson, living northwest of town, has a novel scheme which she uses in connection with the rural free delivery passing by her house, and of which she is a patron. Her house is situated about a quarter of a mile back from the highway traveled by the rural carrier. There is some heavy native timber between the house and the mail box on the route, making it impossible to see the carrier as he passes.

One of Mrs. Wilson's sons has fastened in the mail box an electric doorbell, to which he has attached a wire running to the house. When the carrier arrives at the box and places the daily paper and other mail therein he pushes the door bell, which sets a dial in the house, thereby notifying the occupants that he has arrived at and passed the box.

Durum Wheat.

Minneapolis—Durum wheat has a weight test for the first time since its appearance on the market, as the result of the deliberations of the state grain appeal board. Another innovation made at this meeting was the establishment of a moisture test for corn.

Hereafter, to grade No. 1 durum will have to weigh sixty pounds to the bushel; to grade No. 2, it must weigh fifty-eight pounds to the bushel, and to grade No. 3, fifty-five pounds to the bushel. This ruling is expected to do away with the frequent complaints and appeals over durum grades.

BRIEF NOTES.

St. Paul—The Master Car and Locomotive Painters' Association begins its annual convention.

Washington—John W. Moda is appointed postmaster at Cannonsmal, Minn. to succeed Harry English, resigned.

Winona—George Allen, alias F. Roberts, and George Shepard, alias James Carnay, are in the city prison here charged with having burglarized the residence of John Diatze.

St. Paul—While the state fair has been the chief attraction during the past week, the new capitol has not been slighted by the out-of-town visitors. It is estimated that about 40,000 people visited the capitol during the week, and the capitol employes heaved a deep sigh of relief when the doors were closed last night.

Lyle—That terrific electric storm did considerable damage in this neighborhood. The electric lights were knocked out and the telephone system damaged.

Moorhead—County Attorney Dreland announces that he will take steps to have Antonio Sappia returned from Chicago to the city to answer to the charge of shooting and stabbing two Italians at Dilworth.

Lyle—Chauncy Gordon got his hand caught in the pulley on a shaft, crushing his wrist. He was taken to Mason City for treatment.

Mine Assessments.

St. Paul—The state tax commission conferred with the mine owners and their representatives on the valuation to be placed on mines for the purposes of taxation. In order to secure a basis for the consideration of the valuation to be placed on each mine and the opinions of the mine owners on these valuations the commission had prepared a statement covering each mine. These figures would bring the total valuation up to about $200,000,000, but the figures were merely tentative and are liable to be very materially changed by the commission.

Robbed of Gold.

Dendwood—By an organized system of robbery Ervin M. Hilton, a trusted employe, and others for whom the officers now are looking, it is charged, have succeeded in stealing an unknown sum from the Golden Reward Mining Company, of which E. H. Harriman, the railroad magnate, is a large owner. Hilton is under arrest. When confronted with evidence, it is alleged, he broke down and confessed, implicating others in his operations.

Hilton was employed in the precipitation room of the Golden Reward.

State Institution.

St. Paul—The state institutions last month turned to the treasury $22,928.01, according to report. The receipts from various institutions were as follows: Asylum, $22,775; Hastings asylum; $48.18; Fergus Falls hospital, $450.36; Rochester hospital, $624.29; St. Peter hospital, $545.79; Faribault school for blind, $201.66; Faribault school for deaf, $297.54; Faribault school for feeble-minded, $6.48l.26; Owatonna state public school, $119.80; Red Wing training school $687.81; State prison, penitentiary, $2,020.85; Stillwater prison, $11,731.62.

BRIEF NOTES.

St. Paul—The new Mechanic Arts high school may be erected at Robert street and Central avenue.

Lake Crystal—The infant child of H. Rowlands was badly scalded about the head and shoulders by the overturning of a pot of boiling coffee. The child was playing on the floor near the stove, when the pot was accidentally brushed from the stove.

St. Paul—Having lain on the right-of-way along the Omaha tracks near Post Office all night, Henry Meyer, a German farm hand, thirty-five years old, was picked up in a serious condition and taken to the city hospital in the Margaret street station patrol.

Minneapolis.—"A Fighting Chance" a new sensational play which will have a presentation at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, the week of September 22 is from the pen of the well known author, Mr. Theodore Kremer and is said to be one of his best.

St. Paul—Gov. Johnson honored a requisition of Gov. Deneen of Illinois for the return of Albert H. Heyman, second corner player in the lanes band, which was at the Auditorium last week, who is wanted by the officials of that state to answer to a charge of wife desertion.

Lake Crystal—The eleven-year-old daughter of Lars Borensen will lose the sight of an eye through the effects of a shot-gun wound by a runaway son of Hans Anderson while the children were at play. The eyeball will be saved, but the child will be blind in the injured optic.

St. Cloud—Edgar Richer of Larimore, N. D., formerly of Royalton, aged seventeen years, an escaped inmate of the training school at Red Wing, who recently was reaptured at Willmar, while being taken back to the institution today, jumped from the Winnipeg flyer, which was moving at twenty miles an hour, and succeeded in making his escape.

St. Cloud—After a trial extending over several years, the state reformatory officials have concluded that bloodhounds are of assistance in few cases, in the recapture of escaped criminals.

St. Paul—Attorney General R. T. Young has refused to take action to bring qno warranto proceedings to prevent the holding of the special charter election in Minneapolis on Sept. 17.

Winona—Kaiser Badmoski was almost instantly killed in the village of Lamoke.

New in Natural History.

Not all English children are well posted on the stock. The following "howlers" are from essays exhibited at a recent show: "The young horses have long legs, so that it might keep up to its mother when wild lions like the lion and tiger are after them to devour them." "The fowl," declares still another, "when alive is used for cock-fighting and when dead for its beautiful feathers." "The pig gets its wool coat off in summer. Then we get the wool of it. The pig is regarded as a bad creature."

MEDICAL FAILURES.

An Authority Says Three-Fourths of Graduates Are Unfitted to Practice.

That 3,000 out of the 4,000 graduates turned out by the Medical Colleges each year are wholly unfitted to practice medicine and are menaces to the communities in which they settle is the statement by Dr. Chester Mayer, of the State Board of Medical Examiners of Kentucky at a meeting of the American Medical Association's Committee on Medical Education, held in Chicago last long ago. Dr. Mayer said that only 25 to 28 per cent of the graduates are qualified. Fifty-eight per cent of the graduates examined in 28 states were refused licenses. With few exceptions these failures took a second examination in a few weeks and only 50 per cent of these passed.

"This does not mean that deficiencies in their training were corrected in those few weeks," Dr. Mayer said. "It probably shows that experience showed them what the test would probably be and they 'crammed' for the examination. Dr. W. T. Gott, Secretary of the Indiana Board said: "The majority of our schools now teach their students how to pass examinations, not how to be good physicians."

At the session of the American Medical Association held in Atlantic City in June, Dr. M. Greenwood Brush, a professor in the Medico Chirurgical College in Philadelphia said: "Many doctors turned out of the Medical Schools are so ignorant in matters pertaining to pharmacy that they know nothing about the properties of the drugs they prescribe for their patients!" Dr. Henry Beats, Jr., President of the Pennsylvania State Board of Medical Examiners, after scrutinizing the papers of a class of candidates for licensure said: "About one quarter of the papers show a degree of illiteracy that renders the candidates for licensure incapable of understanding medicine."

A great many more physicians and chemists might be quoted in support of the astounding charge that 3,000 incompetents are being dumped onto an unsuspecting public each year. What the damage done amounts to can never be estimated for these incompetents enjoy the privilege of diagnosing, prescribing or dispensing drugs regarding the properties of which they know nothing and then of signing death certificates that are not passed upon by anyone unless the coroner is called in. Probably the list is not a grave yard from one and of the country to the other that does not contain the buried evidences of the mistakes or criminal carelessness of incompetent physicians.

During the last year there have been perhaps, half a dozan known cases where surgeons, after performing operations have sewed up the incisions without first removing the gauze sponges used to absorb the blood, and in some cases forceps and even surgeon's scissors have been left in the wound. How many of these cases there have been, where the patient died, there is no means of knowing and comparatively few of the cases where the discovery was made in time to save life become generally public. Reports from Sanitariums for the treatment of the Drug Habit show that members of the medical profession are more often treated in these institutions than members of any other profession, and that a majority of the patients, excluding the physicians themselves, can trace their downfall directly to a physician physician.

How many criminal operations are performed by physicians is also a matter of conjecture. Operations of this class are, unfortunately, very frequent in large cities. Some physicians and licensed physicians, many of them of supposed respectability, make an exclusive practice of criminal medical and surgical treatment. Dr. Henry G. W. Rheinhart, Coroner's physician of Chicago, estimates the number of criminal operations, annually, in Chicago along at 28,000. How many resulted fatally are unknown, as when death results, the real cause is disguised in the death certificate, which the physician signs, and that is no one but himself and a clerk sees.

Probably not one case of malpractice in 1,000 ever reaches the courts of a law suit but in the last year approximately 150 cases wherein the plaintiff has alleged malpractice have been reported in the newspapers, and owing to the social prominence and the favored position of many physicians not more than half the new suits stated, probably, result in any newspaper publicity, but it would probably not be an exaggeration to state that the total cases of malpractice, not involving criminal operations or criminal medical practice, would amount to 150,000 or more than one case to each physician in the country. This estimate is, of course, more or less conjecture. Untimely deaths and permanent disabilities are frequent, and occur within the knowledge of almost every one, when life could have been saved, or health restored had the physician been skilful, careful and competent.

THE KILLERS.

It happened that once a man ran past Socrates armed with an ax. He was in pursuit of another who was running from him at full speed.

"Stop him! Stop him!" he cried.

Plato's master did not move.

"What!" cried the man with the ax; "couldst thou not have barred his way? He is an assassin!"

"An assassin! What meanest thou?" "Play not the idiot! An assassin is a man who kills."

"A tailor, then?"

"Old fool! A man who kills another man!"

"To be sure! A soldier!"

"Dolt! A man who kills another man in times of peace."

"I see—the executioner."

"Thou ass! A man who kills another in his home."

"Exactly—a physician."

AN ELEPHANT ROUNDUP

OFTEN OCCURS AT NIGHT AND IS A WEIRD SPECTACLE.

Herds of the Big Animals Driven into a Corral and Coaxed into Docility Later—Show Elephants of India.

London.—The elephant in India must work when caught. That does not necessarily mean an unpleasant time for him. He may heal cannon over Himalayan passes or he may take part in tiger hunts in the jungle. He may haul logs in the teek forests of Burmah, or bast of all he may be dressed in gilded rugs and share the glory and sports of some native prince.

Whatever they do, all the elephants coms from tha sama source—the jungles of central and Southern India, where thousands of them roam wild under a protection of the government. Periodically, when a shortage of elephants is felt, the forest service department organizes a roundup of wild elephants.

For weeks shikaris, or hunters, go scouting through the forest to discover where elephants are most plentiful. There is built a stockade of rough bown tree trunks, hutted on the outside with wells of earth. Its entrance, which is narrow, bea a kind of funnel built owey from it, also of tree trunks.

The roundup itself is often done at night. You can imagine no more weird spectacla than the Indian forest lit up by the torches of the hunters, who, shouting and yelling, drive tho screaming and trumpeting elephants into the stockade through the funnal. Very often there are a thousand elephants in the hunch, and perhaps four or five times that number of heaters and shikaris.

The elephants ern left alone in the stockade for a day or so until they calm down a bit from their excitement and terror. The great food for the lot is grass, and the elephants, and gradually a few expert tamers mounted on tame tuskers ventura in to make friends with the captives. One by ons the wild elephants are roped to two tame colleagues and then taken out. Should a wild elephant show fight he is promptly rebuked by his guardians in a way that admits of no further dispute. They take him for walks, lead him down to the river to drink and bathe, and gradually he reconciles himsalf to his fate.

If he be e very wild fellow he is eagerly bought up by one of the ruling maharajehs of India as a fighting elephant. For in the native states not wholly belonging to Great Britain fierce combats between elephants are given by the princes as entertainments in honor of distinguished guests; also fights between tigers and elephants.

The largest of all the elephants and the most intelligent are chosen by the government and the native princes for the state studs. Elephants of state have a very easy life of it. They do little or no work and come forth only on state occasions, bearing lofty towers of silver or gilded wood from which depend superb brocades and great draperies of cloth of gold blazing with precious stones.

In many cases, too, the ends of the animal's tusks are fitted with great bosses of pure gold, and his massive forehead is adorned with golden plates stuck full of steel spikes.

Aloft in the silver tower will sit a prince such as tha Nizom of Hyderbald, whose family pedigree may be traced back for 5,000 years. Before him on either side of the elephant walk great nobles proclaiming his might and majesty, while behind come picturesqua cavalry and spearman, more ornamantal than useful, and lost of all may come batteries of gold and silver cannon drawn by teams of elephants, six or eight to each battery.

WINS HIS THIRD FORTUNE.

Former Senator Stewart, of Nevada, Has $250,000 on 80th Birthday.

Carson City, Nev.—To succeed at the age of nearly fourscore in making a third fortune is rather a strenuous undertaking, yet that is what former United States Senator William M. Stewart, once known as "The Silver King" of Nevada, has done.

Busy with plans for developing his mining and other properties, Senator

WILLIAM M. STEWART.

(Ex-Senator Who, at the Age of 80, Has Made His Third Fortune.)

Stewart passed his eightieth birthdny. He received several messages of congratulation from some of his former associates, men whom be bas but seldom seen in recent years, but who still remember the lavish hospitality which the Nevada senator wes wont to dispense.

Senator Stewart was born in New York and went to Yelo to study law. When the cry of "Gold in California!" was raised, in '49, he came west and grew so opulent that he became known as "the Silver King"; but he plunged recklessly into extravagance and at the end of 12 years found himself poor. Again he came to the west for a fortune and dug it out of the earth in the form of precious ore.

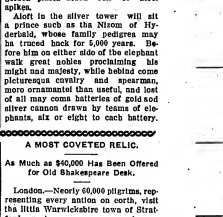
In 1887 he was again elected to the United States Senate. During his absentation in a few years reduced him once more to the lower financial level.

Then he returned to Nevada the last time it was known among his friends that he was almost "down and out" financially. Returning to work with his old-time courage, and things began to come his way again. He owns several lucky mines, and during a year elapsed had made a good start toward retrieving his fortunes. He is now well at least a quarter of a million, and possibly much more.

Keynote of Disposition.

When the weather is rainy or foggy it is only natural that children should become tirsos. Then devote time to their amusement, forsake the work for the time being, remembering there will be lots of work when they have passed their babyhood, and keeping children happy in their infancy is the keynote of a sweet disposition.

A MOST COVETED RELIC.



As Much as $40,000 Has Been Offered for Old Shakespeare Desk.

London.—Nearly 60,000 pilgrims, representing every nation on earth, visit the little Warwickshire town of Stratford on Avon every yeor and pass through the various show places, beginning with the quiet old cottage birthplace of the world's greotest poet, and then going on to Ann Hathwoy's cottage; Chorfecote park and park, whera young Shakespeare was caught poaching, and so on.

Of course many priceless relics have been gothered together in the Birthplace museum, and of these the most desirable of all is the battered and worm eaten oaken desk, at which probably Shakespeare wrote many of his mightiest works, including "Hamlet" and "King Lear."

As much as $40,000 hos been bid for these few ancient boards roughly nailed together! But, of course, nothing could induce the trustees of the museum to port with the relic. It is now most jealously guarded—particularly since one enthusiastic American pilgrim surreptitiously filched one of the front panels, which was promptly cut up and made into brooches and other souvenirs.

The curotor regularly receives tempting offers from distant customers, and these have been made by individuals as diverse as a French champegne grower and one of the Rajput princes of India. Moreover, great national museums have entered into negotiations with the British government for the relic, but of course, if it ever be removed from Shakespeare's own bouse it will be to find a place in the vest British collection in Bloomsbury.

German Zoological Garden at Peking.

Another instance of the success of German business methods in the far east is had in the announcement that a zoological garden is about to be installed at Peking by the emperor's order. The animals were purchased in Hamburg by the Chinese minister at Berlin for $2,000,000. They were shipped in 70 cages via the steamer Ferdinand Laeles, which touched at Manila on May 23. There are elephants, tigers, lions, zebras, monkeys, crocodiles, giraffes, pelicans, llamas, bears, geese, buffaloes, etc. The collection is to be placed in the imperial garden, which may then claim to ha the finest zoological garden in the Orient.

PLAYING CARDS.

Peculiarities of Those Used by the Different Nations.

"One of the most interesting collections of foreign loot that I've seen recently," said a man ordinarily too busy to make the trip over the seas himself, "is an assortment of playing cards from various parts of the world.

"In every country the owner of the collection visited—and he went to a good many—picked up packs of local manufacture and so representative of the nation.

"The Russian cards are perhaps the most elaborate. The faces of the kings and queens are different in each suit, indicating the racial elements that go to compose the empire.

"On the Greek cards classical heroes and heroines are represented. Nestor, for example, is the king of hearts and Orestes the knave. Agamemnon is the king of clubs, Hercules the jack of spades and Minos and Danae the king and queen of diamonds. The Greek pack is rather a clean one and scarcely does honor to the celebrities portrayed.

"Corfu is a center for card manufacturing. The idea of the Spanish card-maker seems to be to get as much color on the cards as possible. The royal colors are of unusual magnificence. The clubs are big blodgeons in green and red, and the knave of clubs, gayly caparisoned on a prancing horse, reminds you instantly of Jack the Giant Killer. The spades are ugly little daggers, and the hearts and diamonds always are disks and dice cups. The cards in some of the Spanish packs are very thin and have a capital spring.

"The Modena cards come from Lisbon. The figures are more conventional in design than on the Spanish. The ace cards are adorned with typical Portuguese scenes.

"A peculiarity of the pack bought in Constantinople is that the ace cards, in addition to the single spade, diamond, club or heart in the center of each, have diminutive aces at the upper left hand and lower right hand corners.

"The Italian face cards portray decidedly gloomy personages. Each one of the face cards, by the way, carries in small print the name and address of the maker. There are fifty packs, an inch and a quarter by an inch and three-quarters in size, which can be bought on the streets of Naples for a soldo. These resemble the Spanish cards to some extent, although the wrinkles are more dignified.

"Cairo is a great card emporium, and Stonsky street offers rich returns to the card hunter. Fortune telling cards must be in demand there, to judge from the samples I saw in the collection. The Cairo playing cards come mostly from Germany. They are brilliant in their coloring. The aces carry scenes from lands both west and east.

"The gem of all the packs comes from Switzerland. The cards are small, one and three-quarters by two and a half inches in size, and the back design is the edelweiss. The kings, queens and jacks are delightful studies in Swiss costume, and the purchaser certainly gets his money's worth, for each card has two half figures quite unlike. On the aces are Swiss scenes and objects of interest, also two to a card, the Schlosser Hurlburg the castle of Chillon, the Matterhorn, the bridge at Interone and the Lion of Lucerne."—Philadelphia Star.

Making Peter Pay For Paul.

Whether a public utility be administered by the government itself or by a private corporation, we hold that every person who uses it should be held to pay the cost of the service which he receives and that no one should be compelled by taxation or otherwise to bear any part of his neighbor's expense in light and power, for telephone service or for transportation of himself or of his goods.

Every proposal that a municipality assume operation of all public utilities and reduce rates to persons using them, regardless of what the service may actually cost, is an attempt to force some men to bear the expenses of others, because where the outlay for operation exceeds earnings the deficit must be made up by taxation, and this is denounced as socialistic and therefore hostile to justice and subversive of democratic government.—Bourke Cockran.

Senator Sorghum in Doubt.

"Do you think that municipal ownership would eliminate graft?"

"I am not positive," answered Senator Sorghum, "whether it would eliminate it or simply originate a new kind."—Washington Star.

"This is Thine."

Not in a thousand years will blood forget blood, even in this great nation of ours.

The column had been winding all morning through open country. Now it was approaching close-cropped and high grass. The captain of the company, acting as advance guard, knew that trouble was probably lying ahead. He called to him his pet sergeant—the man he had been saving through all the day for the time when a "best" man was needed.

"Sergeant O'Hare," he said, "I want you to pick out from the company any six men you choose and go ahead as a patrol. You can have anybody you want—only choose the best you know. I think we will be fired on from those low hills."

Sergeant O'Hare's eyes searched the company.

"Sullivan?" he called. "McCarthy? O'Donnell? Moriarity? McGinlaff? He hesitated. His glance wandered uncertainly up and down the line. Big, honest Swede, burly Teuton, lanky Yankee, there were in plenty. But where—oh, yes, there on the left of the line—that bright eyed, jug nosed, red headed little beggar, nodding and imploring attention with his twisted up face. The sergeant's brow cleared.

"Lynch!" he called, with a sigh of relief. "This is thim, sorr," he added, turning to the captain.—Outing.

The Remarkable Park.

One day some Americans on a visit to Wales expressed a wish to see a certain old and historic church. The incumbent was only too pleased to show them around, especially as he believed it would end in a donation being given to his parochial funds. He is an proud of the school as he is of the church and finished up by asking them in there also and inviting them to question his scholars.

One of the party accepted the invitation.

"Can you tell me, little boy," he said to one lad, "who George Washington was?"

"Ier, surr," said he; "he was a Sherrycan gen'ral."

"Quite right," said the American. "And can you tell me what George Washington was remarkable for?"

"Iss, surr; he was remarkable 'cos 'e was a 'Merrycna nu' told the treuth."

The American didn't question further.—Cassell's Magazine.

Liquid Metal Polish.

Take eight ounces of Spanish whiting, which must be perfectly free from grit, and put in one quart of gasoline. Shake up the whiting and gasoline thoroughly. You will notice the whiting settles immediately, leaving the liquid as clear as water. To remedy this add, further, to make it a better polishing agent, add to each quart of the mixture thirty-two drops of oleic acid—no more, no less. Shake again, and the whiting will not settle. Apply to gold, silver, nickel, brass, glass or any kind of metallic surface with a piece of cotton flannel, rubbing well. Polish with a piece of same cloth.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Waterproofing Dress Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is on the lines of the old alumina process. In this case the fabric used is rosin dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabrics to be proofed are passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of rosin which is deposited on the cloth and leaves each single fiber with an exceedingly thin film of rosin on it.

His Modest Claim.

A claim for damages against a railroad company is so often a means for exorbitant charges that a simple bill, such as was received by an American railroad company many years ago, even apart from its humorous aspect, is refreshing. It ran as follows:

The — and — Railroad company to John Smith Dr.

July 19, 187.—To rubbing your Locomotive tidy my wife as per Doctor's bill for curing her $10.00
To washing my tan box and suiting her hat 1.87
To upsetting my deer horn (Waggy) and breaking it 35.00
To hurting me 5.00

$52.87

There is authority for stating that the claim was paid immediately.—Scrap Book.

Her Chilly Retort.

The late Mr. —— of Malden, after pouring forth the story of his undying love in the most touching manner for over an hour to a young woman who he hoped would become his fourth wife, was refused the second time. He started for the door; but, looking around, he said in a most thunderous tone, "By heavens, you is the coldest woman I ever saw in my life!"

The young woman looked up and answered quickly:

"Oh, no, doctor; you have seen three colder than I."—Boston Herald.

A Curious Notice.

This curious official notice was once published at Germany: "At the request of Herr Wilhelm Leigson of Innkirch the seaman, Johan Leigson, who was drowned in May, 1869, on a journey from Stockholm to Hamburg, in the Kaiser Friedrich, is hereby called upon by the courts to appear and report himself on or before April 1, 1881, under pain of being declared dead."

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to havo that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Tore Torkelson Lande, made complaint against Bertha Olson on Tuesday last for cutting down his pasture fence, and she was arrested on Wednesday and fined $5., and cost. The fence was built across the old trail this spring and a few of the people down that way did not want to turn square corners on the section lines, but go the old trail and cut the fence, in defiance of law, and the rights of their neighbors. Mr. Lande will vigorously prosecute any one that molests his fence in the future, and is looking up evidence against others who have been guilty of the same offence in the past.

Badly Mixed Up.

The following tale comes from Plummer, and while we can not swear it is all true some parts of it may be true.

"Last week a man who has been staying there for some time got so intoxicated that he became "dead to the world", so some of the boys thought it best to ship him to Thief River Falls, so they took him over to the depot, and when the night train came along they got him in the smoking car, with a ticket and a "tag" for Thief River Falls. When he arrived there he was kindly assisted from the train, and then he was got to a hotel and to bed, about the same as he was accustomed to being treated at Plummer. When he got up in the morning and came down on the street there was a man standing on the corner and Mr. Plummer walking up to him said; "Good morning", and the stranger said; "good morning." Then he looked up and down the street and says: "Say Plummer is getting to be a pretty big town aint it?" The stranger gave him a look of surprise but answered. "Oh yes Plummer is quite a town." Then our Plummer friend says. "Seems to me this is a bigger town than either Red Lake or Thief River Falls and it is funny they don't try to move the county seat up here." Then the other looked at him again in surprise but answered. "We are trying to move it up here." Then our lost friend says. "That so, well lets go down to John's and have a drink." The Thief River Falls man went with him and when they came into the saloon he says, "Give me some Sunney Brook Rye" what will you have?" Then he looked at the bar tender and says. "Hollo, you must have just commenced to work for John for I don't remember that I have seen you, before." Well says the bar tender "I have worked for John for a long time, but I'll be darned if I ever see you before, what did you say you wanted, Rye Whiskie?" Then he took a drink, and a good long look at the two men and building, scratched his head and walked out, and the last time he was noticed he was talking to a policeman, and was overheard to remark, "Thief River Falls, Plummer, I'll be darned." Then he took off his hat and scratched his head and walked slowly down the street, and we are informed that he has entirely recovered."

Too Much to Ask.

A traveler in the highlands observed while at a tavern in a small village a very beautiful collie. At his request the owner was pointed out to him, and he asked the man what he would take for the dog.

"Ye'll be taking him to America?" the Scot asked cautiously.

"Certainly, if you sell him to me."

"I no com' part wid Rob," the dog's owner then said emphatically. "I'm unaken fond-like of him." And liberal offers were no inducement.

To his astonishment, the traveler later saw the dog sold to a drover for half what he had offered and after the drover had disappeared requested an explanation. "You said that you could not sell him," he remarked.

A twinkle came into the highlander's eyes.

"Yes I didna say I'd no sell him. I said I wadna part wi' him," he said. "Sure'll be hame in two or three days fra noo, but I wadna ask him to swim across the ocean. Na, that wou'l be too much to ask."—Harper's Weekly.

Reforming a Tramp

By Mrs. E. M. Howard

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"Ho. Ho. Hillo! Hello, there! Anybody at home?"

Mrs. Parke Austin was in her dressing room getting ready for church when this boisterous greeting fell upon her ears.

"Mornin', ma'am," pulling at a scrap of a cap which set jauntily upon a crop of black curly hair. "Have you got a bit of work you could give me, ma'am, for a bit of breakfast?"

Surprise had kept the lady silent. Now she spoke quickly. "It's Sunday, man. Haven't you any respect for the day?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am; but you see, the day has no respect for me, ma'am. A fellow gets hungry on Sunday just the same's any other day, and the Good Book says if a man won't work, neither shall he eat."

There was such an irresistible air of drollery in this absurd wresting of Scripture, that Mrs. Austin laughed in spite of herself.

"I can give you a breakfast," she said, with a rueful fear of being late at church, "but I have no Sunday work for you."

"Then I'll come around to-marrow and do Monday's work for Sunday food."

She watched him as he ate, and noted with some surprise that the handled his napkin and the silver as if he had always been accustomed to them, and a thoughtful, protracted expression came over his face, quite replacing the saucy, merry look he had worn at first.

"I'll be on hand to-marrow, ma'am, bright and early," he said, as he left the door, that thoughtful look still on his face, "and give you honest Monday work for Sunday food—the best I've tasted in years, ma'am," and touched his old cap again, and was gone, and Mrs. Austin returned to her toilet with a queer feeling that she had entertained an angel, or something peculiar, unawares.

The merry tramp was true to his promise, and with a scythe Monday morning was making war on some tall grass and weeds which had persisted in going to seed in Mrs. Austin's back yard.

"Burr 'em up, ma'am, and nip 'em next year's crop in the bud," he had sagely suggested as she looked about for work for him to do.

He leaned meditatively on the scythe, his eyes cast down, as Mr. Austin spoke.

"I imagine you've been cultivating some weeds of your own which need snipping."

"That's just it, sir," the hiack eyes looked into his with a smile. "But I have no one to snip them for me. To tell the truth, I'd be glad enough to be respectable again, if I knew where to make a beginning."

"Come into my business. I am short of hands, and I believe I can trust you to take an honest position."

The tramp drew himself up promptly. "Whatever I am, or have been, I have never taken a dishonest penny's worth."

"I believe you. Shake hands on it." He was taken into the home as a boarder and known only as John Smith.

The saucy freedom of the tramp gave way to the grave, respectful bearing of a gentleman toward Mrs. Austin, and though at times he indulged in merry conversation, the saucy hravado was quite gone from it. His first earnings had been invested in a suit of fine clothing, and Mrs. Austin had persuaded him into a habit of regular church going, and together the frowsy, dirty tramp who had summoned Mrs. Austin to her back door with a "Hello, there, ma'am!" one morning, would hardly have been recognized in this quiet, gentlemanly person who was now an inmate of her home. In all this time he had given no clew to his own past, and nearly a year passed by and Thanksgiving day was fast drawing near again when she found him one day bending over a paper which his eyes were fastened, his face pale and convulsed with feeling.

"What is it, John?" she said, in alarm. "Can I help you in any way?"

"Read that;" he pointed to a paragraph, saying, "It is the first word I've heard from home in ten years."

It was an obituary notice of a wealthy and influential citizen of a distinct city, and with the eulogy the mention of the fact that grief for the wayward course of an only and long lost son had been the prime cause of his death.

"And you, John—"

"I am the wayward son, Mrs. Austin, and in addition to remorse for my own foolishly wasted years, I must carry that of bringing down my father's gray hairs in sorrow to the grave. Do you know what you have done for me, Mrs. Austin, what depths you have rescued me from. When I came to you that Sunday morning, I had come to the very husks of my career, and I didn't much care what became of me or what I did; but you spoke a kind word in season—you set me out a portion of food in a way which reminded me of my home, of my mother, and the bread and to spare in my father's house. You did not see the tears in my eyes when I went out, but I believe God did. Then your good husband continued your work by offering me honest employment, and you took me into your home as a guest. You cannot know how that day in your home inspired me to try for better things, to regain a little at least of the manhood I had lost."

"And you have, John," Mrs. Austin's eyes met hers with tears as the saucy boarder eloquence fell upon her ear gratefully. "Whatever you have been in the past, this present year has been well spent."

"I am not John. I had so disgraced my honorable name that I had no right to use it, but if you think I am worthy to bear it again, call me Franklin Richards, the name on my baptismal card," he said, gravely. "It is a short history, Mrs. Austin, the old, old one of the Prodigal Son who took his portion from home and wasted it in riotous living, only that my father is not there now to welcome me home."

"But the mother is." Mrs. Austin's face lighted up brightly.

"Yes, and a lovely girl, my father's ward. We were to have been married, but the waywardness driven me from her heart before now. I deserve it all and more;" his head drooped a dejected.

"Don't despair; it will all come right, I am sure it will, and you must write home this very day. You should have done so long ago."

In an elegant home on one of the principal avenues in Boston, a mother made preparations to celebrate Thanksgiving day. She was a fair, sweet woman, with soft, black eyes set deep in a face which was lined with care and grief.

A young lady was seated, looking earnestly out upon the passersby, her hands folded, her face full of longing wistfulness. She had passed her girlhood, on she looked back upon it there seemed a great mountain of years of heartache between those happy, careless days and the present; still they had been the mellow fruit of experience and discipline, and Ruth Haskell was a nobler, wiser woman to-day than Franklin Richards had ever known, while her beauty was not in the least impaired. She had been a lovely girl then, with all a girl's ornde immaturity of thought and feeling, today she was a woman with wider, stronger views of life and its responsibilities, and her capacities for loving with a true, wise love strengthened with the lapse of years. She started as the mother's gentle hand was placed upon her shoulder.

"Oh, auntie, I believe I was about a thousand miles away at that moment."

"Then you were farther away than he, I trust. Oh, Ruthie, if your uncle could only be here this thankful, happy day."

"Yes, auntie." Tears gathered, for the absent one had been the kindest, most indulgent of husbands and guardians. "Still, auntie, we have so much cause for thankfulness!"

"Yes, Ruthie," the jeweled hands were smoothing the fine brown hair and picking out a lock into a fluffy fringe over the smooth forehead. "To think that my petted, treasured boy should ever have become a tramp—really needing for food and clothing." She shuddered visibly.

"It was God's way, auntie. When the Prodigal Son came home the father loved him the more for what he had passed through." She looked up into the kind face over her, with a vivid blush.

"And you love him still, my daughter?" she said, with a questioning glance.

"Yes, auntie. Through all these years I have loved him, not for what he was, but that which he was capable of being."

"Thank God for that," the mother said, fervently. "May he prove himself worthy of such devotion. We must ever cherish in our hearts and in our prayers, the memory of that good woman, Mrs. Austin; but for her our wanderer might have been a wanderer still."

The Merry Tramp Was True to His Promise.

The Latest Modes

SPOTTED VOILE DRESS.—This very graceful dress is in mauve silk spotted voile. The full skirt is trimmed with a band of insertion, with a strap of the same silk each side. The bodice is trimmed with insertion up cardarter mauve silk each side. The bodice is trimmed with insertion up corder front, and has an over-bodice composed of folds of silk with pointed revers. Eight yards 44 inches wide, three yards silk, seven yards insertion, three-fourths yard piece lace, one and one-half yard of sateen for bodice lining.

LINEN COSTUME.—The skirt shown here is a five-gore pattern, cut to come to the ground by two inches all round. It is trimmed with two crossfolds escape the ground by two inches all round. It is trimmed with two crossfolds put on by a line of stitching at the head. The little short-waisted jacket is sumi-fitting, the seams all being stitched on the right side. The vest is fastened by small buttons of the same color as the linen, and loops of fine cord. The neck and sleeves are finished by straps with rounded ends. Mushroom-shaped hat, trimmed with ribbon loops hanging from the back and a wreath of roses crossing the crown. Material required for the dress: Seven yards linen 40 inches wide.

CHANGE IN TRIMMINGS

New Fashions Will Show Straight Lines for the Coming Fall and Spring Raiment.

At this time the jumper has certainly reached the zenith of its popularity, and its wane is inevitable. Looking at the newest skirts, especially on plaited lines, and at the extreme cut of late tailored suits and coats, the shrewd shopper realizes that straight lines will mark the fall raiment and run over into next spring.

The over-trimmed lingerie frock, especially with trimmings running around rather than up and down, cutting the figure into a sort of human checker board, has seen the best days in muits, sheer batiste, soft lawns and other clinging fabrics, with fine soft laces, the effect of the cross trimming is not so bad; but nevertheless many women have awakened to a realization that somehow the much-trimmed lingerie dress has robbed them of height and given them a "dumpy" look.

There is no doubt that house dresses and evening frocks for early fall wear will show the vertical trimming and a distinct return to the long lines. Particularly will this be true of silks, satins and cloths.

The New Neck Line.

A charming line of neck decolletage is the newest one, dropping front and back into a low circular line, that is just over the last exterior limit, and only sufficiently rises as well, while the corsage does not always go higher than a corselet passing under the arms. When this happens the gulmpe also fits low on the upper orm and becomes part of the short close sleeve drapery. On a lovely figure the effect is charming. When the corsage mounts up it also fits over the shoulder in a long droop-ing line and has lace net or chiffon for sleeve finishes. The bodice in both instances is much trimmed back and front, and opens, of course, in the back. All tapering lines vanish with these new short waisted bodices, so one must be reconciled to that feature.—Vogue.

For the Buttonholes.

To prevent "torn ont" buttons make buttonholes in both sides of garments. Make a narrow hand of any firm white goods, or colored goods.if preferred for dark clothes. Have the band at least four thicknesses of cloth, and one wider than buttonholes. Sew the buttons on this band, as far apart as buttonholes are. Put band on inside of garment and put buttons through buttonholes on both sides. When the garment is soiled the band can be taken out and used next day, until it becomes soiled, when it can be washed and ready for use again. Two of these bands suffice.

Home Made Rugs.

Take nice clean pieces of old carpet, cut in convenient size, hem nicely and tack corners to shed well. Give two coats of paper hangers paste; let dry and give two coats of paint. These are fine for kitchen or bathroom as they do not roll up on edges. One can use taste and make fancy designs like oil cloth.

A DIVERSIFIED GARMENT

Little Change That Transforms Evening Bodice into a Useful, Dainty Demitoilette.

Everything nowadays is arranged to save trouble, from the latest housemaid's brush to the supply of dainty little dress details, that requires only a minimum amount of labor to unite them to an existing possession, or what may well be termed a skeleton costume.

Ready made chemisettes, guimpes and sleeveleete are conveniently to hand for transforming an evening bodice into a useful demitoilette of such pretty, dainty fashioning, and easily taking nil things into account, of quite moderate price.

Recently, there was on exhibit in a shop a charming rucked chiffon evoivmmnt, comprising a chemisette and full-puf elbow sleeves, in a pretty shade grey tone, that was requisitioned to fill in the low decolletage of a lovely gray chiffon velvet evening dress, and afford it the double use of a smart afternoon reception gown, while several of the evening garments are of extremely attractive character.

Particularly was this the case in a little sequin botero fitted with cape sleeves. In white, with silver and iridescent sequins, this produced the prettiest completion to a white satin duchesse creation, a black taffeta gown sekred of the reign of a jet and gold sequin drapery, concluding in shoulder straps and handsome fringed ends in front.

Simple, straightforward berthas, either of lace or sequin embroidery, also serve to effect a delightful finishing note to a low cut evening bodice; while artificial flower garnitures are presented in an endless variety of realistic expressions. This is not to be wondered at, seeing the high state of perfection now achieved in the cult of flowermaking.

IN WHITE BATISTE

Child's frock of white batiste all embroidered in English embroidery. The skirt is composed of two embroidered ruffles.

The long blouse is made with groups of plaits and is mounted to a tucked yoke bordered with a berthe of the embroidery.

WHAT FATHER AND HARRY ACCOMPLISHED

AN ILLINOIS MAN WRITES REGARDING HIS SUCCESS IN WESTERN CANADA.

Change in Homestead Regulations Makes Entry Easily Accomplished.

"Nothing succeeds like success" is an old and true saying having many applications in Western Canada. The following letter is an illustration. The writer, Mr. Gerts, left Chicago a short time ago and the success he has achieved may well be gained by every having stuck and energy by locating on the free homestead lands in Western Canada. A change recently made in the Canadian Land Regulations concerning homesteads makes it possible for any member of a family to make entry for any other member of the family entitled to a homestead. For instance, a man may now make entry for his son, his son may for his father or for his mother or brothers, or for his son or sons, or for a sister or daughter who may be the head of the family having minor children depending upon her for support. A sister, daughter or mother are also entitled to make entry upon a homestead. The only fee required is $10.00 for each entry. A great saving in railway expences is thus made.

Read whet Mr. Gerts has to say:

Bettleford, Sask., Aug. 4, 1907.

Dear Sir:—

Thinking a letter from us Northwest settlers might interest you, and I write a few lines and let you know we are progressing finely and well pleased with our new home.

When I think of the many hard working, industrious men east and I see families who are struggling for a living and doing the strenuous, laying up practically nothing far old age and the thousands of acres of land here yet to be plowed and cultivated capable of raising sixty to eighty bushels of oats, forty bushels of wheat, it certainly seems a pity the two cannot be brought together. But I will repeat, this country is only for the industrious and thrifty; also I might add, it requires some capital to start.

A man should have at least a team of three good horses; better to have mares so as to have some colts coming along each year. It is best to bring them with him as work horses are high. He should be able to purchase a plow, disc and drag, harrow, drill, binder and hey rake. Of course several taking up claims can buying land near together can divide up the purchasing of the above machinery and exchange work. The plow will work well for a few years or until crops will warrant each individuol to purchase a full outfit.

We have 480 acres of as good farm land as lies in the famous Cut Knife district. Every foot can be plowed. Last year our oats run 50 bushels per acre. I sold them for 50c per bushel on the plains.

The indicotione ore for a good crop this year, though we were very late in seeding owing to the late spring. Last winter was the coldest known in this country by the oldest settlers (some who have been here 38 years), but with a comfortable house and plenty of firewood, which we hauled fifteen miles, we passed the winter quite pleasantly. The air is clear and dry. Some of the days I came from work I was surprised to find the thermometer registering 40° below zero. Though we never keep fire at night, we had nothing freeze in our cellar.

Last winter was the coldest known in this country by the oldest settlers (some who have been here 38 years), but with a comfortable house and plenty of firewood, which we hauled fifteen miles, we passed the winter quite pleasantly. The air is clear and dry. Some of the days I came from work I was surprised to find the thermometer registering 40° below zero. Though we never keep fire at night, we had nothing freeze in our cellar.

Our stock and chickens wintered fine. I have a yearling heifer, who would hold her own in any "fat stock" show. She has never had a drop of milk since she was four months old and has never had a mouthful of grain. A gentleman who saw her made the remark, "He bet that heifer had eaten her head off with grain;" but would hardly believe she had never had any grain.

This is a great country for growing all kinds of vegetables and we are certainly enjoying our garden. The fever of the prairie heat is completely last season Mrs. G. conned a lot of them, and we have enjoyed them up to the fresh vegetables.

I am sorry I did not have time this past season to attend to transplanting trees, but will keep the land I had prepared worked up for next season's planting. I received a number of small trees (ash and maple) from the Government Experimental Farm at Indian Head. I put them around the edge of the garden and they are doing fine. I also received quite a lot of other seeds, oats, wheat, potatoes and rhubarb roots which were acceptable.

It is useless for us to bother with garden flowers as wild ones grow in profusion. We are located near a fine creek, the water of which is soft and fine for bathing and washing. We have a well of water near the house, 32 feet deep and 21 feet of water all the time, though it is harder than the creek water.

Lend which could be bought for five dollars per acre three years ago is now worth $14 per acre and steadily advancing each year.

All kinds of improvements are going on. Steam plows and large threshing outfits are already in. Roads are being graded, bridges being built across rivers and creeks. Last year I took my family, two wagon, across the Saskatchewan river in a row boat, swam my team across and now the contract has been let for $200,000 bridge at that place.

The C. N. R. have run their final survey from Bettleford to Calgary, running west about one mile north of us. The C. P. R. have run a survey, which runs northwest possee about 500 feet from the northeast corner of section 7. Both companies will be covered with a net work of railroads and it will keep them busy hauling the immense crops that will surely encouraging to us settlers.

Two years ago Harry, my son, and I as you know, intended our car at Saskatoon and drove 130 miles to our claim. Last fall we had only 11 miles to haul our wheat to railroad and as you see, the prospects are we will have a railroad at our very door and two to choose from. This alone can support a good town and it will be well patronized.

Harry arrived home at 12 p. m. last night after going fourteen miles to blacksmith shop to get horseshoes and set. The shop was full of work and it was eight p. m. when Harry left to for home and partner still in town to have work done. We will need stores nearer and good mechonics.

We are all enjoying the best of health which is a great blessing. When we left Chicago over a year ago my youngest son's (now grown of age) health was so poor that I almost despaired of raising him, but he is certainly a healthy, hearty little fellow now. The puro fresh oir has done him wurlde of good.

So to sum up the whole. Why should we not be glad we mode the break? A good form, stock increasing, health and an independent life. What more can we ask?

And we have to make on effort? You can hot we did not have to. Should you come this way with your shotgun this fall, we should he pleased to let you shoot prairie chickens off our grein stacks.

Respectfully yours,

CHAS. M. GERTS AND FAMILY.

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

HAS DOUBLE CAPACITY.

Low Down Barrow Which is Just What Farmer Needs.

The drawing shows a low down barrow in sufficient detail to enable any one to make a similar one. We think that next to the low down cart it is the handiest thing around the buildings and garden that we have, says a writer in Farm and Fireside. Its capacity is more than double that of the ordinary kind, and the load is much more easily put aboard. It has the advantage of getting into close quarters where the cart would not go, and for use about the feeding alleys, the stable, the lawn and the garden there is hardly anything that will take its place.

For the framework get two pieces of hard wood 2 by 2 inches which will project to form handles on one end and for the wheel frame on the other. At front end of box in rear of wheel a piece of the same dimensions is mortised into the frame to hold it rigidly and to make the front end of the box frame. Pieces 1¼ by 1¼ inches are also mortised into the bottom of the legs, both front and back. These form the foundation for the floor.

Low Down Barrow.

which should be of three-quarter inch boards. The legs are mortised into the shaft or handle pieces, the front ones resting about three inches from the ground and the rear ones securely braced, as shown in the cut.

If desired the sides may be built from the floor solid and straight up, but we find it better to have a permanent bed from floor to top of handles, with removable side boards to slip on for use in bedding bulky stuff.

Heavy material, such as bags of fertilizer, large stones, etc., are easily handled with this type of barrow, as they may be loaded between the handles directly from the ground.

MANURE SCIENCE.

How Different Feeds Influence Value of the Fertilizer.

The Maine station has recently issued a bulletin describing a feeding experiment. A part of the same experiment, at least, is very interesting. It deals with the influence feed has on the fertilizing value of manure. Weighing the elements at what they would cost on the market, it was found that a ton of hay contains $4.40 worth of plant food elements. It is not stated what kind of hay was used, but the supposition is that it was mixed hay. Spring wheat bran contains $11.80 worth; fall wheat bran, $9.60 worth; and cotton seed meal, $23.60 worth of fertilizing elements to the ton. In this experiment no consideration was taken of the value the manure would possess as an improver of the humus content of the soil, which will be very considerable indeed.

This shows the reader that if he needs feeds for his cattle and at the same time it is necessary to pay some attention to the fertility of his soil, he should purchase those feeds which are most valuable as improvers of the manure yielded by the stock. It was found that hay was richer in potash than any other element, contained in the potash than both nitrogen and phosphoric acid. Spring wheat bran had nearly as much phosphoric acid as both nitrogen and potash. Cotton seed meal contained almost twice as much nitrogen as both phosphoric acid and potash. Hence, if the soil needs humus and perhaps potash, feed liberally of hay; if it needs phosphoric acid let bran enter largely into the ration; if it needs nitrogen, a great deal of cotton seed meal should be fed.

FARM ITEMS.

Do not wait for the wagon to whistle for grease before putting it on.

We are told that in building the great dam which holds back the waters of the Nile for irrigation, flocks of sheep and goats were driven back and forth to pack down the earth. A roller with teeth like a sheep's hoof has now been invented for packing dirt roads.

The Connecticut experiment station states that 5,000 tons of cotton-seed meal are annually used as fertilizer in tobacco growers in that state at a cost of $165,000. In 1899 the acreage cost was $22.50 per ton, making shipping cost 12.9 cents a pound. Last year the price had risen to $21 per ton of meal or 19.4 a pound for shipping.

No soil that will produce a variety of crops should be farmed continually with one crop. One writer has estimated that ten crops of one kind of grain will exhaust the best soil in the United States.

It has been shown that cowpea manure is about 89 days. This proves that the seed can be sown after an early crop of oats has been removed and a heavy growth will result by the time the farmer is ready to fall plow.

The farmer who practices a rotation of corn, small grain, corn, small grain, clover two years and pasture two years and then repeats, will never be confronted with a worn-out farm.

GOOD ROAD A CIVILIZER.

Why the Improvement of the Highways Should Be Encouraged.

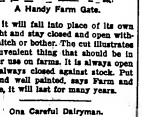
Civilized nations have good roads. Savage nations have no roads. Probably the road is the greatest index of civilization. The communities living in savagery do not desire intercourse with other communities and do all possible to make intercourse difficult. Each nation must be well advanced in civilization before it undertakes the building of roads. We do not have to go back many thousands of years to find the Canaanites race living without roads and depending on trails in the fields and forests.

One of the great drawbacks about country life has been its isolation. This isolation has been rendered more intense by the badness of the roads which have kept families apart. They have not only kept the families from visiting, but by making progress slow, have compelled the men hauling loads to town to consume twice as much time as was necessary. This extra wasted time has to come out of some place and that place has to be the time that should be devoted to sociability. The years of time that are wasted pulling loads over muddy roads is a great obstacle in the path of civilization. The lost time is such a factor that the farmer in a community of poor roads must spend most of his time in drudgery to make up for it.

Fortunately now there is a movement all over the country to improve the roads and to reduce them to a condition of permanent hardness. This is a movement in the interest of civilization. The good road will do more for civilization than almost anything else. The road that the farmer had to take two hours to traverse can now ha traversed in one, where the roads have been improved.

If we mistake not the general movement, the United States government will in the near future do much more for the construction of roads than it has ever before done. In the recent sessions of congress there has been much talk and some action in this direction. It is evident that the national government can build interstata roads for military purposes if for no other, and we may expect to see some such roads constructed. Every mile of such a road will be a civilizer and a stimulus to the communities to build good roads.

It is impossible for nations to have good roads while the populations are sparse, but as soon as the populations become dense the relative cost of building is reduced. The population of this country has now reached the point where it is feasible to construct roads throughout the length and breadth of its land.



Every dollar spent in the construction of good roads is a dollar spent in the interest of a higher civilization. The good road opens the school to the nse of the pupil and increases the average attendance. The good road makes it possible for many a child to obtain an education that otherwise would have had only a part. The good road increases the attendance on the church and on every other religious and social agency.

In some sections we hear of the farmers opposing the construction of good roads. But, declares the Farmers' Review, that is only because in their case the cost is so great that they do not believe the demand justifies it. There is such a thing as putting in a too-expensive road. What would be the right kind of a road for one place would be the wrong kind of road for another place. Circumstances alter cases. Every community is intelligent enough to settle the matter of details for itself. Every community is not, however, awake as to the value of good roads and this is why such articles as this appear. The matter should be everywhere agitated in the interests of a broader and grander civilization.

HERITAGE OF CIVIL WAR.

Thousands of Soldiers Contracted Chronic Kidney Troubles While in the Service.

The experience of Capt. John L. Ely, of Co. B, 17th Ohio, now living at 500 East Second street, Newton, Kansas, will interest the thousands of veterans who came back from the Civil War suffering tortures with kidney complaint. Capt. Ely says: "I contracted kidney trouble during the Civil War, and the occasional attacks finally developed into a chronic case. At one time I had to use a crutch and cane to get about. My back was lame and weak, and besides the aching, there was a distressing retention of the kidney secretions. I was in a bad way when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills in 1901, but the remedy cured me, and I have been well ever since."

"GONE TO THE DEVIL."

London Inn Responsible for Origin of Common Saying.

The old inns of England have been responsible for the origin of many common sayings. An instance of this is the proverbial phrase "He has gone to the devil." On Fleet street, Loudon, near Temple Bar, was once a tavern which was known by the strictly old-fashioned name, "The Devil and Saint Dunstan." It was famous for its good dinners and excellent wines, and received a large patronage from the lawyers of Temple Bar.

It was familiarly known as "The Devil," and when a lawyer left his office to go there he usually left a notice on his door, "Gone to the Devil," There were some who patronized the tavern to the neglect of their business, and the notice was so regularly exhibited on their doors that it became said to be used to characterize the man recklessly losing his grip and going to destruction.—The Sunday Magazine.

MR. JOHNSON NOT TO BLAME.

Good Old Lady Understood How the Mistake Occurred.

There is a good old lady who cannot resist speaking well of all her acquaintances.

On Thanksgiving day she told the colored man who did chores about the place that he might go into the back yard and help himself to a chicken. The man obeyed with alacrity and was most profuse in his thanks.

In the course of a few days the lady's husband informed her that on Thanksgiving day she had given away Mr. Johnson some two choice hens from the coop.

"I did tell him to take one," confessed the lady regretfully, "but, you know, dear, how interested Mr. Johnson celebrates the holidays. Why, he simply cannot help seeing things double."

A Little Courtship Comedy.

A good-looking, well-to-do bachelor of Manchester was being teazed by some young women of his acquaintance for not being married. He said: "I'll marry the one of you whom on a secret vote you elect to be my wife." There were nine women in the company. Each one went into a corner and used great caution in preparing her ballot and disguised her handwriting.

The result was that there were nine votes cast, each receiving one. The man remains a bachelor, the friendship is broken up, and the whole is a mortal enemies, united in the one determination that they will not speak to the man again.—The Tatler.

The Truth.

Gobsa Golder descended painfully from his 90-horse power limousine.

"I wish to purchase," he said, "an engagement ring."

"Yes, sir," said the eager clerk. "We have just imported a superb ring, sir—two ruby hearts surrounded—"

"No," said the aged millionaire, in a disillusioned voice; "two hearts won't do. There is only one heart concerned in this affair. The girl is marrying me for my money."

FOUND OUT.

A Trained Nurse Made Discovery.

No one is in better position to know the value of food and drink than a trained nurse.

Speaking of coffee, a nurse of Wilkes Barre, Pa., writes: "I used to drink strong coffee myself, and suffered greatly from headaches and a bilious tion. While on a visit to my brothers I had a good chance to try Postum Food Coffee, for they drank it together in place of ordinary coffee. In two weeks after using Postum I found I was much benefited and lately my headaches disappeared and also my indigestion.

"Naturally I have since used Postum among my patients, and have noticed a marked benefit where coffee has been left off and Postum used.

"I observed a curious fact about Postum when used among mothers. It greatly helps the flow of milk in cases where coffee is inclined to dry it up, and where its causes nervousness.

"I find trouble in getting servants to make Postum properly. They most always serve it before it has been boiled long enough. It should be boiled 15 to 20 minutes after boiling begins and served with cream, when it is certainly a delicious beverage."—Read "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

WHY HE WANTED LAW.

Man Had to Be Forced into Paths of Righteousness.

Congressman James R. Watson of the Sixth Indiana district told a story while in town recently, anent the operation of the pure food law, and intended to illustrate his expressed theory that more people would be good if they had to be.

"It was while we were wrestling with the pure food bill at Washington," he said, "that I got a letter from home, written by a man from whom I bought a big quantity of maple sirup each year. He urged me to fight for the pure food bill. Now, I couldn't help remembering, to save my life, that this man bought five barrels of brown sugar at the opening of the maple molasses season. So I wrote him a note suggesting that advocacy of a pure food measure seemed odd from a man who bought five barrels of brown sugar before beginning the manufacture of his pure maple sirup.

"Never feazed him. He turned my letter over and wrote on the back: 'I know it, but I want the law to make me do right.'"—Indianapolis News.

THREE BOYS HAD ECZEMA.

Were Treated at Dispensary—Did Not Improve—Suffered Five Months —Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"My three children had eczema for five months. A little sore would appear on the head and scratching itchy, increasing day after day. The baby had had it about a week when the second boy took the disease and a few sores developed, then the third boy took it. For the first three months I took them to the N— Dispensary, but they did not seem to improve. Then I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and in a few weeks they had improved, and when their heads were well you could see nothing of the sores. Mrs. Kate Kein, 513 West 29th St., New York, N. Y., Nov. 1, 5 and 7, 1906."

Disillusion.

The American contractor stood at the base of the Pyramid of Cheops and looked at the venerable monument in disgust.

"It's a big pile, all right," he said; "and it may do well enough for Egypt, but if a man in the United States should turn out a job of stone work like that the papers would roast him from Hoboken to Hayhook."

Turning away disappointed he consoled himself by taking a ride on a camel, which animal he found fully up to all the descriptions he had read of it.

Disparity.

The two young women, who had not met for a year, fell into embraced each other with much fervor.

"How's this, Kate? I hear you have gone and married a rich widower. Is he much older than you?"

"Well, there's considerable difference between our ages, Clara. In fact, he's a war veteran."

"Spanish war?"

"Oh, no; he wasn't in that."

"Civil war, then, of course."

"No—of—Mexican."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. New to Him.

The leading lady of a road company playing in one of the smaller cities in Ohio concluded that she would press some of her lace collars one morning. She accordingly rang the bell, and when the hall boy appeared said:

"Bring me up a hot iron."

In course of time he returned empty handed, and when the lady answered his knock he said:

"I couldn't get it for you, lady."

"And why not?" she asked, mystified.

"The bartender said he didn't know how to mix it."

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

WORST OF CHINA'S FAMINE IS SEEN BY MISSIONARIES.

Shanghai, China. — A famine at close range is not a pretty sight. It gets on one's nerves. Homesickness, starvation, freezing, diseases—these are not pleasant to contemplate day and night, for months on end. That some of the missionaries are beginning to show signs of the strain is not surprising, for they, one and alone of all foreigners, are living eye to eye with the famine as it were, since they are cultivated, refined men and women, with sensitive sympathies, they are in many instances doubtless suffering more than the famishing Chinese themselves.

It rather interfered with my slumbers at Suchien to hear the wierd, plaintive and prolonged wail of a beggar at the gate, crying until far into the night that he was starving, starving, starving, and would perish unless the noble-hearted foreigners would give him help. The number of corpses to be seen on the streets of mornings proves that his prediction had no idle tongues' play; the mortality among mendicants, since the people who ordinarily feed them have become active beggars themselves, is really appalling. Thrice I passed though the streets of Suchien at night, and at every turn there was huddled some shivering, homeless, hungry creature, wailing his starvation cry.

There is scarcely a missionary in the famine region who does not retire of night with the nerve-racking cry of a beggar at his gate resounding in his ears. Yet it is impossible, as I have seen, to give help at the gate; such an action would bring down a perpetual mob upon one; a mob, too, in which the less worthy cannot be distinguished from the absolutely penniless. In these times, only the letter can command attention.

"Tricks That Are Vain.

It is not for gratitude and loyalty that these suffering Chinese are being helped. Three times out of four the beggar to whom handsome largesse has been given, instead of kneeling, his head on the ground in gratitude, after the Chinese custom, will only impertinue for more. These poor are like the horse leech's daughters, crying, "Give, Give!" and, like Sheol and Abaddon, they are never satisfied. The impression that these famine victims are going about singing the praises of those who have put food into their mouths is a mere fancy, the Chinaman is an ungrateful customer and unless he is closely watched he will, by ways that are dark, secure a double portion of relief for himself.

The women missionaries at one station are giving their time to making over clothes for the innumerable illclad refugees; as a result some persons have presented themselves absolutely naked at the dispensary. It was found that some Chinese were coming twice for clothes; now every recipient of aid is marked between the shoulder blades with a nitrate of silver pencil. In a former famine the expedient was adopted by the missionaries of cutting off a portion of one eyebrow as a means of identification. The authorities at some points require each person who receives government relief to dip his hand into a bowl of dye, but the shrewd natives know how to remove this, and the missionary doctor has been appilled to for some chemical which cannot be washed off.

This is the sort of thing which makes all missionary work in China so discouraging. One day I went with a missionary to take a census of a destitute village. Further investigation showed that every family had for this occasion increased the number of its children two-fold, while no less than ten families outside of the village had registered themselves as residents. If there are any more cunning and subtle liars in the world than the Chinese, I hope it may never be my lot to have dealings with them.

Cattle Fodder for Human Beings.

An admirable trait of these missionaries is that they are impelled to their labors by deeper motives than that of dreading of those whom they seek to help. They realize that even if the Chinese are naively and disarmingly honest, they are none the less fellow mortals in need. The very village that I have just mentioned was facing imminent starvation; not a grain of rice or wheat could be found in any of the homes, and the family cooking pots contained only sweet potato leaves. Throughout the famine region the people are subsisting solely on leaves, weeds, fungus, bark and roots. The supply of these is now giving out. Nobody but the Chinese could have stayed off death so long.

The peasants in the famine area have sold their live stock, as well as their other possessions, and now they themselves are glad to eat the fodder. A priced food at present is the refuse of bean oil and peanut oil, which ordinarily is used for fertilizer. The few remaining pigs that ors now being butchered are so thin that they render no lard, and lard has consequently more then doubled in price. Having gorupies against taking life (the Chinese Mohammedans are the butchers of this country), the famine sufferers are waiting for their dogs and cats to die that they may eat them. I saw dogs so nearly starved that they could not bark. It will be a poor meal that any family will make from its household pets, for the latter are only skin and bones.

Starving—Yet Not Hungry.

Many curious sidelights on the famine are seen by the missionaries. A great number of patients at this dispensaries complain that they are not hungry, and cannot bear to eat food, even when they can get it. They do not realize that this is the last stage of starvation. Even more pathetic is the case of the little children, whose mothers have discovered a certain weed, which, without affording any nutrition, nauseates them long enough to keep them from crying for food. Of course many persons are being poisoned by eating the wrong kinds of weeds; in their desperation they fill their stomochs with any green thing they can find.

Disease is yet to reap its worst harvest over the smitten area. Smallpox is now ravaging the center of the famine region, one hears in these being affected. Medical attention is not sought and vaccination is declined. In one house I found the family gathered in the same room with a man whose face was swollen, black and outbroken in the worst imaginable cass of smallpox. The with was calmly combing her hair!

Famine fever is scarcely beginning its ravages, although thousands will perish from this cause before Spring. When the worse plagues come the missionaries will be in real danger. One of the workers at Taiku-kang has not yet wholly recovered from an attack of famine fever some years ago. The nervous exhaustion leaves in the extraordinary strain and work of famine relief is telling on some gaunt shadowy forms. The most efficient men is able to sleep only a few hours every night.

While on the subject of sickness it is worthy of note that the only living skeletons produced thus far by the famine have been those in which sin, and they were suffering from disease as well as starvation. As a matter of record starvation here does not produce the emaciation which is so notable in the Indian famines. Those in the last stages of hunger become bloated and swollen, as with dropsy. The one certain characteristic of the famishing, and I have noticed it in the case of two out of three persons met in the rural parts of Kiangsieh, is the peculiar famine pallour—a lividness, a dustiness, and a tenseness which overspreads the features. This is the signature of starvation.

The Grim Reaper's Harvest.

At the end of January, the famine deaths are only beginning, although of course the corpses I have seen, and the poor, hasty grave mounds, and the little rag of white on women's heads, litter of full mourning, I should imagine that the grim reaper had been having a rare harvest.

With a calm certainty that is horrible, the missionaries assure you that nothing now can prevent the people from dying by tens of thousands during the next few months. They expect this and plan for it. Already, like rats in their holes, the peasants are dying in their homes.

The horror of it comes over one in the concentration camps, where a host of more than half a million refugees, fleeing from pursuing famine, have gathered outsiffe the walls of surveral cities. The world may have seen worse spectacles of misery than these, but, if so, I have never heard of them. The people have built themselves straw huts, in no instance large enough to hold a man standing erect, and in most cases scarcely more than waist high. In these, on the bare ground, whole families huddle together. The flimsy shelters they have erected serve to keep out the fiercest of the wintry blasts, and the direct deluge of the rains. But at the best there is misery beyond words, especially when it is remembered that they are only spots upon which to sit and wait for food or death.

Mrs. Hendricken, a missionary at Chin-Kieng, was going through a refugee camp a few days ago when she came across the dead body of a woman in one of the shacks. Three children, too small to know that they were motherless, had been sitting beside the cold, unanswering corpse for 24 hours, wondering why their only friend did not heed them. Worse, to the point of nerve-shattering, have been some of the scenes I have had to witness of women wailing beside their unconfined dead. I fear I can never forget the picture of one woman, standing despairingly beside her husband's body, which lay in the street, from which she was too weak to lift it. The destitution here is really unto death—and a penny a day would keep a man alive!

Children for Sale.

One of the missionary problems precipitated by the famine is what to do about the children that are constantly being offered for sale, or as gifts in the missionaries, by parents eager to prolong the lives of their little ones. Up until the present no mission has felt equal to the task of accepting any waifs or of starting a home for them. The plees of the parents are suiffic to the last degree. The language to which mother love will go were illustrated by the answer of one Chinese woman when her child complained that he was dying of hunger. "I know it, my child, and I would give you my arm to eat if it had any meet on it." One women succeeded in selling her baby to a missionary's next-door neighbor for ten cash (half a cent), and she was so grateful that she got down and knocked her head on the ground. I have had several fine specimens of Chinese childhood offered to me.

The sale of children provides prosperous families with slave girls, adopted sons and prospective daughters-in-law. It also, alse, recruits the brothels of the Orient, Shanghai's traffickers in human flesh are said already to have gone to the famine field. Missionaries in the same city are likewise taking steps to establish an orphanage or home for such children as the parents are disposing of. Many infants, and invalids as well, are being cast on the roadsids to die, or else being thrown into the canals. The homeless refugees are frantic with distress, for countless homes itas well as several native Christian families were washed away by the flood which caused the famine.

A stream of relief is now on its way to the famine district, and it must be maintained for five months. The missionaries are busy for the most part helpers from other paris of northern Chine, with handling freight boats, wheelbarrows, trains, carrying coelies, distributing stations and other methods of getting food to the hungry that they are with purchasing. But their work is elementally Christian, even if it bears no denominational or missionary label. Those in the outer world will remember the missionaries' part in this famine.

It May Be True.

A Pittsburger who was stopping at a hotel in this city was having a much more hilarious time than the manager of the house thought best for the comfort of the other guests, and he was invited to leave. The man was feeling about as happy as Talleyrand was when he was extended as at any other time since his arrival in town. He had his suitcase partly packed and at the checkroom of the hotel, and sent a bell boy up to his room after the rest of his belongings. The boy returned with a good-sized armful of shirts, neckties and diaeen.

Standing in the lobby of the hotel the Pittsburger dumped the whole lot into the case and closed it. Then mens into the case and closed it. Then he beckoned the manager aside and started out, with shirtsleeves, neckties, and legs of unmentionables dangling from the coat. The manager protected from the case. The manager protected the Pittsburger's gaze upon the array.

"Boy," ordered the happy one, "a pair of 2-a-schisters." A few minutes later he proceeded before an amused crowd to trim the suitcase from the outside. Then, leaving the trimmings on the lobby floor, he tacked toward the door.—New York Sun.

WHAT ONE MERCHANT DID

Correspondent of Home Trade League Testifies to Value of Publicity

One country merchant writes the Home Trade league as follows:

"Since I have adopted the city idea of advertising—naming new goods with prices, and at the same time making known what I desire to dispose of et or ehont cost to make room for new goods—my sales have not only increased very largely with regular customers, but I have secured many new ones. Not only this—insisted of the former writen spending from a half to an hour and a half looking about the store to see what there is in stock they may want and taking the clerk's time who otherwise would have a chance to sell goods to several other customers, they come in and tell you must go after it. In it reasonable to expect it will come to you unsought?

Take the experiance of this Home Trade league correspondent as a guide. He hod the goods. He wanted to sell them. His proceeding was simple. Through publicity, which in his case simply meant attractive and truthful advertising, he brought the goods and the people together. Results were never in doubt.

To sum up, successful re compets with the powerful catalogue houses of the cities the country merchant must use a measure equal their methods. They have won by publicity. Meet them on that ground. Match advencement with advencement. Use the medium in your local paper. Let your edvertisements soy something, and mean what they say. Let the people know what you have to sell, and depend upon it, they will come to buy.

IS HUMAN WEAKNESS

THE DESIRE TO GET SOMETHING FOR NOTHING.

AN IGNIS FATUUS TO AVOID

One Cause That Has Led to the Downfall of Many—Fallacy That Ever Tends Toward Evil.

A man who won the confidence, respect and edmiration of the people of his state was elected to the United States senate. Soon it is discovered that he was "owned by the railroads," bought by favors and instead of representing the interests of the people who sent him to his high place in the nation's councils, preferred to represent the corporations that made it possible for him to ride over railroads without cost. It is only a damnable case of human inclination to get something for nothing.

The member of a state legislature was accused of showing favors, not to legislation favorable to the railroads and corporations. He was charged with riding on passes, and it was known that his principal supporters, too, rode free over the railroads. Something for nothing between the lumen desire to secure something for nothing.

The mayor of a city regularly occupied a box at the leading theater; he rode out a free street car ticket to the conducter, enjoyed free drinks at the bar-rooms patronized by men who wanted something for nothing. He was accused of favoritism and at last his greed caused him to enter into dishonest deals that landed him in the penitentiary.

On certain days of the month at numerous supply depots controlled by county and city charities, long rows of men and women can be seen awaiting their turn to get a small supply of flour, sugar and other necessaries of life. Some are helpless, deformed, and their looks tell stories of misery, but there are others who have no appearance of need. Here again we find man and woman desiring to get something for nothing.

On special sales days in the retail districts of every large city great crowds can be seen about the doors and windows of great department stores, crushing, fighting to get to the bargain counters, all bent upon getting something of value for little or nothing.

From the highest walks of life to the lowest the same fallacy and fault can be found in evidence to show the weakness of the individual is the struggle to get something for nothing. Wonderful bargains are advertised, and the masses rush to buy, without stopping to ask in the matter of any comparisons of value. Good business judgment is cast in the background and the madness to get something for nothing.

The get-rich-quick operator uses the same methods to lead to his trap victims with dollars as do the railroads, the big department stores and the others who have certain objects to gain. It is always the promise held out to give something for inadequate compensation, without its equal in expenditure of money or labor that allows the freuds to succeed. There is magic in the "something for nothing" deal. It is a bait that catches people in every rank and walk of life. It often is the cause of the downfall of men who have all the abilities to succeed. It is a fallacy that tends toward evil. There can nothing be gained without adequate compensation. "The something for nothing is an ignis fatuus that its wise will avoid.

SHARP PRACTICES.

Schemes by Which People in Country Districts Are Defrauded.

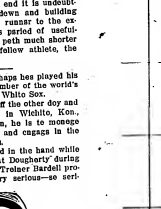
One of the winniog games that is widely played is the giving of prizes for the sale of baking powder, flavoring extracts, etc. Numerous concerns are interested in this line of business. Premiums are offered to club raisers, and an outfit for canvessing is sent for a dollar or so, or perhaps furnished free if some person will vouch for the honesty of the applicant. But a "bond" is required as security for goods sold. The offer is so attractive that many are induced to order a let of the goods to get the premium. The goods are sent at the cheapest and most trashy kind. The soap, the extracts, the spacies are all of the poorest quality often adulterated and unwholesome. The person who orders them realizes that the let is a fraud. If they are not sold by the agent, it matters little to the concern sending them out, as the person responsible for the honesty of the "agent" will be informed that they will be held for the price of the goods. If he does have trouble, the egent will send the money due, and make the best of a bad bargain. It is a good thing to avoid all propositions that offer much for little.

Give Charm to Town.

Attractive streets, well paved, good sidewalks, clean appearing buildings, signs arranged well, all go to add a charm to e town. One of the things that often gives strangers to a town a favorable impression is the look around in which storekeepers and others take care of the exterior of their places. Often not a step about the place is to be found to designate the character of the business carried on, and this may be know, by a casual glance at the open door. The windows are often arranged in such a way as to give little idea of the goods handled. During the summer time awnings hanging low over the walks, and in winter may stoop to avoid them, are found in many places. Just a little care is needed to improve along these lines. An attractive sign does not cost much and is a good investment for the storekeeper. Cleanliness in front of business places makes a good impression. In fact strangers will seldom enter a store if the outside appearance indicates slovenliness and carelessness. The up-to-date merchant will always be found with a well-cared-for establishment. It is quite often you can tell the business importance of a man in the community by the appearance of his store. Make business places attractive as possible. It may cost you a little money, a little extra labor, but it will pay in the long run.

Pays to Keep the Town Neat.

The streets of a town overgrown with weeds never makes a good impression on the stranger. Good sidewalks, well-kept streets in the residence and business portions of a place, always speak well for the habits of its residents.



Sporting Gossip.

It is noticeable in reviewing athletic history that the "athletic life" of a weight thrower outlasts that of a runner nearly double. Men like John Flanagan, Martin and Dick Sheridan, Dennis Horgan, Dick Sheldon, Alfred Flew and J. S. Mitchell were good a decade ago, and all took to be able to go along of the same clip for five more years. But what of the runners who were topnotchers a dacede ago? What hos becoms of A. C. Bowen, Jarvis, W. E. Schutt, Johnnis Cregen and Dick Grant—the boys who were famous as runners six or eight years ago? Their "athlete life" is over, while the big weight throwers are still in their prime, after six or eight years' campaigning. Difference in training methods moy he sold to be responsible for this condition of affairs. The weight men wsxm fat on training, his object being to take on weight and still retain his speed. His has his beer and cigors if he wants them, and seldom, if ever, is in danger of becoming "fine." The weight thrower's effort in competition seldom costs him more than a pound or two. Campers this line of work with that of the average runner and you can readily see why the weight men stays in the game longer. The runner is no good until he gets "fine" and begins to look drawn in the face. While he is in flesh he might just as well sit at home for all the good it will do him to go into a race. Then, too, his effort in competition is vastly more wearing than a weight thrower's task. Aside from cross country runs, among the athletes, a man running five miles generally loses from four to six. Besides this, the runner loses weight in his training every day, and it is undoubtedly this loering down and building up that effects the runner to the extent of making his period of usefulness no longer by much much shorter than that of his fellow athlete, the weight thrower.

Frank Isbell perhaps hes played his last game as a member of the world's champion Chicago White Sox.

Isbell was paid off the other day and left for his home in Wichita, Kon., where, next season, he is to monoge the Wichita team and engage in the hordware business.

Isbell was spiked in the hand while frolicking with Pat Dougherty during morning practice. Trainer Bardell announced the injury serious—se serious that Isbell would he unable to play during the remainder of the season.

The loss to the White Sox will not he great. Isbell has not been playing good ball, and it is known that he has but two years left and could not keep up the gait. He is worn out, and the strain was so great that he "quit," to use the baseball term and could not finish. Fly balls fell safe which he ordinarily would have captured easily, and he seemed to have lost his power around with his usual force. Apparently both Isbell and the White Sox management were ready to sever connections.

Ameteur and professional billiardists are considering new methods of carroms for the season which is about to begin. The amazing records set by Calvin Demarest, the boy who won the national amateur championship, and by Jake Schaefer, Jr., and by George Sutton and Willie Hoppe of runs and averages at 18-inch balk line play is evident that some changes must be made in the game. George F. Slosson has recently favored a 16-inch balk line, and so have other of the professionals. His idea is supported by a number of the foremost professionals, among them Maurice Daly. The 16-inch game would be absolutely new and would cause the professionals to readjust their angles. Slosson is an earnest advocate of a new American championship basis established under such restrictions, and plens are already afoot to bring such a tournament about in Madison Square Gerden Concert hall. Willie Hoppe, who is now in Germany, has written in favor of the project, which would bring him back to this country. Hoppe has been playing in Holland, with some matches in the early summer in Spain, where he displayed his skilful manipulation of the ivories before King Alfonso.

At the National Capital

Gossip of People and Events Gathered in Washington

WASHINGTON.—As a forerunner of the embassy about to be established by the Turkish government in Washington, Mohemd Ali Bey is coming to this capital as minister from the sublime porte. The news came to the state department from Ambassador Leishmann at Constantinople, who cabled the department that the porte had requested him to ascertain whether Mohemd would be acceptable in a ministerial capacity. The department replied affirmatively, and it is understood that the new minister will be in Washington by the time that President Roosevelt returns to this city from his western trip.

In the selection of Mohemd Bay as minister to Washington the sultan has again given an illustration of the extent to which personal feeling dominates officials in Turkey in such appointments. The new minister is the son of one of the intimates of the Turkish ruler, the well-known Izzet Bay, the sultan's personal secretary for foreign affairs, which office, necessarily, has brought him into frequent and close contact with his sovereign. Izzet Bey is also legal adviser to the sublime porte. The fact that with sufficient influence with the sultan to enable him to select almost any diplomatic post for his son, Izzet should have chosen Washington, is regarded as a manifestation of the growing appreciation in Turkey of the importance of America as a factor in international affairs.

UNCLE SAM ENRICHED BY LOST MONEY ORDERS

A WASHINGTON woman discovered some days ago that her German nurse was destroying the money orders she purchased to remit to the fatherland. She had torn up within the last five years more than $500 of money orders, thinking they were receipts for the money deposited in the office at Washington and that the money had been duly sent to her old mother in Germany.

This incident recalls the fact that there has accumulated in the national treasury millions of dollars, possibly ten millions, since the establishment of the present system in 1864.

An official, speaking of the system, said: "This vast accumulation of money is steadily being augmented from year to year, and unless the people become better acquainted with the character of a money order transaction the accumulated sum promises to become almost fabulous. This money has accumulated through no fault of the United States.

"For one thing it is known that persons purchasing money orders ignorantly destroy them, believing that the order constitutes nothing more than a receipt. Many persons also are in the habit of purchasing money orders before traveling from one place to another, with a view to converting them into cash as needed, and these are lost through carelessness, by fire, or otherwise.

"Notwithstanding this, the government has wisely made provision for the payment of money orders lost or destroyed, by the issuance, upon satisfactory proof of loss or destruction, of a duplicate money order payable to the payee or remitter making application therefor, as the case may be. Provision is also made for the payment of orders which are not presented for payment before the time limit provided by law has expired.

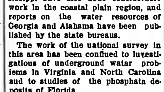
"In one instance a claim for the payment of a lost postal note was allowed 25 years after it became invalid. It will be seen that as trustee for its citizens in the transfer of private funds the United States exercises diligence in an attempt to find the rightful owner. And yet millions are yet outstanding for which claimants will never appear. This vast sum is held in suspense by the government."

A TREASURE HUNT BY THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

THE active cooperation of the states of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, from the mouth of the Potomac to the Mississippi, is enlisted in an investigation for which preparations are under way at the United States geological survey.

A systematic study is to be made of the age, character and general relations of the rocks of the coastal plain, special effort being made to determine the position and extent of beds of economic interest, including water-bearing beds, phosphate deposits, fuller's earth and other materials.

The general plan of the investigation was formulated at Washington on January 1, 1907, at a conference invited by the director of the national survey.



At this conference the work that had already been done was discussed and arrangements were made for one of the most extensive cooperative investigations ever undertaken by the geological survey. The discussion brought out the fact that the work in New Jersey and Maryland had been completed under the auspices of the states, while that in Alabama is far advanced.

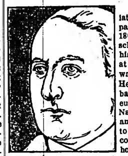
The geological surveys of North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi have also done considerable work in the coastal plain region, and reports on the water resources of Georgia and Alabama have been published by the state bureaus.

The work of the national survey in this area has been confined to investigations of underground water problems in Virginia and North Carolina and to studies of the phosphate deposits of Florida.

If present plans are carried out field work in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida will be completed in 1907, and that in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi will be reserved for 1908.

RAILROAD TOTALS THAT MAKE A BIG SHOWING

THE interstate commerce commission has made public an abstract of its nineteenth annual statistical report covering the year ending June 30, 1906, showing the par value of railway capital outstanding was $14,570,421,478, or $67,936 per mile of the railways in the United States. Of this over 33 per cent. paid no dividends. Of the railway stock outstanding $2,257,175,790 was owned by railway corporations and of railway bonds $641,805,030 were so reported.



The aggregate gross earnings from the operated mileage of 222,340 miles of lines were $2,325,765,167, being $243,282,761 greater than in 1905. Their operating expenses were $1,536,877,271, or $146,275,119 more than in 1905. The net earnings aggregated $788,887,896, an increase of $97,007,642. The net earnings per mile of line averaged $3,548. The income attributable to other sources than operating reached $256,639,591.

Deducting fixed and other charges, the report says $335,186,328 is the net income for the year available for dividends or surplus. There were 977,507,836 passengers carried, an increase of over 60,000,000, and 1,641,374,219 tons of freight carried, an increase of over 202,000,000.

The report shows 10,617 persons killed and 97,706 injured. There was a total of 1,521,355 persons on the pay roll. The report shows that one passenger was killed for every 2,227,041 carried, while in 1905 one passenger was killed for every 1,375,856 carried. One person was injured for every 74,276 passengers carried, as against one injured in every 70,655 passengers carried in 1905.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

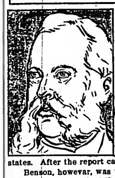
TAKES HIS FATHER'S PLACE

Edward Morris, who succeeds his father, the late Nelson Morris, as the head of the big Chicago packing concern, was born in Chicago October 1, 1866. He received his education in the public schools of the city and embarked in business with his father in 1880. Rapid promotion followed and at the time of the death of Nelson Morris the son was vice-president and treasurer of the company. He is also vice president and treasurer of the Fairbank Canning company, vice president of the Consumers' Cotton Oil company and a director of the National Packing company, A. M. Rothschild & Co. and the Union Rendering company. In addition to being an officer or director in various other companies Mr. Morris is a member of the Chicago board of trade. Mr. Morris is a member of the Mid-Day and Standard clubs and lives at 4455 Grand boulevard.

Mr. Morris, in becoming the head of the big packing company, will have charge of one of the largest business institutions in the country. His father came to the United States while a boy, without a cent of money in his pockets, and hired out for a mere pittance per week. He worked at the butcher trade and in no great while started in the meat business for himself, success crowning his efforts from the outset.

The attack on the meat trusts aroused the country but a short time ago, and the big combine is said to-day to be suffering from the notoriety it gained, and it is declared that the foreign trade of the meat barons has not yet recovered from the shock and exposure.

FULFILLING A GREAT MISSION

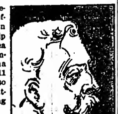


Joseph Hodges Choate, in his address at the unveiling of the statue to his great cousin, Rufus Choate, in the Boston courthouse October 15, 1898, said, "Many a noted orator, many a great lawyer, has been lost in oblivion in 40 years after the grave has closed over him."

To-day Joseph H. Choate seems to be in no great danger of oblivion. As one of America's delegates to the peace conference, he has been a commanding figure, and if the conference really accomplishes anything it will bear the strong impress of Mr. Choate.

Born on January 24, 1832, at Salem, Mass., of colonial stock on both sides, he graduated from the Dane Law school in 1854 and was admitted to the Massachusetts bar, but a year later went to New York and began an active life that has led to the sounding of his name around the globe. He became the leader of the New York bar and handled some of the largest and most important cases tried there and in the higher courts. Except as president of the New York constitutional convention of 1894, he had filled no public office, and, apparently, had aspired to none. In the following year, however, he stepped upon the broader stage of national and international life, as ambassador of the United States at the court of St. James, the most important foreign station within the gift of the government.

IN LAW'S CLUTCHES AT LAST



John A. Benson, the wealthy San Francisco real estate dealer, who has just been sentenced to a long term of imprisonment for fraude against the government, is known as the king of the land grafters. The sentencing of Benson shows the beginning of the end of a man who, for more than 30 years, has been piling up thousands and tens of thousands of dollars by means of fraud, thievery and corruption.

Benson is nearly 70 years old, a jolly, jovial, genial sort of a man who wears a $100 suit of clothes as if it were a ten dollar "hand-me-down." Benson's downfall and exposure came when the report of the interior department was filed some time ago and he was charged with being the head of land swindlers operating over a dozen western states. After the report came the arrest.

Benson, however, was well known to the government at Washington, having been chased out of the capital not so very long after the war for being mixed up in some kind of a shady financial transaction. It was Benson's accuracy that caused his downfall. He was a surveyor and in making surveys for the government his work never showed an error. All the other surveyors had trouble at the end of their lines, but Benson—never. He had contracts for enrolling township after township, and the work called for the payment of hundreds of thousands of dollars to him. He collected, in fact, above a quarter of a million, and no mistakes in his work. An investigation followed and it was found that Benson was a clever thief—who sat in his office, made his maps and collected pay for work he hadn't done.

But it was under the "lieu land" act, signed by President McKinley on June 4, 1897, that Benson was convicted. Benson's scheme was to send out dummies to get land from the government. In this he was assisted by his partner Hyde. The land was then turned over to Benson and Hyde. They ran out of names and advertised for help. The names of the applicants were used and more land obtained. They became bolder and bought up state officials essential to their schemes, and always got first whack at the state and school lands about to be incorporated in a forest reserve. When a bona fide entryman came along and contrived to get in ahead of them the state officials held up his entry until the swindlers could be notified and get a false claim filed.

McCREA PICKED FOR LONG TRIP

Capt. Henry McCrea, commanding the battleship Georgia, may not be included in the older officers who are to give way to younger blood on the battleships that are to make the long trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Capt. McCrea is an efficient officer, and only recently was commended by the president for his actions on the Georgia at the time of the explosion in which 11 of the ship's officers and crew were killed. Also the president, through Capt. McCrea, complimented the crew of the ship for its conduct during that fearful mishap.

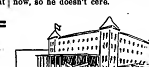
Of the 18 officers now commanding the ships that are scheduled to take the long voyage, it is said only four, and with Capt. McCrea, only five, will be permitted to go.

Capt. McCrea is about 57 years old. He has been in the navy since 1866, when he was appointed to Annapolis from Indiana.

He prevented the landing of troops for an attack on the town, which would have been extremely dangerous to the life and property of foreigners. It was due to a conference between Capt. McCrea and the commander of the Colombian gunboat, Gen. Pinzon, that an indefinite postponement of the proposed bombardment of the city was obtained. The ultimate result was that Panama achieved its independence with scarcely a shot fired or a drop of blood shed. Furthermore the United States was able at last to secure the Panama canal zone.

Around the Metropolis

What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner



NEW YORK.—Miss Liberty of Bedloe's island served notice a short time since that the inside fortification wall surrounding her really must be graded and filled, and the same must be done for the exterior walls, steps and wharf if she was expected to stand perpetually on the island. So James H. Ferguson of the city has got the contract to do this, getting $14,145 for the first job and $2,945 for the second. Then Miss Liberty gets new footgear, the McHerg-Barton company having agreed to furnish the pedestal with a granite facing to the outside steps, the tunnels and terreplein for $22,400.

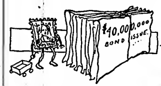
The pedestal is to be repaired and the interior of the lady put in shape for $7,800, while a new bronze dress will cost $1,800.

Then an elevator concern is to install a fast elevator to run through Miss Liberty's huge right arm for $10,890, and a spiral stairway to her shoulders. Miss Liberty is not sure that she will like that. Dear me! When they construct spiral stairways inside one, with cars and things, what is the world coming to? It will only mean so many more people climbing around your ribs or shooting up through your spinal column.

That's what she thinks, for she has confided her views on the matter to the seagulls, which talk, as every one knows, and to the skippers of the great ocean liners going out and the five-day boats plowing in over the trail from Europe. If it had not been that the captains, the pilots, the sailormen and the gulls signified to her in their various ways that they liked to see their "best girl" decked out as finely as possible she might not have cared a bit. But Miss Liberty is not sure that she will not think more of the new wharfhouse to be erected at the statue's base, with a pretty fence around it, than of the spiral stairways and elevators. It gives one such an uncomfortable feeling to take a stairway into the system, especially a spiral stairway, and an elevator must be worse. One who has never tried elevators does not know, of course. And all this will cost more than $60,000, but Uncle Sam is prosperous just now, so he doesn't care.

OLD WEST POINT HOTEL MARKED FOR DEMOLITION

WEST POINT hotel, that historic landmark on the Hudson, will disappear before long, and in another part of the reservation of the United States Military academy the government is to erect a $250,000 hostelry.



Every convenience will be used in the new structure. It is to have a frontage of 180 feet and a depth of 80, and is to contain several hundred rooms. From its lofty roof those who abide beneath its roof will be able to have a view of the broad sweep of the Hudson, although the outlook will not be quite so picturesque as that from the verandas of the old hotel.

The present hotel is conducted along the same lines as it was when Jefferson Davis visited there and Robert E. Lee was wearing his cadet chevrons. Its service and its bill of fare have not been modified. Dinner is served in the middle of the day, and beefsteak, chops, tea, code biscuits and canned peaches appear regularly for supper. The same negro waiters have stood at their posts year in and year out.

For the 70 years since the hotel has been opened the government has made on an average of $3,000 a year from it, or $210,000 in all, which is considerably more than the old wooden structure is worth.

After the old hotel is removed there will be built upon its site a large administration building for officers of the academy.

"POSTAGE STAMP BIDDER" FAILS TO LAND BONDS

ABRAHAM WHITE, the bold and unique genius of Wall street, and known as the "original postage stamp bidder," has come to grief at last in his latest and most daring exploit in high finance. White tried to carry off the city's entire new $40,000,000 issue of bonds with a draft on a $25,000 corporation.

The draft was for $800,000 and was drawn on the Greater New York Security company, a corporation of which he is supposed to be the sole active member, and which does not figure in the directory of the building where it is located. This concern is capitalized at $25,000. It gave a printed acceptance of the draft, which thus bore a semblance to a certified check for $800,000.

The draft was presented for payment through the Guardian Trust company, one of the city depositories. Mr. White and his money were equally elusive. The comptroller gave him until three o'clock to produce the money. When the time limit expired the cash had not appeared. Comptroller Metz then threw out the bid.

There were other bids for portions of the bond issue at higher figures than White's lowest bids, but he would have received a large part of the $40,000,000 bid, had he been able to produce the money. It is supposed that he found the deal too big to put through when it was too late.

White was awarded $1,500,000 of United States bonds when John C. Carlisle was treasurer, and when he had little or no money. The law did not require a deposit with bids, and all it cost him was 47 cents in postage stamps, hence he is called "the original postage stamp bidder." He cleared up about $100,000 on that transection, prevailing upon Russell Sage to finance it. He formed the bond company, and at times made equally daring and successful deals.

THE NOVEL LOSING ITS GRIP ON GOTHAMITES

THIS city is becoming more and more literary, and its taste for literature is steadily turning to the serious books of science and history, to the classics, and away from works of current fiction. The evidence of this tendency is to be found in the returns of the circulation department of the New York public library, with its 40 odd branches scattered throughout the city. Four years ago the number of volumes given out by this department reached a total of 2,332,725; this year the number will approximate 5,500,000, an increase that is unparalleled in the history of any library in the world. During these four years 17 branch libraries have been added to the public library system, a fact which explains in large measure the phenomenal increase in the circulation of volumes in so short a space of time.

Twenty years ago, before the formation of the New York public library, the number of volumes given out by the free circulating libraries was considerably under a million. To-day, with branch libraries in every part of the city, the popularity of current works of fiction is confined almost entirely to the upper west side. This popularity was sufficient to give the first place over all books in the city four years ago to Parker's "Right of Way." This year the favorite so far is Chambers' "Fighting Chance." Fiction is least popular on the lower east side of the city. There the current novel is almost unknown, while "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is still the unquestioned favorite. The largest of all the city's circulating libraries is down there in the Educational Alliance building in East Broadway.

WALL STREET HEARS SOME PLAIN TALK

BISHOP OF LONDON PREACHES FROM TRINITY PULPIT IN NEW YORK.

Great Throng Present—Pierpont Morgan and Other Notables Are Warned That Life Is a Stewardship, Not An Ownership.

New York, Sept. 27.—From the pulpit of historic Trinity church in the heart of the country's great financial district, Rt. Rev. Arthur Foley Winsington Ingram, bishop of London, at noon Thursday delivered the message: "Life is a stewardship, not an ownership."

A greater throng perhaps never sought admission to the edifice, and when all who could be accommodated were within, hundreds lingered outside to catch a glimpse of the noted divine.

Notable Man Stand in Crowd.

No seats were reserved and pewholders of Trinity parish had to run their chances with the others.

Notable laymen and men prominent in Wall street had to stand on the edge of the crowd. J. Pierpont Morgan stood at the end of an aisle throughout the opening services. Then a younger man gave him his seat. The audience included many women. Probably there were a hundred of the clergy standing and the rest of the men seemed to have come from the banks, law offices and brokerage houses in the neighborhood.

It was surely not such an audience as the bishop was accustomed to during the nine years of his settlement's work in the East End of London, as the head of the Oxford House, though his sermons now are for the most part preached from the pulpit of St. Paul's cathedral.

Hits at the Financiers.

But the bishop of London is evidently not a man who looks over his audience first and picks his words accordingly. To-day he said:

"I know not to whom I am preaching. I shall be as frank here as I am in London. No man who is really a Christian would sell his Christian hands with one dollar, the possession of which he could not justify in the sight of heaven."

The bishop presented the figure of an athletic man, tall and angular, with a deep resonant voice. He spoke slowly and distinctly and frequently emphasized his remarks with gestures. His text was from the second verse of the sixteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. Luke:

"Render the account of thy stewardship; for thou canst be no longer steward."

Life But a Stewardship.

"The one thing," he said, "the one sentence which above all others I would say to you, a sentence as well nearsred in London and New York and which, if adopted, would cleanse the life on both sides of the Atlantic is—life is a stewardship and not an ownership.

"All the evils in the world are due to the neglect of the Christian principle that we are here only as custodians of what we have, be it wealth or anything else, based upon the fact that Christ died to redeem man and again place him in fair standing. If city officials and government servants would live up to these two thoughts, there would be no boodling, no miscarriage of justice and no failure in hearts."

The bishop left at night for Washington, where he will call upon the president.

RICHARD WALTON ARRESTED.

Alleged Murderer of Chicago Woman Caught in Springfield.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 27.—Richard Walton, the negro charged with the murder of Mrs. Lillian White Grant in Chicago, by strangling her July 18, was arrested Thursday morning and is being held awaiting orders from Chicago.

Walton was picked up at the corner of Twelfth and Miller streets at two o'clock in the morning by two officers on the charge of vagrancy and when taken before the police magistrate was dismissed and ordered out of the city. Before he had left the station, however, he was recognized from a photograph furnished the police and was rearrested on suspicion. He later admitted that he was Walton, and also admitted that he was wanted for several minor offences. A reward of $400 was offered for his arrest and conviction.

Walton, it is alleged, strangled Mrs. Grant at her home while she was dressing and robbed her dead body of ten dollars.

Root Passes Through St. Louis.

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 27.—Secretary of State Elihu Root, accompanied by his wife, daughter and private secretary, passed through St. Louis Thursday night, on their way to Mexico City, where they will be entertained by President Diaz and where Secretary Root will spend several weeks, dealing with questions of state. Aside from declaring he is not a candidate for the presidency, Secretary Root was reticent on affairs of the day.

Carrie Nation Free Again.

Washington, Sept. 27.—Mrs. Carrie Nation, recently committed to the jail here, was released yesterday, her fine having been paid by a friend.

MAY EXTEND WIRE STRIKE

NEW YORK LOCAL WANTS PRESS AND BROKERS' MEN OUT.

Asks National Officers to Have All Contract Operators Throughout Country Quit Work.

New York, Sept. 26.—The New York local of the Commercial Telegraphers' union voted Wednesday night to call out all leased wire operators employed by the press and brokers' offices in this city. If such action shall be sanctioned by the national officers. Action by the national officers will be awaited before anything further is done.

It was voted also to ask the national officers to issue a call for the brokers' and press telegraphers throughout the country to quit work. The action was upon the men who are now working under contract is made in the interests of those who have struck against the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies.

The decision to call upon the press and broker operators to break their individual contracts and go out in a sympathetic strike was reached after a heated debate which occupied several hours of a meeting of the New York local No. 16. On the final vote it was declared that the strikers were practically unanimous.

Daniel L. Russell, chairman of the strike committee, who until Wednesday had opposed the movement for a sympathetic strike, made a vigorous speech in which he reversed his position and declared that expediency demanded such a war measure as was proposed.

An amendment introduced by John G. McCloskey of the General News Service, exempting from the strike operators of leased wires who were bound by a union contract with their employers, signed six months previous to the strike of the commercial men, was received with loud cheering, and the original resolution passed with little opposition.

After the meeting Chairman Russell said if the present course was not effective, the railroad operators would be called upon to quit work.

STEAMER TRAIN IN COLLISION.

Boston Special Carrying Many Americans—Not One Dead.

Paris, Sept. 26.—The rear coach of the second section of the special train carrying 150 first-class passengers from Paris to Cherbourg to embark on the White Star line steamer Adriatic, for New York, was telescoped Wednesday by the regular Rouen express at the mouth of the Havre! tunnel, just beyond Nantes. Strangely, no one was killed, and according to the latest authentic information, no one was seriously injured.

All the passengers in the last coach, however, were badly shaken up and seven or eight were injured. A man sustained a fractured leg, and a woman, it is feared, suffered internal injuries. All the injured American passengers, with the exception of one, continued on their way to Cherbourg.

WILL HOLD WHEAT FOR $1.25.

Minnesota Society of Equity Urges Farmers Not to Sell Now.

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 26.—The Minnesota union of the American Society of Equity, which claims the allegiance of 30,000 farmers in the northwest, passed a resolution at its convention here Wednesday afternoon calling on its members to hold their wheat for $1.25 per bushel. There is a large amount of wheat belonging to members to the society in storage in Duluth and none is in granaries and elevators throughout the state.

It was decided to hold fast for $1.20 at Minneapolis, oats for 70 cents, rye for 41 cents, timothy seed for $5.50 a hundred and hay for $20 a ton.

FOURTEEN DROWN IN ALABAMA.

Ferryboat Crossing the Tombigbee River is Capsized.

Mobile, Ala., Sept. 27.—A ferryboat crossing the Tombigbee river at the government works at Coffeeville, Clarke county, Alabama, was capsized, drowning one white boy and 13 negroes. The boy was Leslie Vernaille, 16 years of age, residing in Oakdale, a suburb of this city.

Nebraska Wins Rate Victory.

Omaha, Sept. 27.—Judges T. C. Munger and W. H. Munger, in the United States court Thursday night denied the injunction asked for by the railroads operating in Nebraska to prevent the state railway commission er from enforcing the two-cent fare rate. The restraining order issued some time ago by Judge T. C. Munger was dissolved. This is regarded as a decisive victory for the state, although it is presumed that the case will be appealed.

Highway Robber Confesses.

Wapakoneta, O., Sept. 26.—Forest Kerns, who was held up and robbed by three masked men who took every thing he had, even his clothes, Wednesday identified John O'Neil of Chicago, a racetrack tout, as one of the thieves. SIX HUNDRED DEAD IN JAPAN FLOODS

SUCCESSION OF CALAMITIES PURSUE MIKADO'S REALM ON LAND AND SEA.

Disaster Follows Close After the Burning of Hakodate, the Bursting of Battleship and Wills Government Trys to Relieve Famine Sufferers.

Victoria, B. C., Sept. 28.—Advices of a terrible disaster due to great floods prevailing in Japan have been received.

The overflow of the river Otonashigawa, running through the town of Fukuchiyama, near Kyoto, caused the loss of more than 600 lives in the river, which rose more than 50 feet.

The barracks of the Twentieth regiment and the Tenth engineers' battalion, situated on the heights near the town, escaped damage when the town was overwhelmed and the troops were hurried out to render what assistance could be given to the survivors and to rescue drowning people. The population of the town was over 12,000. Hurriedly 50 or more sailing junks were secured and despatched to the scene, soldiers manning the junks and saving many persons. The police have recovered 600 bodies and others are believed to have been lost. Gen. Kuroki and Gov. Omori, of Kyotofue, were in the city, the former being engaged in inspecting the troops, and are said to have narrowly escaped drowning.

The disaster proved an exceptionally heavy blow to Japan, because it came as a succession of calamities on land and sea. The troubles began with a famine in the northern part of the empire, when thousands died of starvation and many persons died.

While the government was doing its utmost to relieve the famine sufferers, Hakodate was burned, with a loss of 100 lives, and nearly 100,000 being left homeless. Strenuous efforts by the government were exerted to succor the survivors. Then floods began in several parts of the country, with great destruction of property and the loss of many lives.

Meantime there was a disastrous explosion on one of the battleships at sea, 20 lives being lost, while in one of the best issues of the year there was another explosion that killed 100 miners.

Public mourning following these disasters had not ceased when news reached the capital of the drowning of 600 in the latest flood. Despite its being already taxed almost to the limit, the government is relieving those who survived the deluge but lost all their property in it.

Disastrous floods and fatal waves are comparatively common in Japan.

In June, 1896, a large portion of the coast of Japan was devastated for a distance of 175 miles, 27,000 being lost and 60,000 perple being made homeless. The inundation is said to have been the result of an earthquake wave.

Flames Sweep a Chinese City.

Hongkong, Sept. 28.—Hundreds of houses and many boats and pontoons were destroyed by a fire at Wuchow. It is feared that the loss of life was heavy.

The conflagration is said to be due to incendiaries growing out of the recent establishment of a new interior customs station at Wuchow. The inhabitants of which are bitterly opposed to any extra taxation.

CONSPIRATORS ARE CAUGHT

GEN. PARRA AND GEN. OCASSI ARRESTED IN HAVANA.

Strike on Two Big Railroads—General Tie Up of All Cuban Railroads Feared.

Havana, Cuba, Sept. 27.—It is believed that the plot of Cuban conspirators to overturn the provisional government has been nipped in the bud by the timely action of Gov. Magoon.

The secret police early Thursday arrested Gen. Masso Parra, and a little later took into custody Gen. Juan Ducasi and Gen. Laura Mirat, charged with conspiring against public order.

A general strike of the employes of the United Railroads and the Havana Central railroad was declared Thursday. Trains are running with the help of the engineers only, without firemen or conductors.

A tie up of all the roads in the island is feared.

Gen. Parra is the alleged leader of the conspiracy to start a revolution against the Americans in Cuba, with the use of funds supplied from or through some firm on Broadway, New York. It is known that simultaneously with the arrival of Parra at Havana three others, Domingues, went on account of their previous revolutionary record, also reached this port, and it is stated that other individuals of a similar character are working in eastern Cuba. The government has knowledge of the fact that Gen. Jimines, the ex-president of Ban Domingo, has recently been at Santiago de Cuba, but whether he was connected with the conspiracy is not yet known.

It is known that the conspiracy was originally hatched in New York by certain Americans whose names, it is said, already are in the possession of the United States government secret service officers, and it is stated that the leaders were simply professional revolutionists hired for the job.

In consequence of the arrests made here Thursday it is believed the movement will result in a miserable fiasco.

Gov. Magoon, however, is not taking any chances. He is amply prepared, with 5,000 American soldiers and 6,000 rurale guards, to crush the movement at an instant after it is started.

SAYS HIS TRIAL IS UNFAIR.

Rev. W. P. Ferguson Resigns from the Nebraska Methodist Conference.

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 28.—Rev. Wilbert P. Ferguson of University place Friday resigned from the state Methodist conference rather than submit to the church trial in which he was being tried for unbecoming conduct with Mrs. E. A. Cross, a member of his congregation. His counsel declared the withdrawal took place because of the prejudiced rulings of Rev. J. P. Jones, the minister presiding at the trial. Mr. Ferguson's counsel asserted that the ruling preventing depositions from Mrs. Ferguson or reflecting on Mrs. Cross was highly unfair.

President and Telegraph Strike.

Washington, Sept. 27.—President Roosevelt said to-day that he had consented to receive some documentary statements from the striking telegraph operators and that when these are in his hands he will undoubtedly call into consultation Commissioner of Labor Neill. Further than this, he said, no arrangements had been made for any conference regarding the strike.

Yokohama, Sept. 28.—The steamer Minnesota, with Secretary Taft and his party on board, arrived here at 7 o'clock Saturday morning.

INVESTIGATING LUMBER TRUST

THE FEDERAL GRAND JURY WILL BEGIN AT ONCE A SEARCHING INVESTIGATION.

Witnesses are Coming from all Over the Northwest. It is Alleged that Some Sensational Testimony will be Produced.

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.—An investigation of the Lumber trust, credited with being the most colossal in the world, and having its headquarters in this city will be made by the federal grand jury here this week beginning to-morrow.

Fifty witnesses have been subpoenaed to appear, twenty of them from this state, while thirty of them are coming from Iowa, North and South Dakota.

The testimony which will be given before the grand jury will be sensational in character, it is alleged, and the big lumber companies of Minneapolis, which have formed through the small branch offices of the West a chain extending to the coast, will be grilled thoroughly in the coming investigation, is the impression given out.

It is understood postoffice inspectors have been busy keeping tab on the mail business of the big companies and have discovered numerous ways in which the mails have been employed to squeeze the independent companies out of business.

One feature of the workings of the lumbermen's associations, it is alleged, is the "black book" campaign. This and other uses of the mail have been under the inspection of government agents for some time.

Dollar Barley.

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.—Dollar barley became an actuality Saturday when a lot grading No. 4 sold at the round figure, with miles a minute lower at $1.01 and still later in the day at $1.02. It was a climax of a sensational rise that began at the Chamber of Commerce several weeks ago.

Minneapolis is now sending out $1,000,000 a week to pay for the barley.

Farmers in the various parts of the northwest are rapidly hurrying to market their barley crop, and on Saturday 127 cars were received. On that day shipments of barley were 100 cars showing that Duluth, Fort Dodge and Fort Dodge were buying heavily.

Shot a Deaf Mute.

Devils Lake, N. D., Sept. 30.—With his arm shattered by a bullet, Martin Mathison, a deaf mute of Minneapolis, was brought here from Church's Ferry and placed in the hospital there for treatment. He had been held up and robbed. When he showed resistance the robbers fired. A few miles beyond the bullet taking effect in the victim's arm. Both bones of his arm were broken and a small hole in the arm showed where the bullet penetrated. After they had wounded him the robbers rifled his pockets, securing $4 in coin and a watch. They then ran off.

Suspected Murder.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 30.—The authorities of St. Louis county are up against an investigation that may develop interesting results. Six men are held on the murder of Anton Buccovitch at McKinley, Minn., are believed to have killed him for breaking the rules of a secret organization. The men are Macedonians, who work in gangs and hire out through their leader. They are bound by secret rites and oaths. It is believed Buccovitch was killed by prearrangement by one of the six, who will swear he killed himself.

Want Uniform Laws.

St. Paul' Sept. 30.—Railroad commissioners of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Montana, Washington and Oregon will convene at the Ryan hotel Tuesday to consider plans and methods whereby all the states in the Union may ultimately agree upon uniform laws and regulations governing the railroads, so as to obviate the necessity of the federal government assuming jurisdiction over the railroads which is now held by the states.

Fell From Balloon.

Lake City, Minn., Sept. 28.—Arthur Crowley, accidental with a St. Paul carnival company, fell into Lake Pepin while making a balloon ascension, and was drowned. The ropes went up in his balloon to a height of several hundred feet.

Ground to Pieces.

Rugby, N. D., Sept. 30.—In presence of many people Frank Doyle of South Chicago was ground to pieces by a Great Northern freight train at this place. He was on his way to Minot. He was intoxicated when the accident happened.

Eight Killed in Wreck.

Wheeling, West Va., Sept. 30.—Eight men were killed, four fatally injured and seventeen more or less seriously hurt late Saturday when a Great Northern freight train bound for Chicago & Wheeling Express Train No. 14, on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad was wrecked in the yards at Belaire, Ohio, a few miles from this city. A freight train had just taken a siding for the express. The passenger train however failed to pass over the switch and crashed into the freight. Until a late hour the exact number of dead and injured was not known.

The Philanthropy of Averill

By BENJAMIN FRANKLIN NAPHEYS

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

The train started with a jerk, and Rudolph Averill heard an infantile cry of fear, and felt a pair of tiny arms bury themselves in his hair. He raised his head to his head, and clasped another, very wet and light, that was busy disengaging the entangled fingers.

"Totty, Totty," a sweet voice chided, "you must not do so. Let go and stop down from that suit case, you naughty child."

The child's fingers entwined themselves and Averill faced about with a rather forced smile. A young woman, surrounded by children and luggage, bent over a small youngster, evidently the offender, and tried to make a place for it on the seat by her side.

"Please excuse her," the young woman said, as she hoisted Totty into her lap. "She was about to fall, and caught at the first thing within reach. I should not have allowed her to stand on the luggage."

Averill's gaze took in the three children, of which Totty, surely not more than six, was the eldest, and besides these, a babe wrapped and veiled, asleep in the corner of the seat. This young woman herself, sweet of face, and extraordinarily girlish of figure, was crowded into the corner of the seat.

Averill arose and turned over the back of his seat and faced her. "You must let me make you comfortable, madam," he said. "Are you going far?"

"No; only to Kingston."

"Ah; I go a few miles farther. Now, put some of the children over beside me; you look tired out."

The young woman, in great confidence, seemed about to insist upon keeping her brood beside herself, but Averill settled the question by lifting the unresisting Totty, and one other, to the opposite seat, where they crowded with clasped hends, mutely staring at him.

"There," said Averill; "now, put the sleeping cherub over here, too, and you will have room to take a deep breath."

"Oh, no," she cried hastily, "you might awaken him."

"All right," Averill ejaculated, then, apologetically, "I don't know very much about babies, anyway."

"So I surmised; but it doesn't matter now, I am very comfortable, thank you," and she began to look out of the window.

For a moment Averill was tempted to find another seat. He decided that sha must be a young cosetry woman, returning from a visit to the metropolis, and not accustomed to the ordinary courtesies from strangers. Her face was so girlish, and her evident anxiety so distressed him, that his chivelry was stirred. He longed to tell her that there was no danger on the train; that none of her handles had been forgotten in the hurry of departure, and that her husband assuredly would be waiting for her at the station.

As he continued to study her face he seemed to see a look of amusement and mischief, which grew more pronounced as two elderly women across the aisle began to make audible comments of the group. Averill heard something about "a large family for so young a couple," and the young woman stifled a cough, while he felt his face reddening. One of the children beside him, growing more accustomed to his presence, tentatively patted his knee and sociably gurgled.

"Don't, Terrance," admonished the young woman.

Averill was genuinely sorry for her; it was a shame that she was so distrustful—that she was so poor a judge of human nature as to be suspicious of his most disinterested desire to make her journey more pleasant. She took him for something less than a gentleman, and his efforts in her behalf as attempts at flirtation. He determined to place himself in a better light.

"I'm sorry, madam," he began, "that my endeavors to make you more comfortable have—"

"Oh, you don't understand," she expostulated. "you don't understand about the children."

"Why, my dear madam," said Averill, in a fatherly voice, "don't you worry about them. I'll admit that I don't thoroughly understand their habits; but for the short distance that I shall ride with these little ones, I assure you I will say or do nothing that will make them to grow any worse men or women, as the case may be. Don't worry; take what rest you can before you get back to the every-day life."

He patted to pat Totty's head, and the child piped up:

"My papa pleaded not guilty, and they had to let him go."

"Ah," said Averill, at a loss how to change the subject, "and I suppose mamma was guilty?"

"No she wasn't," replied Totty, with vehemence.

He stole a glance at the young woman, who seemed to be hiding her face in her hands.

"Poor Totty," said Averill. "Has mother so many troubles to fight against?"

"Only papa and my big brother. Say, ain't men the useless things, though?"

"Hush, Totty," said the young woman.

"The child is right, madam," said Averill, gravely. "Men are generally very useless creatures. But I wish you could have faith enough in me to let me help you. I assure you, my motives—"

"I understand your motives, and I appreciate them. Indeed," she went on, more humbly, "you have made the ride much more comfortable for me. This is my first experience, and—and I should be so miserable if the baby should awaken and begin to cry."

"That frequently happens on trains," said Averill, lightly.

"Here is my station," she said, as she began to gather up her sundries. "Will you take here very kind; I thank you."

"Don't mention it. No, you must let me carry the baby to the platform; I insist upon it."

She began to object, but he had already picked up the infant. Driving the children before her, she fled down the aisle of the car.

Averill was about to follow, when a choking sound came from under the veil around the infant's head. Hastily he tore off the covering, and the countenance of a tiny negro baby was exposed to view.

Somehow he got out of the car and found himself standing beside the baggage on the station platform.

"I've—I've—I must have taken the wrong one," he stammered.

"No you haven't, I told you when you began to—to help me, that you didn't understand about the children. I'm taking a trip for my sister, who is a matron in the home for dependent children. These little ones are waifs and strays whom I am taking to good homes in the country. Give me the little one; quick, the train is moving."

"But, Miss—Miss—"

"Get on board at once, sir. Perhaps we shall find it all a sad mistake when we reach the morning train—and—and—"

So, am I," cried Averill, as he sprang on the car. "Good-by until to-morrow."

LOST SPOILS OF VICTORY.

Fighter Put Up Good Excuse for Lapse from Sobriety.

"Yes honor, I'll tell yer jus' how 'twas," said the man with the saffron eye as he stood before the police judge.

"Me and Jake was both in love wid little Mame. Well, de time came when she had ter pick between us two or us. Mame, she cast her lamps over him as me, like a feller 'd size up a couple er easy marks," he saw on. "To de victor belongs de golls,' an' told us ter fight it out, an' she'd marry de winner.

"I met Jake in a back yard on Christopher street, an' we went to it. I won't describe de offensive details to yer honor, but I will say dat in about three an' two-thirds minutes, after a spirited encounter, I landed a left to de solar plexus in commyunyation, an' dy event, den I cruised around ter Mame's ter claim my skirt.

"Now, mabbe yer honor can't guess whap happened while I wus t'rowin' dem beans inter me. Well, yer honor, dat man Jake recovered from his knockout, an' when I got ter Mame's room all dat wuz left wuz a note on de table. 'Art,' she sez, 'I have beat it wid Jake. I hain ter pull out on de game wid de jackpot, but when I said I'd marry de best man I thought it would be Jake.'

"De prisoner looked full into the face of the judge. 'Do ye blame me for gittin' drunk, yer honor?"

"Discharged," replied the eminent person gravely, as he slammed the docket back on the clerk's desk.

Gat Knowledge.

To trust to mere authority altogether is absurd; it is to forego the pleasure of living, and is an important error to cease to be a man; but to renounce authority altogether, and to depend for our knowledge wholly on our own experience, is simply impossible, and if possible would be very absurd. There is evidently a middle ground which leaves a wide field for personal experience, and at the same time allows the individual to give almost indefinite extension to his knowledge by supplying the accumulated experience of the races.—Jean Jacques Rousseau.

The Fence Posts Become Hedges.

It is wonderful how rapidly plant and tree life will grow in the climate and soil, says a Panama letter to the Boston Transcript. People desirous of erecting a piece of ground will set their posts in the woods, plant them in the ground and string their barbed wire. When the wet season comes on, the combined operation of the rain and the heat will cause the posts to sprout. In a year's time, perhaps, the posts will be a tree. A Thanksgiving stroll of almost any cutting through into the ground. It will take root and grow without the least urging.

Development of Taste.

"What makes you so sure your daughter is becoming a cultured musician?" "The fact," answered Mr. Cumrox, "that she absolutely refuses to play anything that I enjoy listening to."

Diamond Robbery.

Minneapolis.—Smashing a heavy plate glass window in M. L. Oberon & Co.'s jewelry store 29 Washington avenue south, Minneapolis, early in the evening, a bold thief seized $1,500 worth of diamonds and made his escape. The robbery was one of the boldest on record, the streets being crowded as the time and the store full of people.

In making his escape the robber held M. L. Cohen and Tuohy Dobrin, one of his employes, at bay with a revolver. He then fled through the saloon of George McMahon, 27 Washington avenue south, spreading terror with his revolver, and was then lost to sight in the darkness in the alley at the rear.

A dozen or more detectives and a large number of uniformed men were placed on the case at once by Chief Corrigon, but up to an early hour this morning no trace of the bold thief had been found. When he broke the window he cut his hand severely. Blood was smeared on the window and formed a trail through the McMahon saloon. How serious the cuts are cannot be ascertained.

The robbery was committed about 10 o'clock. Every clerk in the store was busy showing goods to customers when they heard the crash as the thief broke in the window. Every one looked and saw the man reach in and seize the diamonds. Toby Dobrin, a clerk, and M. L. Cohen, one of the proprietors, dashed out onto the sidewalk and pursued the thief about fifty feet.

Butter Scoring.

St. Peter—Butter makers of Minnesota have issued a challenge to the butter judges of the country to prove their competency. They have done so by announcing that when the fourteenth annual convention of the Minnesota State Butter and Cheese Makers' Association is held in this city next June 21 and 22 they will send back on the morning train—and—and—

"So am I," cried Averill, as he sprang on the car. "Good-by until to-morrow."

Arrested.

Osakis, Minn.—A man giving his name as Nordholm was arrested here on the charge of burglarizing three saloons. The saloons were entered at rear windows and their cash drawers rifled. Nordholm was seen coming from the direction of one of them by a bunting party that started out on the early morning. D. Prentice, bartender in F. R. Curry's saloon in Fergus Falls, went to Osakis and positively identified Nordholm as the man who came to the saloon and asked permission to remain until train time the night the saloon was robbed.

Missing.

Mankato, Minn.—No trace has yet been discovered of George Shostag, who disappeared mysteriously from Mt. Clair, leaving a note declaring that he was going to kill himself. The river has been dragged and the surrounding country searched in vain. The search is still in progress.

It is learned that Shostag was treated in his best suit the night he disappeared, and he had more than $100 in his possession. He had made no deposits in the bank for two weeks and was having a good trade.

The most puzzling and most interesting thing about the swastika is that it is found in nearly all parts of the world, in the country as well as in Europe and Asia, wherever archaeologists digs up the buried cities of the remote past. Drawn, painted, cut, woven, scratched or otherwise designed, not only upon burial urn and sacrificial stone, but also upon utensils and objects of everyday use, the curious symbol appears.

It has been found emong relics that mark the bronze age in Europe, and Faribault—Conductor O. Beck of the Rock Island road was arrested and fined for keeping a street crossing closed in this city for more than five minutes.

Minneapolis—Hennepin county experience for the year 1903 will be $168,246 more than for 1907, according to the budget sent to the county board of tax levy.

St. Paul—Five starting in a boarding car at Cleveland and University avenues shortly after 3 o'clock in the morning, imperiled the lives of several Minneapolis.

St. Cloud—V. Gibson of Sartell was killed in an accident while digging a sewer. The earth fell in on the lower end of the sewer work and was about six feet beneath the surface when a cave-in occurred.

Delano—About two months ago Denis Beekman, aged fifteen years, was frightfully burned with gasoline, and in order to save his life recourse to skin grafting has been resorted to. Volunteers among his schoolmates were called for, and fifteen responded.

Faribault—Carlos Avery, executive agent of the Minnesota game and fish commission, has been in this city looking after the dams on Cannon and Straight rivers and will compel the owners to construct fishways in accordance with the fish laws of the state.

Minneapolis—Mail ale was given another blow in the municipal court when A. D. Meads, city chemist, testified in the hearing over cans against John Rexack that he had personally analyzed the liquor and found that it contained more than 2½ per cent of alcohol.

Minneapolis—"Nallie, the Beautiful Cash Model," from A. H. Woods, the well known producer, will present at the Bijou opera house, Minneapolis, next week, beginning 6th, in an exceptionally strong melodrama. The play is in four acts and fifteen scenes and abounds in interesting diversions, all the roles are in the hands of capable people.

Faribault—Judgment has been filed in the clerk of court's office in the Devil Creek ditch case. The decision is in favor of the petitioners, who appealed from the report of the county commissioners. The ditch will be constructed in accordance with the report of the civil engineer. It runs through Morristown and Shieldsville townships and is long.

Minneapolis—Lightning played havoc at the Norwegian Methodist church, 34th street and Bloomington avenue, during the electric storm, shattering the steeple into a hopeless wreck and causing a panic among people in the church. As far as could be learned, no one was seriously shocked or injured. The interesting feature of the case, and under the circumstances almost miraculous.

Northome—The citizens of Bridgie, a small town south of here, as well as the farmers residing in that vicinity, are considerably wrought up over the fact that some of the farmers in that neighborhood have discovered worms in eggs laid by their hens.

South St. Paul—The health department issued a proclamation requiring that all dogs running at large within the city limits be muzzled.

Minneapolis—Richard W. Roberts, who killed himself in a hotel at Shalden, Iowa, was wanted in Minneapolis on a charge of swindling.

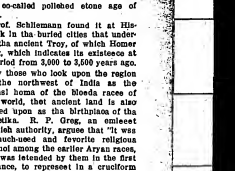
ORIGIN OF SWASTIKA

BAUBLE OF SUMMER GIRL WORSHIPED BY PRIMITIVE MAN.

When She Sticks Ornament in Her Shirt Waist She Does Not Know That It Is One of the Great Religious Symbols of the World.

Boston.—The swastika is just now having remarkable vogue as an ornament for woman's dress. As brooch, belt buckle, stick pin, collar fastener, or hat pie, this upright cross, with each of its four arms bent to a right angle at the and, meets avarywhere the eye.

Nearly every women who buys one knows that it is to some scene a "good luck pin," but how it came to be considered such and whhre the peculiar and curiously attractive symbol originated not so meay know.



What is tha swastika?

It is one of the great religious symbols of the world. It has been recognized as a religious emblem by more people, very likely, than has the cross itself. As such symbol it is very many hundreds of years older than the Christian era; in fact, it is, perhaps, the very earliest of religious signs or characters. It has been revered oil over Europe and Asia, and long before the dawn of Christianity our pagen ancestors looked up to it, as the emblem of what they worshiped. It is one of tha oldest thiegs le history, and there is scarcely a leed in whose ruined temples it is not fouea.

"Su.astike," tha name given it by the Brahmiee and Buddhists of India, is a Sanscrit word signifying "of good fortune." In tha Pali toegue it is "sutl," which means "it is well," or "so be it," which is much the same meaning as the Sanscrit word. The Japanese call it "manji" and the Chinese know it as "vuan" or "wan." The French cell it "le croix patlee," the footed cross, while tha aaciest Engsh name is "rylix," denoting either

The most puzzling and most interesting thing about the swastika is that it is found in nearly all parts of the world, in the country as well as in Europe and Asia, wherever archaeologists digs up the buried cities of the remote past. Drawn, painted, cut, woven, scratched or otherwise designed, not only upon burial urn and sacrificial stone, but also upon utensils and objects of everyday use, the curious symbol appears.

It has been found emong relics that mark the bronze age in Europe, and the jagged lightning wee the natural emblem of this awful power.

So with the successive emigrations of the Aryans from northern India eil over Europe, the swastika spreed eed, edopted as a symbol of Buddhe in tha seventh century before Christ, it was later carried into Chinee and Japan. Tha Arahe and Jews knew it not, nor did tha ancient Egyptians, but they carved it on their temples.

Thus tha hammer of Thor, the Scandinaven deity for whom Thursdey is named, was this very same swastika which the melden of to-dey is using to ornameet a summer shirt weist. It was with his mighty hammer, Mollner, that Thor le fabled to have crushed tha heed of tha Midgerd serpeet, destroyer of the giants, restored to life the deed goats which drew his car, and consecrated the pyre of Beldur the beautiful.

TO OPPOSE TOM JOHNSON.

Nominated for Mayor by Republicans of Cleveland, O.

Cleveland.—Congressmen Theodore E. Burton, who has been nominated

THEODORE E. BURTON.
(Republican Nominee for Mayor of Cleveland, O.)

by Cleveland Republicans to oppose Tom Johnson for mayor, is a "scholar in politics." Speaker Cannon has said he is "the ablest men in congress." Mr. Burton is an authority on law and finance. His work as chairman of the rivers and harbors committee has made him a national figure. It is said he can give the source and course of every creek in the United States. He is 55 years old and was born in Ohio, where he was graduated from Oberlin. He has served six terms in congress.

Cleveland is regarded as a normally Republican city by from 7,000 to 10,000 majority in national elections, and up to the advent of Mayor Johnson, six years ago, the Republicans had ruled the city and county for many years, with the exception of isolated cases, such as the election of Mayor Farley, following the defeat of the Sheffield administration and the rehabilitation of the faction led by Senator Hanna.

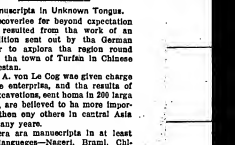
In the last two campaigns Johnson succeeded in increasing tha plurality which he gained in his first election, six years ago, and in his last race, two years ago, he piled up a plurality of nearly 12,000. Tha county as well as the city administration has, as a result of the Johnson leadership, becoma nearly solidly Democratic.

In a State of Suspense.

Mayme—To tell the truth, I don't know whether I'm engaged to Phil or not.

Julie—Tha idea!

Mayme—Last night at the concert while the orchestra was playing a selection from Wagner, he whispered something to me. I couldn't hear what it was, of course, but I nodded, and—and he's been unusually affectionate since then.—Chicago Tribune.



CELEBRATED 'BERNE TIMEPIECE.

Historic Clock an American Millionaire Wished to Buy.

London.—A story comes from Berne to the effect that a "Chicago millionaire," name not given, has been trying hard to purchase the celebrated clock in the Cathedral church in that city. It is asserted that he made one offer after another, each time raising the price, but that he has at last convinced that there was something in Switzerland which money could not buy.

Tha clock announces the hours by the crowing of a cock, and two minutes before each hour a number of bears walk around the sitting figure. Unlike many of the curious and elaborate clocks in existence, the Berne timepiece is also notable for its artistic workmanship.

The Berne newspapers were exceedingly indignant at the idea of the clock going to America and said some unpleasant things about the habit of rich Americane of trying to purchase everything that takes their fancy.

Manuscripts in Unknown Tongue.

Discoveries for which great expectation have resulted from tha work of an expedition sent out by the German kaisar to explore a region round about tha town of Turfan in Chinese Turkestan.

Dr. A. von Le Cog was given charge of the enterprise, and tha results of his excavations, sent home in 200 large cases, have been of more or less importance to the scholars in east ten languages—Nagari, Brami, Chinese, Tibetan, Taegut, Syriac, Manichaean, Nighur, Turkish and one unknown tongue—which will attract the attention of ethnologiste throughout the world.

Thera are also paintings on hardened mud, plaster and wood, with a background of gold leaf similar to that so often employed in eerly Italian art. Most of tha paintings represent Buddha and scenes in his life.

The mystery which at present puzzles students of history le the unknown reason for tha strange commingling of races at Turfan, but the answer may ha supplied when the manuscripts are deciphered.

Goldsmith's Generosity.

A beggar once asked alms of Oliver Goldsmith as he walked with a friend up Fleet street, and he gave her a shilling. His companion, knowing something of the woman, censured the writer for his excess of humanity, saying that the shilling was misapplied, as she would spend it for liquor. "If it makes her happy in any way, my end is answered," replied Goldsmith.

Another proof that the doctor's generosity was not always regulated by discretion was at a time when, after much delay, a day was fixed to pay the £40 due his tailor. Goldsmith procured the money, but a friend calling upon him and relating a piteous tale of his goods being seized for rent, the thoughtless but benevolent author gave him all the money. The tailor called and was told that if he had come a little sooner he could have had the money, but that he had just parted with every shilling of it to a friend in distress, adding, "I would have been an unfeeling monster not to have relieved trouble when in my power."

A "Ringers' Jug."

A beer jug in a belfry is happily somewhat of a rarity in these days At the beginning of the last century, however, people were not so particular The ringers' jug of Beccles, in Suffolk holds six gallons, a sufficiency to sustain the ten weary ringers, though the weight of the bells did exceed six tons. The vessel is made of red earthenware and has three handles, one of which is concealed by the neck. It bears the following inscription in quaint spelling:

"When I am fill'd with liquor strong
Each Man drink once and then ding dong.
Drink not too much to Cloud your Knobs
Least you forget to make the Bobbs.
A gift of John Patiman Beccles." On the reverse side is the maker's name, "Samuel Stringfellow, Potter."—London Strand.

The Scallop.

The scallop can anchor itself as well as any ship. It never fails to drop its anchor on the approach of rough weather. The scallop, lying in its bed of shoal water, foresees a storm in true sailor fashion and at once puts out a tough and elastic little cable from a point near its hinge This cable it fastens firmly to the nearest rock. It is then secure in the vilest weather. He who wades through scallop haunted shoals as a storm approaches may see the tiny shellfish mooring themselves on all sides with silent bustle.

Man-of-war on Paper.

Each man-of-war is built upon paper before a single plate of steel is forged. Not only are the length and breadth of a ship decided upon, but the naval constructor can tell to an ounce how much water she will displace when her armor and guns are mounted upon her, how many times her propellers will revolve in a minute with a given pressure of steam and how many tons of coal an hour must be consumed to attain a certain rate of speed.—London Graphic.

His Gloomy Life.

"What," asked the sweet girl, "was the happiest moment of your life?"

"The happiest moment of my life," answered the old bachelor, "was when the jeweler took back an engagement ring and gave me sleeve links in exchange."

How Woxall Was Named.

Near Schwenksville, Pa., is a village that bears the name of Woxall. This wonderful name was the result of an error upon the port of the postoffice department in Washington. The place was known many years ago as "Croppestettel," or "Crowtown," and later as Mechanicsville, but when a postoffice was established there in 1888 neither of these names was satisfactory, and it was decided to choose a new cognomen. Many were the suggestions submitted to the postoffice department, but all were found to be too nearly like the name of some other postoffice to be acceptable. One day the village storekeeper saw the word "Noxall" upon a piece of calico and called the attention of several friends to it. At once all agreed that "Noxall" would be a fine name for their town So the postoffice authorities were notified. Soon a letter came from Washington approving the name that had been chosen, but in the letter it was spelled "Woxall." So Woxoll became the name of the village.—Philadelphia Record

When Labor Did Not Tell.

A home missionary who visited Sing Sing prison took occasion to have a heart to heart talk with one of the convicts.

"Don't you know, my friend," said he, "that crime never brings success? It is only achieved by hard labor."

"I did six months of it at a stretch once, and I didn't come out no richer than I went in."

He Took a Hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Stockson Bonds are inveterate bridge whist players, and their home is the meeting place of bridge players of all grades. On one evening in every week they are "at home" to any of their friends who wish to play, and on other evenings they entertain parties of their own selection for games which range from a cent a point to a much higher figure. Recently, long after the house had been closed, a noise was heard downstairs, and, regardless of his wife's protests, Stockson Bonds went below to ascertain the cause. The noise continued and grew louder, but no answer came to the wife's calls from above. She became alarmed, opened the window, saw a policeman, and he made a rush for the basement door. A few minutes later the husband appeared before his panic stricken wife and told her he had found the servants playing bridge and wrangling over the propriety of a certain play.

"Did you send the whole party away?" asked the wife.

"Why, no. I took a hand and decided the question before I realized where I was."—New York Tribune.

How He Got a Drink.

An Indiana traveling man told a story the other day of an incident on the road. He was in the smoking car of an express train reading his paper when a man rushed in from the car behind the smoker, evidently in great agitation and said: "Has anybody in this car any whisky? A woman in the car behind has fainted!" Instantly dozens of flasks were produced. The man who had asked for it picked out the largest one, drew the cork and put the bottle to his lips. With a long, satisfied sigh, he handed the flask back and remarked, "That did me a lot of good, and I needed it, for it always makes me feel queer to see a woman faint away!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Curious Almshouse.

The most curious almshouse in England is St. Mary's hospital at Chichester. There eight old ladies live actually in the church, which is a fine old building dating from 1680. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to visit there she turned it into an almshouse to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little rooms each down the sides of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are beautifully carved old oak, the original seats that the monks used. The church stands in a quiet little square.

The Tea Taster.

What are a tea taster's duties? He must distinguish the mixture of two blends; point out in each separate instance if the mixtures are of equal grades; he must know to a nicety the difference between a pure brand and an inferior one; he must know the taste of every individual sort of tea—not an easy thing, when it is remembered that brands of tea are many and the blends are constantly being reblended. In ten years' time a tea taster cannot be deceived as to the history or nationality of any tea in the world. He can prevent his firm from being deceived, for he has drunk tea with milk, cream, lemon, straight, served according to the peculiar wish of every nation. He is sent to China, Japan, Russia, India, to study the tea brew of each tea drinking nation.—Boston Herald.

A Conundrum For Cannon.

Speaker Cannon has received hundreds of telegrams from Oklahoma expressing the opinion of hundreds of people about him. This one, however, which he declares is the most remarkable inquiry ever propounded to an American statesman, he proposes to frame, "Shall Oklahoma, the gem of hope, be sacrificed on the Shylock of Despair?"—New York Times.

If at first you don't succeed, do it over, but don't overdo it.—Philadelphia Record.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

DEATH OF P. R. RUSTAD.

P. R. Rustad, died at his home near Erie, in this township, on Thursday morning September 26th, of cancer of the stomach. Mr. Rustad was one of the pioneers of the Thirteen Towns, in Polk County, and moved from there to the town of Gerneseo, as a pioneer, and was among the first to settle in this township. He was a man that always took an active interest in the upbuilding and prosperity of the country in which he lived, and his death will be a loss to the entire neighborhood. He was laid in his final resting place in the new Cemetery, near Erie, which he had taken an active interest in having platted and fitted up as a burial ground. He leaves a wife and a family of grown up children to mourn the loss of a kind father and husband, who have the sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement.

Too Much to Ask.

A traveler in the highlands observed while at a tavern in a small village a very beautiful bottle. At his request the owner was pointed out to him, and he asked the man what he would take for the dog.

"Ye'll be taking him to America?" the Scot asked cautiously.

"Certainly, if you sell him to me."

"I no coul' part wie Rob," the dog's owner then said emphatically. "I'm muckle fond-like o' him." And liberal offers were no inducement.

To his astonishment, the traveler later saw the dog sold to a drover for half what he had offered and after the drover had disappeared requested an explanation. "You said that you would not sell him," he remarked.

A twinkle came into the highlander's eyes.

"Noo, I micht say I'd no sell him. I said I wouldna part wie him," he said. "But it be keen in two or three days I'm noo, but I wouldna ask him to swim across the ocean. No; that 'noo' be the mistake to ask."—Harper's Weekly.

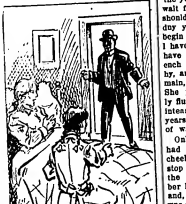
The End of Her Waiting



By Emma Howard Wight

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

I was a girl of 16 when we first come to live in Barclay street. Mother had just died, and our little cottage home, down in the country, had become intolerable to father, so he decided we should go to live in city, where a clerkship had been offered him. It nearly broke my heart to leave the pretty cottage for a long, low house in a dull, narrow street; but I tried to be brave before father and cheerful.

Sitting at the parlor window a great deal, I soon became very much interested in my opposite neighbor. Her little grey two-story house was the prettiest in Barclay street, with its white blinds and flower-filled window, and a middle-aged servant woman was her only companion. She was known in Barclay street as "Miss Molly," and loved and reverenced for her goodness and charity among the poor and suffering.

After a little while I spent a great deal of my time with Miss Molly, and my life was no longer dull and lonely. I soon grew to love her very dearly, and she returned my affection. After a little while I began to suspect that some past sorrow cast its shadow over her life; but I had known her nearly two years before my suspicions were confirmed. It was a lovely morning, the first day of June, and I thought I never saw a bower of roses for Miss Molly when I went to do my marketing. When I went over I found the front door ajar, so I went in and ran up to the little room where Miss Molly usually sat the first part of the morning. She was seated in a low rocking-chair her head lying back heavily, her little white hands resting idly on her lap. As she turned her face towards me I saw it was white and sharpened from long and bitter weeping. The next moment I was kneeling at her feet, my arms about her waist, begging her to tell me if she were ill or what was wrong. She looked down into my face for a few moments; then she said quietly:

A Moment Later the Door Was Thrown Open.

"To-day, dear, is the anniversary of a great suffering to my life, and for many long years I have spent it in bitter weeping; child," she went on, putting her hand under my chin and raising my head that she might see better into my eyes, "your eyes are so true, so full of affection and sympathy and pity for me that a desire comes over me to tell you the story of my life, and the sorrow which darkened it. I have kept it locked up in my heart so long that it will be a relief to unburden it. Come and sit, as you always do, at my feet." I obeyed in silence, and waited for her to begin, which after a few moments she did.

"My parents were well-to-do people of the middle-class, and I was their only child for ten years, when then my little brother was born. My parents were very fond of the child for he grew from babyhood, till he was remarkably beautiful; but their affection was nothing like the love I bore him. People used to wonder at it, even my parents were puzzled over it. When I was 17 years of age, and Robert, my little brother, was seven, my parents died within the same year. My father's income had been derived from a salary, which of course ceased at his death; but just about that time a small fortune was left me by an aunt, including this house. Here we came to live, Robbie and I, and a middle-aged servant woman, Margaret, the mother of the woman who is with me now. My whole life was then devoted to my little brother, to the exclusion of all else. I could have had lovers, I could have married; but no one was dearer before Robert in my heart. He did not lose his beauty as he grew older; he was bright, lovable, affectionate, but, alas, weak, easily influenced, and possessed a quick, fiery temper which he never tried to control or restrain.

"I will not linger over the years that passed until Robert reached his twenty-first year. It was his desire to study law, so he entered the office of a prominent lawyer in this city. He had only been there a few months, when through a young man in the office, he was introduced into a fast set, and in a short time was plunged into dissipation. When I realized this, I was nearly crazed with fear and pain. I implored, remonstrated, kept. He would be sorrowfully repentant for awhile; then go back again. This state of things went on for six months; then came the end. Inveried in money difficulties, debts of honor, gambling debts, driven beside himself, reckless, desperate, this poor, misguided boy robbed his employer, took a large sum of money from the safe, to which he had always had access. This was soon discovered by the man he had robbed, who taxed him with it privately, but sternly, and threateningly, and my poor boy, madly letting his quick temper get the best of him, answered insolently. High words followed. Robert solemnly asserted that the lawyer struck him first; however, Robert picked up a heavy chair and felled him to the ground with it. And in a few short time he died from the effects of the blow." Her voice faltered, she paused; I could only press her hands in silent sympathy.

"You can guess, dear, what followed." His was arrested, tried, and condemned to 15 years' imprisonment, which in his state means solitary confinement. Oh, child, child, shall I ever forget that morning—it was the first day of June—when he stood in the prisoner's dock, so young, so rarely handsome, and listened with a white, set face and quivering lips to that sentence? I nearly went mad then. I fell on my knees, with wild moans and moans; then I fainted, and when I had recovered they had taken him away.

"I saw him once again to bid him forewell. I was calm then with the calmness of woe too deep for utterance. He also was silent, numbed with a terrible, sullen despair. 'Dear,' I said to him, pillowing his head on my breast as I had so often done, 'the years must pass. I will pray and wait for you in our little home, and, should Heaven spare us both, some day you will come to me, there to begin a new life together.' And, dear, I have been waiting 13 long years; I have counted each day, each week, each month of them as they glided by, and now, but two more years remain, and my waiting will be over." She paused, her cheeks grew ashy, her breast as it had so often done, 'the years must pass. I will pray and wait for you in our little home, and, should Heaven spare us both, some day you will come to me, there to begin a new life together.' And, dear, I have been waiting 13 long years; I have counted each day, each week, each month of them as they glided by, and now, but two more years remain, and my waiting will be over." She paused, her cheeks grew ashy, her breath began steadily to decline, and, with bitter pain, I realized she was slowly fading out of life.

One evening, as I knelt beside her easy chair, where she now sat all day, she laid her thin hand gently on my head and said: "Dear, you know that I am going to leave you before long?" I hid my face in her lap, and burst into tears. "You must not grieve too much, my child," she went on, "it is God's will; I shall not be sorry to make his life happy and bright; but I shall live to see him once more, my boy, my Robbie dear."

The weeks and months glided by; Molly also grew weaker, feebler grew her hold on life. The year was nearly up; but I never thought she would live to see it; but she did. The first day of June came, such a sunny, beautiful day. I had been with her all night, and when the first rays of the sun shone into her room, a radiant smile lighted up her sweet white face, and I heard her whisper: "Two years of waiting are over." She hardly spoke the rest of the day, but lay with a look on her face, and the faint smile lingering about her lips. My heart was nearly bursting with fear and suspense. She could not live through the night, I knew. Ah! would he come, or would she have waited so long in vain? The day were on; I was sitting beside her holding her hand, when I heard the front door open, and a man's step in the hall and upon the stair, thought it was the doctor returning, when a low cry from Miss Molly caused me to turn. With a superhuman effort she had raised herself in bed, and with open eyes were fixed with a look I shall never forget upon the door.

"Hush!" she whispered, " he is coming." A moment later the door was thrown open, and a man stood with the threshold, a man prematurely aged, with bent shoulders, gray, close-cropped head, and a haggard, worn face, bearing the remains of great beauty. His eyes saw nothing, save the figure on the bed; then he bounded across the room, and caught her in his arms. "Molly, sister," I heard him murmur. Her head fell against his breast with a sigh of utter peace and content. "My boy, my boy," she murmured, "the waiting is over." She smiled once, and then died. I saw the worn, handsome face of the man grow as white as the sister lying one on his breast. "My God," he cried aloud, "dead, gone." Then, as his heart sobs echoed through the room, I stole away; the tears falling over my cheeks; leaving them alone—the dead, who had waited so long—the living, who had come too late.

Be Cheerful.

Practice smiling at yourself in the mirror and then go abroad and try it on folks. The world loves a cheerful soul.

PRIDE.

Your head is high and your strut is proud,
You often boast, though you'll not own
Its true;
You think you're entitled to scorn the crowd,
While the crowd, in its hurry, may never guess it.
But daily you carry a little key,
Thinking that you alone may know it,
And where would the fire you are wearing be
If some day you were compelled to show it?

You have fine contempt for the man who fails,
And you gravely speak of his foolish weakness;
You liken him to the worm that crawls
And you pass him by in his cringing meekness;
But would you still wear a look of pride
And cling to the sentiments which cause it
If some day some one should open wide
The long-locked door of a certain closet?

—Chicago Record-Herald.

Her Turn.

"I don't see that gentleman who used to come in every morning," remarked the man who was nibbling a wedge of pie. "You remember the one who always gave his orders to the prettiest waitress?"

"Oh, he hasn't been here for some time," laughed the proprietor of the lunch room. "The pretty waitress gives him orders now."

"Gives him orders?"

"Yes, he married her."—Chicago News.

A Familiar Face.

"Now, you don't know me, do you?" asked the girl in the pawnbroker's shop.

"No, I can't say I know you," replied the pawnbroker; "but your face is very familiar."

"But I was never in here before in my life."

"Perhaps not, miss; but I've seen your picture in half a dozen watches that have been in here!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Reaction.

"Don't deceive me, doctor! Tell me the truth! Will my boy get well?"

"Get well? Why, madam, he is in no more danger of dying than you are. The car wheels didn't touch him. It was the rear platform he was trying to grab."

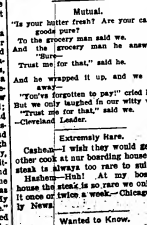
"The little rascal! I'll whip him within an inch of his life for giving me such a scare."—Chicago Tribune.

Where Women Vote.

"And did you vote to-day?" asked the president of the Womn's club.

"No, I'm sorry to say I did not."

"But you promised to."



"I know it; but on the way to the polls I got in a discussion with a man about woman's right to vote, and I talked so long that when I got to the polls they were closed!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Question for Question.

"Why do women insist on going to matinees for the sake of crying?" he inquired, impatiently. "Haven't they enough trouble of their own?"

"I don't know," replied she; "why do men insist on getting into a poker game merely for the sake of expert ecstacy a new kind of financial worry?"—Washington Star.

Idea for Kimona

One Side of Jumper as Cut.

This jumper takes just 4 yard," according to a fashion writer. "You cut two straight pieces a yard each in length and each nine inches across. Stash the middle from each of the four ends, letting this slash run up about a third of the way. Mark all your raw edges with a tumbler and make the slash a third of the way. Mark all your raw edges with a tumbler and make the slash inside each scallop with the top of a lead pencil. The part that is to form the sleeve you trim off a little across the bottom, making it about two inches shorter than the part that forms the bretelle, and then you sew it in a semi circle across what becomes the bottom as it falls under the arm."

The remainder is the simplicity of this ever shoulder arrangement that I have drawn a sketch of one side of it both before tacking it together and after. The back ends she gathered down into her belt and tacked and the fronts were left loose to adjust as she put it on.

TEDDY BEAR PARTY

Description of Entertainment That Greatly Pleased a Number of Small Children.

In spite of the protestations against the "Teddy" bears, they seem to be just as popular as ever. For small children between the ages of six and ten that was given recently, the girls were asked to bring their dolls and the boys their Teddy bears. And such a merry crowd. All the dolls had on their best bibs and tuckers and the bears were adorned by huge black ribbons, and in some instances were dressed in funny little coats and trousers.

Early on the other day that I discovered some funny diminutive garments at a shop specializing in "What cute little clothes for dollies," when the salesman said, "Madam, these are clothes for Teddy bears." I thought to myself, "Madame Merri, you'll have to get up much earlier in the morning if you are going to keep up with this generation of children."

Well, to go back to the party. The children played "Simon," "come to see" and "store." The hostess was wise in asking two young misses about 15 to assist her, for these childhood sets being so very far back in the dim, distant past; they were "up" on childish games and entered enthusiastically into "make believe" and "just pretending." The refreshments were served at small tables, there was a chair for each dolly and bear, much to the delight of the recipients' owners. The round moulds of jellied chicken were served with round sandwiches cut out with the cover of a baking powder box. There were salted nuts and vanilla ice cream with hot chocolate sauce and delicious sunshine cakes ornamented with blanched almonds and cherries.

The souvenirs were candy boxes in shape of various fruits filled with sugar peppermints.

The dolls and bears had small baskets filled with opera sticks and each had a quaint card of tissue paper. The lolded Japanese napkins were used.

MADAME MERRIE.

The Use of Cologne.

The most appropriate gift of perfumes could not overlook the real usefulness of cologne or some good toilet water. The beauties of ancient times who reveled in aromatic baths, knew, better than many moderns, the refreshment to tired nerves to be found in this practice. If you have not yet been educated quite up to the standard of an eastern aromatic bath, the next time you come in hot and tired from a day's shopping try pouring yourself with cologne after a hot bath. You will be absolutely astonished to find how completely your fatigue has flown.

Soiptacha Smart.

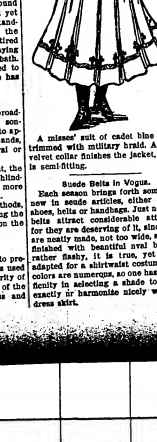
No matter what the fabric, broadcloth, chiffon, voile or cheviot, soutache applied to the edge of a garment, in narrow and broad bands, shaped panels, or elaborate floral or conventional designs.

Instead of stitching it down flat, the newest way to apply it is to blind-stitch it on the edge, giving it a more pronounced effect of incrustation.

A combination of the two methods, the outer part of the design having the soutache laid flat, the inner set on the edge, gives a striking effect.

The Popular Color.

A suggestion of yellow seems to prevail in nearly all the decorations used for social affairs, and the popularity of this color extends even to some of the pretty gowns worn by hostess and guests.



THE NEW GIRDLES

Garments Demand Care in Their Selection and Proper Attention to the Fit.

The rule of colors applies equally well to girdles. Every woman may attempt a girdle if she but know which one is possible to her figure and then see that it is carefully boned and fitted. The secret of a trim figure lies principally in studying the waist lines and correctly lengthening or shortening the spaces between the bust and the hips. Tall women take kindly to the draped girdles which terminate in a modified point just below the belt in front, slope slightly beneath the arm size and curve upward toward the middle of the back. These are the most difficult of all girdles to undertake, as everything depends upon their fit and the ability to determine perfectly how much draping they require.

A narrow girdle that is exceedingly pretty with the fichu draped waists has rounded points back and front and slopes very slightly beneath the arms. Gracefully, undraped girdles that disappear beneath the waist trimmings may be made to lend almost a princess effect to a gown, and these are greatly liked with the long, smoothly fitting sheathlike skirts now being made of soft wool, mohair and other fashionable fabrics for autumn and early winter wear.

SUIT FOR MISSES.

A misses' suit of cadet blue serge, trimmed with military braid. A black velvet collar finishes the jacket, which is semi-fitting.

Suede Belts in Vogue.

Each season brings forth something new in suede articles, either gloves, shoes, belts or handbags. Just now the belts attract considerable attention, for they are deserving of it, since they are really made, not too wide, and are finished with beautiful oval buckles, rather flashy, it is true, yet nicely adapted for a shirtwaist costume. The colors are numerous, so one has no difficulty in selecting a shade to match exactly or harmonize nicely with the dress shirt.

PROLIFIC GARDEN

ENGLISHMAN'S FIRST AND SUCCESSFUL ATTEMPTS IN MANITOBA—SOIL PRODUCES STRIKING RESULTS.

The Winnipeg (Canada) Free Press of a few days since contains account of the success that followed the efforts of William Knowles, an Englishman who located near Winnipeg, Manitoba. This is but one of many letters giving experiences of settlers, and should be encouraging to those who are looking about for a new home in which they may better their conditions. The following is a copy of the article referred to:

William Knowles, who cultivates some twelve acres of land just below Middlechurch ferry on east side of the Red River has produced as fine a display of horticultural products as any in Manitoba. The whole of his holding is in a high state of cultivation and literally crowded with splendid crops from corner to corner. Particularly encouraging is the look of the potatoes are a wonderful crop, and he expects to raise 1,500 bushels from his patch of 4½ acres. A half dozen of them selected yesterday average more than a pound each. Adjoining the potatoes may be seen a marvelous collection of tomatoes. There are 600 plants, all growing under an enormous weight of fruit. One single stock picked yesterday contained eighteen tomatoes and weighed four pounds. This extraordinary example of marvelous growth, together with some of the potatoes were sent to the Free Press office.

The proprietor was the first in town with several specimens, including green corn. The season has been long for onions, and one equare patch of nearly an acre is looking remarkably healthy. In addition there are good crops of cabbages, cauliflower, turnips, parsnips, carrots, pumpkins, marrows, cucumbers, celery, peas, lettuce, rhubarb, etc. The floral department has not been neglected and a charming display of all the well known flowers are shown, including a specially choice lot of asters.

Mr. Knowles, who is a native of the gardening experience in England, is loud in his praise of Manitoba soil for vegetable raising, and is gratified with the result of his first attempt at extensive horticulture.

Revenge is a momentary triumph, of which the satisfaction dies at once, and is succeeded by remorse; whereas forgiveness, which is the noblest of all revenge, entails a perpetual pleasure.—Mountford.

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

LAYING A CEMENT WALK.

How the Farmer Can Do the Work for Himself.

Farmers requiring walks about their homes will find nothing so practical as cement walks—hygienic, because non-absorbent; beautiful, because uniform sod artistic in finish; durable, because harder than stone; and at the same time cheaper than sawed stone or any other good sidewalk material. In many cities ordinances require that in the better quarters nothing but cement walks can be laid.

What has been found true in the city will prove equally true in the country. Live everything else, the quality of the walk will depend largely on the skill used in the selection of materials and laying the walk. The farmer who can find sand and gravel near, which he can often get for the hauling, and who could do his own work at home not ever hear time, would be at no money outlay for the walk but the cost of cement, which would cost exceed 2¼ cents per square foot of a first-class four-inch thick walk, as one barrel of Portland cement costing $1.50 or two dollars will lay 80 square feet of finished walk.

For the sake of illustration assume that a walk is to be built three feet wide and four inches thick, concrete 3¾ inches, top mortar three-fourths of an inch. First, excavate trench three feet four inches wide. If an open or porous soil four inches below bottom or eight inches below top surface of walk, but if in clay soil this trench should be eight or ten inches below bottom of walk. From the lowest point of trench lay tile so that water will stand in trench to freeze. Now fill this trench with cinders, gravel, or stone, sand, and tamp; when this is brought up within four inches of the top surface of walk the porous foundation is complete. Now place side forms (scantling, 2x4 inches, set on edge). Stretch line tight, and from line set scantlings straight; also they must conform to proper grade line. Secure these scantlings firmly by placing a cross scantling every four feet and securely staking the outside at each of these cross scantlings to keep them from spreading while the concrete is tamped into place. Use no nails or spikes; or in removing before thoroughly hardened they cast might be broken. The surface into which the concrete is tamped is first sprinkled so that the concrete will not absorb the moisture from the concrete and thus arrest hydration. Mix concrete for the 3¾ inches of the following way: Take one part Portland cement, three parts sand (clean, coarse and fine mixed), and four parts aggregate (this may be gravel, screened cinders, or crushed stone). Place these in one pile on mixing floor. While dry shovel back and forth at least two times, until thoroughly mixed. Now add water, sparingly can while it is shoveled back and forth two more times or until evenly mixed and about the consistence of fresh earth. This concrete is now ready to place. Shovel into the sections of the form, beginning at one end and filling each section as you go, tamping thoroughly and evenly to within three-quarters of an inch of top of form. When the first section is completed remove the cross scantling and against the joint thus left bare set board one-fourth of an inch thick and projecting above concrete so that when this section is also filled it can be slightly crowded loose and removed, thus leaving one-fourth of an inch division between each block. This is important. The board is now moved forward to the next joint, and so on to completion. With knife or pencil mark side forms exactly over the one-fourth of an inch open joints, so that when the top mortar is spread continuously over the surface the top mortar may be cut through into the lower joint or opening with trowel sliding along straight edge. The trowel must be so managed that the top mortar can always be placed on the concrete within two hours after the latter is placed, also the concrete should be slightly sprinkled when the mortar is placed, so that the surface is moist. Make mortar for top as follows: Portland cement, one part; sharp, clean sand, two parts. First mix dry, then wet and work into a stiff mortar. Place this on the concrete, spread with trowel, leaving the form rather full, so that when stroked even with straight-edge the form is even full everywhere. Leave for 20 minutes, when the water will be evaporated. At this time finish surfaces smooth and even with float or trowel, but do not over trowel, which again brings the water to the surface. Run along each side edge with edger, cut across joints with trowel and straight-edge at marked points, run a jointer through these, or, in the absence of either edger or jointer, dab the edges with trowel. After 24 hours cover with grass, straw, or carpet, wet thoroughly twice each day for six continuous days, when the walk is ready for use.

GETTING IN THE CROPS.

The Importance of Safe Shelter Emphasized by E. L. Vincent.

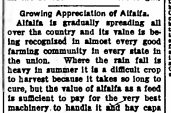
I am never really happy till all my farm crops are safely under cover. In fact I do not know that I have any crops that will bring me anything until all have been stowed away out of the reach of storm and weather. The next thing to this is threshing out of doors just as soon as the grain is dry enough; and often we are not able to do this because we cannot get a thresher when we want him.

I know it costs to provide buildings for a large farm. The first expense of building in these days is high, for lumber and building material of all kinds are high in price. It is also a fact that the farmer who has many buildings must set aside no small sum every year to pay for repairs and insurance.

And yet, stop and think that the loss of one crop through storm or other adverse circumstances would offset all this and more, too for a good season. Take the wheat crop of 50 acres, for example. Say that it would yield 18 bushels to the acre, which would be the report from one of the first crops threshed in Illinois this year. That would mean a yield of 900 bushels, worth at a fair estimate a dollar a bushel.

There have been years when we have lost about one-half the value of our crop by reason of storm. We could not thresh when we should and the grain we did get was not worth as much as it would have been could it have been put in the bins in good order. What does this mean? What but that we have sustained a money loss of $450 in that one year's crop. That would keep the buildings up in good repair for a great many years.

Bet wheat is not the only crop most farmers of to-day harvest. There is hay, one of the best crops we have, bringing at the present writing in some parts of the country from $10 to $25 a ton. Also oats, another fine crop. The value of these depends largely on the condition at marketing or fodder. Stacking is always a risky business. Not one man out of a dozen can stack grain or hay so that it will keep any length of time.



Nothing adds to the looks or the worth of a farm more than good barns or sheds for storing grain. Prospective buyers always notice the condition of these buildings, and if there are none to notice they are very apt to pass on until they find farm which are thus furnished.

Still another point is favor of plenty of barn room is the stabling of stock. The day is fast going by when just now feeding can be profitably mixed while a lot of his stock is out in the storm. Just think of the terrible losses every winter from stock exposure in the west! Leaving the humane part of it out of the question but now from an economical standpoint alone not a single farmer is all this country can afford to stand still and let a considerable part of his herd die ie the winds and the seows of our northern winters.

Shall a man incur a debt to build farm barns! I hate debt as much as anyone on the face of the earth; but rarely I would rather go with poor clothes for years and years and economize in other ways rather than to go without barns. They will soon pay for themselves. They are the right thing for every up-to-date farmer.—Farmer's Review.

A GOOD DRAG.

It Will Do Effective Work in Smoothing Cloddy Ground.

Device for Smoothing Cloddy Land.

The accompanying illustration pictures a drag which is an improvement over that of ordinary make. The difference consists in having the center board two feet longer than the others. By this means, says Prairie Farmer, all small lumps are smoothed out which are usually left in turning when all the boards are of uniform length.

Growing Appreciation of Alfalfa.

Alfalfa is gradually spreading all over the country and its value is being recognized in almost every good farming community in every state in the union. Where the rain fall is heavy in summer it is a difficult crop to harvest because it takes so long to cure, but the value of alfalfa as a feed is sufficient to pay for the very best machinery to handle it and hay caps to cover it. When a farmer looks at his alfalfa and realizes that it is worth almost as much as the same weight in bran, he is willing to go to considerable trouble and expense to take proper care of it. Alfalfa, of course, is at home in the dry irrigation districts of the west, but it may be almost as valuable in Ohio, New York state or New England. It is one of the very best dairy foods ever grown on a farm. This is one reason why it is becoming so popular in the milk shipping districts adjacent to large cities.

HOME-MADE REMEDY.

INEXPENSIVE AND EASILY PREPARED BY ANYONE.

Is Said to Promptly Relieve Backache and Overcome Kidney Trouble and Bladder Weakness in Short Time—Is Pleasant to Take.

What will appear very interesting to many people here is the article taken from a New York daily paper, giving a simple prescription, recommended by a noted authority, who claims that he has found a positive remedy to cure almost any case of backache or kidney or bladder derangement, in the following simple prescription, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargrou, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

A well-known authority, when asked regarding this prescription, stated that the ingredients are all harmless, and can be obtained at a small cost from any good prescription pharmacy, or the mixture would be put up if asked to do so. He further stated that while this prescription is often prescribed in rheumatic afflictions with splendid results, he could see no reason why it would not be a splendid remedy for kidney and urinary troubles and backache, as it has a peculiar action upon the kidney structure, cleansing these most important organs and helping them to sift and filter from the blood the foul acids and waste matter which cause sickness and suffering. Those who suffer can make no mistake in giving it a trial.

NOTHING HID FROM KAISER.

How German Emperor Keeps in Touch with World's Affairs.

The German emperor's interest in everything that goes on in the world is well known, but few are aware of the trouble he takes to keep in touch with current affairs. According to a Munich newspaper, the kaiser reads at least three papers every day, changing to the several times, which in order to become fully acquainted with the ideas of all political parties in the state. But this is by no means satisfy his appetite for information. Every day the ministry of foreign affairs, as well as that of the interior, has to provide newspaper cettings, properly sealed and dated, and pasted on slips of paper for the emperor's perusal. These he carefully reads, making marginal notes as he goes along, and they are then scrupulously classified until he put aside ready for immediate reference. Otteu, too, the emperor asks for certain reading, and has translations of technical subjects in which for the time he is specially interested.

Pure Food.

The pure food law does not prohibit the sale of Cream of Tartar Baking Powders because Cream of Tartar is as pure as Alum—but it is a well known fact that a baking powder in which Alum is used instead of Cream of Tartar is less healthful. Dr. Price's Delicious, the expert German chemist, in a recent official report concerning Baking Powders, declares that a baking powder to be better and less injurious than the so-called Cream of Tartar powders, as he says that the quantity of alum coatained in a sufficient quantity of baking powder for a batch of bread or cakes for the ordinary family, be concentrated to one mouthful of food, and taken into the stomach of any one person, no matter how delicate, it could do no harm.

On Wit and Humor.

Man is the only animal that laughs and weeps, for he is the only animal that is struck with the difference between what things are and what they ought to be. We weep at what thwarts or exceeds our desires in serious matters; we laugh at what only disappoints our expectations in trifles. We shed tears from sympathy with real and necessary distress; as we burst into laughter from want of sympathy with that which is unreasonable and unnecessary, the absurdity of which provokes our spleen or mirth, rather than serious reflections on it.—William Hazlitt.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in the curative powers of Hall's Catarrh Cure that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

HAD A FELLOW FEELING.

Aunt Susan's Heart Went Out to "Five Minute Astor."

Uncle Ill felt he knew the metropolis pretty well. Had he not been there three times in four years—and twice he had ridden on the elevated. So when he brought Aunt Susan with him (on the fourth trip) he naturally assumed the role of guide.

She marveled at everything until they sat down for luncheon. They had gone into the Astor house for that meal, but all its other marvels seemed lost on the visiting country hostess, as she looked open-eyed at the crowds that filled not only the corridors but the restaurants. Scarcely had they found seats, when this amazement took definite shape.

"Eli," said she in a stagey whisper, "I can't set here an' eat peaceably. I jes' must go down stairs an' help pore Missus Astor with the cookin' an' dishes."—Bohemian.

NO NEED FOR WORDS.

Brief Pantomime Told Everything to the Onlooker.

Harrison Grey Fiske discussed, at a dinner in New York, the art of acting.

"I believe," said Mr. Fiske, "in subtlety and restraint. A nod, a shake of the head, a silent pause—these things are often more effective than the most violent yelling and ranting.

"Life is like that, subtle and silent. What, for instance, could be more expressive than this scene, a scene without a spoken word, that I once witnessed in the country?

"An undertaker stood on a corner near a noble mansion. He elevated his brows hopefully and inquiringly as a physician came from the house. The physician, compressing his lips, shook his head decidedly and hurried to his carriage. Then the undertaker with a sigh passed on.

FURIOUS HUMOR ON CHILD.

Itching, Bleeding Sores Covered Body —Nothing Helped Her—Cuticura Cures Her in Five Days.

"After my granddaughter of about seven years had been cured of the measles, she was attacked about a fortnight later by a furious itching and painful eruption all over her body, especially the upper part of it, forming vesicles and bladder-like sores, especially under the arms, of considerable size. She suffered a great deal and for three weeks, at the time of her retiring night, using all the remedies we could think of. Nothing would help. We tried the Cuticura Remedies and after twenty-four hours we noted considerable improvement, and after using only one complete set of the Cuticura Remedies, in five consecutive days the little one, much to our joy, had been entirely cured, and has been well for a long time. The lanky tramp removed his tattered hat and displayed his intellectual brow.

"Ah, lady," he confided, "I have brains to burn. There is nothing I like better than to tackle knotty problems."

The busy housewife reached for the ax.

"Indeed!" she said. "Well, go down to the woodpile. You will find that last load the most knotty problem you ever tackled during your career."

"Aw," broke in Tommy, "I know all dat, I do. Me fadder's a lawyer, he is, an' I've heard him say it lots o' times."

"You should not have interrupted me," reprimanded the teacher, "but I'm glad that your father has taught you the old adage. Can you repeat it for me?"

The kidneys have a great work to do in keeping the blood pure. When they get out of order it causes backache, headaches, dizziness, languor and distressing urinary troubles. Keep the kidneys well and all these sufferings will be saved you. Mrs. S. A. Moore, proprietor of a restaurant at Waterville, Me., says:

"Before using Doan's Kidney Pills I suffered everything from kidney troubles for a year and a half. I had pain in the back and head, and almost continuous in the loins and felt weary all the time. A few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills brought great relief, and I kept on taking them until in a short time I was cured. I think Doan's Kidney Pills are wonderful."

Women Avoid Operations

When a woman suffering from female troubles is told that an operation is necessary, it, of course, frightens her.

The very thought of the hospital, the operating table and the knife strikes terror to her heart.

It is quite true that these troubles may reach a stage where an operation is the only resource, but a great many women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after an operation has been declared upon as the only cure. The strongest and most grateful statements possible to make come from women who by taking made from native roots and herbs, have escaped serious operations, as evidenced by Miss Rose Moore's case, of 307 W. 26th St., N. Y. She writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured me of one of the worst forms of female trouble and I wish to express to you my deepest gratitude. I suffered intensely for two years so that I was unable to attend to my duties and was a burden to my family. I doctored and doctored with only temporary relief and constantly objecting to an operation which I was advised to undergo. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it cured me of the terrible trouble and I am now in better health then I have been for many years."

This and other such cases should encourage every woman to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before she submits to an operation.

WESTERN CANADA

New Districts Now Opened for Settlement

Some of the choicest lands in the grain growing belts of Saskatchewan and Alberta have been opened for settlement under the Homestead Regulations of the Province of Canada. Thousands of homesteads of 160 acres each are now available. The new regulations make it possible for many to secure a homestead of their own, especially the man who has already taken a homestead and desires to secure more land for a home for a family, or for the young man who has reached the age of 18 years and desires to secure a homestead for himself. Entry may be made by proxy at any Dominion Land Office for the district in which the land is situated by the father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

Any even numbered section of Dominion Lands in Manitoba or the North West Provinces, except 8 and 26, not reserved, may be entered for by the intending settler, or can be purchased at $3.00 per acre in certain districts. Entry fee, $10.00.

The fee in each case will be $10.00. Churches, schools and markets are convenient. Healthy climate, splendid crops and good laws. Grain growing and mixed farming are the principal industries.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the Foreign Mission Enterprise from a Purely Disinterested, Judicial and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

Chinese Have Own Opinion of Missionary Work

Tientsin, China.—For generations past has been saying that some day the world would have to reckon with China. Now that day seems to have begun. In the place of the huge, inert, gelatinous mass, which could be struck in one part without the nerves feeling the blow, there has arisen a new China with a national consciousness, an awakening pride, a sense of dignity and a readiness to assert her own claims. China the helpless is fast becoming China the ominous, and that portentous fact cannot too soon penetrate the dull and self-sufficient complacency of civilization.

For a hundred years the world has been hearing what the missionaries thought of China, nobody inquiring or caring what China thought of the missionaries. Occasionally, some western trained Chinese diplomat, like the wily Wu Ting Fang—whom, by the way, his late official associates in Peking, who have since crowded him out of office, contemptuously designate as "that foreign devil, Wu," would deliver doubts ended opinions concerning the missionaries. But the real Chinese opinion has been difficult to obtain. The average oriental is afflicted with congenital inability to tell the truth.

The Wily Wu as a Prevaricator.

It may be worth while to dwell for a moment to illustrate this, again using Wu Ting Fang, who has struggled hard to gain a recognition as a missionary communicants with that which he enjoyed in America. On the occasion of the return to the states of Minister Conger, who seems to have been the most popular representative his country has ever sent to China, the missionaries in and about Peking gave him a reception at one of the Methodist homes. It was a strictly missionary occasion. Wu Ting Fang, bearing of it, went directly to the host and asked permission to be present. He furthermore asked bluntly if he might be permitted to make a speech. Then, at the reception, he arose and unblushingly looking into the faces of those who had heard his invitation, he said: "I cannot understand why I should be asked to be present here tonight, and I hesitated a long time about coming. Even taking for granted the courtesy of including me among the guests, I still cannot see why you should want me to make a speech. As a matter of fact, that didn't, and all remarks fell flat.

This is the sort of thing to be expected of orientals. It was of the pectedly shoved, and their quenee pulled, upon this slightest provocation. I have never seen a missionary strike a Chinese man, but I know of rare cases in which it has been done. I have occasionally witnessed a disregard for the rights and feelings of the natives, as a fellow man, on the part of the missionary. To cite a trivial instance, My steamer rug was hanging on the arm of a missionary in a crowd of Chinese. One of the latter, impelled by mere curiosity, began idly to finger the texture of the rug. At once the missionary jerked it away, with a snarl, as if the man had injured it. That missionary's chances of helping that man's soul are slight indeed.

As a background for all consideration of all things Chinese, these regrettable effects of extra-territoriality, and of the white man's sense of racial superiority, must be borne in mind. They will illuminate the report of troubles that arise in this monster nation, which is awakening, bewildered, from the sleep of centuries. All my interviews with the Chinese have brought out this point. I myself have been harder upon them, in the preceding paragraphs, than the Chinese have been. It cannot be questioned that this great mass of missionaries here in reality are for the Chinese, and are honestly endeavoring to serve them. The loyalty of the missionaries to the natives, when contrasted with the contempt and disfavor of most other foreigners, is really remarkable.

The Doctor's Good Reputation.

Whatever fault they find with other phases of mission work—and many have scant patience with the distinctively religious propaganda—the Chinese have, unanimously praised the medical and educational branches. Remember that this nation of 400,000,000 persons has no modern medical science, outside of the missions, and that there is no end of sickness, much of it is due to ignorance and filth. The ordinary medical missionary treats from 5,000 to 18,000 dispensary cases a year.

So this humanitarian work, which writes its own good record in the healed bodies of the people, comes in for nothing but praise. Some of the officials manifested sincere gratitude in speaking of what the missionaries had done in this direction for China.

Similarly, concerning the educational work of missions, I could elicit only one opinion. Until within five years China has had nothing of what the west could call education, except as the missions gave it. Chinese statesmen and philosophers were ignorant of the simplest facts of geography, history and nature, such as any ten-year-old boy in America understood. They have frankly and freely credit the mission schools with having awakened the educational impulse in the nation, and with having pioneered the way.

Curiously enough, some of the educated Chinese, avowedly non-Christian, displayed such a knowledge of the genius of Christianity as to approach it by having done so little for Chine! "Yes," said one, "I grant that missions have done a great deal in an educational way for China, but nothing like what they should have done." In passing judgment upon the missions and missionaries, most of these Chinese assume the Christian viewpoint. Thus, the Chinese constantly treat their own people with greater cruelty and harshness than the foreigners, yet they declare that even an air of superiority toward the poorest natives is reprehensible on the part of the missionary. A Chinese may revile and beat and kick his countryman, but a foreigner may not speak sharply to him.

"Nice Christians."

Despite the fame and unquestioned service of many veteran missionaries to the Chinese people, several Chinese stated to me that the later work of the missionaries is wiser and better than that of former days, or, as one expressed it, that "the past ten years have accomplished more than the previous 90." The praise for the younger men has been pronounced; but this is not unexpected, when one has seen the character and caliber of the recent crop of missionaries—though it would be difficult to see how they could surpass the many grants whose fame is part of the history of Chinese missions.

When it came to speaking of the matter of converts, most official Chinese raised their eyebrows or shrugged their shoulders. "I think very few of them are honest," said one, "they are after the missionary's money, protection or prestige." Again: "The missionaries have reached only the lowest classes of Chinese." Careful inquiry among the missionaries themselves has confirmed this, at least with respect to the situation prior to 1900. Their work had until then been accomplished almost wholly among the poorer people; since 1900, however, many of a better class have been reached.

On the subject of "Rice Christians," i. e., persons professing conversion for personal gain, several of the best informed Chinese agreed that not more than 50 per cent of the converts are honest. One of the most successful of independent native pastors disagreed with this, saying that the percentage is now fully 80 per cent; probably 20 per cent are deceived the missionary. This statement was made in the presence of a veteran missionary, who assented. In the independent churches, he added, the proportion of these pretenders is practically negligible, for there is nothing to be gained by trying to deceive a strictly Chinese church, even if it could be accomplished.

"Squeezing" and Religion.

Naturally, I wanted to know if Christians are exempt from the prevailing Chinese practices, which, expressed in blunt Anglo-Saxon, are called bribery and graft. At once I began to hear the difficulties under which a person just out of heathenism, and surrounded still unreformed by heathenism, continually labors. One man's cook became a Christian and God "squeezing." Soon it became noised abroad among the household-ers that Mrs. R.'s supplies were costing her less than her neighbors'. The latter called their cooks to account, who thus "lost face," and their subsequent put to work a more effective and far-reaching boycott than any leader among the Boxers. The cook and his mistress could not withstand it. Some missionaries cherish the belief that their Christian servants do not "squeeze," but the more general opinion is that they differ from others in that they exercise moderation!

FOR HEALTH'S SAKE

SEE THAT YOUR FOODSTUFFS ARE PURE.

ADULTERATIONS ARE COMMON

Unscrupulous Dealers in Large Cities the Medium for Disposing of Such Goods—Purchase at Homes.

For years one of the matters which has received the careful attention of the department of agriculture is food adulteration. Who has not heard of the old line on the state of Connecticut—the wooden nutmeg, but there are worse things than wooden substitutes. Unprincipled manufacturers and dealers for many years have resorted to adulterations of foodstuffs to increase profits. In the matter of spices, only a short time since the food commissioner of one of the states discovered among 50 samples analyzed more than 30 that were adulterated. In pepper, stems and barks of trees ground, in every case of ground spice foreign substances were added to give weight, and in numerous cases, particularly flavoring extracts, the articles supposed to be made from pure fruits, were found to be synthetical, or entirely artificial, preparations from coal tar.

These goods were prepared by concerns that have no regular trade, but depend upon agents to sell goods for them to whoever they can. It is rarely that a reliable wholesale grocery house sells such goods, as retailers will not knowingly handle them in that way. They cannot be legally sold, and some officer of the food department of the state is likely to drop into the store any time, confiscate the goods, and impose a heavy fine on the dealer.

A short time ago health officers in Philadelphia found a number of Italians in a cellar putting up the bottles and labeling the same with a foreign-looking label. An analysis of the oil proved it to be manufactured entirely of cotton-seed oil, and the lowest grade of olive. Hundreds of cases of the stuff were tried to a city in the middle west, where it was disposed of under contract to houses who sold direct to consumers through agents and by mail. Not alone are spices, extracts, olive oil and similar foodstuffs adulterated this way, but the fraud extends still further. Cheap kinds of fish, such as bake, catfish, etc., are prepared and placed on the market as genuine codfish. Tomato catsups are made of a good quality of pumpkin and given the right color by dye stuffs, and flavored by the use of coal tar extracts. Hundreds of other articles are "doctored" the same way. It is rarely that such artificial goods find their way into the hands of regular grocery concerns throughout the country, but are disposed of by concerns who depend upon doing business at points distant from the location, and who seek protection in the interstate commerce law, and endeavor to dispose of their goods directly to the consumers, as no federal or state officer is likely to call at a private house and make an analysis of foods used.

It seems that neither the national or state laws can be so closely applied as to prevent this evil. If the messes of people would study into this question the buying of foods from the local dealers, who are known to be honest, would be the result. Daily reports of people being mysteriously poisoned by eating some article of food would not be so numerous.

Trust "Graft."

One of the practices of the trusts in the manufacturing of their products, is the price schemes. In order to induce the consumers to use their various brands of goods they offer attractive prizes over the freight." Generally where premiums are offered with goods, the package are short in weight, or a few cents more charged than goods of like kind sell for. Thus it can be seen how the premium is paid for by the consumer, and he pays a high price for the prizes he receives. Goods that are sent away with purchases cost money. Their cost does not come out of the profits of the manufacturers, but out of the purses of the people who use the goods. If one desires to buy sugar, he does not like to take the scoop or shovel some one pays the bill. Various systems of premiums and prizes have been devised. Some call for a certain number of coupons of some sort, or wrappers, or some article short in the coupons alone. Where cash is required along with coupons there is usually an additional profit in the deal aside from that made on the goods with which coupons are given. It is well to buy goods on their merits alone. Buy what you want and at the right price, and you will be ahead of the premium plan.

Catch-Penny Advertisements.

Beware of the advertisements in which it is stated that "this article will be sent on approval for one dollar." It means that you will have something on your hands, and a good sized freight or express bill to settle, and perhaps many more dollars to pay.

TRADE'S GREAT MAGNET.

How Some Mammoth Fortunes Have Been Built Up.

Many of the great fortunes in America have been gained by the judicious use of printers' ink. The wealthiest merchants attribute their success to advertising. Millions and millions of dollars' worth of manufactured products are annually sold to the people of the United States through the advertising pages of the public press, the only medium. Consider the newfangled breakfast foods, the numerous natural food preparations! It is more than likely they would never have become known without their merits were exploited before the people through the newspapers. Great exclusive mail-order houses, institutions that have come into existence during the past 20 years, have been built up entirely through judicious advertising.

As to the mail order houses, there is a loud clamor against their encroachments throughout the country. There is every cause for alarm that they will eventually grow into such mammoth institutions as will monopolize the business that is now the backbone and spine of the country towns. There is one way that the merchants can thwart the evil. It is by persistent use of the public press. Use advertising space, meet the competition fairly and squarely and let the people know about it.

Hundreds of would-be business venturers have failed just because there was no proper advertising. Hundreds and thousands of small merchants fail for the same cause. The paper in a small town is of greater force than the average merchant thinks. If the storekeeper desires to test his home paper as an advertising medium, let him insert an advertisement of some article and put the price lower than it is generally sold at. Then watch results. He will find that the people will learn of it, and call to see about it.

Dollars to the editor for advertising space are never lost if the advertising is of the proper kind. The investment will bring greater returns to the merchant than the money invested in any other way. One trouble is that the average merchant knows little about proper methods of advertising. A simple card "John Jones, Grocer, sells groceries" is of but little use. Make advertising attractive. Tell about goods, about prices, and everything that a prospective purchaser may want to know. Keep persistently at it. Change advertisements week after week. The people look for it, and it will pay.

HELPING THE TRUSTS.

Systems That Are Opposed to the Welfare of the Masses.

Nearly a century ago, Disraeli, the leader, in his essay on gaming and gambling, wrote: "The evogue and the civilized, the illiterate and the learned are alike captivated by the hope of accumulating wealth without the labors of industry." In this sense the great statesman and writer sounded the keynote of much of the woes met with in life. It is the desire to secure wealth without labor, to gain something for nothing, that causes many to go to their graves "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

The man who gleefully sings "Make a few dollars earn you a living" will be sure to find many people ready to believe him. They will take a "chance" anyway, and the promoter really encourages that the promoter really succeeds in "accumulating wealth without the labors of industry," but not in others—his victims—generally fail.

During the past few years one large concern has made for itself fame by erecting the rural districts of surplus wealth, has built a city of its own, has erected buildings for the accommodation of 7,000 people. This concern does not draw a cent of rent from the people of the city wherein it is located. All its wealth and the means by which it built up its "model city" has been contributed by people scattered throughout the country.

How few there are who think that when they send money to this great concern for supplies that might as well be bought in their home town. that they are helping in deal a deathblow to the place they call home? Yet such is the fact. Every dollar sent to the large city assists in the building up of greater trusts, and greater combinations, that seek to control the marketing, the mercantile business, and as well the prices of labor and all the products of the country and the farm. It means business oligarchy to which the common people should not submit.

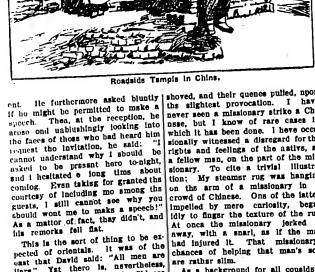
Deception Practiced.

Those who would not be defrauded by sharpers who use the advertising columns of the city papers would do well in carefully considering each proposition which attracts their attention. Remember that those who advertise are not philanthropists. They have in mind to give away, unless it is in exchange for money. The concern that offers an exceptional bargain should be studied well before investment be made. Everything has a legitimate value, and is worth so much in the markets of the world, much it is offered at less than its apparent real value, look out for deception. Generally every good town affords the buyer a chance to obtain whatever he requires, and at a price consistent with quality. Those who patronize home stores are less likely to be deceived.

Sporting Gossip.

No boxer who ever lived enjoyed the vogue that was John L. Sullivan's. If he rode across the country in a railroad train crowds gathered at every station just to see the car that had the champion for an occupant. In any city he never walked down the street without having a crowd of anywhere from 50 to a thousand after him. People would fight at the mere suggestion of a row at the big fellow. He did things which were, and figured out in various antecedent, but they daily in various antecedent, but the public always forgave him. He was John L., a little eccentric in conduct, perhaps, but he delivered the goods, and they loved him loyally. Even to-day Sullivan is a bigger card than the champion of all Sullivan in miniature, a wonderful puncher, a man who won decisive victories, who polished off the best men who could be found in jig time. Young Corbett, who knocked out Terrible Terry and gave the ring one of its greatest upsets, never attained one-tenth of the following that was McGovern's, and even when they met the second time the public actually made McGovern a favorite, though, of course, Corbett won again.



David Altizer, the brilliant young short stop of the Washington American club, who took the place of the late lamented Joe Cassidy, is 23 years old and is a native of Pleasont Hill, Ill., a village of the famous Cohburn county. Altizer got his early base ball education in and around Pleasant Hill. He was a member of the famous Farmer Boys' amateur team that trounced everything for miles on either side of the Mississippi. In 1899 he enlisted in the United States army and was in the command sent to China during the Boxer uprising. He participated in the campaign against the Taku and Tientsin and was also of the siege of Peking. In the Philippines he was on service with the General Bell end was under fire several times, taking part in the engagements with the Pulajanes. mond that he resumed his interest in baseball, and it was not long before he was the nine of Battery H that he became known throughout the islands as the best ball player in the United States army. When his term expired he returned to this country and played for the Hilton team in the Connecticut league. For 1903 he accepted an engagement with the Toledo club. In 1904 and 1905 he played in the Connecticut league ngolu, where he was deemed a star. In 1906 he jumped to the Atlantic outlaw Tri-State league, playing with Lancaster. He playing there attracted notional attention, and in mid-season he was drafted by Jimmy Washington's sport field. He is not a record player, but goes after everything that comes his way. He weighs 160 pounde, and he five feet ten inches in height.

The publication of the new footboll rule code in the Official Guide, just issued, marks the completion of the work of the sub-committee of the intercollegiate rules committee appointed to revamp the rules. The arrangement it is possible to ascertain at once the rule on any disputed point which may arise, thereby all the present difficulty due to the imperfectly indexed code and the promiscuous arrangement. The new order of the rules is logical and notural, and each point is so completely covered that the misunderstandings and consequent disputes and misrulings ought to be readily avoided. The changes in the rules have been few in number and adjustment, have not been conspicuous or very important save in a few instances. Most of the changes have been in phraseology, and have sought the elimination of ambiguity and to generally clarify the rules. There have been a few changes in penalties, and the cleared definition of one or two fouls, while the duties of the three officials provided have been classified and aligned more closely. With respect to the play, the two most important changes are: The increase in the length of the game to 70 minutes, and the alteration of the rule governing forward passes.

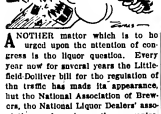
Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

A MOVE FOR PUBLIC BATHS AND LAUNDRIES

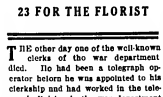


WASHINGTON. — Preparatory to submitting their annual reports and estimates to congress at the coming session, the commissioners are considering the advisability of providing public baths in the District. They strongly favor the establishment of public baths, and last year recommended that an appropriation be made sufficient to build two, but congress turned it down. This year, it is stated, the commissioners will ask for an appropriation with which to establish public baths for the accommodation of pupils of the public schools, and the establishment of public laundries in connection with the public baths.

All of the commissioners are anxious to provide some kind of bathing or swimming scheme for the school children. It is their aim to make the scheme of such a nature as to have swimming lessons as part of the course of studies at the schools. They think every child, boy or girl, should learn the art of swimming.

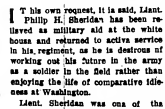
In connection with the effort of the commissioners to secure these public baths it is also likely they will endeavor to establish one or two public laundries in the District. This idea is something new and novel in this part of the country, although such places are common throughout Europe.

It is the belief that a public laundry should be connected with every public bathhouse erected in the District and to have each laundry supplied with not less than 30 stationary wash tubs, where the women of the poorer classes can take their clothing to be washed, requiring only a trifling sum for soap and other incidentals. Connected with each laundry it is the idea to have a "drying-room," where the women can take clothes after the washing to be dried, either by hot air or steam.



CONGRESS MAY SHAKE UP THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

ANOTHER matter which is to be urged upon the attention of congress is the liquor question. Every year now for several years the Littlefield-Dolliver bill for the regulation of the traffic has made its appearance, but the National Association of Brewers, the National Liquor Dealers' association and various other organizations have always been on the lookout for it, and have always succeeded in blocking its passage. This year it begins to look as though the liquor traffic which has been getting up as well. At the coming session the Anti-Saloon League of the United States, which has become a powerful organization, will make a strenuous effort to get legislation through. The league believes the time is ripe for the long-delayed federal legislation.



The states are doing handsomely, say men who are preparing to lead the temperance fight before congress at the coming session, but what has the federal government been doing? it has, they say, been nullifying the state laws in two ways. The offense of which most complaint is made is that of permitting the shipment of liquor in unbroken packages from one state in the "dry" territory of an other state.

The fight of the session will center around the bill giving state control of interstate shipmcuts of liquor into "dry" territory when they reach the state border, but the temperance forces may go further and demand that the federal government's internal revenue department shall not issue a government license to any person who has not first complied with all the requirements of the state law governing the sale of intoxicating liquors. The movement, in short, is to bring the federal government to the support of the states in the effort that is being made everywhere for the better regulation and control of the liquor traffic.

AND LATER IT WAS 23 FOR THE FLORIST

THE other day one of the well-known clerks of the war department died. He had been a telegraph operator before he was appointed to his clerkship and had worked in the telegraph division in the war department for some years. When his fellow employes learned of his death they determined to send a floral tribute, and a collection was taken up and order given to the florist to make a large pillow of flowers and mark in the center the figures "73," which in telegraph language means the signal between operators "My compliments and remembrance." On the day of the funeral the operators went to pay their last respects to their clerk, and were greatly shocked when they saw their floral tribute on the casket, for instead of the figures "73" there, in red immortels, on a white field of roses were the figures "23." It was too late to do anything, and as the casket was borne to the grave the pillow sent with "Compliments and remembrances" was marked with the message "23." The next day an indignant committee of telegraphors waited on the florish for an explanation. All he could say was that he had never heard of "73," but he knew "23" and thought that was what they wanted.

AIDS AT WHITE HOUSE ON THE ANXIOUS SEAT

IT his own request, it is said, Lieut. Philip H. Sheridan has been relieved as military aid at the white house during the last two seasons, and it was undoubtedd among his many friends that he would be enabled to retain the choice social position throughout the coming season. Recently, however, it developed that pressure was being brought by friends of other young officers to land the White House detail for them, and it is thought possible that the president may have decided upon a change in order to give others an opportunity to shine at the executive mansion. In this connection it is also rumored that a number of other officers will be relieved of the White House detail and returned to their regular stations and on warships in foreign waters.

Of the ten White House aids of last season it is now understood in military and naval circles that it is doubtful if more than four will be retained.

Mr. Sheridan, following that of Lieut. U. S. Grant III last season, breaks up the trio combinatnm of the three sons of noted civil war generals who surrounded the president at his social functions. Lee being the only one now retained.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

IS PLEASED WITH HAWAII

Secretary Straus, of the department of commerce and labor, who has just returned from an extended trip through Hawaii, is much pleased with what he saw and heard in the island and believes his visit is likely to lead to practical results.

Secretary Straus is a firm believer in the idea that the vast interests intrusted to his safekeeping can not be entirely administered from his desk in Washington, and this conviction led to the determination to make a personal inspection of the workings of the department away from the capital, and to become personally acquainted with the various officials having supervision. Accordingly he planned a trip along the Canadian border to Vancouver, and thence south through Seattle and Portland to San Francisco, with Honolulu as the ultimate destination, and it is from this trip that he has just returned.

While in Hawaii Secretary Straus was waited upon by a delegation of Japanese editors, representing the four Japanese newspapers of Honolulu, who called to ascertain his views regarding Japanese matters in the territory and as to his policy with reference to Japanese immigration, particularly if he believed that the preponderance of Japanese in Hawaii was inimical to the future welfare of the islands.

There is an apparent need of greater shipping facilities for the islands, a dopatation of merchants and planters, who waited on Secretary Straus, showing how the coast wise shipping law worked a hardship to the islands in that they penalized the carrying of passengers and freight between the territory and the mainland of the United States in other than American bottoms, and owing to the difficulty with which vessels of that description stop at Honolulu, large quantities of fruit rotted on the wharves while awaiting shipment. The same lack of transportation facilities was a peculiar hardship upon residents of the territory, who were often obliged, as a result of illness or pressing financial matters, to leave for the United States on a vessel of foreign registry and thereby incur the fine of $200 which our navigation laws impose.

Secretary Straus promised to do all he could to remedy this injustice and this will no one of the matters which he will endeavor to bring to the attention of congress this winter and obtain relief for the islands.

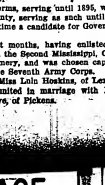
MAY NULLIFY STANDARD FINE

Morltt Rosenthal, chief associate counsel for the Standard Oil company, made a sensation when he announced he had a scheme to nullify Judge Landis' $29,240,000 fine imposed upon the oil trust. Attorney Rosenthal's scheme is based on the immunity bath to be granted to the Alton railroad for its part in testifying against the Standard Oil company. He says the Standard should have been informed of the proposed immunity bath so its attorneys could have questioned the Alton witnesses properly. Attorney Rosenthal contends they should have been allowed to ask these railroad witnesses whether their testimony had been influenced in any way by knowledge thnt the road which employed them would not suffer prosecution.

Attorney Rosenthal, who raises this question, is a native of Dixon, Ill. Hn was born May 4, 1866, and is therefore hut 41 years old. Hn graduated from the University of Michigan in 1888, studied law in Chicago and was admitted to the bar in 1889. He was assistant states attorney for Cook county in 1893; assistant United States attorney northern district attorney of Illinois from 1894 to 1898. It will be noted that his rise was rapid and that although a young man he has attained a most enviable position in the legal profession. Politically he is a democrat.

OPPOSES HUSBAND'S PLANS

The first storm to mar the matrimonial happiness of Jon Kubelik, the noted violinist, and his beautiful wife, formerly Countess Marianna Czaky-Szell, has arisen over the projected visit of the musician to the United States on a long concert tour, during which he expects to repeat his former triumphs.



Having heard that during a former tour American women went wild over Kubelik, kissed his portrait, surrounded his carriage and sent hundreds of letters demanding interviews, his wife fears to allow him to come to the United States again unless she is at his side to scare off too enthusiastic admirers.

Kubelik and his manager have pointed out that it is utterly impossible for Mme. Kubelik to take her twin children to America, and that to do so would seriously hinder the hunt for the dollar which the violinist is undertaking.

So insistent is the countess, however, that Kubelik is considering the advisability of either abandoning the tour or defying his wife, regardless of consequences.

The tour will include New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Washington, Indianapolis and St. Louis.

EXIT VARDAMAN—ENTER NOEL

Special interest centers in the change of governors in Mississippi next January because of the sharp controversies which have occurred between the present incumbent, Gov. Vardaman, and President Roosevelt. The new governor-elect, E. F. Noel, occupies rather a unique position, not only in the history of his state, but in that of the entire country, for although he was the first citizen of Holmes county ever chosen, not only as governor, but for any state office, and, so far as can be ascertained, he was the first to be chosen to any office outside his county, and that was when he was elected district attorney in 1895.

The public life of Edmond F. Noel began in 1883, when he was the youngest member of the house of representatives, in which he served two terms, and was afterwards elected district attorney, in 1887, which post he also held for two terms, serving until 1895, when he was chosen as state senator for Holmes county, serving as such until the end of 1903, in which year he was for the first time a candidate for Governor, with Messrs. Vardaman and Critz.

Mr. Noel has a brief record of eight months, having enlisted in 1898, during the war with Spain as a private in the Second Mississippi, Company K, commanded by Colonel W. A. Montgomery, and was chosen captain by acclamation, and with it was attached to the Seventh Army Corps.

Mr. Noel has been twice married, first to Miss Lnin Hoskins, of Lexington, who died in 1891, and in 1905 he was united in marriage with Mrs. Alice Tye-Nelson, daughter of Colonel J. F. Tye, of Pickens.

TO LOSE ROCKEFELLER PLOT FOR GARDEN USE

NEW YORK—The 280-odd small children who ovar two months ago considered themselves the happiest kids in the city when the little plots were awarded in the garden presented to the school children by John D. Rockefeller on the ground in front of the Rockefeller institute, at Sixty-sixth street and Avenue A, are bewailing the fate of their treasured beets and radishes, for it is rumored that next year the ground will be needed for a proposed addition to the institute.

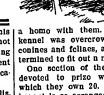
But the fear that they are going to lose their little gardens has only increased the children's interest in the cultivation and harvest of this year's crops.

The other day was harvesting day with the small planters, and the crops gathered astonished many old gardeners who were on hand to watch the operation.

Each of the children has a piece of ground four feet wide by ten feet long, but they have all managed to squeeze into this small space a row of beets, turnips and lettuce, and some beans and cucumners.

There were a few of the children who did not have a big harvest. Some of the plots are not as fertile as others, and some of them have not been as well cared for. Then there are a few of the plots which have suffered from the depredations of urchins who have no gardens, but nevertheless have a tooth for radishes and which families like fresh vegetables on wash days the relotives of those who have plots.

When the ground was offered by Mr. Rockefeller it was prepered with the greetest care. The land on which the garden is situated is naturaddy very sondy and unfertile. Mmy cerlonds of rich loam and fertilizer were dumped into the garden, and it was plowed mnny times. When it was finally in readiness and divided off into long rows on the day was fixed for the assigning of the gardens.

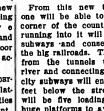


There were scores of applicants for every plot assigned and many among the disappoiated ones herlored revenge, and for mnny nights after the first planting several of the plots were torn up. This was stopped by the board of education by putting o watchman at the garden day and night, and his vigilnncd has only ceased with the harvesting of the crops.

CHINAMEN WILL BUILD CHURCH FOR THEMSELVES

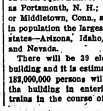
THIS city is to hove its first Chinese church. Funds are being raised for the erection of Mongolian temple and it is expected by those interested in the enterprise that ground will soon be broken in the vicinity of Chinatown. The proposed house of worship is an outgrowth of the Chinese mission, whose headquarters are in West Twenty-ninth street. There are 8,000 Chinese in New York, and the present quarters have become inadequate to carry on the work in an effective manner. So plans have been drawn for a building devoted entirely to the cause, in which will be an auditorium on the ground floor for the Sunday school and preaching services; the second floor will contain a Chinese library, a parlor and reception room, in which the Tract society and other meetings important to the work will be held. Two rooms on the third floor will consist of visitors' and students' sleeping apartments and a dispensory connected with a room in which those who ors sick and far away from friends and nativo lead moy secure attendance and comforters have also so much need. In the basement there will be a kitchen, storeroom and gymnasium. A roof garden will crown the building.

A REFUGE FOR "VAG" DOGS AND STRAY CATS



IN philantropic work in this great city the dumb brutes are not forgotten. The latest move looking to their comfort is the establishment of a refuge for strays both of the canine and the feline persuasion.

Misses Sicila and Madeline Mills, wealthy young women of the Bronx, whose home is on Kingsbridge terrace, have just completed at a cost of about $10,000 a kennel which will be used almost exclusively for dogs found wandering friendless and homeless.



The young women are among the most active workers in the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and for several years any "tramp" dog or cat that happened along would find a home with them. Recently their kennel was overcrowded with "vag" canines and felines, and they then determined to fit out a new kennel.

One section of the kennel will be devoted to prizo winning dogs, of which they own 28. The rest of the kennels is so arranged that it will accommodate 200 or moro dogs and any cur that wants a good home, with plenty of good food, can have it for the asking.

NEW HUDSON TUNNEL BUILDING A WHOPPER

THE Hudson Tunnel company's new terminal building, which is being rushed to completion, is literally a whopper. It covers two blocks and will ha ve stories high, providing floor space for the offices which will accommodate 10,000 sculs.

From this can be drawn the comparison that the building will be populated in an equal number with such cities as Portsmonth, N. H.; Helena, Mont., or Middletown, Conn., and will exceed in population the largest towns in four states—Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico and Nevada.

There will be 39 elevators in the building and it is estimated that about 125,000,000 persons will pass through the building in entering or leaving trains in the course of a year.

From this new terminal building one will be able to go to most any corner of the country, as the trains running into it will connect with all railroads and elaborate plans have been laid to eliminate any possibility of a tieup. Careful provisions have been made for the possibility of fire. All the cars of the trains will bo of steel and the terminal building is so constructed that should a fire start in any one room of the building it will be hardly likely to spread to another.

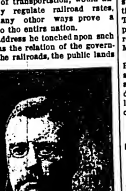
PRESIDENT TALKS FOR BIG WATERWAY

HE ADDRESSES A VAST CROWD AT THE CONVENTION IN MEMPHIS, TENN.

River Journey Is Ended—Chief Executive Is Given an Enthusiastic Welcome—Pleads for Greater Navy in Address at Cairo.

Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 4.—The feature of the day's program at the deep waterway convention being held in this city was the address of the president. It is estimated that not less than 75,000 visitors from all over the Mississippi valley reached here Thursday and Friday morning, among them the governors of more than 20 states, prominent government officials and men of affairs. It has been one of the biggest days in the history of Memphis and the south.



When the president arose to address the vast audience he was greeted with tumultuous applause. The people gathered there believed in the project which they represented, and they saw in the president a friend of the project. Nor did his enthusiasm for the subject disappoint them. He strongly urged the building of inland waterways, and paid glowing tribute to the people of the great central states.

Should Be Done by Government.

He believed, he said, that the government should construct and operate the system of canals which was proposed, and that government expenditures on the rivers should be made with a definite object in view, and not merely for temporary benefits as in the past.

He believed the building of great inland waterways would help in solving for all time the perplexing problems of transportation, would automatically regulate railroad rates, and in many other ways prove a blessing to the entire nation.

In his address he touched upon such subjects as the relation of the government to the railroads, the public lands question and the irrigation question, the Panama canal and other things, all of which he connected either directly or indirectly with the inland waterways project.

Urges Strong Navy.

Cairo, Ill., Oct. 4.—In his speech here Thursday President Taft reiterated his contention that the United States must maintain a firm policy in the world affairs and announced the "international milksop." In this connection he announced for the first time that the transfer of the Atlantic fleet to the Pacific represents merely the inauguration of a new policy by which the fleet will alternate between the two oceans each year.

The president forcibly urged the necessity of a strong navy, saying: "We have an enormous coast line, and our coast line is on two great oceans. To repel hostile attacks the fleet must be, and not the navy, must be used; but the best way to parry is to hit—so fight can ever be won except by hitting—and we can only hit by means of the navy. It is utterly impossible to improvise even a make-shift navy under the conditions of modern warfare. Since the days of Napoleon no war between two great powers has lasted as long as it would take to build a battleship, let alone a fleet of battle ships; and it takes just as long to train the crew of a battleship as it does to build it; and as regards the most important thing of all, the training of the officers, it takes much longer. The navy must be built and all its training given in time of peace. When once war has broken out it is too late to do anything. We must have a good navy, not yet large enough for our needs, but of excellent material. Where a navy is as small as ours, the cardinal rule must be that the battleships shall not be separated."

Marquise to Marry Gendarme.

Rome, Oct. 5.—A sensation has been caused in aristocratic circles by the announcement that the Marquise Sachetti, a member of an ancient and a noble Florentine family and a cousin of Prince Orsini, is about to marry a sergeant of gendarmes. The man is eight years younger than the marquise.

PAY TRIBUTE TO M'KINLEY

FIFTY THOUSAND PERSONS SEE MONUMENT DEDICATED.

President Roosevelt Is the Principal Speaker at the Impressive Ceremonies in Canton, O.

Canton, O., Oct. 1.—The nation paid homage Monday to the memory of William McKinley when the splendid monument which marks his last resting place was unveiled in the presence of an assembled throng such as Canton never saw before, and with the president of the United States as the principal speaker.

It was the tribute of a grateful nation, both in word and in deed, to "a good citizen, a brave soldier, a wise executive," and more than 50,000 persons, representing all walks of life and every part of the country, participated in the ceremonies of dedicating the monument, the loving gift of a million Americans whose contributions, aggregating $900,000, provided the splendid tomb in which rests the bodies of the third of the martyred presidents, his wife and their two children.

The arrival of President Roosevelt upon the stand was awaited anxiously by the crowd with cheers. The audience arose. The president was the last to enter the stand. He was accompanied by Justice Day and Vice President Fairbanks. At 2:24 Justice Day called the assemblage to order, and in a few words introduced Gov. Harris, president of the day.

Gov. Harris introduced Rev. Dr. Bristol, of Washington, D. C., whose church President McKinley attended when in Washington. Dr. Bristol offered prayer. Justice Harris then delivered the opening address of the ceremony.

President Harris then asked the audience to rise while Miss Helen McKinley, the only sister of the late president, drew aside the flag disclosing the bronze figure of McKinley in the attitude of delivering his last speech on the day of his assassination at Buffalo, September 5, 1901. The flag was removed slowly and impressively. This was followed by the reading of the poem entitled "William McKinley," by James Whitcomb Riley.

President Harris then introduced President Roosevelt. The president stepped to the front of the platform and was greeted with applause. He delivered an eloquent eulogy of William McKinley, and the exercises closed with another song.

TAFT RECEIVED BY MIKADO.

Private Audience Followed by Luncheon with Japan's Ruler.

Tokio, Oct. 3.—William H. Taft, American secretary of war, officially bade farewell to Japan at 6:15 Wednesday evening and left the brilliantly illuminated Shinbashi railroad station for Kobe amid the firing of an artillery salute and a great display of fireworks.

At noon Mr. and Mrs. Taft, accompanied only by Brig. Gen. Edwards, chief of the bureau of insular affairs, and Frederick W. Carpenter, Mr. Taft's private secretary, drove in an automobile to the emperor's palace. Mr. Taft was greeted pleasantly by his majesty, who invited him to the imperial room, where they conferred in private, with the aid of an interpreter, for ten minutes, after which they returned to the audience room.

While the private audience was in progress Mrs. Taft was received by the empress. Both their majesties showed great cordiality in their reception of the American visitors.

Later the emperor and empress entertained Mr. and Mrs. Taft at an elaborate luncheon.

THEATERS ON OCEAN LINERS.

Cunard Company Accepts Proposition of Charles Frohman.

Liverpool, Oct. 3.—It was announced Wednesday that the Cunard Steamship company had accepted the offer of Charles Frohman to give theatrical performances on the big liners by regular players, who, for the time being, may be traveling with or from the United States and England. The company is now planning specially designed halls for playing concerts on board three of the ships of the line. Other transatlantic line companies are considering Mr. Frohman's proposition.

Favor Two Terms for Sheriff.

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 3.—E. A. Snively of the state board of pardons, Wednesday addressed the state association of sheriffs and deputy sheriffs in favor of a law providing that sheriffs may hold office for two terms. The association adopted a resolution in favor of such a law, and Secretary Barrett was instructed to send a letter to each sheriff in the state, requesting his presence in Springfield when the legislature meets next Tuesday to advocate the passage of such a law.

DENIES HE MARRIED MISS MAE C. WOOD

SENATOR PLATT IN COURT APPLICATION DECLARES GIRL ATTEMPTED EXTORTION.

Says Woman Who Is Suing Him for Divorce First Tried to Get Money from Him on Threats of Promise.

New York, Oct. 5.—United States Senator Platt made formal denial Friday that he ever married Mae C. Wood, who is suing him for divorce, alleging that she was married to the senator November 9, 1901. The sensational denial in an application for mandamus proceedings in court by his attorneys asking for authority to examine certain papers in the case. The senator, in his petition asserted that she had never made a claim to him of such a marriage until December 24, 1906, but on the contrary, had tried to extort money from him. More than three years after the date on which she asserts she was married to him, the senator averred, she was threatening to sue him for breach of promise and retained the law firm of O'Flaherty and Fulton of Richmond, Va., to act for her.

Alleges Extortion Schems.

The senator submitted a copy of a letter from that firm written to him in January, 1905, in which they announced that Miss Mae C. Wood had employed them to prosecute her claim for damages for breach of promise and for an alleged conspiracy culminating in New York in 1903 by which she asserted she was fraudulently compelled by agents of the senator to surrender certain letters written to her by him.

Senator Platt said that he ignored this letter but that his attorney subsequently received other letters from O'Flaherty and Fulton threatening to take the case into court unless it was settled. When he declined to enter into negotiations with them the senator said, "they discontinued all the attempts at extortion until just prior to the beginning of this action."

Suits to Be Consolidated.

In the fall of 1906, the senator asserted, Mae C. Wood brought two suits against him in Nebraska in which the allegations were absolutely inconsistent with her present claim of marriage. These suits, he said, had been brought to gain notoriety and to extort money from him. Both suits were dismissed without prejudice.

The senator alluded to publications of what purported to be a marriage certificate which, he said, had been mutilated by cutting away the part that should have contained the name of the man who married them.

Calls Letter a Forgery.

On the evening of December 24, 1906, he said, he received a letter from Miss Wood in which she stated that she had received a letter from him acknowledging her as his wife. This, he said, was untrue and no such acknowledgement had ever been made. If such a communication existed, the senator said, it is a forgery, manufactured by the plaintiff to extort money from him.

Three League Averages.

Bloomington, Ill., Oct. 5.—The official averages of the Three I Base Ball league were issued Friday, the pennant being awarded to Rock Island, with a percentage of 652. Peoria led in the club batting, having an average of 254. Peoria also led in fielding, with an average of 961. Wilson, pitcher for Rock Island, led in batting, with 314. Swacina, first base for Peoria, was second, with 292.

SENATOR BORAH ACQUITTED

FOUND NOT GUILTY OF TIMBER LAND FRAUD CONSPIRACY.

Citizens of Boise Greet the Verdict With Cheers, Sell Ringing and Band Music.

Boise, Idaho, Oct. 3.—United States Senator William E. Borah was acquitted Wednesday night of the charges of conspiracy to defraud the government out of valuable Idaho timber lands.

The case was submitted without argument on the part of the defense, and the jury was out just long enough to take one ballot. The verdict was greeted by cheers and applause which the court officers made no effort to restrain. The demonstration in the courtroom served only as a beginning. As soon as the news reached the outside bells were rung and the fire department made a spectacular run through the principal streets, stopping eventually at the Idaho hotel, to which Senator Borah, surrounded by several hundred of his fellow citizens, was escorted.

A fine band appeared as if by magic, as the senator reached the hotel steps, and played "Hail to the Chief."

The streets about the hotel were blocked by a cheering throng, whose shouts mingled the screech of the fire engine whistles and clanging of trolley car bells.

Senator Borah thanked the people for their demonstration and for the confidence they had reposed in him throughout the trial.

ARRESTED, HE KILLS HIMSELF.

Davenport Man, Accused of Opening Registered Mail, Commits Suicide.

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 5.—James H. Farrand, superintendent of delivery in the Davenport post office, was arrested Friday morning, charged with opening registered mail. Soon after he committed suicide.

Thefts from mail at the post office had puzzled the authorities for several years. Detectives have been working on the case for a month, and claim to have caught Farrand with decoy letters, and to have had a strong case against him. Farrand was bound over to the federal grand jury. He gave bail and was found dead in bed later, having suffocated himself with chloroform.

UNITE TO FIGHT LOW FARES.

Railroads of Northwest Begin Action for Permanent Injunction.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Oct. 4.—All leading railroads having lines in South Dakota Thursday afternoon commenced a united action in the United States court, this city, for a permanent injunction preventing the enforcement of railroad commissioners from putting into effect October 15 an order reducing passenger rates in the state from three to two and one-half cents a mile. The commission was temporarily restrained from putting the new rate into effect pending a hearing from Judge Carland October 29 on the application for a permanent injunction.

NOVEL CRUISE IN A YACHT.

R. M. Thompson Invites 15 Friends to Go Around World.

New York, Oct. 4.—Fifteen friends of Robert M. Thompson, financier, retired naval officer and lawyer, are to be his guests on one of the most unique yacht cruises on record. The yacht upon which they will voyage around the world is the 5,000 ton steamer Minerva. The journey will occupy nine months and the estimated expense of the entertainment is half a million dollars.

Among those invited by Col. Thompson to be his guests are Lord Brassy and Admiral Sir Charles Beresford.

THIEVES MAKE A RICH HAUL

FRANK A. UBEL'S STORE IN ST. PAUL IS THE SCENE OF THE OPERATION.

The Thieves Secure $1,000 Worth of Diamonds While the Proprietor and Clerks are Present. Three were in the Deal.

St. Paul, Oct. 7.—With scores of people passing outside and in full view of several store attendants, three smooth come-on artists, one of whom was a woman, deftly appropriated in the neighborhood of $1,000 worth of loose diamonds at the jewelry store of Frank A. Ubel, 478 Wabasha street about 6:30 Saturday evening and made good their escape. The robbery was one of the most daring that has been pulled off in the city recently in that the three came into the store, looked over a tray of lockets and diamonds and securing several loose stones while the clerk's back was turned, walked nonchalantly out of the door. They were not in the store before the proprietor could get to the street after discovering the robbery.

The woman entered the store shortly before 6:30 o'clock. Mr. Ubel was in the rear part of the store. The clerk was requested to show a tray of lockets, and the conversation of the trio was such as to imply that one of the men was purchasing a present for the woman. After examining carefully several lockets one of the men said he desired to purchase a diamond to be set in the locket. The clerk got a tray of loose stones from the safe and placed them upon the counter directly in front of the woman. Just at this point the man of Jewish appearance walked to front of the counter and requested another clerk who was standing close by to show him some sets of diamond earrings. While he was looking at these the woman requested the clerk to call Mr. Ubel in order to ask him some questions about the various stones, which were lying loose on the tray. The clerk then stepped to Ubel who came up to walk upon the customers.

After a few minutes conversation during which the woman and man chatted with the utmost composure, the woman expressed a desire to visit some other stores. The man hesitated somewhat before leaving, but stated that they undoubtedly would be back within a short time, or at least before the evening was over. Immediately after the three had departed Mr. Ubel started to put the stones back into the safe and noticed that some of the stones were missing. He rushed post haste to the front of the store, asking which way the trio had gone. By the time he arrived at the sidewalk the three either had separated in three different ways, or else had darted into some nearby doorway for a moment.

Motor Car Collision.

Rapid City, S. D., Oct. 7.—Three hours after the Cronoh railroad, running heavy passenger and freight trains daily between here and Myetlo, was officially opened for the hauling of traffic here, a motor car loaded with passengers crashed into the rear end of a freight train fourteen miles south of here.

Mary Platt, aged nine years, lost a leg and later died. Frank Mc-George, eight years old, had a leg broken and was badly injured. The other children were on their way from Boulder, Colo., to their father a rancher near Rapid City.

Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Motormen Hurlbut to lose control of the car on a down grade. Sticking to the brake he saved many lives, although four others were injured.

Collision.

Grand Forks, N. D., Oct. 5.—A westbound Great Northern freight crashed into a switch engine in the Grand Forks yards and both engines and six cars were derailed. Engineer Ole H. Larson of the freight engine was caught in the cab and severely bruised and burned. The effect of his injuries cannot be determined as yet. The rest of the engine crew escaped by jumping. The switch engine crew had left the switch open and the engineer of the freight was unable to stop in time. The wreckage was mostly on the sidetrack and the main line was cleared in three hours.

Killed and Injured.

Madison, Wis., Oct. 7.—Figures compiled from the reports of the railroad commission show that the railroads of Wisconsin killed 276 and injured 2,900 during the fiscal year just closed. Twenty-five of the killed and 187 of the injured were passengers, the others being either employes of railroads or trespassers. The total loss of property as a result of collisions was $98,808.70, by derailments $76,283.84.

Suicide.

St. Paul, Oct. 5.—Determined not to escape death, H. M. Manheim, a Minneapolis candy salesman, employed at Enoch, Tisdale & Co., whose home is at 1400 Washington street, committed suicide in the Boardman hotel by first swallowing the contents of a tumbler of laudanum, and then by shooting himself through the right temple with a thirty-two caliber revolver. Although the body was not found until about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, it is supposed Manheim ended his life either during the previous night or morning.

SAID TO BE SIMPLE

EASILY MIXED RECIPE FOR KIDNEYS AND BLADDER.

Tells Readers How to Prepare This Home-Made Mixture to Cure the Kidneys and Bladder and Rheumatism.

Get from any prescription pharmacist the following:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Shake well in a bottle and take a teaspoonful dose after each meal and at bedtime.

The above is considered by an eminent authority, who writes in a New York daily paper, as the finest prescription ever written to relieve Backache, Kidney Trouble, Weak Bladder and all forms of Urinary difficulties. This mixture acts promptly on the eliminative tissues of the Kidneys, enabling them to filter and strain the uric acid and other waste matter from the blood which causes Rheumatism.

Some persons who suffer with the afflictions may not feel inclined to place much confidence in this simple mixture, yet those who have tried it say the results are simply surprising, the relief being affected without the slightest injury to the stomach or other organs.

Mix some and give it a trial. It certainly comes highly recommended. It is the prescription of an eminent authority, whose entire reputation, it is said, was established by it.

COINED A BIG WORD.

Little One Wanted to Pick the "Underclothes Flowers."

When the first little granddaughter was big enough to want to pick the garden flowers, the grandparents tried every gulleful means to restrain the fond fore-intention. A truce was reached when it was agreed that Harriet should let the garden plants alone and pick only "children's flowers," a descriptive name bestowed at once alike on dandelions, buttercups, daisies and clovers. After this there was peace in the family. One day Katherine, the newest granddaughter, was contentedly pulling grasses while grandmother snipped off blossome from the forget-me-nots. Katherine remarked that fresh flowers had not been gathered for the dinner table. She ran over to grandmother and promptly closed one of the longest words a four-year-old ever used. "Grandmother," she begged, "can't I pick the underchildrenable flowers for dinner?"

Mary's Important Testimony.

Justice Brewer, of the United States supreme court is said to be the author of the story: A witness testified in a certain case that a person named Mary was present when a particular conversation took place and the question was asked: "What did Mary say?" Judge objected to and after some discussion the judge ruled out the question. An exception to this decision was taken and counsel on appeal the higher court reversed the verdict and ordered a new trial on the ground that the question should have been answered. At the second trial the same inquiry was propounded and elicited the information that "Mary said nothing."

Beecher Scored Point.

Justin McCarthy tells a story of the late Henry Ward Beecher. Mr. Beecher entered Plymouth church one Sunday and found several letters awaiting him. He opened one and found it contained the single word "Fool." Quietly and with becoming seriousness he mounted the steps of the pulpit, and, as fact in these words: "I have known many an instance of a man writing a letter and forgetting to sign his name, but this is the only instance I have ever known of a man signing his name and forgetting to write the letter."

Marrying for Love.

Happy marriages are surely possible even in these unposted, practical times. They are, if the people will only follow the instinct of their better natures and marry for love—the reverent, impassionate love of the man for the maiden, the pure, unsophisticated affection of the maiden for the manly—instead of bartering happiness for rank or money.—Thorne.

TRANSFORMATIONS.

Curious Results When Coffee Drinking is Abandoned.

It is almost as hard for an old coffee toper to quit the use of coffee as it is for a whisky or tobacco fiend to break away from habit. The coffee user can quit coffee and take up Postum without any feeling of a loss of the morning beverage, for when Postum is well boiled and served with cream, it is really better in point of taste than most of the coffee served nowadays, and to the taste of the connoisseur it is like the flavor of fine, mild Java.

A great transformation takes place in the body within ten days or two weeks after coffee is left off and Postum used, for the reason that the poison to the nerves—caffeine—has been discontinued, and in its place is taken a liquid food that contains the most powerful elements of nourishment.

It is easy to make this test and prove these statements by changing from coffee to Postum. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

State Assessment.

St. Paul—The estimated total assessment of the property in Minnesota for taxation purposes in 1907 will be about $1,000,000,000, which is an increase of more than $100,000,000 over the assessment for 1906. Notices were sent out recently by State Auditor S. G. Iverson to the county auditors notifying them that the rate of taxation required to raise the amount necessary for defraying the various state expenses for the coming year is 2¼ mills. This rate, which covers the entire state levy for all purposes, is .7 of a mill higher than it was in 1906.

Based upon this valuation the levy of 1.7 mills for the state revenue fund will produce about $1,700,000, which is the rate and amount fixed upon by the legislature last winter. The rate of 1.7 mills for state revenue purposes, which is the money used in paying the expenses of the state government, is a rate of .5 of a mill. The rate of levy for all of the other funds remains the same as last year, with the exception of the university campus fund, which is a new fund created by the legislature last winter. The rate for this fund is .2 of a mill.

The 2¼ mills rate is made up of the following amounts: Soldiers' relief fund, .0001; funding tax fund, .0002; state revenue fund, .0007; state road and bridge fund, .00005; university campus fund, .0002.

Brutally Assaulted.

Duluth—Albert Sullivan, one of the men employed as dock guard here during the strike, was assaulted at night and while unconscious was tied to the track under an ore train which a strike breaker, Frank Hill, and left there by the men who attacked him. He is in the hospital, but has not recovered consciousness sufficiently to describe his assailants.

As far as Sullivan has been able to tell of the affair, his story is that he was walking his usual rounds on the docks about 8:30 o'clock p. m., when two men approached him. One of them engaged him in conversation regarding the time of the departure of some boat, and the other stepped behind him. As he turned toward the second man he received a terrific blow on the head, and the last he remembers is falling to the dock.

Discovers Ore.

Faribault—William Lenry, who lives in the town of Walcott, several miles south of this city, believes he has discovered a mine of either copper or magnetic iron ore on his farm. A party from Faribault, Hon. Helge Bistrum visit and investigated the discovery. A magnetic dip needle compass, used by miners to locate mineral, indicated the presence of ore where Mr. Leary thinks the mineral is. Specimens of rock were picked up that are rich in some kind of mineral, which will be assayed. During the last summer lightning struck three times in the same spot where the discovery is located. From the specimens picked up on various places on his farm the indications point to a wide area of mineral deposits. A number of the specimens will be sent to the state university.

Lone Girl Student.

Minneapolis—Miss Edna Munroe, 2623 Dupont avenue, has the distinction of being the only girl student in the entire engineering department of the university. She is the only girl among 1,200 men who are learning the various branches of engineering.

The engineering co-ed is a candidate for the degree of civil engineer and will graduate in four years. She has been employed during the past summer with the Andrews Lumber Company of Minneapolis, and it was while working there that her desire to become more proficient in engineering lines led her to decide on a university course. She is a graduate of the North Side high school of Minneapolis.

Apples Galore.

St. Peter—This fall has seen the fulfillment of the prediction that apple culture could be made profitable in Minnesota, and that the time would come when the orchards of this section would produce more apples than the growers could market here. Farmers experimented for years before they discovered the varieties best adapted to this climate, but in past season the crop has been scarcely sufficient for home consumption.

This year its size is unprecedented. Never before have the orchards returned such yields. The increase has depressed prices until the producers cannot make a profit by selling at home. Then it has become necessary to open new markets, and thousands of bushels of apples are being shipped from southern Minnesota cities to points in the Dakotas and in the northern part of the state.

The fruit compares in quality with the best apples of the east, and the growers look for a brisk demand next season.

NEW ORLEANS PORT TIED UP.

Dock and Cotton Handlers' Union Goes on Strike.

New Orleans, Oct. 5.—The immense cotton shipping business of this port was tied up at six o'clock Friday night by the strike of 2,000 members of the Dock and Cotton Handlers' union. From 10,000 to 12,000 men probably will be involved, because the railroad freight handlers have served notice that they will not work with nonunion men at the docks.

The immediate cause of the strike was the refusal of 1,200 men to load more than 150 bales per day working in gangs of five. Steamship agents demand that 300 bales be stowed.

MAIDENS FROM CHINA

TWO OF ROYAL BLOOD COME TO WELLESLEY.

Will Be Educated by the Imperial Government Which Desires Them to Learn All They Can in America.

Wellesley.—Although it is in nowise part of the curriculum of Wellesley college it has fallen to the lot of two typical American girls to introduce two little Chinese maidens into the mysteries of dressing according to the accepted ideas of fashionable society.

All the gowns, furbelows, bats and lingerie for all sorts of occasions, from the bloomer gym costume to the toilet for evening receptions, have been spread out before the astonished eyes of the little orientals, and it will be for them to decide, after giving the subject mature thought, perhaps writing back to China, whether they shall discard their own flowing robes of silk and at the start become American school girls. For these two girls are to remain in this country till they can take back to China all that we can give them in the way of education and social refinement.

Never before has Wellesley been called upon to look after the welfare of so distinguished students. They are Miss Chi Che Wang, who comes from Soochow, and Miss Ping Kwai Hu, whose home is in a neighboring Chinese town. Both girls are related to the royal family of China. Officially the Chinese government is their sponsor. They came to town with more excess and vastly more trunks than ordinarily accompany half a dozen girls.

In the first place the recently retired Chinese minister, who grew up as a boy at Amherst, played first on the baseball team and, following graduation became chairman of the alumni association, told the bespectacled statesmen of China that the maidens should be sent to America by all means, and that they would find much good in the American institutions, where the fashions of China and America would be blended so gracefully that the girls would become little Americans quite without knowing it.

"I've been there many a time," said the trusted counselor, "and I know."

So the girls were prepared for their long journey, and as has a man than Tsotai Wan Ding Chung, vice-director of the Lisnkiang vice-royalty foreign office, was officially designated to be their traveling companion. With him came his wife.

Miss Ping Kwai Hu, who is only 16, will take a preparatory course at Dana Hall before entering Wellesley. Before coming to this country she was for a time at school at the Laura Haygood Mission, near Tokio, Japan, whither she was sent by her father, who at that time was a member of the privy council.

Miss Wang, who is several years older than Miss Hu, speaks English well. She will take a thorough course in literature and classics and devote at least three hours a day to music. Little Miss Hu thinks she would be supremely happy if she were as handsome as some of the girls that she has met since she came to Wellesley. Beauty, as she judges it, contemplates three things in particular—size, strength and good color. The members of the Wellesley crew are simply superb, in the eyes of the newcomer from the east.

Young Kwai, the legation secretary, who brought the girls here, stopped off with them and showed them about Springfield, where he went to school in 1882. There can of course be no doubt that Miss Hu thought American men were rather nice. This has greatly worried her. Privately she has told her friends that she wanted to think Americans were nice and agreeable, but at her age she considered it unseemly to look at them long enough to find out whether they were or not.

Dean Pendleton, who will arrange the studies for the young students, visited them at their apartments in the village to-day. In the matter of adopting American dress, wholly or in part, President Hazard will be finally consulted.

FOUNDED MASONRY IN AMERICA.

The Price Monument.

granita, which marks the final resting place of Henry Price, the founder of what constituted Masonry in America.

Considerably more than 100 years ago, when the father of Masonry died, his remains were interred in the old cemetery where they remained until a few years ago, when, through the influence of the late Albert Pierce, the body was removed from the old cemetery, where its presence had been long and forgotten, to the above fine new place of interment then has been erected by the grand lodge the dignified monument as an object of reverence by many members of the craft.

The original stone which, through the action of time and exposure, had become fractured almost its entire length, is of slate, about a yard square in dimension, and bears the inscription as given in the grand lodge room, as is follows:

In memory of
HENRY PRICE, ESQ.,
Who died in Boston the first year of our Lord 1755. He removed to Boston about the year 1720. Was a Deputation Appointing him Grand Master of Masons in New England & in the year 1733 Was appointed a Coruut in the Governor's Troop of Guards with the Rank of Major. By the 1st January A. D. 1734 he Issues an Acquired the Masonic Right of Holding a Lodge which he Exercised to Extend to the Latter Part of his life. He united Mortality to the Dec. 31st A. D. 1776, Leaving a widow & Two Young Daughters, with a Numerous Company of Friends and Acquaintances to mourn his Departure, who have that Ground of hope Concerning his Present Let Which Reason & Christian Faith Can Give. Higher Honors Were Intended by his Fellow Brethren But Refused him for a reason a behaviour Consistent with his Character as a Mason and his Natures as a Man. An honest Man is the noblest Work of God.

After retiring from business in 1761 Mr. Price is described for a number of years as "gentleman." From 1746 to 1755 he resided in Boston, passing his summers at his country seat in Cambridge. There his wife and daughter died in 1760 within a few weeks of each other.

Two years later he went to Townsend, and in 1765-6 represented the town in the legislature. In 1771 Mr. Price married Lucy Kendall, of that town. His estate there consisted of several farms, mills and mill privileges, mechanical shops, wood lots, and in the aggregate his ownership of acres run up into the thousands.

A PRESIDENTIAL POSSIBILITY.

Lieut. Gov. Chanler, of New York, May Lead Democrats.

New York.—Much in the mind of the politically observant and looming large in the public eye, as the Democratic candidate for president, these days, is the young lieutenant governor of the state of New York, Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler.

LEWIS STUYVESANT CHANLER.
Possible Democratic Candidate for President of United States.

In his Americanism the Democratic lieutenant governor is quite as latensse as Theodore Roosevelt, and like the president, he is more interested in to-day and to-morrow than in yesterday, more absorbed in seeing proper things done for the public weal than in contemplating mmmmies of the past. When William Randolph Hearst picked him for a running mate at The Independence league convention last summer, he didn't realize that he had selected a man who would overshadow him as the campaign progressed.

When the official sketches of the candidates were given out to the reporters last year that of Chanler was one of the shortest of the lot.

Earosnautical.

Mrs. Howard—A place where a beat heads is a pier. Now what will they call the place where an airship lands?

Mr. Howard—A sky-light, my love.

THE SCHOOL CHILD UP TO DATE.

Make haste to school, thou little child,
Or else you will be late;
Your books are all aseptic now,
And sterile every slate.

Your pencil has been boiled an hour—
'Tis germless, now, I hope;
And don't forget to wash your desk
With this antiseptic soap.

And lest about the schoolroom floor
Some unseen microbes lurk,
Be sprinkled pillows around
Before you set to work.

You'd better put, for safety's sake,
Bichloride in the ink.
And water that has not been boiled
You must not dare to drink.

Of course, when recess comes around,
Moms food you'll want to munch;
So in the disinfected box
Is predigested lunch.

And since 'tis said that in a kiss
Bacteria may abound,
I may not give you, as I'd like,
A mother's fond farewell.

Make haste to school, my little child,
And leave my tender cares;
And may you still be safely kept
From microbes in the air.
—Elsie Duncan Yale, in Life.

His Sentiment.

"Yes, I acknowledge that your father did me a favor once which placed me under a lasting obligation to him. I cannot, therefore, refuse to lend you the money. But come around to-morrow for it, won't you?"

"Certainly, if you haven't got it now."

"Oh, I have it now, all right; only I hate on such notice to part forever with what is near and dear to me."—Judge.

No Confusing Environment.

Miss Edith (to evening caller)—When I write I have to be entirely alone and have everything quiet, so there will be nothing to disturb my thoughts. I don't see how any one can dictate to an amanuensis.

Mr. Goodfellow—It's very easy. I dictate all my business letters.

"You do? And don't your thoughts often wander from the subject until you find yourself unable to continue?"

"Oh, no. My typewriter is a man."—N. Y. Weekly.

What Brought Him.

Mr. Gotsum—Maria, how long has that young Smoothley been coming here to see Nellie?

Mrs. Gotsam—Let me sea. You remember when the papers published the report that money having sold e gold mine for half a million?

"Yes."

"Well, as nearly as I recall it, that's the time when he began coming."

Uncertain Betting.

"About 4,000 persons are arrested each year for betting on the streets of London," said the men with the whiskers.

"Well, I wouldn't like to put any money on the streets of London. Why, they can never tell where they'll set the sport with the red tie and horseshoe pin.—Yonkers Statesman.

ECONOMY.

Sho—But, Jack, you don't earn enough to support two.

He—But won't we be one then?—Brooklyn Eagle.

Change For the Worse.

When a man gets married he
Is apt to change his views;
That his wife's the better half,
And later she's the worst.

Hypnotized.

Little Boy—Mamma, I wish you'd find out who it was hypnotized me, and punish 'em severely.

Mamma—What-at?

Little Boy—While you was out I was pulled right into the pantry, an' forced to eat a hull lot of those cakes you said I mustn't touch.

Overheard at Meat Shop.

Butcher—Come, John, he lively now; break the bones in Mr. Simpson's chops and put Mr. Smith's ribs in your hatchet.

"All right, sir; just as soon as I've sawed off Mr. Murphy's leg."

Not by the Police.

Bill—Were you ever in a drinking place when it was being "pulled," Jill?

Jill—Sure! I was in a dining car once!—Yonkers Statesman.

Wouldn't Go.

Jerold—I can't got any speed out of that motor car you sold me. You told me you had been arrested six times in it.

Hobart—So I was, old chap. For obstructing the highway.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 05, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

It is no wonder that Japan got a hustle on them to declare their friendship for the United States, when they "sized up" Secretary of war Taft. They was afraid he might step on them, if he got mad.

The farmer that sells off his stock hogs, to save his barley, may discover his mistake next fall, when the breworrs tells him they don't care for his barley, and the butchers is offering him fancy prices for his pork.

There is a fight to a finish in the federal court, in Minneapolis, between the mail order houses and the lumber trust. Let us hope they will fight until they are all "busted" as one is about as detrimental to the upbuilding of the North West as the other.

President Roosevelt has declared himself in favor of river improvements, and we do wonder if that great big man will ever find of the small amount of government aid it would take to open up about 75 miles of the Red Lake River, and make it fit for navigation for small steamboats, thus giving a rich farming country an outlet to market? Or how much money on the Red Lake River and Thief River Falls road would it take to open the river for navigation, and thus save thousands of acres of land into good farming, and small homes, that are now utterly useless.

Thief River Falls have called "those put" meeting of the board of County Commis-loners to meet October 19th, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and if they do not meet they are summoned to appear before Judge Watts, on the same date and show cause why they did not meet They will probably meet us before Judge Watts and tell him that they didn't meet because they didn't want to. Then the thing will be carried to supreme court and hisoner will put on that wise look,(which they always wear in a county seat secret) and no man on earth can figure it will do the case.

Why They Are So Clean.

"How is it that French children are so tidy?" many foreigners in Paris inquire. Because from the time they understand an elementary sentence it is dinned into them that it is very wrong to run fast, to fall or to dirty their dresses in any way, and, above all, it is awful to muss their hair. An ordinary scene in the Bois is where two children arrive in their auto accompanied by a nurse and a governess. They the children are dressed in light silk dresses and wear long white gloves. They start to play ball. Every time the ball touches the ground, which happens once in awhile, the nurse rushes up and wipes every bit of dust very carefully off the ball before it is handed back to the children. Is it a wonder that their long gloves are clean?—New York Post.

A General Utility Nag.

A certain stockbroker once went to a horsedealer and tried to pick up a general utility nag. He explained that he was a volunteer and wanted a nice, quiet, good looking charger, which could be driven by his wife in a dogcart and would not object on occasion to being hitched up to a lawn mower. The dealer listened to him with rapt attention, and finally asked in dulcet tones: "Would you want him to wait at table at all, sir?"—Grand Magazine.

A Riddle to Think About.

What is Night—Stroke, what is a Night—Stroke, what is a Night—Stroke? Decipher it if you can, and if you can't let the person think till he gets it. What O' Night—It can't be! Ha! Ha!

An Art Accident.

Marcel Roseter, founder and editor of the Omaha Bee, had a sincere love of art. He hated pictures that lit flimsied soapsuds work, so called impressionistic pictures that were merely rough and hurried sketches and called paintings that bore no likeness to their originals. A young painter named Mr. Rosewater one day a portrait of a mutual friend.

"That a portrait of Smith?" the editor exclaimed. "It never have looked it."

"Oh," the artist exclaimed, "I didn't try for a likeness, you know. I tried for an effect in grays."

"I know a man in New York," said Mr. Rosewater, "who had his portrait painted last year. It cost him $4,000, and he was very proud of it. When it came home he showed it to his cook.

"'Well, Mary,' he said, 'how do you like this portrait?'

"'Sure, sir,' said the cook, 'it's lovely. It's beautiful. It's divine.'

"'And of course,' said my friend, 'you know what it is?'

"'Oh, of course I do, sir,' said the cook. 'Of course, of course.' As she spoke she kept drawing nearer to the picture, studying it more and more closely. 'Of course, sir,' she said, 'it's you on the mantelpiece.'—Buffalo Enquirer.

The Sultan's Rakshee.

An ambassador of a well known European monarch was riding in the streets of Constantinople when one of the sultan's carriages pulled by. Seeing it was guarded, his curiosity got the better of him, and when the carriage reached him he was daring enough to peep in at the passenger. He was surprised and pained to receive a blow in the face from an attendant in charge. Mad with rage he demanded audience of the sultan. The sultan listened attentively and for a moment appeared lost in thought. At last he spoke: "My dear ——, I have gone carefully into the case and see exactly how it stands. You are, of course, a gentleman. Therefore you would never have committed such a breach of good manners as you did, unless to have taken place. Therefore no attendant could possibly here struck you. The whole affair seems to be a product of your fancy. Let us, discuss it."

The Costliest Coins.

"A single joint sixpence can still always fetch from $400 to $500," said the dealer.

"Why?"

"Because sixpences hardly ever grow with enough space between the joints to make a single joint stick. Usually the joints are not more than a fool apart. When you find in Singaporean that is where sixpence comes from—a joint sixpence with the joints five feet apart, or more, is worth $20 or $40. Sixpenced sticks. If they are found well-sixpenced comes from British Guiana—are worth $40 or $50. A yellow ebony stick—ebony comes to us in a log from Ceylon and Mauritius—is worth $20 or $25. Whangbee, from Hawaii, makes an excellent stick. A perfect wasp has been worth $20."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Persian Peasants.

There is probably no peasantry in the world so ground down as the Persian. The agricultural laborer there, as in China, never rises to intellectuality. In addition for the simple reason that if he earns more meer is taken away from him by the rulers of the land. The general condition of the laboring classes, however, does not seem to be so bad as it might be supposed. In a country so vast (650,000 square miles) and so thinly populated (5,500,000 in all) a small and sufficient supply of food is easily raised, especially with such prolific soil at the command of the poorest. As Shiraz there are two harvests in the year. The soil, sowed in summer and reaped in autumn, consists of rice, cotton, Indian corn and garden produce, and the chief of the second, sowed in October and November and reaped in May and June. This is an [illegible] famed.

Severe Punishments.

Severe punishments are one of the most striking characters in George Eliot's novel historical novel "Romola," the scene of which is in Florence and the period that of Savonarola's career. The idea of writing the book occurred to the novelist while on a visit to Florence, and on a second visit to the city, in 1861, she began to carry out her project. The subject and design were forsign to the author's mind, but she spared no pains in making a thorough study of the locality, the people and the literature of the Italian renaissance period for the purposes of her story. In her own words, the work "plowed into her" more than any of her books. She began it, she says, as a young woman and finished it as an old woman. Her picture of Florence and Savonarola is undeniably impressive, and some critics declare "Romola" to be George Eliot's greatest novel and the character of Savonarola one of the finest delineations.—Pearson's.

How mankind defers from day to day the best it can do without realizing that best true is best eternity.—Milton.

Caught the Policeman.

All the constrvable is laughing at an experience of the police at Lough Neagh, Ireland. An interesting cockfight was arranged between birds from Londonderry and Antrim and was held on one of the islands in the lough. The police got wind of it and arrived, as they usually do, late. All the available boats had been pressed into use by the spectators, and the police, after trying vainly to secure transportation to the island, determined to swim for it. Just as they arrived the boat ended, and every boat put off for the mainland again. The police had a swim back for their pains, and when they reached the mainland they found their clothes, over which they had neglected to leave a guard, had disappeared. They had a ten mile march in Stripping undercloths to the nearest barracks, where they were put to bed until new uniforms could be procured. —Liverpool Mercury.

His Yoak e Hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Stockton Bonds are inveterate bridge whist players, and their home is the meeting place of bridge players of all grades. On one evening in every week they are "at home" to any of their friends who wish to play, and on other evenings they go to certain parties of their own selection for games which range from a cent a point to a much higher figure. Recently, long after the house had been closed, a noise was heard downstairs, and, regardless of his wife's protests, Stockton Bonds went below to ascertain the cause. The noise continued and grew louder, but no answer came to the wife's calls from above. She became alarmed, opened the window, saw a policeman, and he made a rush for the basement door. A few minutes later the husband appeared before his pale-faced wife and told her he had found the servants playing bridge and wrangling over the propriety of a certain play.

"Did you send the whole party away?" asked the wife.

"Why, no. I took a hand and decided the question before I realized where I was."—New York Tribune.

Curious Almshouses.

The most curious almshouses in England is St. Mary's hospital at Chichester. Here eight old ladies live certainly on the church, which is a fine building dating from 1080. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to the throne she turned it into almshouses to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little houses each containing one side of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are [illegible] oak, the original [illegible] church [illegible]

A Conundrum For Canaan.

Speaker Cannon has received hundreds of telegrams from Oklahoma expressing the opinion of hundreds of people about him. It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Peter Redeen of Kratka raised over eighteen hundred bushels of No. 1 wheat this year, besides several hundred bushels of oats and barley. Take this in connection with the Deer Park farmers Cheats cheeks and it would lead one to believe that this was a pretty good farming country. There has been no threshing done in Highlanding township yet, but the large number of stacks will certainly yield a large amount of grain.

HER MISTAKEN OPINION

By EFFIE W. MERRIMAN

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Russell Maynard sat in his office chair, his elbows on his desk, his curly head supported by both hands and his eyes fixed on a dainty perfumed note spread out before him. He was reading it over and over, scarcely taking in the meaning of the words, which he already knew by heart. It had been brought to him with the early morning mail, and was in answer to one which he had slipped into Miriam Grant's hand the night before, when he helped her into her carriage after Mrs. Lee's party, and it was now nearly noon; yet that letter was the only one he had opened.

"You can never know, dear friend, what pain it gives me to write this," the words seemed to be traced in delicate lines of fire which were burning themselves into his brain, "for until I read your note asking me to be your wife, I did not realize how selfish I have been in striving to hold the friendship which has become so dear to me. I know that I have a deeper regard for you than for any other man of my acquaintance, but I do not love you. For hours I have tried to persuade myself that I do, but I cannot. I should be false to my womanhood were I to say anything else, and I should do you a cruel wrong were I to marry you, for I am not one who could make a man happy unless I could look up to him as being greater than myself.

"Russell, I wish we might still be friends; life will be very dull without your friendship if I know just how selfish I must appear, but if you cannot come as you have always come, without fear or reserve, in the hope that we may be more nearly united, it will be better for us to see very little of each other. I am quite sure, dear Russell, that I have read my heart correctly.

"Your sincere friend,
"MIRIAM GRANT."

"She means just what she says," thought poor Russell. "Miriam is not the sort of girl to play with a fellow's heart. She has thought this all out, and she cried—there are traces of tears on the paper. Oh, Miriam, Miriam! why couldn't you have loved me?" The strong man laid his face down on the letter and his frame shook convulsively. A little hand was laid

"I Do Not Mean to Propose," Answered Miriam.

tinidly on his arm, and he started nervously, for he had thought he was alone.

"I've comed," said a soft voice in his ears.

Russell raised his head; his face was so white and drawn that the ragged little mite of humanity standing before him stirred at him for a moment, half afraid.

"Well," said Russell, wearily, "what do you want?"

At the sound of his voice the boy lost his momentary fear, and the dirty face became beautiful with the great happiness which shone from the big brown eyes.

"I've comed ter live with yer. Don't yer member 'bout my bein' yer boy?"

"I to live with me! My boy! What in thunder do you mean?"

Russell spoke petulantly. He loved children, and usually had a kind word for the most unpromising specimen of childhood; but to-day he was not in a mood to make himself agreeable, or to exercise patience.

"Yer said," the little waif cleared his throat and tried to force back the tears which were fast filling his eyes; "yer said as how I could live with yer an' be yer boy when grandther died. I want me no more." By this time the little body trembled so violently that the child dropped down on Russell's footstool.

"To-day they put grandther in a hole in the ground. They telled me as how he can't never git out, an' I must go to the poorhouse; but yer said—yer telled me I could be yer boy, an' I comed right here."

Russell did not answer. He was staring in perplexity at his strange guest, and trying to recall the conversation to which he alluded.

"I guess yer don't 'member," said the little fellow, sadly. "But yer said it, an' then yer buyed apples o' grandther."

"Oh!" Was it your grandfather who sold apples to me?"

"Uh-huh!"

"And he is dead?"

"The doctor said as how he was dead as a doornail, an'—an' he never said nothin' ter me when I telled him as how I was hungry."

The boy was crying now in a silent way that went straight to Russell's heart.

"Why not?" he thought. "It will give me something to occupy my mind. It may keep me from making quite a fool of myself. I have never had a great amount of respect for the men who die of unrequited affection," and he smiled sarcastically.

"Do yer goin' ter take me ter the poorhouse?"

"Not if you are a good boy. We're going to hunt up a new suit of clothes, as soon as I write a letter. Don't you think you could wash a little of the dirt from your face if I should show you where to find water?"

He led the way to the toilet room, then returned to his desk.

"Dear Miss Grant," he wrote, "We shall still be friends, but I cannot meet you on the old footing just yet, and so do not wonder if you do not see me for a little while. It is hard to bear—harder even than I thought it would be. If you never marry, until you find someone nobler than myself, I shall certainly not be obliged to bear the added burden of jealousy.

"Yours, etc.,

"RUSSELL J. MAYNARD."

"It isn't at all satisfactory," said Russell, as he folded the note and put it into an envelope, "but I could do no better if I racked my brains for a week."

Nearly three months had passed and he had not yet summoned courage to visit Miriam Grant. She had spent part of the time with an old friend in a neighboring state, and since her return he had pleaded several times for an hour with her, but never felt himself quite strong enough to do so.

"I don't want to make a fool of myself," he thought. "It has never been my ambition to marry a wife who did not love me. If she can't, she can't, and I shall not beg for what is not given freely; but, oh, Miriam, if you—"

He stopped suddenly and began a romp with Dick.

"I found a lovely lady to-day, uncle," said Dick, finally.

"Where did you find her?"

"She rang the bell, and Mrs. Wilson was busy, so I opened the door. She said you must bring me to see her some day, and I said 'thank you; uncle will be pleased to.' Did I do it right?"

"Quite right," answered Russell, laughing. "You are learning very fast."

"I told her perhaps we would come to-night, and she said she should expect us; then she went home without seeing Mrs. Wilson at all."

"I don't know about allowing you to make engagements for me, young man," answered Russell, carelessly, as he took up the evening paper and settled himself comfortably.

"Can't we go just a few minutes?" pleaded Dic. "She was so pretty and so good, and I love her just awful."

"Mercy on me! Has it come to that so soon? What is the lady's name, may I ask?"

"Miss Grant. She said you knew where she lived."

"Miss—ahem—yes, I know! What did she say about my—your going to see her?"

Dick repeated the conversation, and was rewarded by being told that he might go to call on the pretty lady, and soon he was seated in a chair very close to her side, busily engaged with a picture book.

"How did you happen to do it?" asked Miriam of Russell, with a glance at the boy.

"I don't know, I'm sure," he answered, with a smile. "I had to make a fool of myself in some way, I think. My friends tell me that I couldn't have succeeded better."

"You haven't added to your reputation as a man of common sense and discretion," answered Miriam, with a laugh.

"I am kept well posted in that direction; but really—I suppose you'd laugh at me for saying so—but the little chap makes such things quite easy to bear."

"Russell, why haven't you been to see me before? I felt hurt to think that I should be the last of all your friends to learn of your new acquisition."

"I haven't treated you fairly, but I —well, to tell the truth, I haven't yet arrived at the stage where I am willing to meet you simply as a friend."

"I am glad of it."

"What do you mean? Miriam—"

Russell hesitated, and his face became a shade paler. He did not want to make a fool of himself a second time, he thought, and he had been very sure that Miriam Grant returned his love.

"I do not mean to propose," answered Miriam, with blushing cheeks and laughing eyes. "but I have no objection to confessing that—"

"Confessing what?" Russell had her in his arms, and Dick was staring wide-eyed on such a scene as he had never before witnessed.

What I was mistaken in you. I thought you an easy-going individual without much purpose, one who would be easily swayed by public opinion, and such a man, though very pleasant as an acquaintance, was not my ideal as a husband."

Russell and Miriam have been married several years, and Dick still lives with them. People who predicted all sorts of trouble now say that they are the oddest couple that ever lived, and be it fortunate that they married each other, for neither would have been happy with any one else, or made any one else happy.

BECAUSE OF YOU.

I.

FOR RAINY DAYS

Devices to Provide Indoor Amusement During Periods of Unpleasant Weather.

Rainy days often mean trouble in the household where there are plenty of children, and-seems one has sagacity to find that the mother of such a brood would do well to provide herself with a rainy day cupboard.

To it will find their way special playthings, reserved for state occasions; pictures, scrap books, paste pots, scissors, old magazines and paint boxes. Anything, in fact, that can provide indoor amusement. When the rainy day comes round let the cupboard be opened and a distribution of its blessings made.

Children delight in novelty, and the very fact that there is a special treat reserved for the days when the sun doesn't shine will go a long way toward alleviating any disappointment over the putting off of out-of-door games and pleasures.

Other-Colored Sleeves.

Sleeves of quite a different color from the dress have made a distinct furore of late in a very few notable cases, and are the introduction of an artist in modes whose genius is of worldwide renown. At one of the last great functions of the Paris season an American beauty, who is always a la mode, wore a black tulle evening toilette with tulle sleeves of that peculiar shade of pink, soft and vivid, known as cyclamen. Another of the most striking and beautiful robes that have been made for a daytime occasion is a dress of white mousseline de soie with sleeves and collar of black mousseline, the latter with ends flowing to the extreme edge of the braided skirt. This dress was worn with a large white hat plumed with black and white feathers and a black and white parasol.

Now a Spiral Hatpin.

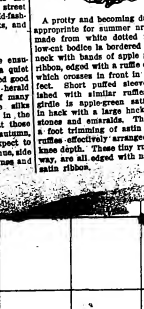
There's a new hatpin that's bound not to come out, under any provocation of wind or speed. Where provocations of this sort mostly abound, namely, in an automobile, this hatpin gets in its special innings. It is, in fact, expressly designed for "motoring" ladies who will not wear the pinless hoods. The new pin is a long spiral affair, tortuous to behold, and getting a twisted grip on the coiffure which nothing short of a dynamite explosion—or the clever hand that put it in—can loosen. As a weapon of defense for unprotected femininies this corkscrew hatpin beats anything yet put on the market.

Return to Silks.

It is predicted that silks are to be worn a great deal the early part of the season, and that they are to be trimmed to-a great extent with cloth or velvet. Taffeta and crepe de chine will be worn for street dresses, just as they were in the spring. The fact that so many pretty silk gowns have been sold remarkably cheap within the last few weeks will add to the popularity of the silk dress for street wear. There is a return to old-fashioned patterns in the new silks, and plaids are in great demand.

No Rustling Skirts.

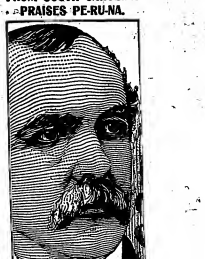
Fashion's decree is that the ensuing season is to be literally a quiet one. No longer is it considered good form for a "grande dame" to herald her approach by a rattling of many silken skirts. Yet handsome silks will play an important part in the building of her robes, and at those important events of early autumn, church weddings, one may expect to see many soft silks of quiet hue, side by side with clinging lansdowns and crepe de chines.



HEAVY JEWELRY WORN

Excessive Display of Gold and Precious Stones is Now Sanctioned by Fashion.

The fashions in jewelry change almost as rapidly as they do in Easter bonnets nowadays. Stones of huge size, when considered as precious gems, are now being mounted in London, New York and Paris for the most refined and fashionable ladies. These huge stones are being put into necklaces, brooches and bracelets, and the amount of jewelry which is now considered perfectly proper for a lady to wear would have been considered barbarous and vulgar five years ago. As many as three different styles of necklaces are worn this year by fashionable women, six brooches are not thought too many, and half a dozen bracelets are thought to be eminently proper by the best judges in London society.



Rings are now a decided tendency to become large and clumsy. Any number of them may be worn; in fact so many that the hands of London's most fashionable women when attired in their rings, are just about useless. They could not even pick up a handkerchief, as they cannot bend their fingers weighted down with large rings. Large diamonds are preferred for the little fingers, and artistic designs of thumb rings are being worn that stretch from one knuckle to the other. The corsage can be completely hidden with jewels in many and curious designs. Tiaras, dog collars, necklaces and stomachers are some of the forms in which the present fashionable love for jeweled ornaments find expression.

PRETTY DANCE FROCK

A pretty and becoming dance frock, appropriate for summer or winter, is made from white dotted muslin. The low-cut bodice is bordered around the neck with bands of apple green satin which crosses in front in surplice effect. Short puffed sleeves are finished with similar ruffles, and the girdle is apple-green satin fastened in back with a large buckle of rhinestones and emeralds. The skirt has a foot trimming of satin ribbon and ruffles effectively arranged to almost knee depth. These tiny ruffles, by the way, are all edged with narrow green satin ribbon.

HOMEMADE TRAP NEST.

Trap Nest which Works as Well as More Elaborate Ones.

Seven years ago I devised a trap nest which is simple and works well. I can find no fault with it that does not apply to any other kind, writes a correspondent of Farm and Home. The constant attention they require is more than I care to give, so I do not use them now. They are simple of construction and anybody with eyes and hands can make them. The first thing is a box 13 or 14 inches wide and deep and two feet long. Nail a three or four inch board across center on bottom to retain nesting material. Cut an opening in one end eight inches square and make the door 7x8 inches. Nail some small hinges on inside to hang the door. Get some small spring wire and turn some springs, a, on a half inch spindle, 2½ or three inches long. Fasten one end to the door, the other to side, so that when the door is pushed in the spring will be strong enough to pull it back shut.

Fasten with two short nails or screws a piece of rat spring, b, like those used in corsets at the opposite side of door on the floor of nest box. Raise this spring and have it just long enough to prop the door two-thirds open. Have a little notch cut in door to hold it up. When the hen pushes her way into the nest the door will relieve this spring and when the hen steps into nest compartment the door closes. Put on a check so the door will not swing out. Hinge a cover on top of other end of box to gather the eggs and take the hen out. Don't make these boxes tight but leave plenty of change of air. Look at them every hour when the hens are busy.

SOME BEE DON'TS.

If You Let Them "Slide" They Will Disappoint You.

Don't forget that there is a winter coming.

Don't forget that it will soon be here.

Don't forget that bees cannot live through the winter on beeswax and air.

Don't forget to see that they have something more substantial.

Don't forget that the sooner you do it the better it can be done.

Don't think that because you have only a few colonies of bees they do not need attention.

Don't think that, if they do need it, any old time before Christmas will do to fix them up.

Don't think that you haven't time just now.

Don't think that you can't leave the plowing or the roots for a few hours.

Don't think that the bees have plenty of honey for winter, unless you know they have—unless you have seen it or given it to them, or felt the weight of it.

Live bees are worth money; dead bees are not. Remember that bees are living animals—or insects—and if they haven't enough of the proper food to keep them alive they will die. The fact that you can give them their winter's supply of food all at once (if they haven't already got it for themselves) is no excuse for not giving it to them at the proper time. Look them up. If they haven't a laying queen and enough honey for winter, see that they are "put right." The sooner the better. Do it now.

POULTRY PICKINGS.

Birds cannot tell their feelings, hence we must judge and prescribe from symptoms alone.

The causes of malignant colds are filth, dampness, drafts, neglect and improper food.

Ducks seldom become broody; geese are apt to become broody after laying the first litter.

Eggs from yearling ducks hatch well, but geese must be about three years old to show strong fertility.

A cockerel can be distinguished from a pullet at three months of age, as he will be crowing by that time.

Do not make the hen's nest too deep so that the hen will have to jump down on the eggs in the nest.

When a fowl sneezes, waters slightly at eyes and nostrils and dumps it has a common cold, not regarded as a germ disease.

The pullets hatched in March will make good layers for the late fall, and then they can be handled so they will lay all winter.

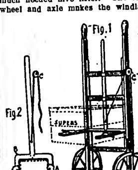
Don't depend on any secret system of breeding layers. If you don't know your flock well enough to select the layers to breed from your case is hopeless.

Be sure conditions are favorable, then apply the hatchet to the hen that persists in striking every time the price of eggs advances.

FEEDING FOWLS IN WINTER.

How a Successful Woman Poultry Raiser Manages Her Flock.

I do not know as my method of feeding has any particular virtue in it, but at any rate I get a fair amount of eggs from my fowls in the winter season, so I believe that my methods are not very far wrong, writes Carrie Vinton in Farmers' Review. As early in the morning as the fowls can see to pick up feed I give them a feeding of whole grain, which I scatter in litter on the feeding floor. The fowls hop down from the roosts and begin to get to work scratching in the litter. As they are all very hungry at that time they work with vigor and this makes them warm. On some of the very cold mornings when I go to the poultry house the fowls have their feathers puffed up all around them to keep a good cushion of air around their bodies. They however soon lose this appearance of coldness after they have scratched in the litter for a few minutes.



At noon again I give them more grain in the litter, and they have to do more scratching. I notice that some of the hens that are inclined to be lazy do not like this sort of thing, but they have to get to work or go hungry. Since I have been feeding all my grain in litter, I have not had any over-fat hens. At noon also I give the fowls the roots they are to have, and I find that mangles and sugar beets are particularly good. The fowls also like turnips, though I notice that some farmers report that their fowls do not care for them. I feed the roots whole when the weather is mild, and that gives the fowls more cause for exercise. But in the cold weather I feed the roots chopped or mashed, for the whole roots would freeze in a short time during our coldest days.

Cabbages I feed to a limited extent, but they do not seem so necessary when the fowls have turnips and beets. However, cabbages are easy to keep from month to month and make a good source of supply of green food when the other kinds run out. A little while before dark I feed a mash as hot as the fowls can eat it and they seem to relish it greatly. I think that the lower animals appreciate warm food about as much as we do. This mash is composed of different things. Bran enters into it, and some corn meal and shorts help make up the mixture. But the largest ingredient is ground oats, for the oats are very valuable as food for fowls. The fact that they are so evenly balanced in their constituents makes it advisable to feed them in some form or other. When I can get meat meal I put some in, but perhaps not more than enough to flavor the mass. I feed ground bone on which there is some meat, and this makes it unnecessary to feed large quantities of meat meal.

HIVE LIFTER AND MOVER.

Device Which Will Meet the Requirements of the Bee Keeper.

Shown herewith is a plan for the much needed hive lifter. The right wheel and axle makes the windlass, after inserting the bolt (not shown) through the hub band and axle. The frame within the frame has adjustable grip to press the sides of the hive. This frame is lowered to the desired height by the rope on windlass. Turn the grip and the hive or supers are ready to raise. If one wants to move the hive, tip the machine backward so the whole can touch the ground and remove the bolt from the hub band. The wheels are about two feet high, explains Bee Culture, and wide enough apart to straddle the hive.

The Hive Lifter and Mover.

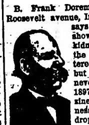
Keeps Bees Strong.



Many experienced beekeepers contend that it is not worth while to remove bees for the sake of getting rid of the moths. Vigor and strength are the only reliable protection. If a colony has a young queen and is strong in numbers they will carry out the eggs and moths as fast as they are found. Sometimes they will sting the moths to death or will seal them to the bottom or some other part of the hive. Italianizing the apiary is also recommended to reduce the trouble with moths.

Don't Crowd.

The poultry house is better to have the few birds than too many in it during the winter. Crowding means disease, imperfect ventilation, lack of exercise, uneven distribution of feed, feather eating, broken eggs and other losses.

A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

How a Veteran Was Saved the Amputation of a Limb.

B. Frank Doremus, veteran, of Roosevelt avenue, Indianapolis, Ind., says: "I had been showing symptoms of kidney trouble from the time I was mustered out of the army, but in all my life I never suffered as in 1897. Headaches, dizziness and sleeplessness first, and then dropsy. I was weak and helpless, having run down from 180 to 125 pounds. I was having terrible pain in the kidneys, and the secretions passed almost involuntarily. My left leg swelled until it was 34 inches around, and the doctor tapped it night and morning until I could no longer stand it, and then he advised amputation. I refused, and began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The swelling subsided gradually, the urine became natural, and all my pains and aches disappeared. I have been well now for nine years since using Doan's Kidney Pills."

"'Have you, Rash?' said I. 'What is it?'

"'Well,' said Rogers, 'I bought a $50 incubator last month, put $15 worth of eggs in it, and hatched out a bluebottle fly.'

"He frowned, then sighed.

"'Yes,' he said, 'I've got the only $65 bluebottle fly in the world.'"

ON A MACKEREL SCHOONER.

Daily Routine in the Life of the Gloucester Fishermen.

The routine life on a mackerel schooner is not strenuous. The crew consists of 14 men, a skipper and cook. Two men constitute a watch, one aloft as a lookout, the other at the wheel, so that each man has two hours on duty, and then 12 hours off, before his turn comes around again. During this period he may be called on to shorten sail, wash the deck or to perform other work. Half of the crew have their bunks forward with the cook, who is king of the forecastle, and the rest sleep aft with the captain. We were assigned to a double bunk aft, where we were not troubled with galley smells, but had to be on our good behavior. All the rollics and revels were forward. The crew ate in two shifts, the older men with the skipper.—Travel Magazine.

New and Liberal Homestead Regulations in

WESTERN CANADA

New Districts Now Opened for Settlement

160 ACRES FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Some of the choicest lands in the grain growing belts of Saskatchewan and Alberta have recently been opened for settlement under the Revised Homestead Regulations of Canada. Thousands of homesteads of 160 acres each are now available. The new regulations make it possible for entry to be made by proxy, the opportunity that many in the United States have been waiting for. Any member of a family may make entry for any other member of the family, who may be entitled to make entry for himself or herself. Entry may now be made before the Agent or Sub-Agent of the District by proxy, (on certain conditions) by the father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

"Any even numbered section of Dominion Lands in Manitoba or the North-West Provinces, excepting 8 and 26, not reserved, may be homesteaded by any person the sole head of a family, or male over 18 years of age, to the extent of one-quarter section, of 160 acres, more or less."

The fee in each case will be $10.00. Churches, schools and markets convenient. Healthy climate, splendid crops and good laws. Grain-growing and cattle raising principal industries.

For further particulars as to rates, routes, best time to go and where to locate, apply to WINTER IS COMING Why not move to a milder climate? We can offer you lands rich in soil, but cheap in price and a climate well-nigh ideal. Let us send you descriptive pamphlets. F. L. Merritt, Land and Industrial Agent, NORFOLK & SOUTHERN RY., Norfolk, Va.

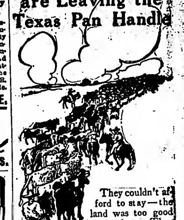
Perfect Womanhood

The greatest menace to woman's permanent happiness in life is the suffering that comes from some derangement of the feminine organs.

Many thousands of women have realized this too late to save their health, barely in time to save their lives.

To be a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband, should be a woman's constant study.



If a woman finds that her energies are flagging, that she gets easily tired, dark shadows appear under her eyes, she has backache, headache, bearing-down sensations, nervousness, irregularities or the "blues," she should start at once to build up her system by a tonic with specific powers, such as the great woman's remedy for woman's ills, made only of roots and herbs.

It cures Female Complaints, such as Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and all Organic Diseases, and is invaluable in the Change of Life. It dissolves and Expels Tumors at an early stage. Subdues Faintness, Nervous Prostration, Exhaustion, and strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, and invigorates the whole female system. It is an excellent remedy for derangements of the Kidneys in either sex.

The Cattle Kings are Leaving the Texas Pan Handle

They couldn't afford to stay—the land was too good for grazing. They got their ranches when land was the cheapest thing going. Some of them had a quarter of a million acres, mighty few less than 50,000 acres. They made lots of money—but it couldn't last. Too many people wanted the land for farms. They offered the Cattle Kings good profit and the Cattle Kings took it. That ended the big cattle business. Now lots of these big ranches are for sale in small tracts, dirt cheap. Lots of them have already been sold.

It's amazing what crops the farmers get on this land—forty or fifty bushels of corn to the acre, right along; wheat 20 to 30 bushels; alfalfa 2 to 2½ tons to the acre, three cuttings a year; oats, kaffir corn, milo maize.

Size that up with what you and your neighbors have been getting on $75 and $100 land, and you'll see where you get off. The Pan Handle farmer of Northern Texas, Western Oklahoma and Eastern New Mexico has got you skinned a mile. There's only one way to get even with him—pull up stakes and go to the Pan Handle yourself. Buy a good big farm for $10 or $15 an acre and see how easy it is to get along.

The Farmer Is Crowding Him Out.

You never saw better land for twice the money in your life. I know good land when I see it, and I know the Pan Handle land is tip top—good chocolate loam, 4 to 8 feet deep with clay subsoil; plenty of water anywhere, 25 to 50 feet down. Rainfall is abundant.

Why don't you go down to the Pan Handle and get a farm? It would pay you to take a trip down there just to look around. It doesn't cost much: only $20 from St. Louis or Kansas City and $25 from Chicago, round trip. The Rock Island-Frisco lines have four routes to the Pan Handle—each one goes through a different part of the country.

I have got a book about Texas that's mighty interesting reading. Another about Oklahoma. Still another about New Mexico. They will tell you a lot you want to know about the Pan Handle Country before you go down there. Do you want one?

The Rock Island-Frisco Lines have no land for sale, and are only interested in getting good, energetic settlers for the desirable, but unoccupied, lands along their lines.

I have chosen several specific sections where conditions are especially favorable for new settlers, and I am advertising those sections. If you would prefer some other section than the Pan Handle country look for my advertisements in other issues of this paper, or write me for specific literature about the section in which you are most interested in.

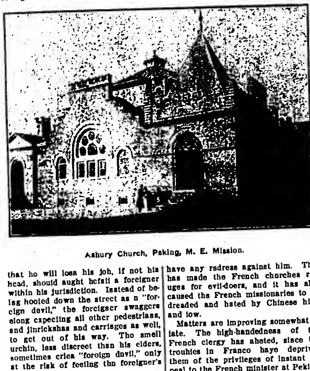
ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist Is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

Missions and Massacres Are Related in China

(Copyright, 1907, by Joseph B. Bowles.)



Peking, China.—The most serious charge made against missionaries in China is that by their interference with civil law they exasperate the natives to the point of uprisings and massacres. This subject deserves the fullest investigation and most careful treatment; for it is no light thing to accuse ministers of the gospel with being responsible for riot and murder. Yet I regret to write that I find ground for this widespread criticism.

A look at the setting of the facts is first necessary. China has long been regarded as a huge, hulking, helpless incompetent among the nations of the earth. She has never received the consideration due to a great country. Foreign powers have never trusted the lives of their subjects in her keeping; wherever they go, there goes the law of extra-territoriality. An alien in China is not subject to China; he knows no law but that of his own self-restraint or of his country's consulate.

Every White Man a Nabob.

A foreigner can do pretty much as he pleases in China. Instead of being, as his friends at home imagine him to be, a terror-stricken mortal, momentarily afraid that the Chinese ogre will demand his life, he is more nearly an ogre himself.

Bitter experience with armies and navies from over seas, and with the loss of territory seized as a penalty for injury to foreigners, has made Chinese officials fearful of these strangers. Every magistrate knows that he will lose his job, if not his head, should aught befall a foreigner within his jurisdiction. Instead of being hooted down the street as a "foreign devil," the foreigner swaggers along expecting all other pedestrians, and jinrickshas and carriages as well, to get out of his way. The small urchin, less discreet than his elders, sometimes cries "foreign devil," only at the risk of feeling the foreigner's stick.

The race question in the southern states is not half so serious as the race question in Asia. The white man's sense of superiority to the yellow expresses itself in a harshness that would shock America were it widely known. If a ricksha man does not go fast enough, beat him with your stick. A secretary of the American legation at Peking told me as a joke that he broke his light cane on a coolie's shoulders. If a Chinese gets in your way, shove him aside, kick him or pull his queue. When I have seen the way the Chinese are frequently abused by white men I no longer marvel at the anti-foreign feeling which resides in most native breasts. The wonder is that the Chinese have endured so much without reprisal. For it does seem as if the natives have no rights which the foreigners are bound to respect. The present outcry against the white man in China has manifold justification.

Missionaries Above the Law.

As an enlightened Chinese educator said to me, "Anybody can do whatever he wants to China at present." Thus it came to pass that the French treaty gave civil rank and authority to French missionaries. There are ugly reports afloat concerning the means by which this provision was put into the document; but these do not necessarily concern the present discussion. The American and British missionaries, who would be entitled to the same rights by the "most favored nation" clause, promptly disavowed any intention of accepting them.

Not so the French. They have been openly political agents, as have also, in some cases, the Germans. The French bishops travel in the full regalia of viceroys. When he goes out in his chair a bishop has outrunners, umbrellas, flags and all the other flummery of a Chinese governor. He demands to be received always in the state befitting his rank. Upon this point Chinese officials, high and low, have spoken to me with greatest bitterness; and so also have men in the consular and diplomatic service.

The Why of China's Latest Massacre.

Regardless of public opinion, the French missionaries have pressed to the limit their prerogatives. Columns could be written of the manner in which they have abused their power. Whole villages have been forcibly impressed to work for them. In the interior, a few weeks ago, I ran across a case where they had imprisoned the head man of a village. At Nanchang they insisted on the punishment of two men whom the mayor had promised to protect; the latter, his "face" gone, wrought a dire Chinese revenge by committing suicide in their church. Straightway an uprising followed in which an entirely unoffending British family was massacred, as well as the French priests, and all the foreigners in the place would have been slaughtered, had not a timely rain dispersed the mob.

For all such crimes the French demand exorbitant indemnities. The most trivial offense against a member of one of the French churches must be heavily atoned for. This applies not only to the national landgrabbing of France and Germany on account of missionary troubles, but also to petty neighborhood squabbles. A convert of the French priest is immune from the law of his own land. He may be a murderer, a thief, a rascal of any kind or degree; his church membership is an asylum, and the law cannot touch him. The missionary alone is his judge. No outsider can have any redress against him. This has made the French churches refuges for evil-doers, and it has also caused the French missionaries to be dreaded and hated by Chinese high and low.

Matters are improving somewhat of late. The high-handedness of the French clergy has abated, since the troubles in France have deprived them of the privileges of instant appeal to the French minister at Peking. A new and better policy will probably, perforce, be adopted. The noble sacrifice of the French priests and nuns, and their tireless, selfless labors, may then have their reward in the affection and esteem of the people.

Wily John Chinaman's Ways.

As a rule, the American and British missionaries have followed a directly contrary policy, as the utterances of the two ministers of these nations, which I shall later quote, will show. Their general rule has been non-interference in civil matters. Times beyond counting they have been put in a predicament by the wily Chinese, who can see an advantage to themselves long before it is on an Anglo-Saxon's horizon.

Thus many an ardent young missionary has found that a sudden accession of inquirers has been due to the fact that the professed converts wanted him to take up their side of a quarrel against members of the French church. To join the one church seemed to the Chinese the only recourse left to enable them to get justice from, or to get even with, the members of the other. If the American missionary would not help them, as the French missionary helped his people, then his was the loss of "face" and following.

In these circumstances some missionaries have doubtlessly appealed to the native officials and to their own consuls on behalf of their people, in cases other than persecution; the treaties accord protection to native Christians when persecuted on account of their religious faith, although this is a doubtful advantage.

When the Gospel Goes to Law.

The net result of all this has been only trouble for all concerned. The missionaries have been caused endless annoyance and at times serious difficulties. There is general agreement among the Anglo-Saxons that they will not go to the yamens in behalf of their Chinese members under any conditions. Some have expressed to me the wish that the boards would make a peremptory ruling that missionaries must not meddle with law cases, so that they could make this answer when appealed to. Certainly it is the conclusion of all impartial observers that it is gravely unwise for missionaries to attempt to influence the course of Chinese civil and criminal administration, even when these are unjust.

So strongly do most missionaries now feel upon the subject that they refuse under any condition to touch yamen cases. One young missionary, born and reared in China and on close terms with leading Chinese, was one day notified that a certain man under arrest had claimed exemption from punishment on the plea of belonging to this missionary church. "What shall I do?" asked the magistrate. "Give him ten extra lashes for trying to deceive you and for attempting to drag the church into a civil case," promptly replied the young missionary. The general practice of the American missionaries, with only rare exceptions, is to permit their members to suffer injustice, rather than to incur the greater evil of bringing reproach upon the church's name, and of hindering the state from exercising its sovereign rights. Nevertheless, I have learned from consuls and from missionaries of some cases wherein American missionaries have appealed to the mandarins or to the consuls on behalf of natives.

Robbing Mandarins of "Face."

The preeminent importance of "face" in China makes this sort of thing harder for a Chinese official to swallow than it would be for an Anglo-Saxon, although the endurance of it on the part of the latter is an impossible hypothesis. Magistrates are thereby shorn of prestige and power by the meddlesome foreigners. The procedures which pass for judicial processes in China are knocked sky high. Thus, although most officials with whom I have talked clearly distinguish between French and American missionaries, there is undoubtedly a widespread hostility against all missionaries on the part of the official class. They associate, and not without reason, the loss of much of their territory with the missionary's presence and activity in civil affairs. Embodied in every missionary, to the Chinese mind, is the ever present possibility of complications with foreign powers. Small wonder the throne has recently been memorialized by the progressives for a retrocession of extra-territorial rights.

Some courageous Chinese magistrates, it should be said, show their resentment against foreign interference by deciding against the missionary's side, even though he be in the right. A spirited young mandarin told me how, when he was sitting at Mukden, a litigant brought in his card reading, "A member of the Christian church." (And, in passing, it may be mentioned that every missionary keeps his personal cards carefully locked up, for a Chinese can work wonders with the prestige of a foreigner's card.) I said to him, "Are you a Chinese subject or a British subject? If you are a Chinese subject I do not care anything about your religion." And before I was through with him that man learned that it does not pay to try to hide behind the foreigner's church in some Chinese courts.

In an endeavor to be perfectly fair I may have given undue prominence to the fact, frequently denied at home, that some American and British missionaries do occasionally interfere with Chinese civil and criminal cases, although apparently, judging from the interviews which follow, they do so in minor ways which do not reach Peking. My pronounced conviction is that they should not do so, under any circumstances, even to save their converts from persecution. It is only just to add, however, that the entire missionary body is suffering from the odium of this sort of thing chiefly because of the monstrous behavior of the French and German priests.

Minister Rockwell's Views.

The American minister at Peking, William Rockwell has vigorous opinions about missionaries. "What about the missionary question?" I casually remarked, at the end of a rather extended interview. "What missionary question? There is no missionary question that I know of," he quickly and almost sharply rejoined. "I have been minister here for two years, and during that time there has been no missionary question before me, except that unfortunate massacre last spring down in Lien Chow, which was purely a local matter, and might have happened anywhere. So far as I know, the American missionaries are living in delightful relations with the Chinese. Their work here in Peking is beyond praise; anyone who goes to it with an unbiased mind must admit that. I spent two years in interior China, and I saw missionaries of all bodies; and I found them most delightful people, whose work for the Chinese is simply beyond estimate. The missionary is doing more for the cause of—I shall not say civilization, for that has become a cheap word; but for the cause of progress, of enlightenment, than any other person or agency. Not to speak of the purely preaching or doctrinal side of the missionary's activities, for that is beyond my province, his medical and school work are so unquestioned, an inestimable good. I cannot imagine why the people in the treaty ports criticise the missionaries. I cannot see any real basis or reason for it. They simply do not know missionaries. Nobody can look into the situation, except he has an 'a priori' conviction and prejudice, and sees only what he is determined to see, without praising the missionaries most highly."

OUR AMERICAN KINGS

FARMERS THE BACKBONE OF COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY.

FEEDING THE OTHER NATIONS

Greater Need of Study of Economic Principles by the Tillers of the Soil—Building Up the Towns.

American farmers are the wealth producers of the nation. In the United States annually the products of the farms exceed in value all the gold the country has produced in a score of years. If the term can be used in a free republic, the farmers are the American kings. The results of their labors feeds not alone a single nation, but assists in supplying sustenance for a large part of the people of nearly all lands of the earth. 'Tis the products of the farms that give the means of support to the great railroad systems, that keep the thousands of great steamers plying the oceans, that make possible the thousands of great enterprises. While the farmer is among the most independent classes of the land, too often he fails to reap full reward for the work he has accomplished. He must fight combine after combine, and pay taxes to support institutions from which he receives no benefit. This is because of the concentration of capital in the hands of a comparatively few in large financial centers. But is not the farmer to blame for this condition to a great extent? Does he not make it possible for the concentration of wealth in large cities? He certainly does lend his support to the building up of trusts, and to capital concentration, when he fails to patronize enterprises in his home town, and refuses to help build up its industries.

There is a "penny wise and pound foolish" attitude on the part of farmers in many communities that is destructive to their own interests. It is seeing a profit, quite often purely imaginary, and in striving to gain it losing sight of the truth that they are wielding the sword that will eventually inflict a serious wound to themselves. This is the practice of purchasing goods at trade centers distant from home. Towns and communities are made wealthy by retaining as great a part of the earnings of its people as possible. The larger the town can be made, the more valuable becomes the farm located near it, because the home market is made better and higher prices are secured for products.

Money earned by the farmers and the business men, if retained at home, generally finds investment in new enterprises that give employment to labor, and add to the wealth of the community and assists in lowering taxation. On the other hand, when the earnings of a community are sent away from it, the towns are deadened, and farm values lowered, taxation is made greater and the small imagined gains to those sending away the profits of their labor react against the sender, who assists in concentrating money in large financial centers in the hands of those who pay no local taxes. Generally the moneied powers of those distant cities dictate to the farmers what prices shall be received for the products of their farms, and to the laborer the compensation he shall receive for his labor. Is not this proposition plain?

D. M. CARR.

The Telephone.

Rural telephones are a boon to the farmers. They can keep in close touch with the markets, and all the doings of the outside world. One of the uses that the 'phone can be well put to, is the getting of late market news from the home town. There are very few farmers who cannot use the telephone with profit during the marketing season.

CITIES AND TOWNS.

How They Are Built Up and What Gives Them Permanency.

Towns and cities are built where exist the greatest natural advantages. Growth and importance depends on environments and conditions. Requirements are that there be some manner of employment for their population. Thus the business of the place fixes its standing. It is then evident that the greater are the resources of a country and the more enterprising its people, the more important will be its cities and towns. Some locations have favorable conditions for certain lines of manufacture, and single industries support thousands, like the textile industry at Fall River, and the manufacture of jewelry at Providence, R. I. Others have shipping facilities that cause them to become great commercial centers. No city can exist within itself, free and independent of tributary territory, but must depend upon a large scope of country to supply it with the products necessary for the sustenance of its people, and for the marketing of its articles of commerce, and its manufacture.

Towns and cities decay when their business interests are destroyed. In the west, particularly in the mining sections, can be found hundreds of examples illustrative of this fact. The discovery of a mine is sufficient to gather people to compose a city. With the exhaustion of the mineral resources business is destroyed and the town becomes deserted. In agricultural sections exist commercial towns, made necessary by the development of the surrounding country. Such towns are supported by the trade that can be attracted from a certain scope of territory, and industries that can be established to employ labor. With development of tributary country, and expansion of industries, and the exercise of enterprise many of these towns attain the magnitude of cities and become important commercial and financial centers. With their growth farms adjacent increase in value. The truth of this is in evidence in nearly every state of the union. While within the boundaries of the United States proper there are more than 86,000,000 of people there is room for millions and millions more. There will be hundreds and thousands more cities pulsating with business come into existence. Reader, is not your home town one that may become a great city if you only do your part to assist it toward greatness?

FREE TREATMENT.

A Method That Should Cure People of the Habit of Patronizing Quack Doctors.

It matters little how widespread through the press is the information as to frauds being operated in the country, there is always a field for the people who live by petty graft. One of the latest plans to defraud has recently been worked in a number of western states. Strangers, purporting to be agents of a free hospital, would approach a farmer, inquire as to his health, and promise him free treatment should he be ailing, claiming that the state medical department would furnish the medicine free. A lengthy statement of his complaint would be written and his signature secured. A few weeks later a note duly signed by the farmer would be presented to him by his home bank. This appears to be a flimsy scheme, but nevertheless more than a score of farmers in one Minnesota county were caught for from $50 to $200 each. Don't sign any contract or statement unless you are positive of its character.

Another Electricity Triumph.

Electricity is now being largely used in the bookbinding industry for embossing and such work. With the aid of the current it is possible to make 480 impressions a minute, which more than atones for its increased cost.

KEEPING UP-TO-DATE.

Old Fashioned Ways Do Not Win in Competition with Modern Methods.

It is within the province of the residents of a community to either kill off or build up the trade of the home town. It is too often that the merchants and other business men are to blame for the conditions of which they themselves complain. This is an age of advancement, of improved methods, and the business man who persists in carrying on his business as his forefathers did years ago, is very apt to lose out. What would the merchant think of the farmer who would not do his plowing with an old-fashioned plow and an ox-team, and cut his hay with a scythe and do his reaping with a sickle? In fact, such a farmer would, in the present age, be a unique personality in America. Yet the merchant in many cases will adhere to old style and practices. This is a time when rapid sales and the quickly turning over of stocks are essential to the success of the merchant. Competition is strong, and the man in mercantile lines who conceals "his light under a bushel" is indeed unwise. "Publicity" should be the watchword of the live business man. The greatest treasures of the earth lie concealed until their existence becomes known. To succeed it is necessary that not alone judicious advertising be done, but that when customers call, prices be right for the quality of goods offered. Then there is courteous attention on behalf of manager and clerks toward all who call. Knowledge of goods handled, prices, fluctuations of the market, and many other things are necessary to the progressive merchant, and his endeavor should be to extend the benefits to his customers. In this way he wins confidence, helps retain custom for his town, thus keeping dollars in circulation in his community that otherwise would go elsewhere.

Always a Reason.

There is always a reason in the man for his good or bad fortune.—Emerson.

Dog's Ashes Preserved in an Urn.

A Philadelphia young woman, the former mistress of an intelligent little fox terrier, who, until he died, was the pet of an entire neighborhood, has hit upon a most unusual method of keeping fresh the memory of her little pet. When the dog was taken sick his mistress summoned at once a veterinarian, who did everything possible to save the animal, but all to no purpose. When it finally died the young woman was disconsolate and eagerly seized upon a suggestion made half jest by a friend that she have the remains cremated. The doctor was delegated to secure the services of assistants, and the ashes, after the ceremony, were incased in a handsome bronze vase, which now rests on a table in the drawing room of the woman. Beside the urn stands the picture of the little dog, taken when he was standing at attention at the command of his mistress.

An ill-tempered woman is the devil's door-nail.

Sporting Gossip.

The Gans-Battling Nelson controversy seems to have petered out. Joe is firm in his demand of 80 per cent. of the $25,000 purse offered by the Reno, Nev., promoters and the Nelsonites demand a better split of the money. It was reported several days ago that Mr. May, who offered the purse, stated he would bet $20,000 on Nelson at even money. That, probably, is more money than Gans would care to wager on himself, still he bet his end of the Goldfield purse, $10,000, against $7,000 despite the weight conditions against him. There is no doubt, though, that Tex Rickard and Nat Goodwin would call Mr. May if they saw the money. Failing with Nelson the colored champion will have to get a search warrant to find another opponent should he beat Burns unless he wants to match with Jack Blackburn, the other tough colored lightweight. Jack has an excellent record, but unfortunately he has not been thrown in the same class with Nelson and Britt, therefore the promoters are not clamoring for the match.

Five thousand people saw records broken in the first Canadian athletic championship meet under the auspices of the Montreal Amateur Athletic Federation of Canada. The weather was fine, and except for an occasional breeze which interfered slightly with the broad jump conditions were ideal. Four records were broken, one of which was placed to the credit of Ralph Rose, of California. Rose put the 16-pound shot 49 feet 7½ inches, beating the American record three-quarters of an inch. McGrath, of the New York Athletic club, defeated Rose in the 16-pound hammer throw, his mark being 172 feet 7½ inches. He then went after the American record and succeeded in establishing a new mark of 173 feet seven inches. Halfpenny, of the Montreal A. A. A., broke the Canadian record for the pole vault, clearing 11 feet 5½ inches. J. J. Daly, of the I. A. A. C., broke the three mile Canadian mark of 15:25 by ten seconds.

During a fanning bee the other day, one of the Pittsburg players told how "Goat" Anderson won a place on the Pirate team. Tommy Leach recommended Anderson to Fred Clarke for a trial at Hot Springs. While there, Clarke was teaching Anderson a few things about team play. He had told Anderson to bunt at the signal from a man on first, who purposed going down to second. The ball was pitched five feet outside, and, of course, the catcher flagged the man going to second. Anderson had made no move to bunt or even to strike at the ball. Clarke started to call him. "Shut up. You don't know all there is in the books." The answer made the Pirate captain gasp, coming from a recruit. "All right, son," grinned Clarke. "I guess you haven't got stage fright when you can give it to your manager that way." The youngster's nerve in roasting his boss won him a job with Pittsburg and just now he's leading the right fielders of the National league in runs scored and stolen bases.

According to Cy Sanborn, the famous baseball critic, baseball manufacturers are working industriously on a scheme that will result in the abolition of the baseball spike. Says Sanborn: "I had a talk with Charley White in New York the other day, and he tells me Spalding Bros. already are trying to anticipate the growing demand for the abolition of the present day baseball spike. He told me their expert shoe man had been at work on it for some time. They are doubtful if it will be possible to substitute for the spike anything along the lines of the cleats now worn by football players because of the difference in the demands put upon cleats by the game."

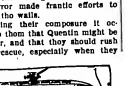
QUENTIN HAS FUN WITH SNAKES IN WHITE HOUSE



WASHINGTON—Quentin Roosevelt caused chills to chase up and down the spinal columns of Attorney General Bonaparte, Representative Hepburn, and ex-Representative Lacey, of Iowa, the other day when he appeared in the president's office—with two live snakes coiled about him.

Quentin is somewhat impetuous, especially when on roller skates, and he skated into the office of his father, who was having a conference with Attorney General Bonaparte. As Quentin approached, the snakes hissed and the attorney general side-stepped with great agility. President Roosevelt suggested to Quentin that he disappear. Quentin hastened into the cabinet room where Representative Hepburn and Mr. Lacey were waiting to see the president. They thought the snakes were harmless wooden affairs and began to admire them. Then the larger snake began to wriggle and wrap itself around the arm of Quentin and the distinguished Iowans in their terror made frantic efforts to walk up the walls.

Regaining their composure it occurred to them that Quentin might be in danger, and that they should rush to the rescue, especially when they saw the larger snake, three feet long, gliding up the sleeve of the president's son. In the most gingerly manner they took hold of the collar of the boy's coat and gently removed the garment, taking care to keep out of range of the snake. Disdaining rescue, Quentin seized his coat, and while he toyed with the squirming reptiles skated outside, where a party of women visitors were thrown into hysterics at sight of the snakes.

Quentin brought three snakes from Oyster Bay with him. He found that he could not take care of them properly and turned them over to an animal fancier. But Quentin got lonesome without his snakes, and the fancier loaned him a king snake and a smaller reptile. Quentin went to the executive offices to show his new treasures to his father, who observed that the king snake was about to make a meal of the little one, and warned his son to be careful to prevent such a calamity.

Quentin finally left the White House to the great joy of everybody there. His father remarked to a caller that Quentin's taste was inherited, for he not only liked snakes, but had scotched a few in his time.

MAY USE STREET CARS TO IMPROVE POSTAL SERVICE

EVERY street car in this country may be made a traveling postoffice before long. Such a plan is now under consideration by Second Assistant Postmaster General McCleary, with the object of further improving the mail service.

Mr. McCleary's idea is that when a person writes a letter the sooner it is on its way the better it suits him. If mail facilities are still further improved the man will write more letters where he now writes one and the government will receive just that much more revenue. Postoffices on street cars, he believes, will place the writing public in close touch with the postal department and the convenience will add materially to the government's income.

The system has been tried on the line between Minneapolis and St. Paul and has proved successful. Every car on that line is equipped with a mail box and the people patronize them liberally. The cars stop to receive a letter, the same as a passenger. If the scheme works well where it has been tested, Mr. McCleary can't see why it will not work well on all street car lines. At first the system may be installed only on the main street car lines of the various cities, but will be extended gradually to take in all the lines.

The cost of the service is to be investigated. Officials at the department are of the opinion the expense will not be great, as the street car companies will no doubt furnish the necessary letter boxes and permit conductors to handle the mail. In many cities street cars are now used to transfer mail from one postal station to another and the postal authorities believe the system for the collection of mail can be successfully developed.

STATE DEPARTMENT TO TEACH GREEN CONSULS

NO MORE green consuls are to be sent abroad to represent America if the plans of the state department, which have just been put in practice, realize expectations.

Ever since the establishment of the consular service it has been customary to permit a newly appointed consul 30 days with pay before leaving America for his post.

A room in the department has been equipped as a complete working American consulate, suitable to transact the business of any part of the world, civilized or uncivilized.

Appointees are no longer permitted to spend that 30 days' period in their own way, but are required to report every day at the state department for duty and to spend a certain number of hours in this model consular office.

ARMY OF CATERPILLARS IS DEVOURING FOLIAGE

FOLIAGE on Washington's trees is being devoured wholesale by an army of tussock caterpillars, the larvae of the tussock moth, and apparently nothing can be done to check the ravages of these now doing the damage, though precautions can be taken against a repetition of the pest next year.

For many years the tussock caterpillar has been the most serious of the shade-tree pests in Philadelphia, New York, Brooklyn and Boston, but it was not until 1895 that it appeared in Washington in sufficient numbers to be regarded as a menace to the foliage. In that year also the fall web worm was more abundant in this city than it had been since 1886. In 1901 the pests of both kinds again appeared in great numbers, and now there is another invasion, giving a period of six years between each great attack.

Hitherto the chief check upon the insects has been the parasites that come in great numbers in the same years that the caterpillars abound and destroy most of the multitude of eggs laid by the pests.

Trees of which the foliage has been injured or even totally destroyed by these marauders may be seen on almost any street of Washington, the caterpillars attacking by preference poplars, soft maples, elms, alders, birches and willows. But other trees by no means escape their depredations, though the gingko and tulip are almost immune. Besides destroying the foliage, the caterpillars are offensively intrusive, invading the homes of the residents and otherwise becoming a nuisance.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

GOVERNOR FOE OF RAILROADS

Gov. Braxton Bragg Comer of Alabama has become a new big figure in Alabama state politics because of his fight against the railways. He is the man who led the "Morris Avenue Barehacks" against the state machine and won. His motto was "progressiveness" as against "standpatism."

Comer as a mere stripling of 9 boy served as a state cadet during the civil war. From poverty he rose to influence. He became a merchant, then joined field to field, and today is said to run more plows than any other man in Alabama. He is interested in cotton and flour mills and other business concerns, but it was not until he was fifty-odd years that he entered political life. It is said that he got into politics by accident—that he did not know what he was doing. It all came about when he began to kick on what he termed high freight rates.

He was wholesaling at this time and something happened that permitted his great competitor to undersell him, and after a while he identified this something as railway rates and discrimination, or thought he did, and the fight was on. He took the matter before the Birmingham Commercial club only to find the railways owned the club. He left the club and organized a semi-secret league popularly known as the "Morris Avenue Bareheads," with a number of branches. This organization presented a bill to the legislature but when it was passed it was not up to the Comer standard. Comer became president of the new railway commission, winning by more than 20,000 votes. Then came the state election. Comer told the people he wanted everything—the lieutenant-governorship, the rest of the railway commission and both branches of the legislature. Then he could get laws to regulate the railways. He carried sixty of the sixty-seven counties, and won by 20,000 votes. And Gov. Comer is still fighting the railroads.

ARMY CHIEF RETIRES

By the retirement of General McCaskey from the United States army the other day at the age of 64 by operation of the law as to age limit, the force loses one of its most unique characters. The general is the last commissioned officers on the active list who answered President Lincoln's first call for volunteers in April, 1861, and served throughout the civil war, a period of more than four years. He received his commission as major general, United States army, on the forty-sixth anniversary of his entry into the volunteer service as a private.

He was identified with the First and Seventy-ninth volunteer regiments from Pennsylvania during the war, and served in General Patterson's army in Virginia, and later in the armies of Ohio and Cumberland. His regiment, the Seventy-ninth Pennsylvania volunteers, belonged to the Fourteenth army corps and he was present with it in all campaigns and battles from 1861 until mustered out July, 1865, at Washington, D. C., as a captain.

He was appointed in the regular army as second and first lieutenant Feb. 23, 1866, and assigned to the Thirteenth United States infantry, transferred to the Twenty-second infantry, and later to the Twentieth infantry, in which regiment he served for nearly thirty-five years, filling every grade from first lieutenant to colonel.

General McCaskey was advanced to the grade of brigadier general January, 1904, and has served two tours in the Philippine islands.

TO WRITE HISTORY OF RUSSIA

Mrs. Augusta Hale Gifford of Portland has sailed for an extended trip abroad. During her absence she will add to her material for a comprehensive history of Russia. It is no new thing for Mrs. Gifford to tarry in other lands, for although a native she has spent more than half her time on foreign shores during the past thirty years.

A niece of the venerable U. S. senator, Eugene Hale, she springs from a long-lived studious family. After her graduation from Oberlin college she became a devoted student to history, literature and art. Shortly after her marriage to Hon. George Gifford of Portland, he laid aside his legal practice and journalism to accept a consular service.

Mrs. Gifford has from time to time done much clever work for New England journals, and was much in demand as a lecturer before she undertook the writing of books. Fond of human character and life she wrote some years ago a volume entitled "Germany; Her People and Their Story." In due time this was followed by a history of Italy, which was not only read with avidity by her countrymen but received favorable comment from the king of that country, Mrs. Gifford receiving a letter from Victor Emmanuel III. personally thanking her for so valuable and charming a book.

No sooner were the necessities woven into a story than she became anxious to visit Russia and gather material for a third in her series, but the political disturbances have been such that her family have not been willing for her to attempt traveling through that country until now.

AROUSED BY SLAUGHTER

Mohammed Ali Mirza, the new shah of Persia, who ascended the throne last February, aroused at the awful slaughter of his subjects by invading Turks, has called upon the sultan to curb his auxiliaries, asserting that the temper of the Persian people will inevitably be such on a war should the frontier continue to be harrassed.

The shah is 35 years old. As a child he showed great intelligence and a remarkable strength of character. He is well versed in the subjects taught in Europe and speaks French fluently. His majesty is described as serious, energetic and fond of his work, personally attending to every detail of the government. Details have often been found to complain of his seal and exactitude when governor of Tahris. He did not inherit the oriental love of pomp and display. Some have said that he is economical to a fault.

According to the American charge d'affaires in Teheran, he is a most firm supporter and advocate of reform, and has devoted considerable time to the study of political science and the political history of Europe.

His majesty is, however, above all, a military man. He has had a thorough and careful training in the art of war and has commanded several brigades.

The shah is fond of the simple life, and the sumptuousness of his court does not exceed that which is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of his rank and dignity.

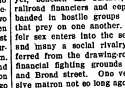
Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

RAPID GROWTH OF NEW YORK CITY UNDERGROUND

NEW YORK—An investigator with a bent for facts of curious interest has discovered that while the skyscrapers of Manhattan are pushing to greater and greater heights, the city underground has been growing even more rapidly. According to his computation a hundred thousand persons carry on their daily occupations beneath the streets and below the waters of Greater New York. Some of these are caisson workers laying the foundations of huge buildings; employes of the various tunnels pushing their way under the North and East rivers and workmen in the subways. In addition to this specialized line of underground activity, there are certain industries carried on almost entirely beneath the surface. One of these is baking, and it is stated that nearly all the bread and pastry eaten by New Yorkers is prepared below the ground. There are thousands of small shops on the east side that occupy cellars without light or ventilation except such as comes from the single entrance reached by a steep flight of steps from the street.

Devotees of the more fashionable life below are taking to underground city since some of the new hotels and department stores have utilized the space below the surface of their sites with doors leading to and from the subways.

HUNDRED WOMEN SPEND $35,000 YEARLY ON DRESS



EXPERT opinion fixes the average annual cost of a New York woman's clothing at $285. This is not a large sum, but it is a figure on which balances the thousands who do not spend $20 and the scores who spend $50,000. A gown for the latter costs more than the entire expense of the family of the former.

There are about 100 women in the metropolis who spend $35,000 a year each on dress, and it is not difficult to do so if one gets the necessary gown and accompaniments in order to be well dressed for each of the numerous occasions required by social custom. Then there are some 12,000 women in the city who each spend $14,000 a year, and about 6,000 who go close to $6,000.

One day's shopping, not buying, simply as an experiment, showed how easy these highest figures can be reached. A furrier offered a fine sable cost for the "reasonable price" of $9,000, while the milliner suggested a fitting hat to go with it for $70, and the bootmaker selected proper footwear for $12. The cost does not have to be renewed every month, but there must be other costs, and it was learned that the proper complement from an opera cloak down to the smallest jaunty street affair of fine cloth and extensive trimming would cost a trifle of something like $19,000. Then there should be a matter of twenty-five hats, with their decorations of fine feathers and laces that average not more than $66 each, and there must be more shoes than hats that can be had from $8 to $20 a pair. Hints and shoes are subject to frequent change.

This is all very well for the outside but there must be at least a score of gowns to go with this, and gowns soon grow old and must be frequently renewed.

ANENT THE HARRIMAN-FISH RAILROAD CLASH

THE fight for the control of the Illinois Central railroad between Stuyvesant Fish and E. H. Harriman recalls other clashes between men who deal in railroads. Many people remember the bitter fight waged two years ago by Joseph Ramsey, Jr., then president of the Wabash, against George J. Gould, with the avowed purpose of wresting the system from him. It was a hot fight while it lasted, and many unpleasant words were said on both sides. Yet if you were to go into the Wabash offices you would see among the photographs on the wall, one enclosed in a narrow black frame, the portraits of Mr. Ramsey and Mr. Gould, placed side by side, as though they were the best of friends. The two portraits will probably be in each framed together until they become yellow and timeworn as the other mementoes of the past that are on the Wabash office walls.

This is only a slight evidence of the rule of War street to stifle or conceal its personal feelings. And yet, beneath the surface, bankers, railroad financiers and capitalists are banded in hostile groups or camps that prey on one another. Even the fair sex enters into the secret wars, and many a social rivalry is transferred from the drawing-room to the financial fighting grounds in Wall and Broad street. One very aggressive matron not so long ago convulsed not alone society, but also the financial district, by making an observation that is still being repeated in the millionaires' clubs. It was at the close of the life insurance investigation, when E. H. Harriman made his trip to San Francisco, just after the earthquake. "Yes," said the matron, "after having robbed the policy holders, he's going out to San Francisco now to rob the dead."

HOTELS MORE LENIENT TOWARD GOOD CANINES

WELL-MANNERED dogs are now permitted to pay calls in some of the hotels which have been closed against them. Even at the Waldorf-Astoria, where there has been for years a stern rule that none of the canine family may be received except in the basement kennels, there have been signs of leniency.

It was only recently that a Pomeranian of aristocratic lineage was permitted to enter the elevator and ascend to the fifth floor. But this kind of license is not often given, and no really large dogs with wolf and bear and impolite ways with their teeth would be tolerated. The Pomeranian was brought up to the Thirty-third street entrance of the Waldorf-Astoria in a cab by a very prepossessing young woman. "I would like to take my dog up to show him to Mrs. Blank," she said. "Will it be all right?"

"You will carry him?" asked the clerk. "Oh, yes," was the reply."

"It will be all right, then," replied the clerk.

Although the hotels of the city do not generally advertise the fact, there has been a disposition lately to permit dogs and other animal pets on the premises if they are well behaved. The Hotel Savoy represents the extreme in the exclusion policy, for none is permitted to enter the portals, and not a sign to that effect is displayed. The Burlington, a family apartment hotel in West Thirtieth street, near Fifth avenue, which is owned by Mrs. Richard Hudnut, who is a fancier herself, publicly invites those who have dogs to come to its roof.

JOHN MITCHELL TO QUIT HIS POSITION

MINERS' PRESIDENT DECLARES HE WILL NOT RUN FOR REELECTION.

His Health Is Too Poor—Announcement Is Made in United Mine Workers' Journal—Anthracite Field Man May Name T. D. Nichols.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 11.—John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers, announced in the current issue of the United Mine Workers' Journal that he will not be a candidate for reelection as president. He says in his announcement that he does not regard himself as well enough to attend properly to the office. None of the executive officers of the organization was in the city Thursday. It is said at headquarters that Mr. Mitchell will finish his present term as president, which expires April 1 of next year.

Mr. Mitchell underwent a surgical operation about six months ago and it is said that he has not fully recovered and that it is possible it will be necessary to perform another operation. He went to Chicago Tuesday and expected to go from there to La Salle, Ill., Thursday, to consult with a surgeon in regard to the advisability of another operation.

Text of the Announcement.

Mr. Mitchell's announcement is as follows:

"To the Officers and Members of the U. M. W. of A.—Greetings: Inasmuch as notices calling for nominations are being sent out from the office of the secretary and in order that all local unions and members thereof may be in position to express their choice for the office of president, I herewith announce that I shall not be a candidate for the presidency of your organization.

"I am prompted to arrive at this decision because I believe that I am no longer well enough to give your interests the consideration their importance demands.

"I shall explain in greater detail in my annual report to our coming convention the causes which impel me to give up the high office to which you have elected me for so many years.

"I thank you for the confidence you have reposed in me and I beg you to believe that the advancement of my craft has been my highest ambition.

"JOHN MITCHELL,
"President U. M. W. of A."

Mr. Mitchell has been president of the United Mine Workers of America since 1899.

Regret Among Miners.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Oct. 11.—The news from Indianapolis that John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers of America had announced that he will not be a candidate for reelection because of the state of his health, caused regret among the anthracite mine workers and their sympathizers throughout the anthracite coal regions.

If President Mitchell cannot be induced to reconsider his decision not to again be a candidate for the presidency, it is said that the mine workers of the anthracite region will nominate Thomas D. Nichols of Scranton, president of district No. 1, as their candidate for the office. Mr. Nichols last November was elected a delegate from this district to the convention and will take his seat in December.

ATTORNEY GENERAL IS CITED.

Young, of Minnesota, May Be Punished for Contempt of Court.

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 12.—Edward T. Young, attorney general of Minnesota, was served with an order Friday issued by Federal Judge Lochren to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court. The alleged contempt consisted of mandamus proceedings brought in the district court of Ramsey county to compel the railroads to comply with the commodity rate law passed by the last legislature, and enforcement of which has been temporarily enjoined by the federal court.

The order is returnable October 21. If Judge Lochren then imposes a fine, lashment on Attorney General Young for contempt, the latter will appeal to the United States supreme court on habeas corpus proceedings, thus bringing the Minnesota rate controversy directly before the court of last resort.

ACTRESS SHOOTS HERSELF.

Accident Occurs on Stage But She Finishes Her Song.

Gallipolis, O., Oct. 12.—Miss Texas Guinan, leading lady with the "Simple Simon" theatrical company, accidentally shot herself in the side during the performance in a local theater Thursday night. How the revolver came to be loaded is a mystery. Miss Guinan finished the song she was singing before being carried from the stage. She will probably recover if blood poisoning does not set in.

Balloonist Has Fatal Fall.

Madison, Ill., Oct. 12.—Bonanzinga, a balloonist of Quincy, Ill., was probably fatally hurt here Friday by falling 400 feet from a bursted balloon. The parachute failed to open in the short distance to earth. This is Bonanzinga's first serious accident in 26 years of ballooning.

LUMBERMEN ARE INDICTED

MEMBERS OF NORTHWESTERN ASSOCIATION ARE ACCUSED.

Federal Grand Jury at Minneapolis Returns Two Bills in the Conspiracy Cases.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 9.—As a result of its investigation of the so-called "little black book," the federal grand jury Tuesday returned 19 indictments against well-known lumber men and officers of the Northwestern Lumbermen's association charging conspiracy to defraud by the use of the mails.

The individuals named in the indictment were: Ralph Burnside, who is president of the Northwestern Lumbermen's association and of the Hawkeye Lumber company, of Oskaloosa, Ia.; W. G. Hollis, of Minneapolis, secretary of the Western Lumbermen's association; George C. Ingram, of Sauk Center, a director in the association; Stanley Moore, of Watertoo, Ia., director; C. E. Greef, of Elgin, Ia., up to last year price president of the association; Theo. S. McLaughlin, general manager of the Phoenix Lumber company, of Minneapolis; James C. Halville, general manager of the Wisconsin Lumber company; Rufus Clake, general manager of the J. H. Qeal Lumber company, of Minneapolis; R. C. French, of Hawarden, Ia., vice president of the H. Qeal Lumber company; William J. Bruce, manager of the Bruce Lumber company, of Minneapolis; J. W. Luce, of the Hayes-Luce Lumber company, of Winona; Lucas Lumber company, of Winona; O. H. Bolsford, general manager of the "Laird Norton Yards" of Winona; A. A. Rogers, president of the Rogers Lumber company, of Minneapolis; George H. Rogers, vice president of the Rogers Lumber company; N. S. Ewing, president of the Oklahoma Sash and Door factory, of Oklahoma, Okla.

STUDENTS IN FOOD TEST.

Lose Weight on Diet of Crackers, Milk and Butter.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 10.—The result of an experimental diet of pure crackers, milk and butter, on which five University of Minnesota students lived for four days, was announced Wednesday.

All the men lost in weight, the loss ranging from one-quarter of a pound to three pounds and a half. The men, during the test, ate three meals a day, each meal consisting of 12 ounces of crackers, 100 grams of milk and 13.5 grams of butter. The test was conducted under the supervision of physiology of the school of medicine. None of the foods had been adulterated, the object of the test being to learn the relative value of different foods.

FOWLER FLEES FROM ASYLUM.

Former Secretary of Oriental Exclusion League Has Escaped.

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 11.—Arthur E. Fowler, former secretary of the Japanese-Korean Exclusion League of Seattle, escaped Tuesday from the insane asylum at Steilacoom and made his way to Seattle, where it is believed he is being taken care of by friends.

Fowler was arrested in Bellingham three weeks ago, examined by a lunacy board and sent to the asylum. This followed his fruitless attempts to gain a following for his pet scheme of oriental exclusion through a league of mammoth proportions. He started his work in Seattle and enrolled the labor unions.

THINKS MISS SAPP MURDERED.

Coroner's Jury So Declares—S. F. Whitlow to Be Arrested.

Iola, Kan., Oct. 11.—The coroner's jury which has spent three days investigating the mysterious death of May Sapp has returned a verdict that "Miss Sapp died from wounds in the throat caused by a sharp instrument in the hands of a person or persons other than Miss Sapp."

A warrant was sworn out Thursday night for Samuel F. Whitlow immediately after the coroner's jury reported. John Sapp, father of the dead girl, swore to the complaint.

Serious Floods in France.

Paris, Oct. 10.—Continuous heavy rains have caused serious floods throughout France. In addition to the Rhone, the Loire and the Tarn are over their banks and the plain of Herault again is under water. Much damage has been done everywhere. A cyclone descended on the Riviera and several ships were driven ashore.

Black Hand Plotters Sentenced.

Newcastle, Pa., Oct. 11.—Twenty-three Italians recently arrested in connection with numerous Black Hand outrages and who had either been convicted or pleaded guilty, were sentenced Thursday by Judge William H. Porter. The highest sentence was ten years.

Russian Prisoners Escape.

Kutais, Russia, Oct. 11.—Thirty-six political prisoners broke out of the local prison here Thursday and got away. They had been incarcerated in secret cells for a year.

IN THE CANEBRAKE.

MINES SALTED; SWINDLE EXPOSED

SENSATIONAL $400,000 FRAUD IS DISCOVERED NEAR LENDER, WYO.

Investors Not to Lose—Thomas L. and J. F. Greenough, Prime Movers in Organization, Will Redeem All Stock at Prics Paid.

Helena, Mont., Oct. 12.—The Record publishes a story to the effect that numerous Montana and Washington investors have been mulcted to the extent of more than a third of a million dollars through the discovery that certain placer mines near Lander, Wyo., had been salted and that the property in question is worthless.

Thomas L. Greenough, of Missoula, and J. F. Greenough, of Spokane, who were the prime movers in the organization, have notified all investors that they will redeem all stock at the price paid, thus assuming the loss.

Found to Be Worthless.

The discovery that the property was salted was due to an independent examination conducted by Speaker E. W. King, of the Montana legislature, and J. R. Neill, of Spokane, heavy and prospective investors, who found, after removing a few inches of the shaft walls, that the ground was valueless, as were the tailings, although all previous experiments showed values ranging from 20 cents to nine dollars a yard.

Chicagoans' Big Offer.

A Chicago firm was so impressed with the future of the property that it offered the Greenoughs $2,500,000 for their interest, but the offer was rejected.

Water not being available, work had been started from either end on a tunnel through a mountain so the flow of the Pophosgie river might be utilized. The discovery has created the biggest sensation in the history of northwest mining.

LUSITANIA SETS NEW RECORDS.

Crosses in Four Days, 20 Hours, Averaging Nearly 24 Knots.

New York, Oct. 11.—The Cunarder Lusitania, with practically all the transatlantic records to her credit, arrived about the Sandy Hook lightship at 1:25 a. m. Friday.

The time for the trip from Daunt's Rock to the Sandy Hook light, the official course over which the speed trials were made, was four days, 20 hours. The last day's run was apparently the fastest of the trip, the giant liner hitting up her speed to 25 knots an hour over a smooth sea with little wind to interfere with her.

The Lusitania's time averages almost exactly 24 knots an hour for the entire trip. Her arrival at 1:20, or five minutes earlier than she passed the lightship would have made her speed exactly 24 knots.

SANTA FE ROAD GUILTY.

Convicted of Rebating in the Trial at Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 12.—After brief deliberation the jury in the case of the Santa Fe Railway company, charged with rebating shipments, Friday rendered a verdict of guilty on all counts enumerated in the indictments found by the grand jury.

The maximum fine for the offenses charged is $1,100,000; and the minimum is $66,000.

Britton and Hargis Go Free.

Sandy Hook, Ky., Oct. 10.—John Waugh, commonwealth's attorney of this district, Wednesday filed a written statement in the case of Commonwealth against Bill Britton and Robert Hargis, charged with complicity in the murder of Dr. B. D. Cox at Jackson, the substance of which is that owing to the fact that he has been unable to secure three of the non-resident witnesses it was impossible for him to make out a case and he therefore moved a dismissal. The motion was sustained by Special Judge W. B. Moody.

WOMAN RAFFLES CONFESSES

MRS. ROMADKA, OF MILWAUKEE, ADMITS SHE IS A BURGLAR.

Wife of a Wealthy Man Says She Robbed Homes and Gave Plunder to Negro.

Chicago, Oct. 10.—Mrs. Charles J. Romadka confessed Wednesday, according to the police, that she had robbed several homes in Chicago, stealing diamonds valued at thousands of dollars. One robbery in Milwaukee she acknowledged as her work.

Following her raids of the homes of the rich, Mrs. Romadka said, she turned the property over to the colored man, Jones, now a prisoner.

The startling confession which clears away many of the recent robberies in the city, besides explaining the mystery of the wealthy woman's arrest, was made to Francis Rose, special agent of the Fidelity & Casualty company of New York, which has been investigating the strange case.

Following the confession the woman told her story to Detective Sergeants Howe and Cluskey. Detectives are investigating her story and expect to recover at least $5,000 worth of stolen property.

Mrs. Romadka acknowledged robbing the Clifford Beck home, 2500 South Park avenue, where $1,500 worth of jewels was taken. Those jewels, she says, she gave to the negro Jones, except those which she was wearing when discovered dining with a board of trade man in the Baltimore inn, where she was first arrested.

She also told of entering a home at about 1600 Sheridan road, where $1,000 worth of dollars' worth of property was taken; of robbing a home at 4517 Vincennes avenue; of entering a home on Lake Shore and another near 6500 Yale avenue.

The Beck home was robbed by the millionaire's wife about noon September 2. Mrs. Beck was asleep when Mrs. Romadka, according to her own story, entered the house, walked up the stairway to the second floor and stole the bag containing the $1,200 worth of jewels.

TRIES TO JUMP INTO OCEAN.

Chilean Passenger on Steamer Attempts to End His Life.

New York, Oct. 11.—Herbert Fletcher De Bon, of Chicago, attempted to end his life by jumping into the sea in midocean, according to a report made by the officers of the steamer Moltke, which arrived here Thursday from Genoa and Naples.

The Moltke was three days out when De Bon made the attempt to hurl himself into the sea. He was caught before he had succeeded in carrying out his apparent intention and from that time until the steamer arrived here he was kept under constant observation.

MISSING MAN FOUND DEAD.

Wealthy Coal Dealer at Hartwell, O., Apparently Was Murdered.

Cincinnati, Oct. 12.—H. B. Howard, a wealthy coal dealer of Hartwell, a suburb, who had been missing for more than 24 hours, was found Friday afternoon in a railroad coal shed, apparently murdered. The body had been covered with sacks and pieces of coal and the head was battered in as if by the second murder in the Mill creek valley this week.

Reynolds' Alaska Bank Fails.

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 11.—The H. D. Reynolds bank at Valdez, Alaska, closed its doors Wednesday. Seattle bankers say the failure will not affect Seattle's financial institutions and the depositors will be paid. Seattle merchants will be paid. Boston and New England capital, furnished largely by school teachers, formed the basis of Reynolds' first exploitation in Alaska.

Greek Minister Is Named.

Athens, Oct. 13.—The Greek consul general at Salonika, Turkey, M. Coromilas, has been appointed minister of his government to the United States.

TELEGRAPHERS CONTINUE STRIKE

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE SUMMARILY SUSPENDS PRESIDENT SMALL.

The Vote in New York was Unanimous to Continue the Strike and President Small was Hissed by the Operators.

New York, Oct. 14.—The New York local of the commercial telegraphers' union at a meeting yesterday voted unanimously to continue the strike against the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies.

The vote was taken upon the suggestion of President Small who in messages to subordinate officers pointed out the inability of the general assembly further to finance the strike and recommended that local assemblies refuse to handle the additional work and with having condnoted the fight in a half hearted, dilatory way.

Small tried to explain his position, but was frequently interrupted by hisses. When he suddenly left the hall in the midst of the speechmaking cries of "resign" followed him.

Tonight Small issued a statement in which he said he was willing to continue the strike if the men insisted.

When the meeting opened President Small was given the floor a said:

"Saturday Commissioner Neill informed me that President Olowry had told him that further negotiations were futile. I believe what they say. Our funds are quite exhausted. As you know, we were unable to make a payment to you yesterday. There is no more in sight. These are the facts; you can do as you will."

Percy Thomas, former national deputy president, said that Small had said when the strike began that he could raise $2,000,000 to support it.

ACTION IN RATE CASE.

Attorney General Young Must Appear Charged With Contempt.

St. Paul, Oct. 14.—Attorney General Edward T. Young's challenge has been accepted. Contempt proceedings have been instituted against him for violating Judge Lochren's injunction in the rate cases, and he has been served with a copy of Judge Lochren's plan to secure an early decision of the supreme court on the question of the jurisdiction of the court to issue the injunction is in operation.

The proceeding is in the form of an order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. Service was on Mr. Young's action in commencing a suit against the Northern Pacific road for the enforcement of the legislative commodity rates, in direct violation of Judge Lochren's injunction issued Sept. 23.

The attorney general has not been placed under arrest nor detained in any way. He will simply have to appear before Judge Lochren on Oct. 21 to show cause why he shall not be punished for contempt in violating the injunction. He will have to admit the violating of the injunction and the court will then probably impose a fine with the directions that Mr. Young he kept in the custody of the marshal until the fine is paid.

STABS EMBALMER.

Friend of Dead Man Fatally Attacks the Undertaker.

Aberdeen, S. D., Oct. 14.—While preparing the body of an Italian for burial J. E. Schminnin of Ellendale, N. D., had an exciting experience in Ipswich, a town a few miles west of here.

Schminnin is assisting a local undertaker and responding to a call from Ipswich he lost no time getting there. Much of the dead man was remained in the room watching the undertaker, and when the latter was preparing the way for embalming by severing an artery in the body the spectator suddenly drew a knife and made a slash at Schminnin. The blade struck the undertaker's collar and narrowly missed piercing his neck. A struggle followed during which Schminnin picked up a hammer and gave the assailant several raps on the head, which soon put him to sleep.

When the man recovered he said he thought the undertaker was doing some crooked work.

Lo a Bankrupt.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—An Indian bearing two names, Isaac Bubble and Isaac Bubble, has presented to the United States court in this city a petition in voluntary bankruptcy. So far as can be remembered, this is the first time in the history of the federal court for this division of South Dakota that an Indian has presented such a petition. Buffalo or Keeble is a member of the Sisseton or Wahpeton tribes of Sioux Indians. In his petition he states that he is a farmer by occupation.

KILLS WIFE AND SELF.

Tries to Force Acid Down Woman's Throat, Then Shoots Her.

Columbus, O., Oct. 10.—Fred Butt, a mender, aged 36 years, went to the home of his wife and forcing his way into the house asked her if she was determined to push her suit for divorce. She said "Yes," and he grabbed her and tried to force carbolic acid into her mouth, burning the flesh about the lips. Failing in this he shot her dead, and then turned the weapon on himself and put a bullet in his body. Failing to kill himself he swallowed an ounce of carbolic acid and died at the hospital.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Game Preserve.

Two Harbors—There are now no less than 1,000 deer on Grand island, the Cleveland Cliffs Iron company's big game preserve in the northeastern end of Lake Superior. The island contains about 14,000 acres and possesses many bays. It is a natural breeding and feeding ground for deer and moose, as well as for grouse and other birds, while the bays and inland lakes are natural water for many kinds of fish.

There are eight full-grown moose and several calves. The elk, of which a few were brought to the island some years ago, are increasing rapidly. There are also some caribou, but these are rarely seen. A 24-strand wire fence encloses the northwestern portion of the island and prevents the animals escaping to the mainland. However, deer are occasionally seen swimming to and from the island, and it is probable that more come in than go out, as in the game preserve hunters do not worry them.

Nearly Killed.

Worthington—Marie Lawson, seven years old, and Clarence McClauskey, aged six, were run over by a loaded wagon on the street, and both are in a critical condition.

A teamster was hauling wood with two wagons, one being hitched to the other. The children were playing in the street and they ran in between the wagons and got on the tongue of the second wagon.

A jolt threw them to the ground. The wheels of the second wagon passed over the head of the little girl, inflicting a large scalp wound and fracturing the skull.

The wheel passed over the chest of the little boy, fracturing bones and injuring him internally.

The driver, who was on the front end of the first wagon, did not notice the children at all and only learned of the accident by being told after it had occurred.

Unlucky Thief.

Hokah—Chicken thieves who have been operating on a large scale in this county for several weeks lost the big end of their game recently. A great disturbance was raised one night by the chickens and dog on a farm near here, and the woman of the house, who was alone, ventured out with the shotgun to ascertain the cause of the noise.

No one was seen, but she fired the gun and returned to the house. Early next morning she found a pocketbook, and great was her surprise, on opening it, to discover $900 in cash.

Later in the day she was visited by "chicken buyers," who insisted upon seeing her chickens, even after being told that she had none for sale. But their principal business was to make a careful search of the spot where she had found the pocketbook. No questions were asked and her visitors soon departed.

Scarcity of Help.

Crookston—Owing to the great scarcity of men and teams, much of the road and ditch improvement work, for which ample appropriation has been made, has not been started, and probably will not be undertaken until next year. From $28,000 to $30,000 has been appropriated for road improvement and ditch construction, none of which has been used as yet. Every effort will be made on the part of the county commissioners to have this work started at the earliest possible date next spring and rushed to a finish. The contractors cannot be held responsible for not having begun operations, as they have not been able to get the labor necessary to carry on the work.

Killed by Electricity.

Duluth—John Meyers, an employee of the Great Northern Power company, while assisting in the repair of some machinery at the plant, touched a live wire and fell over dead.

The chief electrician of the company was present, as were four other electricians, but they were powerless to do anything to save the man.

He was a married man, about thirty years of age, and leaves several children. He had been employed at the plant but a few days.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Paul—Donald, the four-year-old son of William E. and Mary Ann Young, 1029 Argyle street, was drowned in a pool of water known as the "N. P. pond," in the vicinity of Orchard and Argyle streets, while he was bathing.

Duluth—Knealy, a Duluth bartender, reports the loss of $28 in bills. The loss occurred in a most unusual manner. He owns a poodle dog and says the animal ate the purse containing the money, leaving nothing except the brass rims.

Crookston—Sheriff Louis Gonyea says that the criminal work of Polk county has decreased one-half in the last two years, and that the county is freer of undesirable characters than it has been for many years.

Minneapolis—The North Side high school of Minneapolis defeated the Hamline university eleven by a score of 28 to 0. The high school boys tore up the varsity line in terrific style.

Winona—More than two-thirds of the enrollment at the Winona normal school this fall is composed of high school graduates.

St. Paul—Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Weyerhaeuser celebrated their golden wedding.

Minneapolis—The unidentified man found unconscious in an alley died at the city hospital.

St. Paul—Twenty-first annual meeting of Northern Conference of German M. E. Church opens.

St. Paul—The side shows and Coney island features at Phalen Park are to be abandoned.

Minneapolis—A pardon for Anna Ostroski Jarmuzek, the kidnapper, who was sentenced to the state reformatory on an indeterminate sentence is being sought by her friends.

St. Paul—Burglars got into the saloon of Neuman Bros., Third and St. Peter streets, and robbed the cash register of $8, two rings that had been left in pawn with the bartender, and several old coins.

Clinton—The Big Stone county fair, which terminated here was pronounced by many who visited it to be the best and most artistic display of grains, vegetables, fruits and art work that had been exhibited at any of the county fairs in this part of the country.

Moorhead—The Fargo Plumbing and Heating company began an action in the United States court in this city against the city to recover $4,510.64 for repairs and improvements on the boilers and other machinery in the municipal water and light station there.

Moorhead—The board of education has fixed the tax levy for school purposes for next year at $23,000, a little more than last year's taxes. With the school tax fixed, it is estimated that the tax rate for the year will be 38 mills, an increase of 10 mills over last year's tax rate.

St. Paul—Winners in the October state butter scoring contest were announced by the dairy and food commission. First prize was taken by Edwin Hed of Nicollet, with score of 96¼; second by J. O. Lokke, Hanska, score 95¾; third, H. H. Lunow, Morristown, score 95½.

Crookston—Since the publication in the state press of the fact that Supt. Casey of the schools of Polk county was having difficulty in securing teachers to fill the vacancies in the rural schools he has been deluged with letters of application for positions from all parts of the country.

Minneapolis—Another car of barley has broken the record for high prices in Minneapolis. E. A. Brown & Co. of the chamber of commerce received and sold a car which brought a price of $1,976.78. The previous high record was held by J. K. Elliott & Co. last week for selling a car of barley for $1,705.45.

St. Paul—There is a little hero at Bethesda hospital who will lose his left eye as the result of a gunshot wound, but although he knows he will lose his eye he will not tell the name of the boy who shot him, because it was only an accident. He is Rheinhart Hornemann, eight years old, and lives at Young America.

Minneapolis—Two young Finnish girls, recently arrived in town from the country, actually thought they were to be hanged for stealing a coat from a Minneapolis department store on Saturday, and the tears they shed yesterday morning in the police station and later in the court room bore evidence of their fright.

St. Cloud—Tuberculosis has been found in the dairy herd at the state reformatory. Dr. MacDonald of St. Paul, assistant state veterinarian and inspector of live stock, was called to this city and made a thorough inspection of the reformatory herd, with the result that some of the animals were found to be afflicted with tubercular disease. Only two were found to be in bad shape, and they were ordered killed.

La Crosse—Simultaneously with a vote to bond the village for $1,500 with which to build a new school building, the village of La Crescent, across the river, decided not to pay Contractor Blinston of this city several hundred dollars alleged to be due upon a remodeled building, and as a result suit has been started against the village. The action is another step in the school troubles which have racked the village board for several years.

Minneapolis—Minneapolis freight shipments during September of this year showed a decided gain over the month last year. The figures for last month show a total of 24,268 cars shipped, as compared to 20,923 for September, 1906. The receipts for September this year were 25,141 and for the same month last year 24,262 cars. Among the receipts were 123 cars of household property, as compared with 105 cars for the same month last year.

Ft. Snelling—The body of Nestor Thompson, a young soldier of Company M, 28th United States Infantry, was found under the Fort Snelling bridge, about fifty feet from the river bank by Art. Jackson, 348 Chestnut street, St. Paul.

Florence—The dedication of the remodeled Church of Opdals congregation took place here. A large number of people from other towns were present.

Swift—A. M. Landby plans to get congress to remove Kewatin dam and lower the Lake of the Woods five feet.

Great Caesar is dead. The curtain has fallen. Plaudits rend the air.

"Blifkins! Blifkins!" cry a hundred voices from the pit.

But Blifkins, the eminent actor who has essayed the title role, though much called, appears not. Comes, instead, the manager, in evening coat.

"Mr. Blifkins," says he, rubbing his hands together apologetically, "sends his compliments, and regrets to find his performance so realistic as to have rendered him unable to step out and make a speech so soon after dying."

"Bravo!" exclaimed sundry true friends of the drama. But the multitude are plainly displeased, considering themselves slighted.—Puck.

The Power of Habit.

Saint Peter—What are those fellows trying to do—dig up the streets?

Gabriel—Yes; I guess they don't know anything better—they are contractors from New York.—Judge.

NAUTICAL FINANCE.

Mrs. Wigs (superciliously)—My husband has a beautiful yacht. I don't suppose your husband can afford such a luxury?

Mrs. Digs—No; the best he can do is to hold the mortgage on the one your husband has.

"So Fade the Dreams of Man."

I dreamed I had a mansion
In the sky,
All marbled and set with jewels,
But, oh, my,
How your mansions fade and crumble,
And your castles take a tumble,
When the clock begins to rumble:
"Sun is high."
—Milwaukee Sentinel.

The Difference.

Bachelor—You spend most of your time at home since your marriage?

Benedict (rapturously)—Ah, yes! A pair of blue eyes keep me there. By the way, I haven't seen you of late. Where have you been?

Bachelor—At home. A pair of black eyes kept me there!

Twice Told Tales.

Knox—That fellow Gabbles makes me weary."

Blox—What's the trouble?

Knox—Every time he makes a statement he winds up with "or, in other words," then goes all over it again.—Chicago News.

Didn't Read Them.

A kind old gentleman, seeing a little boy carrying a lot of newspapers under his arm, said:

"Don't all those papers make you tired, my boy?"

"No; I don't read 'em," replied the lad.

At Dead of Night.

Mrs. Smith (from her room, as she hears a dull thud in the hall)—What are you doing, dear? Have you struck a light?"

Smith (in his stocking feet)—No! ——! ——! ——! It felt more like a chair.

Hair-Breadth Escape.

Barber (of the loquacious kind)—Hair's getting very thin on top, sir.

(No response.)

Barber (again)—I say it's getting very thin on top, sir.

The Victim.—Well, hurry up, then. I don't want to get bome bald.

Those Fashionable Terms.

"What's all that jargon we hear coming from the room where the sorority is meeting? Is it a new mystic ritual?"

"Naw. They're just discussing the features of a new gown one of them has."—Chicago Journal.

Risky.

Mrs. Goodkind—Just got a letter from my husband. He forgot to send his love.

Mrs. Chillicon-Kearney—Ah, well; that's too perishable a thing to send through the mails, you know.—Chicago Tribune.

Well Equipped.

Mrs. Naggs—Mrs. Chatterton certainly has a good nose for scandal.

Naggs—Yes; and a good mouth for putting it in circulation.—Chicago Daily News.

Reasonable Question.

"Thin arms should be washed twice a day with a fine lather of soap," says a beauty hint.

Why? Don't fat arms get dirty, too?—Chicago Journal.

The Way Out.

"Tell me," said the lovelorn youth, "what is the best way to find out what a woman thinks of you?"

"Marry her!" replied Peckham promptly.

Rachel, aged [illegible], wrote a composition on wild flowers in which she praised the arbutus, the liverwort, the spring beauty, the blood root, and all of the other blossoms of dell and dale. But she wrote on both sides of her sheet of paper, and when she asked her father, who was an editor, to publish her article, he called her attention to that fact.

"You've written on both sides of your paper," said he.

"Well," was the reply, "and don't you print on both sides of yours?"

ALL THINGS IN PROPORTION.

Invalid's Meal Evidently Had Not Increased Good Humor.

For many weeks the irritable merchant had been riveted to his bed by typhoid fever. Now he was convalescing. He clamored for something to eat, declaring that he was starving.

"To-morrow you may have something to eat," promised the doctor. The merchant realized that there would be a restraint to his appetite, yet he saw, in vision, a modest, steaming meal placed at his bedside.

"Here is your dinner," said the nurse next day, as she gave the glowering patient a spoonful of tapioca pudding, "and the doctor emphasizes that everything else you do must be in the same proportion."

Two hours later the nurse heard a frantic call from the bed chamber.

"Nurse," breathed the man heavily, "I want to do some reading, bring me a postage stamp."

HAVE CRAZE FOR FORMULA.

Smokers Follow Fashions in the Use of Tobacco.

"Make me up a package of tobacco according to the formula used by Edwin Booth," said the man with a southern accent. "That is the third man who has asked for that kind of tobacco to-day," said the dealer. "It is strange that people from remote parts of the country as well as New Yorkers make a fad of buying the same brand of tobacco that Booth smoked. And it isn't always the Booth mixture that they want. I have filed away the formulas for mixing the favorite tobacco of many famous persons. Smokers the country over have heard of this collection of recipes and one feature of every man's trip to New York is to try a pipeful of some big man's favorite tobacco. In most cases this special mixture is so strong that the nerves of the average smoker cannot stand it. He has to give up after a few pipefuls and go back to a popular mixture, but he has the satisfaction of having had the experience."—The New York Sun.

St. Louis rejoices in the sobriquet of Mound City from the fact that the original settlers found there many elevations which it is supposed were relics of that strange people who dwelt in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys and are known to modern times only as the Mound Builders. No adequate explanation has yet been found of their strange mode of leaving memorials of their existence. The limestone bluffs on which a part of St. Louis stands furnish a solid foundation for the business buildings.

Held Up.

"Stop!" shouted the man on the country road, holding up a warning hand. Muttering something about rural cops, the automobilist obeyed.

"Turn around and come back to town with me," said the stranger. "You were going at least 35 miles an hour."

"You're a constable, I suppose," said the automobilist, with a covert sneer, when they had reached the village.

"Me?" replied the passenger. "No, I'm a farmer and had to come into town when all the teams was busy. Nice growing weather? Thanks. Good-by."

Belling a Rat.

You have probably read or heard that the best way to rid a house of rats is to catch one and fasten a bell about its neck. A boy in Delaware tried the experiment two months ago. He was badly bitten in making the bell fast, but he turned the rat loose and expected the tinkling of that bell would have great results. It did have. In the first place, the rat who wore it was constantly on the move all night, and the tinkling bell kept the family awake, and in the next the sounds brought scores of new rats to the house. Instead of being afraid of the bell, they were charmed with the music. Had the boy tied a harmonica to another rat's tail, the rodents would have had a dance every night.

She Was Willing.

"Yes," says the husband, "I have consented to accept the nomination."

"I am so glad the party is beginning to recognize your merit," beams the wife.

"Now my dear," the husband continues, "you know that political affairs are not love feasts, by any means. You must expect to see me vilified and attacked in a scandalous manner. No doubt the opposition will try to dig up sensational rumors about me, and all that sort of thing, but you must not——"

"Well," she interrupts, "I am really glad of it. You have always been strangely silent about whether or not you ever were engaged to anyone before you met me."

A small boy, who had recently passed his fifth birthday was riding in a car with his mother, when they were asked the customary question: "How old is the boy?" After being told the correct age, which did not require a fare, the conductor passed on to the next person.

The boy sat quite still as if pondering over some question, and then, concluding that full information had not been given, called loudly to the conductor, then at the other end of the car: "And mother's 31!"

A Definition of Success.

How have the hypothetical scientists and the exponents of unbelief benefited themselves or humanity at large by sowing the seeds of doubt broadcast in the world? The real scientists do not fall in the category, for they are believers in the real sense of the word; they know too much, they have seen too many mysterious manifestations of the Divine creative power. Now, those who have disposed of the Bible and all evidences of inspiration, have written a great many books and some of them have won what the world at large lightly calls fame. According to the ordinary measures that are applied in such cases, they have been extremely successful, but real success means the benefit of humanity in some form or other. If no such benefits can be shown as the result of their labors, their success is not equal to that achieved by the direst poverty, and the deepest ignorance. — Joel Chandler, in Uncle Remus' Magazine.

WHEN A "HUNCH" HELD GOOD.

Chinese Laundry Ticket Suggested a Bet on "Wing Ting."

Key Spence, a well-known horseman of Mexico, Mo., won $1,000 at the Louisville, Ky., race meeting a short time ago as the result of a "hunch." Mr. Spence has a large breeding stable of "runners" near Mexico, and attends all the big racing events in the country. Not long since he was in Louisville and entered the betting ring to see what odds were being offered on the various entries. He found that Joaquin was the favorite at even money, and pulled his wallet from his pocket, intending to bet on that horse. His attention was attracted by something that fell from his wallet to the ground, and he stooped and picked it up. It was a Chinese laundry ticket. He looked at the "books" again and found that there was an entry with a Chinese name, Wing Ting, at ten to one. That settled it, for he considered he had received a "hunch" that could not be overlooked. Wing Ting won handily. Needless to say, those who backed the favorite considered Spence the seventh son of the seventh son.—Kansas City Star.

"BOO-HOO"

Shouts a Spanked Baby.

A Doctor of Divinity, now Editor of a well-known Religious paper, has written regarding the controversy between Collier's Weekly and the Religious Press of the Country and others, including ourselves. Also regarding suits for libel brought by Collier's against us for commenting upon its methods.

These are his sentiments, with some very emphatic words left out.

"The religious Press owes you a debt of gratitude for your courage in showing up Collier's Weekly as the "Yell-Oh Man." Would you care to use the inclosed article on the "Boo Hoo Baby" as the "Yell-Oh Man's successor?"

"A contemporary remarks that Collier's has finally run against a solid hickory "Post" and been damaged in its own estimation to the tune of $750,000.00.

"Here is a publication which has, in utmost disregard of the facts, spread broadcast damaging statements about the Religious Press and others and has suffered those false statements to go uncontradicted until, not satisfied after finding the Religious Press too quiet, and peaceful, to resent the insults, it makes the mistake of wandering into fresh field and butts its rattled head against this Post and all the World laughs. Even Christians smile, as the Post suddenly turns and gives it back a dose of its own medicine."

"It is a mistake to say all the World laughs. No cheery laugh comes from Collier's, but it cries and boo hoos like a spanked baby and wants $750,000.00 to soothe its tender, lacerated feelings."

"Thank Heaven it has at last struck a man with "back bone" enough to call a spade a "spade" and who believes in telling the whole truth without fear or favor."

Perhaps Collier's with its "utmost disregard for the facts," may say no such letter exists. Nevertheless it is on file in our office and is only one of a mass of letters and other data, newspaper comments, etc., denouncing the "yellow" methods of Collier's. This volume is so large that a man could not well go thru it under half a day's steady work. The letters come from various parts of America.

Usually a private controversy is not interesting to the public, but this is a public controversy.

Collier's has been using the "yellow" methods to attract attention to itself, but, jumping in the air, cracking heels together and yelling "Look at me" wouldn't suffice, so it started out on a "Holier Than Thou" attack on the Religious Press and on medicine.

We leave it to the public now, as we did when we first resented Collier's attacks, to say whether, in a craving for sensation and circulation, its attacks do not amount to a systematic mercenary hounding. We likewise leave it to the public to say whether Collier's, by its own policy and methods, has not made itself more ridiculous than any comment of ours could make it.

Does Collier's expect to regain any self-inflicted loss of prestige by demonstrating thru suits for damages, that it can be more artful in evading liability for libels than the humble but resentful victims of its defamation, or does it hope for starting a campaign of libel suits to silence the popular indignation, reproach and resentment which it has aroused.

Collier's can not dodge this public controversy by private law suits. It can not postpone the public judgment against it. That great jury, the Public, will hardly blame us for not waiting until we get a petit jury in a court room, before denouncing this prodigal detractor of institutions founded and fostered either by individuals or by the public, itself.

No announcements during our entire business career were ever made claiming "medicinal effects" for either Postum or Grape-Nuts. Medicinal effects are results obtained from the use of medicines.

Thousands of visitors go thru our entire works each month and see for themselves that Grape-Nuts contains absolutely nothing but wheat, barley and a little salt; Postum absolutely nothing but wheat and about ten per cent of New Orleans Molasses. The art of preparing these simple elements in a scientific manner to obtain the best food value and flavor, required some work and experience to acquire.

Now, when any publication goes far enough out of its way to attack us because our advertising is "medical," it simply offers a remarkable exhibition of ignorance or worse.

We do claim physiological or bodily results of favorable character following the adoption of our suggestions regarding the discontinuance of coffee and foods which may not be keeping the individual in good health. We have no advice to offer the perfectly healthful person. His or her health is evidence in itself that the beverages and foods used exactly fit that person. Therefore, why change?

But to the man or woman who is ailing, we have something to say as a result of an unusually wide experience in food and the result of proper feeding.

In the palpably ignorant attack on us in Collier's, appeared this statement,—"One widely circulated paragraph labors to induce the impression that Grape-Nuts will obviate the necessity of an operation in appendicitis. This is lying and potentially deadly lying."

In reply to this exhibition of—well let the reader name it, the Postum Co., says:

Let it be understood that appendicitis results from long continued disturbance in the intestines, caused primarily by undigested starchy food, such as white bread, potatoes, rice, partly cooked cereals and such.

Starchy food is not digested in the upper stomach but passes on into the duodenum, or lower stomach and intestines, where, in a healthy individual, the transformation of the starch into a form of sugar is completed and then the food absorbed by the blood.

But if the powers of digestion are weakened, a part of the starchy food will lie in the warmth and moisture of the body and decay, generating gases and irritating the mucous surfaces until under such conditions the whole lower part of the alimentary canal, including the colon and the appendix, becomes involved. Disease sets up and at times takes the form known as appendicitis.

When the symptoms of the trouble make their appearance, would it not be good, practical, common sense, to discontinue the starchy food which is causing the trouble and take a food in which the starch has been transformed into a form of sugar in the process of manufacture?

This is identically the same form of sugar found in the human body after starch has been perfectly digested.

Now, human food is made up very largely of starch and is required by the body for energy and warmth. Naturally, therefore, its use should be continued, if possible, and for the reasons given above it is made possible in the manufacture of Grape-Nuts.

In connection with this change of food to bring relief from physical disturbances, we have suggested washing out the intestines to get rid of the immediate cause of the disturbance.

Naturally, there are cases where the disease has lain dormant and the abuse continued too long, until apparently only the knife will avail. But it is a well-established fact among the best physicians who are acquainted with the details above recited, that preventative measures are far and away the best.

Are we to be condemned for suggesting a way to prevent disease by following natural methods and for perfecting a food that contains no "medicine" and produces no "medicinal effects" but which has guided literally thousands of persons from sickness to health? We have received during the years past upwards of 25,000 letters from people who have been either helped or made entirely well by following our suggestions, and they are simple.

If coffee disagrees and causes any of the ailments common to some coffee users quit it and take on Postum.

If white bread, potatoes, rice and other starch foods make trouble, quit and use Grape-Nuts food which is largely predigested and will digest, nourish and strengthen, when other forms of food do not. It's just plain old common sense.

"There's a Reason for Postum and Grape-Nuts.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Judging by the price being paid for fat hogs, which is about 6 cents a pound, and the price of pork, from 12 ½ to 18 cents a pound, some one must be making more money "hoging it" than the farmers who raise the hogs.

The County Commissioners are summoned to meet tomorrow to "act" on the county seat removal petition. When they finish this job they had ought to be able to get a job in a theatrical company, if there is any demand for "queer actors."

Thief River Falls News: A good many of the papers are working overtime trying to tell the people who will be next governor of Minnesota. He will have to be a man who stands next to the people, and will work for certain reforms demanded. The voters in this state are getting wise and can't be fooled.

Greenbush Journal: If the reader wants to settle in a wide-awake community, all he has to do is to look at the local news papers. A wide a wake, well supported home newspaper is always associated with good schools, churches, active business, and and intelligent people. It never fails. No business man or pioneer in any community makes any better investment than the support of a home newspaper.

St. Hilare Spectator: It is reported that John D. Rockefeller is coming to Minnesota to have a surgical operation at Rochester. More skilled surgeons than the Mayo brothers no where to be found on either continent, but an interesting line of speculation is suggested by the prospect of the operation. The Mayos are reported to fix their fees in meanure by the ability of the patient to pay—with due regard, of course, for the nature of the operation. What will Mr. Rockefeller pay?

The strength and extent of the movement in favor of Secretary Taft as the successor to President Roosevelt is becoming a matter for searious discussion everywhere. Taft is generally accepted as the choice of the president, and the believers in his policies are lining up behind him with a quiet vigor that mean something. The country believes in Roosevelt, so thonrly that millions of voters will accept his judgement as to his successor without hesitation.

Beltrami County will have two exlections within three months, of the two murders, Munn and Mathison. The date of exlection is to be set by governor Johnson and it is to be hoped that he will not show them any mercy, as both murders were cold blooded and without justification. The claim made by Mathieson that the shooting of Johnson was accidental is not entitled to momentis consideration, for if it was an accident; why did he not notify the neighbors, instead of stripping the body and sinking it in Gull Lake? Munn has nothing to say in his defense that would justify him in shooting Franklin down in cold blood, and we are not flush on the jury for Beltrami, yet it seems to be about time to enforce the extream penalty of the law in Beltrami County, as a warning to others, that might be tempted to commit crime.

BIG CROPS UP THIS WAY.

Peter Hodgen took a load of wheat to Thief River Falls last Saturday, which brought him a little over $60., at the rate of $1.5 cents per bushel, and he has about eighteen hundred bushels of the same kind of wheat left. Who says the Eleven Towns is not a good wheat country? Wait to hear the news from Highlanding when we thrash.

A King Examiner.

Sir John Bolder was dearly loved by the students when he was professor of music at Oxford. "As an examiner he was most considerate," said one who studied under him, "and would always do his best to get you 'through.' I remember his asking me a paper in a viva voce examination. He waited patiently for the answer, but, partly through my nervousness no doubt, I could not think of it. At length he exclaimed testily, 'Dear me, how stuffy this room is, to be sure,' and he went and began tugging at the ventilator cord. It was quite two minutes before he got the thing open, and by the time he had sat down again and rearranged his gown I had the answer ready. Comparing notes later in the day with a man who was examined quite soon after me, I told him how the ventilator had served me. 'How remarkable!' he replied. 'Why, when I was stuck he said, 'How extraordinary dreamy this place is,' and spent quite two minutes in shutting the ventilator'"—Manchester Guardian.

The Razor in Shakespeare.

"And he told her all, which, and said nate her, there hath not come a razor upon mine head, for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb; if I be shaven, then my strength will go from me, and I shall become weak and be like other men."—Judges xvi. 17.

Hair on man or brute is a step of strength. He who desires to keep at a safe distance from dentists, tet him keep also at a good distance from the knife of the barber. To shave is a sort against nature. Provoke nature, and in return nature will provoke you.

Said Daniel Webster: "——the razor! It has taught me to curse. It has cost me more time and more trouble than all my speeches."

Rufus Choate, the lawyer, called the razor an instrument invented by Lucifer to fill up hell with barristers.

Edward Everett never used profane language, but before shaving he would take time to give vent to all sorts of French barbarisms.

Jordan Water.

There is a general impression, that the Jordan water which is used at royal baptisms is taken from the sacred stream, put into a bottle, hermetically sealed and left untouched until the bottle is opened by the officiating priest. As a matter of fact, the water which flows out of the lake of Galilee and descends a rocky gorge to a level far below that of the Mediterranean is full of organic substances. If a bottle be filled with the water and kept tightly corked for a few days it turns perfectly black and offers to the nostrils all the odors of the tropics. The precaution is therefore taken of boiling the water and straining it before it is sealed up, and this is why the baptismal water at royal ceremonies possesses the crystal clearness which one notices on these ceremonial occasions.—Modern Society.

A Two Edged Cure.

A story is told of the wonderful cure from deafness of a patient who was recommended to hear a Wagner opera and to sit near the orchestra by the trombones. The physician accompanied his patient and sat beside him. Suddenly, while the crash of the instrumental was at its loudest, the deaf man found he could hear. "Doctor," he almost shrieked, "I can hear!" The doctor gave no sign that he noticed the remark. "I tell you, doctor," repeated the patient in ecstasy, "you have saved me! I have recovered my hearing." But the physician was silent. He had become deaf himself.—Harper's Weekly.

A Disguised Pastor.

A French Protestant pastor was the guest of a Scottish preacher at a parish. One morning happened hurried call served at breakfast. The French pastor asked the meaning of "cappit." His host replied that it meant "to provoke." On taking his leave next day the French pastor, wishing his host's child, said, "May the Lord dapper you up good friend."

Why They Are So Clean.

"How is it that French children are so tidy?" asked a foreigner in Paris inquire. Because from the time they understand—in elementary sentence it is dinned into them that it is very wrong to run fast, to fall or to dirty their dresses in any way, and, above all, it is awful to muss their hair. In ordinary rooms in the Bois is where two children arrive in their auto accompanied by a nurse and governess. They (the children) are dressed in light silk dresses and wear long white gloves. They start to play ball. Every time the ball touches the ground, which happens once in awhile, the nurse rushes up and wipes every bit of sand very carefully off the ball before it is handed back to the children. Is it a wonder that their long gloves are clean?—New York Post.

A General Utility Nag.

A certain stockbroker once went to a horsedealer and tried to pick up a general utility nag. He explained that he was a volunteer and wanted a nice, quiet, good looking charger, which could be driven by his wife in a dog cart and would not object on occasion to being ridden up to a lawn mower. The dealer listened to him with rapt attention and finally asked to inspect hands. "Would you want him to wait at table at all, sir?"—Grand Magazine.

Taking Mother's Place.

Thoughtfulness, or the deserted eggs and the conscientious chick.—Tatler.

A Heretic.

Very few persons exalt themselves nobly in their maiden speech. At a wedding feast recently the bridegroom was called upon, as usual, to respond to the given toast, in spite of the fact that he had previously pledged to be excused. Blushing to the roots of his hair, he rose to his feet. He intended to imply that he was unprepared for speech making, but, unfortunately, placed his hand upon the bride's shoulder and looked down at her as he stammered out his opening (and concluding) words:

"I'm—I'm—nothing has been thrust upon me."—London Tit-Bits.

Oddities of Sight.

The two eyes really see two objects. If the two forefingers be held, one at the distance of one foot, the other two feet in front of the eyes and the former be looked at, two phantoms of the latter will be observed, one on each side. If the latter be regarded two phantoms of the nearer finger will be observed mounting guard, one on each side.

Good and Evil.

Accustom yourself to submit on every occasion to a small present evil to obtain a greater distant good. This will give decision, tone and energy to the mind, which, thus disciplined will soon be victory from defeat and honor from repulse.—Colton.

Gallant.

"That pen will never come to perfection," remarked a young woman waiting through a garden with Sydney Smith.

"Then let me lead perfection to the pen," said he gallantly offering her his arm.

A Difficult Locke.

Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.—George Washington.

Caught the Policeman.

All the countryside is laughing at an experience of the police at Lough Neagh, Ireland. An intercounty cockfight was arranged between birds from the boundary and Ashton and was held on one of the islands in the lough. The police got wind of it and arrived, but only caught the kite. All the available boats had been pressed into use by the spectators, and the police, after trying vainly to secure transportation to the island, determined to swim for it. Just as they arrived the fight ended, and every boat put off for the mainland again. The police had a swim back for their pains, and when they reached the mainland they found that their clothing, over which they had negiected to take a guard, had disappeared. They had a few table mats in fetpiice underclothes to the nearest barracks, where they were put to bed until new uniforms could be procured.—Liverpool Mercury.

Brides Priced.

To us it seems a curious custom which on the part of our ancestors of the eighteenth century that in their marriage announcements they should so often connect with the brides. Here are two cases in point: "Mr. James Coutts of Jeffry's Square, to Miss ——, daughter of Knightsbridge, £20,000." "W. Smith, gentleman of the 2d Troop of Horse Guards, to Miss Ann Gardiner, a maiden lady, aged, 'tis said, near 70, with a fortune of £20,000."—Chambers' Journal.

Out of the Public.

When I was a very little boy, writes Sir William Gregory in his autobiography, my grandfather, who was then undersecretary for Ireland, took me to his chief secretary's room in Dublin Castle and formally introduced me to Lord Melbourne.

After I had been with him for some little time he said, "Now, my boy, is there anything here you would like?"

I answered, after pondering for a very long time, as seems my way, "Yes, I should like to have that little boy in livery who is standing by the fire." (The little boy was the son of the housekeeper, who, as was the custom in those days, was always to be got out of the public as much as you can.—Harper's Weekly.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing color. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon

Things are very quite about a daily mail service on this rout at present, and it is to be hoped the matter will be revived next spring, as there is no particular call for a daily at the present time. Three times a week with regular service and no trips missed will do us for the present, thank you uncle Samual.

Mail carrier C. L. Clark had a serious runaway accident on Friday last. He left his team to chase his pipe home, that had strayed, when they took fright and ran. They did not run more than 40 rods when one of them fell and broke her ankle so bad that it was necessary to shoot her, to end her sufferings. It is a serious loss to Mr. Clark, as it breakes up his mail team.

If we should have a red hot county seat scrap this winter it would help warm up the cold weather some. When the flight comes, the line up should be so as to make it about even between the two towns, than it would be interesting. Thief River Falls has a little the advantage as to numbers but they have to get 60 to the other fellows 40 so this will make it about even with Red Lake Falls a little the best of it, should the line up be about the same as last fall.

A TERRIABLE TALE.

CURING A WILL

By Margaret Johnson

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Sylvia had stayed on after the early tea to help Mrs. Webster wash up and put away the dishes. She was very fond of her Aunt Lucy, as she called her, though she was not her own aunt, but a cousin of her mother—a blood relation, who stood now at the sink, patiently, while Sylvia, her slender waist girt about with a big apron, went lightly to and fro across the kitchen, and little Jane paused and sang to herself by the window, her dark head and scarlet dress vivid in the fading light.

"You ought to have a cupboard in the dining-room for these pretty cups, Aunt Lucy," said Sylvia, stopping for a moment in her work to look at the piece of old china in her hand.

"Yes," said her aunt; "so I've told the squire. But he says we've always got to keep 'em there. You know how it is with your Uncle Lemuel. If he says he'll, he will, and if he says he won't, he won't."

"Yes?" said Sylvia, reflectively. She stood with her pretty head on one side, forgetting to wipe the cup.

"It's just that way about the pump," Mrs. Webster went on, in her thin, gentle voice. "There 'tis, up on top o' the hill, and the path steep and stony, and slipp'ry in winter, and not one of the neighbors but what has got a pump in the kitchen now. But the squire says his folks always got along with the well up there, and what was good enough for them's good enough for us, and I don't believe anything in the world would induce him to put a pump in the house. 'Tain't that he cares. It's just that will of his. Once he's set his foot down, he won't budge.

"Of course, the boys bring the water sometimes; but Lem's away so much, and Luke, he's really too small. There's little Jane," she went on proudly, nodding toward the child. "She's got it, too. Just like her father, for all the world. Set's an name for it. Ouco she gets her mind on a thing, you can't move her any more'n you could the side o' the house. Queer how it runs in the family. The squire got it right from his father, and now he's handed it down to little Jane, straight's a die."

A few weeks later Sylvia, coming to the house one afternoon with a little package carefully wrapped up in her hand, was met at the kitchen door by Luke.

"Good morning, Luke!" she said, brightly. "Where's your mother? Hush! Don't say anything! It's her birthday, you know, and I've brought her—"

She stopped, seeing that the boy's face was grave, his manner full of an unwonted and hesitating solemnity.

"What is it?" she asked quickly. "Jane," said the boy. "She's worse —lots worse. I—I guess she's goin' to die!"

"Oh—no!" cried Sylvia. "Why, she was better—Lem said so!"

"She's worse," he repeated stubbornly, his boyish face working. "I guess she's goin' to die."

"Sylvia!" called Mrs. Webster, softly, from the stairs. "Is that you? Wait—I'm coming down." Her thin face was worn and white with anxiety. "She was better," she said, dropping down at the foot of the stairs. "You fever's left her, and the pain—but now she's took it into her head she won't take her medicine nor her food. Not like when we got past her lips—we daren't force her—and we've coaxed and argued, and the doctor he's tried, and—it's no use.

"I've just sent her father in." Mrs. Webster went on, drearily. "I thought maybe he might be able to do something with her. But I don't know —I don't know!"

"May I go up?" asked Sylvia. She did not wait to take off her shawl, but ran lightly up the stairs, and slipped into the room just before the squire came in with his heavy, cautious tread over the creaking floor.

Little Jane lay quietly on her pillow, her small white face white as itself, framed by her tangled black hair, her dark eyes open, wide and watchful. She did not move as her father bent over her. His rugged old face was drawn and tremulous.

Instantly the pale lips were compressed in a set, unchildlike look of determination.

"—can't!" she said, in a low whisper.

Sylvia put her hand to her own. The parcel which she still held in her lap rolled off and fell to the floor. As she stooped to pick it up, something occurred to her. Her face brightened.

"Jane, dear," she said, softly and cheerily. "Look! I have something pretty to show you. Do you know what day it is? No? Why, it is mother's birthday! You forgot, didn't you? And mother was so busy taking care of you that she forgot, too. Wouldn't it be nice if we could give her a surprise, Jane—you and I and father!"

A little color came into the child's face.

"What?" she asked, faintly. "What could we?"

"Here's mine. I've made a pincushion," Sylvia undid her parcel slowly, and held up the cushion with its gay ribbons before Jane's wistful eyes. They brightened still more.

"It's pretty; I like it!" she said, with a low laugh of pleasure.

The squire caught Sylvia's look as she glanced toward him, and chuckled to himself.

"She's a cute one—Sylvy!" he muttered under his breath. "She c'n manage if anyone can!"

"And—what can you do?" Sylvia went on, gayly. "You can't make her anything, because you're sick. But—oh, suppose you were to eat up all your bread and milk before she comes upstairs! Wouldn't that be a surprise for her!"

"I said I wouldn't, and I can't!" she said in her little weak hat resolute voice, shutting her eyes upon the tempting cushion.

"And father," Sylvia went on, not noticing, "what do you think he could do—to please mother? I know something—something that she wants over and over so much. He could put a pump in the kitchen for her! Wouldn't that be a surprise for her!"

"Wh—what!" gasped the squire, gripping the arms of his chair, and half rising in his amazement.

"He said he wouldn't, and he won't!" murmured Jane, in a cold little wintry pattering of her pale lips.

"Oh, yes, he will," said Sylvia, lightly and confidently. "To please mother on her birthday. Just because he thought he didn't want to do it once —he wouldn't stop for that! Why, he can change his mind, can't he?"

The squire cleared his throat sterntoriously, crossed and uncrossed his legs, and finally got up and walked to the window, running his fingers through his gray hair till it stood on end in a confusion that matched the chaos of his thoughts.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," Sylvia went on, gayly. "You can do what father can, can't you? If he says he'll put the pump in, you'll eat up your bowl of bread and milk, and then we'll have two pleasant surprises for mother. Shall we, Jane—will you?"

She bent closer to the child, who responded to the magnetism of her merry eyes with a feeble laugh of wonder and assent.

"Come, Uncle Lemuel!" cried the girl. "You'll do it, won't you?"

"If he says he will, he will, and if he says he won't—"

Little Jane's weak voice, with its old note of whimsical amusement, chanted the familiar words, hoarsely, unconsciously. Its weakness and hoarseness went to the squire's stubborn old heart. He wavered under Sylvia's compelling glance.

"Eh!" said the squire, suddenly. "Why, yes—yes, of course I'll do it! Yes, to be sure!"

"Yes, to be sure he'll do it!" repeated Sylvia, smiling, and taking the medicine glass from the table. Jane turned her head on the pillow with a soft sigh. Her tense little body seemed to relax all over, and her lips opened obediently as Sylvia held the spoonful of medicine to them.

"Now a little bread and milk," said the girl, softly. "You shall look at the cushion while you eat it. And won't mother be pleased!"

Two or three nights later, he and his wife sat together silently in the sitting-room after tea when Sylvia came. Luke was upstairs playing with little Jane, who was sitting up in bed and getting well fast.

"Uncle Lemuel," said Sylvia, "I'm afraid I was naughty the other day—about the pump—maybe. But it was all just for little Jane's sake, you know. It flashed over me all at once that she could do what you did—she's such a little monkey for imitating—and she loves you so; and it was really the only way to manage her just then. But of course you needn't do it, you know—unless you want to!"

"Of course not!" said the squire, explosively; "certainly not! When I say a thing, I stick to it. You mean well, Sylvy, and I won't say as you were wrong, s'long's it's turned out the way it has, but I give my word, you understand, about that matter, and that's all." His voice fell at little, and he stopped abruptly.

"But, Uncle Lemuel!" cried Sylvia. He put her aside with his hand.

"To little Jane," he finished, still looking at his wife. "I give my word to little Jane, and that's all there is about it. Long, which side the kitchen shall we, would you, rather her that pump?"

Attractive Gowns

HOME-DRESS FOR A MATRON

A cool dress for house wear, and one that will meet with the approval of most ladies, is made in fine navy-blue alapaca; this skirt which is cut in two pieces, should be lined with silkette or some thin firm lining that will slip easily and not add to the weight; each side the foot of seam are buttons with loops of cord, then down each side is a band of velvet on the cross made up on muslin.

The bodice has a vest of tucked silk muslin and rows of insertion; two straps of velvet trim each side, and a wide fold which stands out over the shoulder is trimmed with buttons and short loops. The over-sleeve and cuff are also trimmed with velvet, cord loops, and buttons.

Material required: Eight yards alpaca 46 inches wide, one and one-half yards velvet on the cross, three and one-half dozen buttons, five and one-half yards skirt lining, two and one-half yards bodice lining.

A SIMPLE SERGE COSTUME

The autumn gown is now receiving attention, and many simple, yet beautiful ones, are shown, such as the one illustrated here. This is in light heliotrope fine serge, trimmed with rows of cashmere silk. The skirt has a seam up center front and back; it is cut walking length, and has an interfacing of canvas at the foot, through which several rows of machine stitching are worked. The silk chine-stitching are shown the stitching; buttons and loops of cord form a further trimming.

The coarse is made with a vest of embroidered silk hooking invisibly in front; the edges are bound with the silk, the collar and cuffs being embroidered.

Hat of light felt trimmed with anemones and ribbon.

Materiel required for the costume: Nine and one-half yards 46 inches wide, two yards silk on the cross, one dozen buttons.

THE NEW WINTER FABRICS

Imported Materials More Exquisite in Color and Texture Than They Ever Were Before.

Materials brought over by the dress makers who have returned from their busy pilgrimages to Paris are, if possible, softer, more lustrous, more exquisite in color and texture than ever.

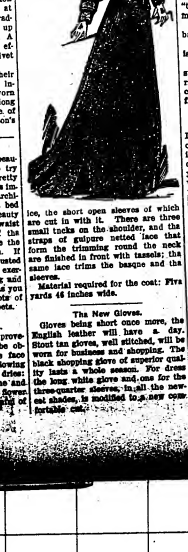
The velvets in particular invite attention and admiration. Some of the velvets are so wonderfully supple and light of weight that they seem hardly more bulky than the beavier crapes de chine and in lustre and coloringe they are marvelously beautiful. Many fancy velvets show stripes and checks, but the one tone effects in plaid or shaded weavings are particularly smart and there seems no doubt that velvets will have an unusually successful season.

A voile de sole in a delicious shade of new plak has a deep skirt border and narrower border for color trimming a trailing vine and blossom design of velvet exactly matching the voile in color.

A delicate lavender bine chiffon sprinkled with tiny velvet dots at wide intervals is bordered by graduated velvet dots ranging in size up to the diameter of a silver dollar. A jade green crepe de chine has an effective scroll border design of velvet of the same tone.

Sheer materials are to hold their own throughout the winter and indeed are to be more than ever worn for dayitime purposes under the long separate coats which will be one of the most pronounced of the season's modes.

Road to Beauty.



There is just one royal road to beauty, and that is good health. To try to mold a beautiful figure and a pretty face out of an unhealthy body is as impossible as it would be for an architect to build his foundation on a bed of sand. Before you try those special exercises to reduce the hips and waist and to fill out the hollows of the neck stop and think if you have the physical foundations to build on. If you find you are nnaemic, exhausted and tired, postpone the beauty exercises and pass your time resting and getting strong. Sleep as much as you can, take long walks, drink lots of water, and do not eat many sweets.

Improving the Complexion.

In many cases a wonderful improvement in the complexion may be obtained by merely washing the face several times a day with the following lotion, leaving it on until it dries: Take half an ounce of glycerine and mix with it half a pint of orange flower water. To this add a tablespoonful of powdered borax.

A DAINTY ALAPACA COSTUME

Type of Simpla and Attractive Gown That is Much in Vogue for Autumn Wear.

Alpaca is being much used this season for seaside costumes; it is a durable fabric that washes well and does not crease easily. Here we have a plain long skirt in cream alpaca with a blouse of washing silk; the feature of the costume is the coat, which has a long full basque and a blouse bodice, the short open sleeves of which are cut in with it. There are three rows of small tucks on the shoulder, and the straps of guipure netted lace that form the trimming round the neck are finished in front with tassels; the same lace trims the basque and the sleeves.

Material required for the coat: Five yards 46 inches wide.

The New Gloves.

Gloves being short once more, the English leather will have a day. Stout tan gloves, well stitched, will be worn for business and shopping. The black shopping glove of superior quality lasts a whole season. For dress the long white glove and one for the three-quarter sleeves, in all the new tint shades, is modified to a new open or fortable cut.

QUALITIES OF WIT AND HUMOR

Alike, Yet in Many Ways Fundamentally Different.

Wit and humor are such elemental fundamental things that it has always been found difficult to analyze them, says a writer in The Atlantic. Upon some points, however, those who have essayed this puzzling task agree, for they all hold that wit is an intellectual, humor an emotional, quality; that wit is a perception of resemblance, and humor a perception of contrast, or discrepancy, of incongruity. The incongruity is that which arises between the ideal and the fact, between theory and practice, between promise and performance; and perhaps it might be added that it is always or almost always a moral incongruity. In the case both of wit and humor there is also a pleasurable surprise, a gentle shock, which accompanies one perception of the hitherto unsuspected resemblance or incongruity.

A New England farmer was once describing in the presence of a very humane person the great age and debility of a horse that he formerly owned and used. "You ought to have killed him," interrupted the humane person indignantly. "Well," drawled the farmer "we did —almost."

If you would see a horse strapped, hooted, bruised and goaded to the limit, you must seek such a track as you see at the old-time country fair. Here come an awkward four-hitch gray which never went under 2:50 in his life. He is bobbled and checked and goggled, and hitched up sidewise, lengthwise and crosswise until there is more harness than horse. You wonder how his driver ever got him into the rigging, and how he will get him out again without cutting him free with a jackknife. A farmer with a gray beard and twinkling eye observes to his neighbor:

"Last time John Martin had that plug out on the road I told him he had the old critter overloaded with fast-dicks-he-injured. Them straps that was ca'lated to hoist up his knees must be pulled too tight and critter was yanked clean off the ground. Saw It Come Out of a Cow.

A little city boy and his sister Dorothy were taken to the country for the first time.

The two children were happy as the day was long. In the late afternoon they watched the cows come home, heard with delight the tinkling cow-bells, and in the little boy even went in the barne to see the milking done.

At supper, just as Dorothy was lifting her glass to her rosy lips, the boy cried out:

"Oh, Dorothy, don't! You mustn't drink that milk. It's not fit to drink. It came out of a cow. I saw it!"

Excusable.

"I suppose," remarked the coy widow, "that you are an advocate of early marriages!"

"Oh, yes, I am," replied the scanty haired bachelor.

"Then," continued the c. w., "why is it you are still a bachelor?"

"That's another matter," answered the Bachelor. "The only marriages I believe in are early ones, because there is some excuse for youthful follies."—Chicago News.

TEN YEARS OF PAIN.

Unable to Do Even Housework Because of Kidney Troubles.

Mrs. Margaret Emmerich, of Clinton St., Napoleon, O., says: "For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from kidney troubles. My back pained me terribly. Every turn or move caused sharp, shooting pains. My weight was poor, dark spots appeared before me, and I had dizzy spells. For ten years I could not do housework, and for two years did not get out of the house. The Kidney secretions were irregular, and doctors were not helping me. Doan's Kidney Pills brought me quick relief, and finally cured me. They saved my life."

Surely Time for Hubby to Do a Lively Sidestep.

Mrs. Wilson's husband was often obliged to go to New York on business, and frequently did not reach his home until the arrival of the midnight train. Mrs. Wilson had been in the habit of sleeping peacefully at these times without fear, but a number of burglaries in the neighborhood during one of her husband's trips to New York had disturbed her calm.

On the night of his return Mr. Wilson was stealing carefully up the front stairs, as was his wont on such occasions, so that his wife would not be wakened, when he heard her voice, high and strained:

"I don't know whether you are my husband or a burglar," came the excited tones, "but I am going to be on the safe side and shoot, so if you are Henry you'd better get out of the way."—Youth's Companion.

"Really," said the witness, speaking before the lawyer for the defense had time to interpose objection, "it was so long ago I can't recall exactly, what I thought of it."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Cats as Plague Preventive.

An Italian correspondent of the North China Daily News writes: "The newspapers have latterly been full of all sorts of suggestions for the stamping out of plague. For instance, never kill rats; if you do the fleas for which rats are driven to feed on you. Also, compel each householder to keep cats. In fact, let the cat flourish as it did in ancient Egypt be revived in India. Plenty of cats, no rats."

WOOED IN AN AUTO

LOVELY SINGER WHO IS TO WED IN GERMANY.

Maria Brodgynski, Once a Favorite of the Czar, Driven From Russia, Finds Romance in America.

Boston.—Wooed and won on a sight-seeing automobile away out in Seattle, Washington, Maria Sophia Brodgynski has just set sail for this city, bound for the continent. In Dresden, Germany, she will meet the man who carries her heart with him, a heart which now belongs to him because he could sing and sing well. So can she, and their courting was carried on in songs from a famous opera while the announcer on the auto was telling about the points of interest in the far-off northwestern city.

Early in the life of the soon-to-be bride, she thrived and prospered in the mixed atmosphere of coevest seclusion and the brilliant gayeties of the Austrian court. Before she had reached her 18th year, she had to flee from her native land and go to Russia because of the emperor's displeasure due to the fact that two of his nobleman had fought a duel over the right to seek her hand in marriage.

Hardly had she entered Russia, however, when her mother, who left Austria with her, fell in love with the Grand Duke Boris. This escapade of the older Brodgynski lift the younger woman practically alone, but her charm of manner and excellence of taste and judgment concerning matters of coert, soon won her a way into the graces of the alite of the Czar's land.

Soon a favorite with the czar, Miss Brodgynski was one of the honored guests at the palace. She advanced with the leaders of that mighty court; she listened to words of admiration from the lips of Nicholas; she accepted and flattered above all the others until she aroused the envy and jealousy of the noblewomen.

After a somewhat brief career as a leader among the social leaders at St. Petersburg, the attention of the czar shifted to some other favorite and Russia was no longer that home for which she was pleased. She was accused of plotting against the life of the emperor and he listened to her accusers, and to escape deportation to Siberia she fled to London. There thrown on her own resources she joined a comic opera company, her charming voice winning her great favor.

After singing there for three seasons she came to America, and at last found herself at Seattle whither she had gone in search of friends, and that is where her romance began.

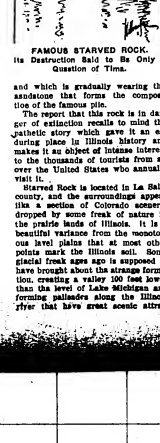
MISS SOPHIA BRODGYNSKI

The lucky man in the case is Lionel Harrison, or Harry Lyon, as he is better known to the people of Seattle, where he worked as clerk in a leading hotel, and sang when opportunity offered. But no one dreamed that Harrison spent his winters in Germany studying the leggiage and grand opers at Bayreuth, while during the summers prior to this he traveled with light opera companies and saved every peeey he could to help defray the expenses lecidect to his life work on the stage.

He had accepted an engagement this summer with a company at a fair salary, as usual. But the money was not for them evidently, and the "show closed." Lyon settled in Seattle with two cents. He began to look for a job and landed behind a hotel desk, while he hired a room at another and cheaper one and kept his voice flexible by daily work at the parlor piano.

One day he started out to took at Seattle as the big auto. He sat on the back seat. Shortly after a bewitching type of brunette was given a place at his side. She looked curiously at him and finally asked if he did not remember her.

Lyon leaned forward and said:



"I em sure thet I do remember you! You saeg with me in 'Convent Garden, London, in 'The Bohemian Girl,' did you not?"

That settled it. The most vociferous notes from the megaphone failed to arouse them. The spieler was disgusted and prossoused them "deaf, dumb and blind." They saw little of Seattle, but much of each other, and when Lyon left the hotel recently for the east, Maria had preceded him by a week. They will meet in Dresden, Germany.

STARVED ROCK DOOMED.

Famous Pile on the Illinois River Slowly Disintegrating.

Utica, Ill.—Starved Rock, considered by many the most beautiful scenic resort in Illinois, and rich in historical interest, is said to be slowly disintegrating, due to the action of the Illinois river, which flows at its base its Destruction Said to Be Only a Question of Time.

FAMOUS STARVED ROCK.

and which is gradually wearing the sandstone that forms the composition of the famous bluff.

The report that this rock is in danger of extinction recalls to mind the Isabella story which gave it an era during place in Illinois history and makes it an object of intense interest to the thousands of tourists from all over the United States who annually visit it.

Starved Rock is located in La Salle county, and the surroundings appear like a section of Colorado scenery, dropped by some freak of nature in the prairie lands of Illinois. It is a beautiful variance from the monotonous level plains that for most other points mark the Illinois soil. Some glacial freak ages ago is supposed to have brought about the strange formation, creating a valley 100 feet lower than the level of Lake Michigan and forming palisades along the Illinois river that have great scenic attractiveness. The rock rises abruptly from the water to a height of 157 feet, and from all sides presents a bold and rugged appearance.

About the year 1770 a series of melancholy incidents occurred in the territory of the Illini tribe of Indians, the memories of which gave to the rock its name. Its beauty is unchecked from that which marked it when it was first seen by white men, Marquette and Joliet, the famous French explorers, in 1673. Here is found in miniature, the wonder work of water and stone. There are hidden, rocky-walled lairs decorated with ferns and lichens, with some lone cedar or pine, standing lofty on an inaccessible, rocky ledge.

Marquette and Joliet landed opposite the rock on the plain upon which the great Indian village of the Illini was situated. In 1681, La Salle, who was given the right to trade with the Indians by Louis XIV., erected a fort upon the rock, calling it Fort St. Louis. This fort was later destroyed.

The final tragedy, which gave the rock its name was caused by the murder of Pontiac, the great Pottawatomie chief, by one of the Illini.

TELLS THE WHOLE STORY.

Civil Service Applicant Willing to Give Complete Information.

The civil service commission has received something unique in the way of a communication from Buckley Levin, an applicant for the position of janitor of a post office building in an Ohio city.

It seems the blank furnished him to fill out was not explicit enough in its answers for the commission, which sent it back for more information concerning the antecedents of the applicant. Here is Levin's reply:

"I was born in Meigsville, Morgan county, Ohio, the eighteenth day of April (have forgotten the hour), 1855; am 53 years six months and 16 days old. My father was born on the thirteenth day of December, 1817, in Guernsey county, Ohio. He is 82 years ten months and 14 days old. My grandfather was born at South Acworth, Mass., A. D. 1765; have forgotten the month and day. He had 24 children —15 boys and nine girls. He is dead now.

"His father, my great grandfather, was born in Loudonderry, Ireland; don't know the date. He was one of triplets, three boys being born at once. I don't know whether he was first, second or third at that birth, but I think I could find out if necessary."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

ROAD AND FARM WORTH IMPROVEMENT

THE ROADSIDES.

Keep Free From Weeds, but the Trees Are an Improvement.

No matter how smooth and well constructed the traveled way may be, if the roadsides are not cared for, the road, as a whole, will not give a good impression. All rubbish should be removed and the excavations and embankments smoothed and planted with grass wherever it will grow. Unsightly brush should be cut and grubbed out. Sometimes, however, the brush and small trees, if suitably trimmed, add to the attractiveness of the roadside.

All trees that are ornamental or which have value as shade trees should be preserved and protected, unless they grow so closely that they make too dense a shade. In hot, dry climates particularly, and, indeed, in most places, trees are a considerable factor in reducing the cost of maintenance, since they lessen the evaporation of the moisture from the macadam. In exposed places where the sweep of the wind would be otherwise unbroken they serve to prevent in a measure the blowing away of the fine dust from the road surface. Unfortunately in such places it is often difficult to make trees grow. Care in the selection of the kinds of trees best suited to the locality is important.

In Massachusetts, Surrey, Norway and white maple and American elms have been set out to a considerable extent along the state roads with satisfactory results. These trees grow fast and at the same time are fairly long lived.

A good arrangement along roadsides for trees with large tops is to set them about 40 feet apart on each side, and alternated so that there will be a tree every 25 feet along the road.

BLACK LOCUST FOR POSTS.

Farmers Can Grow Them with Little Trouble and Much Profit.

Farmers are beginning to realise that growing timber is the very best way to solve the post problem. From experience and observation I am convinced the black locust excels. The mulberry and the osage are its equal in point of durability, but they are of slower growth. The latter has a very bad habit of spreading. The cedar is not so durable in small posts and harder to grow. Black locust can be grown in some rough, onbot-theway place, on poor soil or in our wild pastures. Many fine vistas of black locust are found in Kentucky and elsewhere. When it is desired to remove the trees they are cet out, and a sprout is allowed to grow from each stump. Some locust sprouts may be bought of nurserymen and set out along the roadside or to form a grove. They cost about $16 per 1,000 when two feet high. Protection must be provided when they are first set out, as stock will nip off the main sprouts, causing them to form a head rather than grow tall and slim. In dense native groves nature does the pruning, hence the importance of planting close in groves. Along highways and where scattering it is necessary to do some pruning. The head should be run up very high, says Orange Judd Farmer. Sometimes a post may be cut from a six-year-old tree, but better results are had when the tree is left to smooth up another three posts, two on first section and one on the second. The value of these posts varies.

Destroying Rats.

The following advice on conquering the rat pest is given in the New York Farmer: "By the persistent use of traps, occasional resort to poison and the exercise of forethought in the construction of farm buildings so as to minimise the opportunities for harborage, farmers and others may prevent the greater part of the loss and annoyance they now experience from rat depredations. The same statement applies in great measure to city and village conditions. Hence cooperation in the warfare on rats is particularly important and cannot be too strongly urged.

RHEUMATISM RECIPE

PREPARE SIMPLE HOME-MADE MIXTURE YOURSELF.

Buy the Ingredients from Any Druggist in Your Town and Shake Them in a Bottle to Mix This.

A well-known authority on Rheumatism gives the readers of a large New York daily paper the following valuable, yet simple and harmless prescription, which any one can easily prepare at home:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

The manufacturers state that the ingredients can be obtained from any good prescription pharmacy at small cost, and, being a vegetable extraction, are harmless to take.

This pleasant mixture, if taken regularly for a few days, is said to overcome almost any case of Rheumatism. The pain and swelling, if any, diminishes with each dose, until permanent results are obtained, and without injuring the stomach. While there are many so-called Rheumatism remedies, patent medicines, etc., some of which do give relief, few really give permanent results, and the above will, no doubt, be greatly appreciated by many sufferers here at this time.

Inquiry at the drug stores of even the small towns elicits the information that these drugs are harmless and can be bought separately, or the druggists will mix the prescription if asked to.

THE KISS IN JAPAN.

One Western Idea That Is Popular with Eastern Maidens.

She was a Japanese college student, lithe and fair, and very graceful in her Paris gown.

"The kiss," she said, blushing faintly, "was unknown in Japan 50 years ago. Now, among the aristocracy, it is becoming quite renowned.

"Yet it seems a great shock at first. It is so different, you know, from anything in a Japanese girl's experience. I have known maidens who fainted at a first kiss that was perhaps too rudely bestowed. Yet these very maids became afterward ardent advocates of the new western embrace.

"Frankly, I like the kiss myself. Its stimulus, and the feeling, as of red satin, when mouth touches mouth —all these soft shock—yes, frankly, I like the kiss, and I find it extremely difficult to deny an eager young man so innocent and so delightful an embrace.

BABY WASTED TO SKELETON.

In Torments with Terrible Sores on Face and Body—Tore at Flesh —Cured by Cuticura.

"My little son, when about a year and a half old began to have sores come out on his face. They began to come on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than all others. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad I had to tie his hands and even night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton and was unable to walk. I sent to the drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment, and at the end of about two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since, and now he is the finest boy the sores of any precious child would have died from these terrible sores. I used only one cake of Soap and about three boxes of Ointment. Mrs. Egbert Sheldon, R. F. D. No. 1, Woodville, Conn., April 22, 1906."

BACKACHE AND DESPONDENCY

MISS LENA NAGEL

Are both symptoms of organic derangement, and nature's warning to women of a trouble which will soon or later declare itself.

How often do we hear women say, "It seems as though my back would break." Yet they continue to drag along and suffer with aches in the small of the back, pain low down in the side, dragging sensations, nervousness and no ambition.

They do not realize that the back is the main-spring of a woman's organism and it radiates by aching a diseased condition of the feminine organs of the kidneys, and that aches and pains will continue until the cause is removed.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

made from native roots and herbs has been for many years the most successful remedy in such cases. No other medicine has a record of cures of feminine ills.

Miss Lena Nagel, of 117 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:—"I was Miss Lena Nagel, of 117 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:—"I was completely worn out and on the verge of nervous prostration. ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

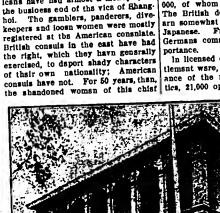
By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Secular Standpoint, and Will Write Up His Findings. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

A Reform Sirocco Has Struck Wide-Open Shanghai

(Copyright, 1907, by Joseph B. Bowles.)



Shanghai, China.—The greatest moral sensation at present agitating the east is not being created by a missionary, but by an officer of the United States government, Judge L. R. Wilfley of the new circuit court for China. With the majority of foreigners resident in the open ports, Judge Wilfley is today probably more unpopular, even, than are the missionaries, and for largely the same reason. What the missionaries have been trying for generations to accomplish, in the way of cleaning up the American reputation out here, and improving moral conditions, Judge Wilfley has wrought almost over night.

The shame of Shanghai is international; in every part of the civilized world Shanghai is known as a wide-open city. As one resident expressed it: "There is no public sentiment here." Shanghai about fulfills the desire of Kipling's soldier:

"Ship me somewhere east of Suez,
Where the best is like the worst,
Where there ain't no Ten Commandments,
And a man can raise a thirst."

An American Monopoly of Vice.

But here comes the rub: the Americans have had almost a monopoly of the business end of the vice of Shanghai. The gamblers, dancers, dive-keepers and loose women were mostly registered at the American consulate. British consuls in the east have had the right, which they have generally exercised, to deport shady characters of their own nationality; American consuls have not. For 50 years, then, the abandoned women of this chief port of the orient have been claiming the protection of the stars and stripes. The result is that nowhere in decent circles in the east are the words "American lady" ever employed, for they have only one significance. An American father does not speak of his daughter as an "American girl." When first I came to this city it needed a few pointed and illuminating words from a friend to explain to me the large proportion of richly clad and artistically bedizened women, manifestly my compatriots, who rolled along Bubbling Well road in sumptuous equipages.

So open and shameless has been this corruption of Shanghai society, ramifying into the most extraordinary and unexpected places, that gradually brazen vice has crowded virtue to the rear, and, as a most eminent resident assures me, the demi-monde of Shanghai has held the center of the social stage. I have it on credible authority that leading business men, married man with elegant homes in Shanghai, have been in the habit of dropping in of afternoons to take tea with the "American girls." A short time ago a prominent British official was found, after spending an evening in "the American colony," that he had had disappeared. Now this particular watch bore autograph evidence that it was a personal gift from King Edward, in recognition of high public services, so every effort was put forth to recover it—without publicity, of course—but in vain. There is no absolute evidence that it was taken to the states by one of the scores of "American girls" who left on a single steamer a few weeks ago, but nobody would be surprised should it turn up in San Francisco.

Despite an occasional misadventure of this sort, the Britishers and other foreigners here have been very well content with the situation prior to Judge Wilfley's advent. The disgrace and legal responsibility were borne by America, so from their standpoint the matter was quite satisfactory. As one vexed Englishman said to me: "Really, this Judge Wilfley is making a deuce of a bother for the rest of us. He is doing a good thing for America, of course, but think of the trouble that is bound to come to other nationalities if they have to handle this thing."

In a word, the nations were quite willing to let America bare the blame for all their misbehavior.

How Missionaries Won Unpopularity.

Against this infamy missionaries have for years protested and labored in vain. Shanghai, like all other treaty ports in China, is an international extra-territorial settlement; each resident is under no law except that of his own country, as administered by his consul. The very fact of American laxity has caused disreputable characters, even of other nationalities, to seek the protection of that flag for their evil doings.

A few of the official figures from the settlement records may be enlightening in this connection—and be it remembered, these are not statistics of the native city, but of the foreign settlements, after which the Chinese have no control whatever. The unedifying spectacle has more than once been presented in Shanghai of "beathen" officials vainly pleading with the representatives of Christian nations to close up or restrict certain forms of evil, notably opium resorts, gambling houses and brothels. Nine-tenths of the thousands of Chinese who are being ruined therein. Shanghai's foreign population is 14,000, of whom 1,100 are Americans. The British dominate, although they are somewhat outnumbered by the Japanese. French, Portuguese and Germans come next in order of importance.

In licensed existence within the settlement were, at the time of the issuance of the recent municipal statistics, 21,000 opium houses and shops, paying a revenue of $68,000—or one such resort for every score of the 452,700 Chinese residents who live here under the white man's law. Of these, 520 are opium brothels, with 3,200 inmates. Besides there are 200 registered Chinese brothels with 600 inmates, 237 of whom are given weekly health certificates by the city medical examiners. Of foreign houses of a grade above this, there are seven reported on the books, with 55 inmates. Of the highest and most famous—or infamous—class is the "Astor Tower district," or the "American colony," as the neighborhood is indiscriminately called, there are seven public houses, with 47 inmates. In addition, there are numerous "amusement palaces" and beer gardens, which are outside the pale of what is called the "legitimate."

The Pace That Kills.

No census can tell the worst of Shanghai's shame. The evil that surpasses the widespread gambling and the open and honest practice in the brothels and their "face" is gone utterly. This swift, summary, ominous action at Shanghai's most notorious resort. What would this as yet uncomprehended judge do next?

Nobody had to wait long for an answer. Basing his action on the common law, Judge Wilfley summoned before him eight proprietresses of the most infinential resorts. One escaped by pleading Spanish citizenship, which the district attorney was unable to disprove. The Spanish consul issued certificates for two "American girls," but they were ignored by the court, and he afterwards attempted to withdraw them. Two pleaded guilty, thus leaving the Spanish consul in an unpleasant predicament. So all the remaining seven were given a fine of $1,000 each, which was more eloquent than many lectures. The immediate result was to send post-haste out of Shanghai and out of China more than half a hundred "American girls," whose influence for vice will not have been forever broken. Of course all this is revolutionary here. Women supported respectable Britishers and Americans objected, the judge deftly remarked that America is willing to surrender the monopoly of this sort of trade and reputation.

Shall he receive into his house, and give his social approval to, young men, who are known thus to have contravened a fundamental Anglo-Saxon conception of decency? Shall all the accepted traditions of respectable society be abandoned in order to win the approval of these young men away from home? Ordinarily, the missionaries decide in the negative. Thus there is a gulf fixed between the two classes of white men in Asia; and so mutual criticism is begotten. In the society which has dominated Shanghai the missionary, whatever his standing at home or his personal qualities, has been "persona non grata." Whether this state of affairs will altar with the newly-changed conditions remains to be seen.

When "Reform" Struck Shanghai.

One further explanatory point should be noted before describing Judge Wilfley's sensational reforms. Gambling has always been a Shanghai vice. During "race week" in spring and fall, it has been rampant. All kinds of gambling have been open and unashamed. There is no city in the western world to which this can be likened; foreign gentlemen, foreign riff-raff, Chinese gentlemen, Chinese riff-raff (not to mention woman of any nationality) met in a gamblers' democracy about the tables of success and mischance. Back of the worst of these fleecing schemes were Americans.

Last spring an anti-gambling crusade was skillfully conducted. Robert E. Lewis, the Young Men's Christian association secretary, being one of the prime workers in it. Without going into details, it is enough to say that the leading citizens who comprise the municipal council were enlisted to such pressure that the law allowed all race week gambling, except betting upon the races within the club house grounds. There was an enormous stride for reform, and the next step, the total abolition of gambling and licensed vice of any sort is inevitable and near. So Shanghai, the city where "everything goes" was acquainted with reform and made ready, psychologically, for the advent of the man of the hour.

Enter the Man with the Square Jaw.

Then came Jove with his thunderbolts. Nobody out here, or anywhere, apparently, had paid any particular attention to the creation by congress last year of a new United States circuit court for China. So its staff was on the scene before the significance of the event was at all understood. The judge appointed by the president was the one man above all others prominently qualified for his task.

Judge Wilfley had gone with Gov. Taft to the Philippines as district attorney. He had set the legal machinery in motion there, and had run out of the islands a lot of vicious camp followers, big Bill Lyle, who were exploiting the Filipinos and soldiers, and making trouble generally. Judge Wilfley is a quiet man, with a goodly frame, a square jaw and an even disposition; a man not given to delivering homilies from the bench or announcing his intentions beforehand or explaining his actions afterward. He is the sort of man to scour the United States escutcheon to Shanghai, where it has been more than a little tarnished in times past by Americans, official and unofficial.

The day after his arrival he calmly announced that American lawyers who expected to practice in his court must pass examination as to their professional qualifications, and present certificates of their moral character. That would seem an innocent enough procedure, warranted by practice in the United States, but no one has heard described the type of legal shysters who for the most part infest Shanghai, making the necessary examination stumbled the examination. Six of them failed ignominiously to attain an average of 75 per cent in possible 100. It is said by those close to the judge that had these men passed the examination, not a few of them would have been disbarred on the basis of character. At least one of them is a renegade from the bar of Japan, and had before felt Judge Wilfley's hand.

Consternation Among Crooks.

Here was a sensation for Shanghai. The rejected men had been doing business in this city for many years; their records were, presumably, an open book, so there is significance in the fact that it have been left to the judge to question the essential justice of the court's action. Naturally, the men caused pensive reflection in the local court, and their "face" is gone utterly. This swift, summary, ominous action at Shanghai's most notorious resort. What would this as yet uncomprehended judge do next?

Nobody had to wait long for an answer. Basing his action on the common law, Judge Wilfley summoned before him eight proprietresses of the most infinential resorts. One escaped by pleading Spanish citizenship, which the district attorney was unable to disprove. Of course all this is revolutionary here. Women supported respectable Britishers and Americans objected, the judge deftly remarked that America is willing to surrender the monopoly of this sort of trade and reputation.

BASIS OF WEALTH

MOTHER EARTH KIND TO ALL HER CHILDREN.

THE GREATNESS OF NATIONS

Utilization of Natural Resources Goes Hand in Hand with Civilization—Exhaustible and Renewable Riches.

Old mother earth is the basis of all wealth. Greatness of nations is commensurate with the degree of utilization of the mineral elements and other products, all of which are the result of natural laws. The higher the civilization the greater and the more economical are the uses of the earth's resources. In the great commercial and manufacturing centers of the world is found the superior intelligence. Wherever there is industry there flourishes civilization. With the decay of commercial importance nations retrograde and lose power, and finally find a place in history only.

Wealth of countries can be divided into two classes; that which is exhaustible, and that which is renewable. The exhaustible is the mineral wealth, gold, silver, iron, copper, and all the useful metals—coal, salt, sulphur, oil and mineral products which once utilized in the manufacture and commerce are not renewable. The renewable wealth is natirely in the vegetable and animal kingdom and nearly all of it is included in the field of agriculture, using the word in its broadest sense, as represented by the crops of cereals, vegetables, fruits, fibrous plants, the useful gums, such as rubber, the woods of trees and all that is of utility in the arts and manufactures.

The wealthiest nations, and those that give promise of the longest existence, are those that possess both exhaustible and renewable wealth. Both classes afford a field for manufacturing and commerce, but the latter lacks the conditions necessary for the production of renewable wealth. Nations exclusively agricultural lands rapresenting renewable wealth, and every natural advantage for manufacture, and with its vast territory hundreds of millions of people can find homes and sustenance for thousands of years to come, and if necessary supply other nations with a surplus of its products. Then the nation will grow richer through disposing of its renewable wealth for what represents the labor and the exhaustible wealth of less favored nations.

The countries comprising Great Britain have little renewable wealth according to population, and relies chiedly upon exhaustible resources, with the utilization in manufacture end the value of the labor of its people in manufacture for commerce of articles produced by products both mineral and vegetable, imported from her dependencies and other nations. It is the fact that England not exchanges its raw, exhaustible wealth for the renewable wealth of another nation will grow poorer, and the nation that receives this exhaustible wealth in exchange its renewable will grow richer.

Principles that apply to nations in this regard, are also true of states and cities and people of nations, and in a republic like the United States, to its states and lesser communities. It is a patent fact that the state or community that employs its people in manufacturing from products to the greatest extent, instead of having them go to the markets of the world in a raw state, and retains within its borders the profits accruing from labor employed in the production of its articles of commerce, will advance in wealth and importance.

D. M. CARR.

SAPS LOCAL WEALTH.

Systems That Draw from Circulation Money That Should Be Kept Home.

That city, town or community from which the major part of the earnings of the people are sent elsewhere is destined to be hackered and take a place in the rear of progressive communities. It will never have the full benefit of what each is due it, and that it should have. It is the profits, the amount that remains after the average cost of production of products, and the earnings of the laborer above the expenses of his daily subsistance that profits of the merchants and others in business that makes a community wealthy. When these earnings are diverted to foreign places their local tax-paying and up-building power is destroyed to that place, receiving the money acquire a benefit. If you desire to see the greatest growth of prosperity in your own town, keep every dollar you can in circulation at home. The individual that has its existence elsewhere and has a mortgage on your farm or other property, exjoys a measure of making you bear a portion of the burden of taxes of another section than your own. It matters not by what means your money reaches outside your own bailiwick, it results in the same evil. You are helping those who pay none of the cost of maintaining the institution of your own town and county.

THRIFT AND ECONOMY.

Right Thinking Necessary to Greatest Success in Every Field of Endeavor.

Economy is one of the essentials to success. It matters not how great one's earnings may be, if there is no pennies laid by, there will be no counting of dollars to your credit. From childhood children should be taught lessons of thrift, and the value of saving. There is a difference between economy and stinginess. There is an excess which defeats the aim, and is the cause of loss and misery. That economy which prevents the former from spending money to properly house his stock during the winter, is paradoxical. It is a saving of dollars and the loss of dollars by the saving. That so-called economy which prevents the consuming of fuel in winter, which results in a cold house and sickness in the family, and perhaps a death, is shamefully stingyness, which is criminal. It is the saving of a few dollars in the coal bill, and perhaps a hundred or more to the doctor or the undertaker. There is no economy in cheap things generally. A bit of machinery that is needed about the farm should be the best. A cheap, poor mowing machine from some mail order house may break down when it is needed the most, and a result is the loss of time of hay several times the value of a good machine. Poor articles wear out rapidly, and are likely to give out at a time when most needed, and are a continual source of expense. A poor breed of stock is another illustration. Poor bony horses eat more than well bred ones, and this latter always find a ready sale, while the raw-boned cannot be disposed of at any price. The same with hogs, sheep, and all classes of domestic stock. A poor lot of animals should be gotten rid of as soon as possible. They are expensive and the poor economy to keep them.

It is in looking after the saving of a penny and haing blind to the dollar that could be gained that is the trouble with many. Savages have no idea of economy. They cannot forego a small pleasure for a greater one a little farther off. It is the ability to think out these matters that makes the civilized man superior to the barbarian. Think! Don't eat tired of using the reasoning brain that a good economist can be made. The secret of knowledge is in thinking, and the power to make comparison. One of the drawbacks of many schools is the teaching, the cramming of rules and facts without combining with them the importance of cause and effect. Teach one to think, and he will soon be a person of no mean value to the race. It is the thinker who wins in life, and on the farm, in the workshop, in the store, anywhere and everywhere, where brains are needed, you will find it is the active, keen and cereful bloker who forges to the front.

D. M. CARR.

INTERESTS ARE EQUAL.

Farmers Should Cooperate with Townspeople in Work of Municipal Improvement.

Among the many plans devised to further the interests of smell towns and cities, and which hes proved most successful, is the commercial club in which all business men of the community cooperate for the common good. Organization of this kind is known to most o eccesity in eny town where harmony is desired among the different business elments in the carrying out of plens for town improvement, securing the enterprises of various kinds and the general good of all in the community. There is no reason why these clubs in their membership should be confined to the residants of the town. The farmers in the neighborhood are as deeply interested in the building of town entuprisps as are the business men of the place, or at least they should be. They should belong the town towards prosperity will also help the farmer.

In many localities there is a sentiment in the interests of the farmer and the business men are not parallel. It is necessary that this feeling be obliterated as far as possible because there is no logical foundation for it. The better the town is the better the local market for the farmers' produce; the more equitable will be taxation and the better educational facilities. All these are matters that concern the farmer in the immediate neighborhood of the town. Many business men feel that a membership in clubs organized for promotion of town interests should be confined to business men; that perhaps the farmer would not be in accord with reference to the town in matters of public improvements. This is an error, a lack of confidence in the good judgment of the average farmer, who will generally realize how important the home town is to him, and all his neighbors. Than to the farmer sometimes thinks that he is not welcome in an association of business men, perhaps the best is he never been invited to take part in meetings held to discuss matters pertaining to town affairs. There is no good reason why these sentiments should exist. It is only by a harmonious pulling together of the residents of the rural districts and the business men that the greatest good can be brought about for the home town.

Insurance.

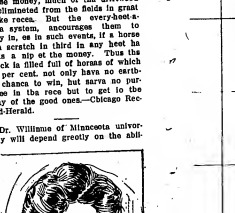
"You'd better take out some life insurance."

"Go on. I'm so healthy I won't die for 60 years yet."

"But if you get a policy you'll probably work yourself to death paying premiums."

Sporting Gossip.

Once more the racing whirligig has spun around—this time in record-breaking fashion—and at last the winning jockey-driver has again stopped opposite Sonoma Girl's name. The last $10,000 trotting stake of the year was contested at Columbus, O., and the "Girl of the Golden West," once again in har good form of early July and with the best manners that ever sent har into disgrace and kept her there for six weeks apparently forgotten, achieved another triumph.



That is to say, she won a technical one; for the final result leaven har victory very questionable, and a decided doubt as to her real right to head the summary in which not her speed and stamina, wonderful as they are, turned the balance in her favor so much as did racing luck and freak conditions.

The race was decided under the thrae-heats-a-race-and-every-heat-a-race conditions—the senseless system," as it has been nicknamed and is generally known. This calls for a three-heat limit, the track to be called finished at tha close of the third heat, and the horse standing best in the three heats to be declared the winner.

Time and again this so-called "system" (save the mark!) has, during the past two seasons, been productive of summaries that were travesties. Horses that were roundly trounced in the so-called "deciding heat" being declared winners because of their standing in the earlier heats. And this is exactly what happened at Columbus.

Under the ordinary rules, on which only the horses standing fourth—or even third or better, may get of the purse money, much of the driftwood is eliminated from the fields in great stake events. But the every-heat-a-race system, encourages them to stay in, as in such events, it a horse can scratch in third in any heat he gets a nip at the money. Thus the track is filled full of horses of which 75 per cent can only have no earthly chance to win, but sarva no purpose in the race but to help the way of the good ones.—Chicago Record-Herald.

ity of Schucknecht to round out a championship eleven. He is genorelly regarded as an all-star lineman.

England will challenge for the Dwight F. Davis International challenge cup and send the famous Doherty brothers to Australie to recapture it eerly next season. That is the news which was received in this country the other day. The surprising feature of it is that it meens that Hugh L. Doherty and Reginela F. Doherty (Doherty one the game after a season's absence. It was opperent from the tone of the letter that there was considerable amount of curiosity on the part of the Britons as to whether or not the Americans had any hankloo of spending a challenging team as far away as Australia.

That England would certainly challenge for Australasians for the cup next season was discussed during the recent international championdeciding of the national championships at Newport last ahle tournament at Newport. Those who were in touch with the facts looked for the challenge, long, for it was the suggestion that the Dohertyn would constitute the strongest combination of one the excutive committeemen remarked that as lawn tennis stood here at the present time the Americans would do well to establish their own games before they went seeking international honors over the sea. He declared thet he was very much afraid of a challenge for next year, and that so far as he was concerned with the intention of the others of the committee and among lawn tennis players generally they were against my challenge next year, believing that the journey to Australia was much too long for an American team.

Chicago Cubs are twice champions of the National league, absolutely, irrevocably, unbeatably, and the prediction is made that they will be until that "twice" is changed to "thrice."

DIVING AND SWIMMING TEST FOR REAR-ADMIRALS

WASHINGTON.—Great consternation is felt in the navy over the announcement said to have been made by Assistant Secretary Newberry that rear admirals must shortly undergo a test to show whether they can swim or not. In the army a test of whether colonels can ride horseback was recently made. Mr. Newberry's declaration in favor of a swimming test for admirals, however, is considered far worse, although the average colonel weighs several times more than his horse.

The assistant secretary's plan is to have rear admirals dive from shore to shore and swim to their ships. Many admirals who have not moved a wheel for years except from the navy department in the club are indignant. It is felt that what the assistant secretary is really proposing is a general harl- kari among the most eminent naval heroes of the age.

Nevertheless, the rear admirals accept Mr. Newberry's announcement as a fact against which there is no use in kicking and are preparing for it.

Reports from Rear Admiral Evans's friends say intimate friends of his are still "Fighting Bob" is confident of being able to comm up to Newberry's test. Evans, ever since the battle of Fort Fisher swims entirely with one foot, the other being used mainly as a sort of screw-propeller. The general effect is that of a flat-wheel locomotive trying to climb a hill.

Evans fortunately is the same size all the way down. He has nothing to talk about. The wails that are now deafening the Washington horizon arise from globular admirals with convex protuberances abaft and midriff that one volume had recently been recovered through the executor of the estate of one of the Pennsylvania soldiers. This volumn was carefully examined, and it was found that on May 21, 1760, the grand jury returned a presentment against George Washington for having dodged taxes on "a wheeled vehicle."

Washington was in good company, the presentment also naming George William Fairfax, William Mason and a number of other distinguished gentlemen of the day.

Washington, not being indicted, shows that the grand jury acted upon its own initiative, because had the matter been called to their attention by the prosecutor for the colony an indictment would have been returned. Thern is only one volume of the records of that time, and it does not show what became of the presentment.

RECORDS CHARGE THAT WASHINGTON TOLD LIE

WAS George Washington a liar? Must mnither idol hn shattfed? These questiuns seem to be answered in the affirmative by official records now musty with age but in a fairly good state of preservation. For years there has been a legend in Virginia that George Washington was seven times indicted for perjury. No one gave serious consideration to the rumors, unworthy of association with the beautiful childhood dream of the little hatchet and the cherry tree. A young man of inquisitive temperament, hearing the legend, made inquiry at the congressional library to ascertain whether any records gave it support. He was cited by the expert in charge to the court records of Fairfax county. There he discovered that Mr. Dowell's men, after the battle of Bull Run, ransacked the courthouse and carried away most of the records, but

RACE WAR WITH COURT WRITS AS THE WEAPONS

THE injunctios bea been invoked in a local race war. The white citizens of a suburb of this city propose to restrain a negro from occupying a house he purchased.

The suburb known as Bloomingdale lying between the northern boundary of the old city and soldiers' home, was several years ago subdivided, and long rows of houses erected for sale. The purchasers were given a deed which stipulated in one of its clauses that at no time should the property be sold to a negro. One of the original purchasers sold his residence to a man who placed a second trust mortgage on it.

The holder of this second mortgage to protect himself, placed the house on sale with a real estate firm, which disposed of it to a negro. When the sale became known to the household- ers for blocks around they at ones started a subscription in which President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor is reported to have joined.

There are few residence blocks in Washington upon which negroes do not occupy one or more houses, except in the ultra aristocratic section, and even in that section some negroes dwell. Racn prejudice is constantly growing more intense here and in the new additions in the suburbs the whites have attempted to protect themselves against negro invasion by restrictions placed in the original deeds similar to that carried by the Bloomingdale conveyances. The negro owner will assert his right to hold the property under the fonrteenth and fifteenth amendments and a merry race war is promised.

MRS. MEYER TO PRESENT DAUGHTERS TO SOCIETY

POSTMASTER GENERAL GEORGE VON L. MEYER has leased the Jewett mansion on the corner of Connecticut avenna and S street. It is thn intention of Mrs. Muyer to return to thn national capital in time to present her pretty young daughters to society during the social season. These girls havn been presented at the Rnssian and British courts, but it is now quite customary to give a series of debut parties. Miss Julia is barely 20 and her sister two years her junior, so they are still eligible to coming ant functions.

With Miss Edith Root, they will form a delightful trio of cabinet girls, and will be the only representatives in that depleted set.

With the passing of the Misses Shaw and Miss Hitchcock, Washington might well wall: "Wanted a few handsome and socially inclined maidens for the highest executive set." The Misses Meyer are unaffected girls, sure to be popular, for their intercourse with kings has not turned their heads any more than it has changed their charming mother. Both have studied music and art under the best masters abroad and having resided in many alien lands are gifted linguists.

Young Mr. Meyer, aged 16, has been the schoolmate of Kermit Roosevelt at Groton, and for a few months in the spring took a preparatory course at George Washington University, in Washington.

Mrs. Meyer is a delightful conversationalist and she can chat very entertainingly about royal babes whom she has known.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

MAY BE AMERICAN CARDINAL

Is Archbishop John Murphy Farley to be the third American Cardinal? Many believe he is. The consistory will meet late in November or early in December. No one can know upon whom it will confer the red hat. American Catholics are expecting an American cardinal, and not a few already see the great honor bestowed upon the venerable head of all the Catholic institutions of New York.

Though well along in years, Archbishop Farley is still a man of action. From his archiepiscopal palace in the rear of the St. Patrick's cathedral thn administers thn affairs or morn than a half thousand churches and schools and homes and institutions. He is the spiritual head of millions.

He is an Irishman by birth, an American by adoption and a churchman of instinct. He led the activity of the Irishmae, thn quickness of thn American, and the spirit of the church.

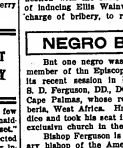
America has had but two cardinals, James, Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore and John, Cardinal McCloskey of New York, the latter now dead. The sentiment of the consistory has been known to be increasing in favor of a third American cardinal.

Over 80,000 young people are indirectly under thn training of Archbishop Farley. His parish schools have over 61,000 pupils and his academies and colleges nearly 6,500. Under him are 523 churchns, chapels and missions and 1,149 priests, regular and secular.

The property wealth of his diocese approkches at a conservative estimate $100,000,000, indicated partially by the following: Cathedral of St. Patrick, $10,000,000; sacrinnns, $1,500,000; seminaries, $1,250,000; 500 churches and chapels, $25,000,000; 60 presbyteries, $2,000,000; land, $10,000,000, and schools, $5,000,000, besides several millions in properties owned by the various religious communities.

Archbishop Farley was born in County Armagh, Ireland, April 20, 1842.

LORD MAYOR OF LONDON



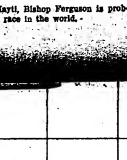
Sir John Charles Bell, who has just been elected lord mayor of London, will, when he is installed on Nov. 9, become the most powerful municipal officer in the world. Not only will he hn the representative of more people than there are in the whole of Canada, but he will have several powers that are not usually granted to mayors. For instance, he can forbid King Edward setting foot in the city of London, a right which is recognized by the sovereign always asking permission before he enters. He can forbid troops to march through the city with unfurled flag. He is regarded almost as a member of the cabinet, and is one of the first persons to whom is announced thn death of a sovereign and the accession of his successor. With the secretary and onn or two others he is an official witness of the birth of a possible heir to the throne, a precaution taken to prevent the ringing in of an outsider. He is the only mayor recognized in the giving of state benquets and other functions of a state nature. These are only a few of the powers that are invested in a successful brewer when he becomes lord mayor of London.

Sir John has already filled the office of high sherilf, but a sheriff's position is petty compared with that of the successor of the famous Dick Whittington. He has been since 1882 a member of the court of common council, and has filled many importnnt chairmanships since then.

Sir John is a member of the City Charlton, Junior Charlton, Ranelogh and Royel London Yacht clubs.

EXAMINING OIL TRUST

Judge Franklin Ferriss has been brought into world-wide publicity by his appointment to preside over the dissolution suit brought by the government to "bust" the Standard Oil trust into its seventy odd constituent corporations. As special examiner he is hearing testimony brought out by special U. S. Attorney Frapk B. Kellogg from officials of the oil concern.



The immense significance of the proceedings, which may result in the disruption of this most monumental and most vituperated of trusts, gives a markable interest to the man who presides in inscrutable judicial state over the court.

Judge Ferriss belongs to the Empirn State by birth and education, bnt as a business man and legal luminary he is a product of St. Louis. To all present interest and purposes he is from Missonri, and Mr. Rockefeller and the Standard Oil people have "got to show" him.

Born in Peru, N. Y., in 1849, he entered Cornell university and was graduated in thn class of '73, with the degree of B. S. He was elected judge of the Eighth judicial circuit of Missouri in 1898, which position he resigned in 1903 on account of general dissatisfaction with the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. Ho was also one of thn directors.

Judge Ferriss was chairman of the Republican advisory committee in the St. Louis "anti-boodle" campaign last spring. Two years ago, in connection with the samo crusade, he went abroad with the special purpose of indncing Ellis Wainwright, the millionaire brewer, who had fled under charge of bribery, to return to St. Louis.

NEGRO BISHOP AT RICHMOND

But one negro was entitled to a seat as a member of thn Episcopal gennral conference at its recent session in Richmond, Va., Rt. Rev. S. D. Ferguson, DD., DCL., missionary bishop of Cape Palmas, whose residence is Monrovia, Liberia, West Africa. Hn brokn down race prejudice and took his seat in the closing hours of the exclusive church in the sonth, St. Paul's.

Bishop Ferguson is now the ranking missionary bishop of the American church in point of service. He was born in Charleston, S. C., Jan. 1, 1842, and was consecrated as a missionary bishop of the church in that city on June 24, 1885.

It is the custom of the church, wherever practicable, for the missionary bishops of the various dioceses to attend the gennral convention which comes nvery three years, for thn express purpose of placing before the convention the needs of the mission work in his field, and report thn progress being made. Missionary bishops gathered at Richmond from all the fields where the American church maintains mission stations, Japan, China, Cuba and Mexico sending their quota, as well as Africa, all of the other missionary bishops being white men.

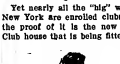
Bishop Ferguson attended the Boston convention three years since, where he was made much of.

With the exception of Bishop Holly of Haiti, Bishop Ferguson is probably the only Episcopal bishop of the colored race in the world.

Around the Metropolis

What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

WAITERS HAVE A CLUB IN EXCLUSIVE DISTRICT



NEW YORK.—So agreeable is the sense of being a real live New York clubman that when he sits down to his bird and bottle in any first-class restaurant he feels that he is enhancing the reputation of the house, quietly but effectively, by his presence.

And if, above all other persons, the waitur who serves him were to take the opposite seat and open a general conversation as one clubman to another, it is fair to assume that the clubmen would repel the other's advances with the terse but forcible sentence: "Get the manager."

Yet nearly all the "big" waiters in New York are enrolled clubmen, and the proof of it is the new Waiters' Club house that is being fitted out on West forty-fourth street. The new foundation is right in tho heart of the city's most exclusive club district.

Outwardly it is a fourstory brownstone house, without any marks to distinguish it from the home of any ordinary affluent citizen. Inwardly it is being fitted with thick carpets, chandeliers, pictures, leather lounges, brass beds and a bar and a grill, and actually it is costing the New York branch of the International Geneva Association $5,000 a year for the single item of rent.

One of the especial things the club does is to afford American New York hotels and restaurants an opportunity of securing house help trained and grained in the best Geneva traditions.

NIGHT COLLEGE IS ONE OF LATEST DEPARTURES

GOING to night college on the part of New York men and women is one of the latest developments of this nocturnal city, which wants night to be just like day, and therefore has its all-night banks, all-night stores and restaurants, all-night dentists and barber shops, and practically everything but an all-night sleep. The lectured ou "seeing-things-at-night" wagon-can point to a rather novel sight in Washington square—a massive college building with the windows of its class room brilliantly lighted. But this night college is not to be classed with the other night features of New York. Its students are not butterflies eo fond of pleasure that they have no time to sleep before 11 o'clock.

The night college is called the Washington square division of the collegiate division of the New York University. The majority of the students are school teachers and professionel men who desire to complete n college educstion, but are unable to do by day. School teachers are in the majority in the college, but there are lawyers and men in many lines of business who wish to get the benefit of a college training, even men in factories and motormen or engineers who wish to rise, and as a preliminary seek to gain the many rungs in the ladder which education will give. A large group of students is composed of woll-to-do married women who live in the neighborhood of Washington square, Stuyvesant square or Gramercy Park, who come to study in the literature or language courses. There is a small contingent of Japanese in the night college, including a young woman, a graduate of the normal school of Tokyonaki, Japan, who last year took courses in English philosophy and sociology.

FEW SWINDLERS NOW IN WALL STREET BUILDINGS

ALMOST every expert swindler who comes to New York endeavors to secure n Wall street addrees because this, aside from effrontery, le his most valuable asset. By a Wall street address he can meet simply an office in one of the gigantic structures that actually lise the short and narrow conduit through which a great proportion of the world's money passes and from which the whole district takes the name of "Wall street," for no address on several other streets, such as Broad street or Exchange place, is almost as good for the purpose of the swindlers.

Certain blocks on Lower Broadway recognized as being a part of the financial district, fill the bill. Keeping the big office buildings in Wall street clean of crooks requires careful and constant watching and investigation these days. In fact, according to several private detectives employed at some of the new office buildings, there never was a time when so many crooked schemes were devised to get the public's money. With the putting up of new buildings with 20 or more stories there has come a determined movement on the part of at least some of the agents and superintendents to keep financial swindlers from securing offices in their buildings.

Once a bird of prey gets into a building it is a difficult thing to oust him, and for that reason no end of vigilance is exercised when applications for space are made. The drastic measures adopted by the legitimate brokers, bankers and promotors of Wall street to keep the swindlers and from swindlers here driven most of the "roll shifters" uptown, and if the investigators are to be believed the big Wall street buildings vero never so clean as at present.

GOTHAM FIREMEN ANSWER MANY ALARMS YEARLY

A VISITOR to fire headquarters in East Sixty-seventh street was prompted to inquire how the number of calls in a year in the busiest fire houses of Greater New York compared with thn number of calls for a year in the busiest districts in London. He was told that there was really no comparison possible, as the New York firemen answered more than twice as many calls a year at the London firemen.

It was found later that this was rather understating the case. Truck 18 at 84 Attorney street answered more calls in the year 1906 than any other company in Greater New York. It responded to 3,122 alarms in the year and did duty at 599 fires.

Engine 17 at 91 Ludlow street was a close second with 1,062 calls during the year, of which only 227 turned out to be real fires. In other words, the men of these two companies had to answer an alarm before sitting down to breakfast, dinner or supper, and bedtime.

The figures for London show an amazing disparity. The Whitechapel station, situated in the most thickly populeted part of the city, responded to only 376 calls in the year 1906, including false alarms.

Shoreditch reported 269 alarms of fire for the year and Manchester Square 266. The firemen at these stations on an average answered an alarm a day for two days, and on the third they rested.

Truck 30, installed only a few years ago at 2244 East 114th street, Manhattan, answered last year no less than 958 calls and did duty at more than half of them.

BALLOON TRAVELS ABOUT 500 MILES

CAPT. CHARLES CHANDLER AND J. C. McCOY WIN THE LAHM CUP.

Three States Crossed—Starting from St. Louis for a Night Test Flight, the Aeronauts Keep on Until They Reach West Virginia.

St. Louis, Oct. 19.—Swinging through the atmosphere at a speed roughly estimated at 22 miles an hour, the United States signal corps balloon No. 10, in which Aeronauts J. C. McCoy and Capt. Charles DeF. Chandler, of the United States signal corps, ascended here Thursday evening, raised over illfeels and indiaea ning, passed over Alton Thursday night, and across Ohio the following day, and at nightfall was apparently about in line in the vicinity of Point Pleasant, W. Va.

The distance covered, on a straight line measurement, is approximately 500 miles, and the voyage was for the aeronauts the Lahm cup.

The Lahm cup was instituted by the Aero Club of America, soon after the international races at Paris in 1906, at which Lieut. Frank P. Lahm won the James Gordon Bennett cup for the Aero Club of America. So joyful were the members of the club at the victory that the cup was named for the pilot of the balloon United States, and it was put up by the club to be won by the aeronaut who traveled more than 400 miles, the distance traveled by the United States in the Paris races, provided the start was made from American soil. Lieut. Lahm has never held the cup, and this was the first time it was ever won.

Were Ready for Long Journey.

When the ascension was made here Thursday evening it was the intention of the aeronauts to remain in the air all night as a test of the gas to be used by the balloons in the international aeronautic contests which begin here next week. However, considerhers next week. However, considering the likelihood that they might be carried a long distance, they went amply prepared for a long flight.

Provisions in tin cans, sel&sealing by a limo&lacking device, were stored in the basket, and a number of different instruments for testing purposes were carried.

Reports from the Balloon.

The first report received from the aeronauts was a message dropped near Leesburg, O., and telegraphed by the finder to Chicago. The message stated the balloonists had dropped it at 3:45 a. m. Friday and they were then traveling southeast rapidly.

Later they were seen passing over Gallipolis, O., and by the middle of the afternoon they were in West Virginia, in the vicinity of Point Pleasant. There the balloon started up the Kanawha valley, according to a long distance telephone message to St. Louis. Members of the international balloon contest committee and other aeronauts here spoke of the flight with great enthusiasm, saying that it will establish a memorable epoch in balloon sailing.

Hawley and Post Descend.

The balloon Stevens No. 21, in which Alan R. Hawley and Augustus Post ascended from here at 6:30 Thursday evening, landed Friday near London, Ind., 16 miles from Indianapolis, and began coasting down the valley at about 22 miles each hour, the balloon carried from St. Louis. The balloon carried 35,000 cubic feet of gas and Hawley and Post made the ascension simply as a preliminary test flight. The bag was filled with gas of as inferior quality compared with the gas used by McCoy and Chandler in No. 10 balloon.

TELLS OF STANDARD LOANS.

William G. Rockefeller Testifies in New York Suit.

New York, Oct. 19.—William O. Rockefellor, assistant treasurer of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, testified Friday in the government's suit for the dissolutue of the oil combine, that the Standard was a heavy lender of its surplus funds to the trust, for which it obtained the prevailing rates of interest. Mr. Rockefeller made this declaration when asked to account for the loans of $33,000,000 made by the Standard Oil company of New York, in 1906, to "interests other than the Standard."

Concerning the $30,000,000 loans" P. S. Traiscor by the Southern Pipe Line company, Mr. Rockefeller said he had no knowledge.

The hearing was adjourned until December 2.

Fatal Fire in a Saw Mill.

Bay City, Mich., Oct. 19.—The saw mill of the Kerr Manufacturing company was destroyed by fire Friday afternoon and William B. Lapham, a lumber inspector, was burned to death. The fire started under the band saw and spread so rapidly that the employes had to run for their lives, some jumping through windows and others dropping to the floor and crawling to safety through the smoke. The fire's loss will reach $75,000, insurance $30,000.

Burglars Butcher Aged Couple.

Morgan City, La., Oct. 17.—News reached here Wednesday of a double murder near Franklin, St. Mary parish, Tuesday night when persons supposed to have been burglars entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Seifred, an old couple, and butchered them with an ax.

MAGILLS ARE NOT GUILTY

JUDGE INSTRUCTS JURY TO ACQUIT THE DEFENDANTS.

State Did Not Prove the Corpus Delicti—Verdict is Greeted with Cheers.

Decatur, Ill., Oct. 19.—Acting under instructions from Judge Cochran, the jury Friday night returned a verdict acquitting Frederick Magill and his wife, Faye Graham Magill, of the charge of murdering Mrs. Pet Magill, the first wife of Magill.

In his instructions the judge said the state had failed to prove the corpus delicti.

The verdict was greeted with cheers despite the efforts of the court to maintain order. The crowd in the courtroom hurried forward and offered congratulations to the Magills. The jury afterwards filed by and each shook hands with the defendants.

On May 30 last, Mrs. Pet Magill was found dead in her home at Clinton, Ill., and a postmortem examination held six weeks after her death showed that she had been suffocated by chloroform. On July 5 in Denver Frederick Magill, her husband, and Miss Faye Graham, a young woman who had been a close friend of the family, were married. Four days later in San Diego, Cal., Magill and his second wife were arrested on a charge of murdering the first Mrs. Magill. They were brought back to Clinton and secured a change of venue to this city. In the trial the state claimed that Magill and Miss Graham by their conduct had driven Mrs. Magill to suicide and were therefore guilty of murder. The defense letter and letters written by Mrs. Magill duced letters written by Mrs. Magill shortly before her death in which she complained of "unbearable headaches" and constant "neglect" of her husband's relatives. Witnesses also testified that Mrs. Magill had often talked of committing suicide. In a letter to her father, written the day before her death, Mrs. Magill asked him to marry Faye Graham in case anything should happen to her. Magill was employed in a bank at Clinton, Ill., the chief owner of which is Venezuelan Minister, United States commissioner of pensions.

MISTAKEN FOR BURGLAR; KILLED

North Dakota Editor Shot by Woman Who Becomes Maniac.

Minot, N. D., Oct. 18.—J. T. Neal, editor of the Colombus Reporter, was shot and killed Wednesday night by Mrs. R. C. Rasmussen, who mistook him for a burglar. Editor Neal was at work in his office when he saw a house on fire down the street. He started for the fire, but on the way down stopped for Mr. Rasmussen who, however, had already gone. Neal attempted to enter the Rasmussen home and Mrs. Rasmussen thinking he was a burglar procured her husband's rifle and fired through the door, killing Neal instantly.

Mrs. Rasmussen became a raving maniac when she learned who it was she had shot.

FIVE WORKMEN DROWNED.

Boatload is Upset in Illinois and Michigan Canal.

Joliet, Ill., Oct. 17.—Five men were drowned and 20 others narrowly escaped a like death by the capsizing of a small boat in the Illinois and Michigan canal about ten miles from Joliet Wednesday afternoon. The men were employed in the construction work of the Economy Light & Power company at its new Chaseshon power plant.

When the whistles blew at noon the workmen made a rush for the boat and 25 piled into it. As the boat neared the center of the stream it gave a lurch and threw the men to one side. In another instant all were thrown into the water.

ELOPER IS ARRESTED.

Daniel B. Brennan, Jr., in Custody at Hot Springs, Ark.

Hot Springs, Ark., Oct. 17.—Following telegraphic instructions from St. Louis to Chief of Police Scott, Daniel B. Brennan, Jr., who secretly married Miss Lilly Ammerman, said to be a niece of the millionaire brewer, Adolphus Busch, in that city last Monday night, was arrested here Wednesday and with the bride awaiting the arrival of his father, who, it is alleged, ordered the arrest. The reason for the arrest is not known. The young couple arrived here Tuesday morning, and had intended to remain a few days and resume their journey to Mexico City.

Waldo Lincoln Heads Antiquarians.

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 17.—Rev. Edward Everett Hale retired as president of the American Antiquarian society, and Waldo Lincoln, of Worcester, was elected to the office at the annual meeting of the organization here Wednesday. October 23 Dr. Hale will complete 60 years of membership in the society. Nathaniel Paine, of Worcester, also resigned, after 44 years' service as treasurer. Col. George A. Bullock was elected to the office.

Land for Hungarian Peasants.

Budapest, Oct. 19.—The Hungarian government is negotiating for the purchase of extensive estates owned by Count Pejacsevich and other aristocrats in order to divide the property into lots small enough to be sold or rented to the peasantry. The object of this course is to restrict Hungarian emigration to the United States.

FONTANET'S DEAD ESTIMATED AT 38

PROPERTY LOSS FROM TERRIBLE EXPLOSION IN INDIANA TOWN IS $750,000.

Injured All Doing Well—Workman in the Powder Mills Says Disaster Was Caused by Sparks from Loose Boxing on a Shaft.

Fontanet, Ind., Oct. 17.—Thirty-eight lives snuffed out, 600 injured, of which number 50 were seriously hurt, and a property loss of approximately $750,000 is the latest estimate of the destruction wrought by the explosion at the Dupont Powder mills Tuesday morning.

From a workman employed in the grinding mill it was learned Wednesday that a "hot box," which was caused by too much friction on the shafting, causing sparks to be transmitted to some loose powder, was in all probability the cause of the terrible catastrophe.

Loose Boxing Blamed.

The employe, whose name is William Sherrow and who is dangerously hurt as the result of the explosion, said:

"The explosion in which so many lives were lost was caused by loose boxing on the shaft. The day before this terrible explosion happened we had to throw water on it when it became too hot. This time it got too hot and sent off the sparks that caused the explosion."

Another company of state militia arrived from Indianapolis Wednesday evening and immediately went into camp. The town is now under martial law, the two companies of state troops being in full control.

The injured at this place and Terre Haute are getting along nicely and it is thought no more deaths will occur.

Dupont's Honeymoon Spoiled.

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 17.—Alfred O. Dupont, vice president of the Dupont Powder company, who married Miss A. Bradford Madden in this city Tuesday evening and who intended to take a long motoring trip as his honeymoon, was informed of the explosion at Fontanet immediately after the wedding. Mr. Dupont at once canceled his trip and went to Indiana to join Gen. Hanly for the immediate relief of the sufferers. He authorized the governor to use any amount in excess of the $5,000 if he finds it necessary. Mr. Dupont left Wednesday for Fontanet to personally supervise the work there.

Story of the Disaster.

Fontanet, Ind., Oct. 16.—Fontanet was practically destroyed by the explosion of the plant of the Dupont Powder company Tuesday. The dead number from 25 to 50. Over 600 persons were injured and every building in the town was wholly or partially leveled with the ground.

Without warning the powder mills, seven in number, blew up at 9:15 Tuesday morning. They stretched for a mile and of these 76 were at work when the first explosion occurred in the press mill. In quick succession the glazing mill, the two coining mills and the powder magazine blew up, followed by the cap mill. In the magazine, situated several hundred yards from the mills, were stored 40,000 kegs of powder. The concussion of which it blew up was felt nearly 200 miles away.

Every house in this town was destroyed. Farmhouses two miles away and schoolhouses equally distant were torn to pieces and their occupants injured. A passenger train on the Big Four railroad four miles away had every coach window broken and several passengers were injured by flying glass.

The Identified Dead.

Following is a list of the identified dead:

A. B. Monahan, general superintendent; Mrs. A. B. Monahan, Mrs. Monahan's sister, George Justice, John Bobo, George Bobo, William Sherrill, Henry Harrington, Sylvester Hall, Ad Webster, Tommy Nevins, —— Yates, Will Dalton, T. F. Kellop, Wilmington, Del.; Henry Chandler, W. E. Crist, Bert Wood, L. J. Carroll.

The mills went up with three distinct explosions, followed 90 minutes later by a fourth even more serious than the others when the magazines went up. Immediately following the explosion the wreckage took fire and the inhabitants of the town who rushed to the rescue of the mill employes found themselves powerless to aid those burning in the ruins.

Brave Work of Rescuers.

They worked frantically le constaet danger from possible succeeding explosions, uemiedful of their rutsed homes. Dead and dyieg were picked up eed collected. Hightece bodies horribly burned and mangled were gathered to the protected spot to await identification while the badly injured, eumbering upward of 50, were put on a special train and taken to Terre Haute for hospital accommodations.

The mills were located one mile south of the town. With the first explosion the employes ran for safety, but most of them were killed or wounded by the quick-following explosioes le the other mills. Whee the heat from the burning mills reached the giant powder magazine 90 minutes later, destroying le town by the concussion, many of those engaged le these work were badly injured and several killed.

Superintendent Monahan, of the plant, was killed while sitting in his office, and his wife sed sister-in-law were killed in their home some distance away.

That the death list is not far greater is due to the fact that the people of the town had left their houses at the first explosioe and were not le them when the explosion of the 40,000 kegs of powder le the magazioe hurled their homes to pieces and scattered their household goods in heaps of debris.

Many School Children Hurt.

Three school buildings were destroyed at Fontanet and Coal Bluff, two miles away. All were filled with school children, and every one of them was killed or less injured by the collapse of the buildings.

A four-room school building was torn to pieces and not one of the 200 children escaped unhert. None was fetally hurt. A two-room school building at Coal Bluff was turned over and collapsed. The teacher and 90 pupils were injured.

Rev. Henry at Indianapolis ordered the Terre Heute compsey of the Indiese eatioual guard to the scene of the ruined district and protect life sed property. The governor arrived in the evening about the time the soldiers reached here. He brought with him 700 teets and cots for the use of the homeless.

SHOOTS HIS FELLOW STUDENT.

Eureka Theological Seminary Boy Tries to Kill Another.

Peoria, Ill., Oct. 19.—Lewis M. Wilson, a student at the Eureka College Theological Seminary at Eureka, Ill., Friday afternoon shot sed seriously wounded John Walsh, e classmete, during the assemblieg of the class for the day.

Wilson fired a revolver point blank at his victim, and the latter lodged a bullet eack near the jegular vein. Thersday afternoon Wilson challenged Walsh to a fight, which was declined, and Wilson purchased a revolver and practiced target shooting on the college campus just prior to the evening of the class. Walsh's home is at Sydney, Australia, and Wilson comes from a small town in Missouri.

Given Life Sentence for Murder.

Boston, Oct. 19.—Walter Stock was sentenced to life imprisonment by Judge Brown in the superior court Friday for the merder of his sweetheart, Mary Agnes Bates, at the street railway waiting room at Roxbury Crossing on April 30 last. Stock was indicted for murder in the first degree and the court accepted his plea of guilty of murder in the second degree.

Wooden Steamer Sinks Near Detroit.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 17.—The wooden steamer Case of the Gilchrist fleet was sunk Wednesday afternoon in a collision with the Pittsburg Steamship company's steel steamer Mariska, opposite Amherstburg in the Lime Kilns Crossing. The crew were saved uninjured.

SAD HAVOC OF PRAIRIE FIRES

WILKIN COUNTY FARMS IN MINNESOTA ARE DEVASTATED BY THE FLAMES.

Boy Playing with Matches Starts the Fire. Damage at Least $50,000. Farmers Plowing the Land to Prevent Spread.

Barnesville, Minn., Oct. 21.—The worst prairie fire in years is devastating the northeastern part of Wilkin county, and seems to defy all efforts to check its progress. Three large farms have been entirely wiped out, and those seems no question but that others will go. The damage done so far is estimated at not less than $50,000.

The fire was started by a boy who was playing with matches on the farm of Charles Pundsocck, and all the buildings on that place, including the house, barns, granaries and sheds were destroyed. The wind was light, and the people living in the path of the flames had ample chance to escape, no lives heving been lost as far as is known.

The entire regioe is very dry, and the flames spread rapidly. Ten large heystacks, containing between 800 and 900 tons of hay were destroyed in an hour.

The old Lavally farm and the Erson place are in ruins, and the farmers throughout the region which is burning are working hard to obtain the conflagration by plowing up the country. The lack of wind is the only feature in favor of the farmers, as the combination of rain for days past has converted the prairies into hege tinder fields.

Considerable alarm was felt for the town of Lawndale on the Great Northern line, as it was directly in the path of the fire, but it was accepted without damege though the country all about it was laid waste. No other places will be reached until the flemes heve traveled several miles and it is hoped that enough ground can be broken up to check the fire's progress.

OAKES FIRE SWEPT.

Nineteen Concerns in the Busy Town are Entirely Wiped Out.

Oakes, N. D., Oct. 18.—Fighting against terrible odds in the shape of a heavy wind and the lack of water supply, the firemen and citizens of the town battled for hours to seboine a fire that threatened to wipe out the entire business district.

The blaze started in Jessee's mercantile store, spreading rapidly to the adjoining buildings and soon passed beyond control. The wind fanned the flames into a roaring sea of flame which swept a half block on Main street and then leaped across the street and destroyed another block. Pitchfork before it was possible to check its progress.

The citizens worked frantically to save the town, but it was not till several hours after the fire started that safety was assured.

The fire was started at 1:30 in the morning, and at noon the ruins were still burning. Nineteen concerns were burned out, and the total loss will not be less than $120,000, with an insurance not more than one-third.

Woman Kills Editor.

Flaxton, N. D., Oct. 17.—Editor I. P. Neal of Columbus, twenty miles west, was shot and instantly killed at his home Wednesday by the wife of a prominent banker and merchant.

At night Neal discovered fire in a threshing machine and ran to the Rasmussen house for an extinguisher and entered the back door unnoticed. Mrs. Rasmussen thinking him a burglar, fired, the bullet passing through his body.

Mrs. Rasmussen is nearly crazed by the mistake, as Neal and she were the best of friends.

Issue Fraud Order.

Washington, Oct. 21.—Orlan Clyde Cullen of St. Paul and Washington have been issued by the post office department as a fair performer in his line. Complaints against him have been pouring in to the department for more than a year, but so far Mr. Cullen has succeeded in eluding purchasers, and although the fraud orders have been issued barring him from further use of the mails.

Barn Burns.

Watertown, S. D., Oct. 21.—Arthur Way a farmer living ten miles northwest of here lost his barn and contents, including horses, cattle, hay and grain, in a fire set by an overturned lantern. The fire spread so rapidly that the immense barn was burned before the three men who were doing the evening chores barely got out with their lives.

Murder is the Charge.

Crookston, Minn.—A sensation has been caused in Twin Valley by the arrest of Miss Jane Kragero, daughter of Street Commissioner Kragero of Twin Valley, charged with child murder. The girl, aged 20 years, has been living on the Ole Omundsee farm, one mile west of Twin Valley, and Mrs. Omundsee discovered the body of an infant in a well in a pasture which he was used only to water stock. He notified the authorities and Miss Kragero was arrested and bound over to the grand jury.

WHAT IS PE-RU-NA?

Is It a Catarrh Remedy, or a Tonic, or is It Both?

Some people call Peruna a great tonic. Others refer to Peruna as a great catarrh remedy.

Which of these people are right? Is it more proper to call Peruna a catarrh remedy than to call it a tonic?

Our reply is, that Peruna is both a tonic and a catarrh remedy. Indeed, there can be no effectual catarrh remedy that is not also a tonic.

In order to thoroughly relieve any case of catarrh, a remedy must not only have a specific action on the mucous membranes affected by the catarrh, but it must have a general tonic action on the nervous system.

Catarrh, even in persons who are otherwise strong, is a weakened condition of some mucous membrane. There must be something to strengthen the circulation, to give tone to the arteries, and to raise the vital forces.

Perhaps no vegetable remedy in the world has attracted so much attention from medical writers as HYDRASTIS CANADENSIS. The wonderful efficacy of this herb has been recognized many years, and is growing in its hold upon the medical profession. When joined with CUBEBS and COPAIBA a trio of medical agents is formed in Peruna which constitutes a specific remedy for catarrh that in the present state of medical progress cannot be improved upon. This action, reinforced by such renowned tonics as COLLINSONIA CANADENSIS, CORYDALIS FORMOSA and CEDRON SEED, ought to make this compound an ideal remedy for catarrh in all its stages and locations in the body.

From a theoretical standpoint, therefore, Peruna is beyond criticism. The use of Peruna confirms this opinion. Numberless testimonials from every quarter of the earth furnish ample evidence that this theory is not over enthusiastic. When practical experience confirms a well-grounded theory the result is a truth that cannot be shaken.

The Sinful Human Heart.

A clergyman recently addressing a congregation in Sunday school. "In illustrate the idea of regulating the sinful human heart he took out his watch and held it up that all might see it.

"See this watch," he said. "Just imagine that it does not keep good time—that it goes all weye but the right way. What ought I to do with it?

Instantly a little boy held up his hand.

"Well?" he shouted. "Sell it to a friend."

To live is the presence of great truths, to be dealing with eternal verities, to be led by permanent ideals; that is what keeps a man patient when the world ignores him, calm when the world views him with scorn.—Francis G. Peabody.

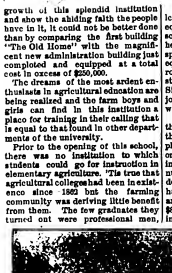
The School of Agriculture

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA

The establishment of the Minnesota School of Agriculture at St. Anthony Park, midway between Minneapolis and St. Paul, in 1888 marked a departure in our educational system that was at once novel and far-reaching. The little home building, costing $17,000, with a capacity for fifty pupils, was not built without much hesitancy on the part of the regents. Many people looked upon it as a futile attempt to realize the dreams of a few agricultural fanatics. This building was considered of ample size for office, library, class rooms, kitchen, dining room, and dormitory for principal, assistant principal, students and hired help. Although small, it was well adapted to its purpose, furnishing the nucleus for what was destined to be the greatest school of practical agriculture in the world. Historically then, this building has great interest.

If one wished to epitomize the growth of this splendid institution and show the abiding faith its people have in it, it could not be better done than by comparing the first building "The Old Home" with the present magnificent new administration building just completed and equipped at a total cost in excess of $250,000.

The dreams of the most ardent enthusiasts in agricultural education are being realized and the farm boys and girls can find in this institution a place for training in their calling that is equal to that found in other departments of the university.



Prior to the opening of this school, there was no institution to which students could go for instruction in elementary agriculture. The leading agricultural colleges had been in existence since 1862 but the farming community was receiving little benefit from them. The few graduates they turned out were professional men, seeking government or college positions, or thinking of engaging in the farm. The establishment of the Minnesota School of Agriculture gave birth to a new idea in agricultural education. The regents of the state university, of which the school is a part, who foresaw this idea, undoubtedly builded higher and better than they knew. The idea was not the result of one man's thought nor the the combined knowledge of a score of men. It was the result of a gradual, persistent growth, the unquenchable desire on the part of the farming community for a school that would not only advocate their boys and girls in the so-called common branches but teach the solution of farm difficulties as well.

THE OLD HOME.

The first school building was completed in the fall of 1888 and on October 18th, the doors opened. Forty-seven young men from the country applied for admission and were received. The course of study was practical but much more limited than it is today. It met the requirements of that time but has been continually expanded in accordance with later developments and demands. That the original curriculum was well thought out is evidenced by the fact that every branch taught then, is in the course today, with one exception. After considerable agitation on the part of the public and deliberation on the part of the regents, girls were admitted on equal terms with the boys in 1895. The wisdom of this change has been amply justified in the constant increase in attendance and the better spirit shown in the school by the commingling of the sexes.

From this humble beginning the school has grown to such an extent that last year its enrollment numbered 560—385 young men and 175 young women. It receives students after they have finished the grades and gives them a three years' course, October to March inclusive each year, the balance of the year being spent by the student in practical farm experience. The wisdom of this plan has never been questioned. It gives ample opportunity to put into practical use the lessons learned in the winter and test their value. It also gives the student a chance to earn expenses during the school year.

THE NEW ADMINISTRATION BUILDING.

The school is thoroughly democratic, being run on a plan of equality. In addition to the regular school buildings, twenty-two in number, the school is provided with a splendid—although at present inadequate—dormitory system. Each room is well furnished, heated by steam and lighted by electricity. Since 1898, students have enjoyed the privileges of this school, of which number 870 have graduated.

In conjunction with this system there is a kitchen and bakery, and the dining hall accommodates 400 people. The meals are all furnished and put up by the students, thus providing a choice article at a low cost. A number of the bachelor rooms in the dormitories and board at the dining hall with the students. The expenses are very low and do not exceed $55.00 per year of six months. This includes fees, book rental, nurse attendance, heat, light, room, laundry and three good meals a day. To give an idea of what the mess is, the following bill taken at random, is given:

Friday, November 23, 1906.
Breakfast:—flaked barley, crackers, chipped beef and cream, bread, butter, steamed potatoes, coffee, milk.
Dinner:—clam chowder, salt salmon in cream, green peas, Hubbard squash, pickled beets, bread, butter, potatoes, tea, pears, peach pie.
Supper:—cold baked beans, brown bread, baked potatoes, bread, butter, tea, bread apples, cake.

The cost of heat, light, laundry, board and room in the dormitories has never reached three dollars per week.

What the Boys and Girls Learn.

Botany, the study of plant life, is one of the subjects given the first year, that the student may know how plants feed, grow, and reproduce themselves; and drawing, that he may learn how to make plans for his buildings. While the boys are engaged in blacksmithing, carpentry, military drill, and the study of general agricultural subjects, the girls are taking cooking, sewing, social culture and field agriculture.

Who has not wished for the conveniences and ability to weld a bolt during rush season when the binder was rendered useless by an accident? A trip to town may mean delay of hours when the remedy might have been applied in twenty minutes at home.

In addition to those named, which are given the first three months of school, the pupils study English, physiology, study of breeds, laundering, natural science, dairy chemistry, dairy husbandry, fruit growing, farm accounts, stock judging, vegetable gardening, breeding animals, household art, agricultural chemistry, farm management, forestry, entomology and zoology, poultry, handling grain and machinery, veterinary science, plant propagation, civics, dressing and curing meats, feeding, soils and fertilizers, home economics, domestic chemistry, and domestic hygiene. From a careful examination of the above it will be seen that each one has a special value to those engaged in farming.

"Art is the expression of one's joy in his work." Play is labor enjoyed. Work that has no joy is a drudge. There is an absence of joy in all work that is not understood. To take the student from the farm, unfold the mysteries of natural life all about him and lead him to see the beauties of nature in her various forms is one of the chief factors in producing content in farm labor. The School of Agriculture does these things and this is the secret of its great success. Eighty per cent of its graduates return to farm life enthusiastically, intelligently, and joyously, with eyes trained to see, and minds able to direct the natural forces about them. No wonder then that farm life is robbed of its drudgery. With such a knowledge of nature and her laws, farming becomes a science, labor a joy, and the man who directs and performs it, the most contented and independent of men.

Of especial importance is the subject of dressing and curing meats. This has proven of great value to the farmer who has not had cure much of the meat used on the farm if he uses it at all. The boys learn by actual practice how to prepare and cure up the various animals raised for meat and to locate and know the different cuts. This work could not be given if it were not for the dining hall run in connection with the school. It is also of great help to the dining hall, providing a good quality of meat at low cost.

Dairy School.

In addition to the regular school there has been established a dairy school to give instructions to the butter and cheese makers of the state who make their product on the factory plan. To enter the school one must have had some experience in a creamery or cheese factory. The course extends over a period of four weeks, usually beginning about the middle of November. The national reputation that the school has enjoyed as one of the foremost dairy states in the union is largely due to the instruction given in this school.

Farmers' Short Course.

To enlarge the influence of the school and to meet the needs of mature men and women who busy with farm work the greater part of the year, a short course lecture course has provided known as the Farmers' Short Course, and thru this, valuable service is being rendered to farmers. The course continues six weeks, beginning the second Monday of January each year. Some of the practical subjects considered are dairy husbandry; animal husbandry including beef, sheep and swine; selecting, developing, and managing farms; soils; farm mechanics including windmills, gasoline engines and the care of tools; farm implements and their uses; dressing and curing meats; farm horticulture, including planting, pruning, cultivating and the general care of fruit trees, plants, and shrubs; veterinary science; poultry; entomology; plant life; business methods; and judging grains, dairy stock, beef cattle, sheep, swine, and horses. Stock judging lessons are of special practical value and very interesting. In the study of beef cattle, the animals are judged alive, then killed, cut up, and the carcasses and their several parts scored in a large demonstration room, the entire class participating. Often times meats of different quality are judged and then cooked that the most practical test may be made. All farmers are eligible to enter the course and enjoy its benefits without reference to their age or educational qualifications.

Ronsezy.

There is no man, but for his own interest, hath an obligation to be honest: there may be sometimes temptations to be otherwise, but all cards cast up, he shall find it the greatest case, the highest profit, the best pleasure, the most safety, and the noblest fame, to lay hold of the horns of this altar, which, in all assays, can in Himself protect him.

Selling Days Not Over.

Just at a time when every one who is at all interested in the sea and ships is talking over the Lusitania, her size and her record, it seems a curious reminder of old times to catch sight of a new gold sign in the windows of a shop-keeper down at Bowling Green which announces a "sailing service to Australia and New Zealand."

A Vast Sum.

The amount of money which the government is called upon to redeem in the course of the year reaches an almost fabulous amount. In 1904, for instance, it totaled $913,000,000. This redemption is either for the purpose of securing clean, fresh notes or to get change of some other denomination.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Escaped.

St. Cloud—Anna Ouestrusky Jarmusek, kidnaper of the Glenque baby, who was taken to the reformatory recently to serve sentence for her crime, made a sensational escape from that institution.

She had not been in the prison long enough to have her picture taken or to become very well acquainted with the officials in charge. She apparently had thought of nothing but escape after being taken to St. Cloud, and she waited patiently until opportunity came.

That Mrs. Jarmusek is shrewd is now fully believed by those who have had anything to do with her. She first astonished the people of Minneapolis by successfully kidnapping a four-year-old child and securing from the city. She next startled the officials by jumping her bail after being indicted. She was recaptured at her home near Little Falls. Now she has escaped from jail just like any desperate man, and with a good start she has to make the chase after her an interesting one.

She was captured at Foley after a hard struggle with officers and returned to the reformatory.

Death from Fright.

Rushford—Knute Johnson, aged seventy-three years, a resident of Rush Creek Valley for six years, living at the home of his son-in-law, Jos Ames, four miles north of Rushford, met death in Rush Creek from fright by an accident. Although his body was found in the water, it was found that drowning was not the cause of his sudden demise.

He had been visiting his daughter in Fremont, and on his return home he attempted to cross the creek on a drift log. It is thought he lost his balance while fording and that his foot became securely locked between the limb and the limb of the tree. His body, thus suspended, was found by a searching party.

The coroner of Winona county was summoned and stated that death resulted from fright while the aged man was in the act of felling.

A Hard Question.

Stillwater—When a child over six feet tall and weighing 210 pounds or more presents himself in a saloon and asks for a drink of liquor, is the saloonkeeper deserving of a severe punishment if he fails to discover that the applicant for refreshments is a minor? This question was put up to the pardon board in the petition for a pardon for Andrew Ledin, sentenced from Isanti county, Sept 25 last, to the county jail for thirty days and to pay a fine and costs amounting to $76.86 for selling liquor to a minor.

The offense was committed in Cambridge about a year ago. There is no denial of the sale of the liquor to the youth of such ample proportions, although it is asserted that the sale was not made by Ledin personally but by his bartender.

Rich Ore in State Lands.

Grand Rapids—The continued rapid development of the iron lands in this section of the Mesabi range is bringing many solicitations for options on private property in this vicinity, and the owners have taken advantage of these opportunities to get some substantial benefits without letting go their claims. The drilling on the state lands lying about two miles southwest of Pokegama dam is showing that the land to be rich ore, and the prospects are that the state will reap a handsome profit from the development of this property.

To Spite His Wife.

St. Paul—Edward Casey, 228 West Seventh street, jumped out of a third-story window to spite his wife. His back is badly sprained and he is at St. Luke's hospital in a serious condition. It is believed that he will recover.

Cody and his wife quarreled during the evening and he threatened to make away with himself. He jumped from the third story window of their home and landed in a heap in the front yard.

Death of John D. Ludden.

John D. Ludden, one of the notable pioneers of the state, died at his home in St. Paul. He was noted for his interest and generosity in public affairs. One of his acts was the presentation of an endowment fund of $10,000 to assist needy students thru the state agricultural school. At a school meeting the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in His infinite mercy to call Hon. John D. Ludden from earth's labor to His eternal rest, now therefore be it

Resolved, by the faculty and students of the school of agriculture in chapel assembled, That we express our appreciation of his integrity, his ability, his public spirit, his sympathy and helpfulness to others, his modest philanthropy, and especially of his interest in the work of this school, and

Resolved, That we express our sincere sympathy for his bereaved and aged sister and other relations and friends, and

Resolved further, That the secretary of the school be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the members of the bereaved family and to the daily papers of the twin cities.

Organize State League.

Minneapolis—There is a movement on to form a Minnesota state basketball league to take the place of the Twin City Basketball League, of last year, and the separate city deganizations of years ago. The movement is fostered by C. T. Booth, who is sending out circulars to teams throughout the state, asking their opinions in regard to the matter and their cooperation, should they deem it a wise plan to organize such a league.

BRIEF NOTES.

St. Paul—Insurance experts say that fire protection in St. Paul is inadequate.

Winona—When passenger No. 504 on the Chicago & Northwestern railroad pulled into the station here Henry Schmidt, aged 40, of Dane county, Wis., was found hanging by his suspenders, which had been attached to pipes in the toilet room of the coach.

Brainerd—In an address on forestry at the high school, Forestry Commissioner Andrews, who had just returned from a visit to the Pillsbury reserves with Professor Green and Mr. Detwiler, said that 285,000 three-year-old seedlings, mostly Norway spruce, were planted there last spring on 150 acres, and that 95 per cent of them were found to be living.

Crookston—August Prick, a maid employed at the farm of William Handlon, took down a heavy shotgun from a hook over the door, and the gun was discharged, the full charge of heavy buck shot entering her hand and almost tearing off the entire arm at her. Prompt attendance on the part of members of the household saved the girl's life, as she almost bled to death.

Mankato—The general educational committee of the Evangelical Lutheran church, which has been in session at St. Louis, considering the proposition to buy the Dell's hotel property at St. James for the purpose of starting a college there, has decided to take no action until after it has submitted the proposition to the churches thruout the country, to be voted upon.

St. Peter—Luther C. Ives, a pioneer resident of Leaveworth township, Brown county, is making preparations for an overland trip to South Dakota over the trail he traveled forty-three years ago, when, suffering from an attack of typhoid fever, he was brought in an ox cart from Fort Wadsworth to Fort Ridgely with the supply train of George Brackett, an army contractor.

Duluth—Barney Conway, the brewery wagon driver who killed Mike Mahar here Labor Day by a blow of his fist, and who was convicted of manslaughter in the second degree, is again a free man. Under the law there is an alternative of a prison sentence for a term of years or a fine of $1,000. The judge imposed the fine, and the amount was paid into court and Conway was freed.

St. Paul—As a result of the campaign waged by W. H. Williams, state labor commissioner, the number of permits issued to children under sixteen years of age is continually decreasing, and with the hearty co-operation of the local school boards the laws relating to the employment of child labor are being more enforced better than ever before. Commissioner Williams said that the reports being received show that there is a decrease of at least 25 per cent in the number of children under 16 years of age who are at work.

Moorhead—A local man went threshing with a team belonging to himself and partner. When he got there he sold the team and his partner had him arrested for embezzlement.

Moorhead—C. B. Erdel, a saloon keeper, is wanted by the sheriffs of Ransom and Cass counties, N. D., on the charge of soliciting orders for liquor in North Dakota.

Lindstrom—Mr. and Mrs. Ola Slattengren, pioneer settlers of Chisago county, recently celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at their home.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Irl R. Hicks says we will have the coldest and stormey, December and January that we have ever had. All right Irl, let her go, and if you beat last winter you will have to go some.

An Iowa man says we are selling land so cheap that the people down there think it is not good land. Well there will be a change as soon as the people get onto the fact that the land is all right, but to much of it for the number of settlers.

The voters in Polk County will have the question of county division to vote on at the next election, but some of the eastern end people that might have favord it, may vigerously fight it, after noticeing what a big proposition it is to move a county seat, from one town to another, by watching the Red Lake County fight.

S. W. Wheeler, of the Wheeler Land & Loan Co., of Crookston will make a trip to Illinois with two trunks of the products of Polk County for exhibition, just to show what we can produce up this way. He will have potatoes that 10 of them make a bushel, and yield over 800 bushels to the acre. A 10 pound cabbage, and other vegetables in proporition. That's the way to advertise, take the "letters" down there and show them fellows from Missouri.

"Hon. Halvor Steenerson is in favor of an other term for President Roosevelt and himself", says an exchange. Well why not give him another term, and then another term. We have lived in this and the old Seventh congressional District a good many years and we have not had a representative in congress that could do something for the district until we elected him, and since we have had him there them other fellows in Washington is beginning to find out, that "there is God in Israel" and such a place as the Ninth Congressional District of Minnesota, and as long as he will continue to represent this District as abely in the future, as he has in the past, the people should elect him by thunderous consent to succeed himself, term after term, as long as he will accept it.

For the office of municipal judge three candidates are in the field and it is not likely that any more will enter the race S. Cook, S.T. Johnson and J. M. Bishop are the ones that will contest for this office and all have friends who are working for their election.—Thief River Falls News.

It always looked to us as if J. M. Bishop was about the right man in just the right place for that position; and by the ways who is this S.S. Johnson? is he the old fellow with spavin, who ran on the "Anti Injunction" platform last fall? If he is well he dared if we will ever support him for office again. We urged all the boys to help him out, because he might have got elected, or chance to get office if he failed to get Mark's Commissioner. Now he has failed to get a candidate for municipal judge for county or state. Wonder's what's the "Cash" for?

Push It Along.

McIntosh, over in Polk County are to have their next market day on October 30th, and we are of the opinion that some of our Red Lake County farmers are getting into the habit of going over there to pick up bargains. Thief River Falls should have a market day, as it gives the farmers an opprotunity to meet and exchang stock, and the merchant to sell goods.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But if must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousan ds depend upon,

MASCOT FLOUR,

to get these results—and they get them. Manufactured by Rowers Beat.

People who were present smiled at the little passage of arms which took place between two young ladies at a luncheon recently. One of them, a bride, shaking hands in her characteristically cordial way, said to the other: "I'm so glad to meet you! You have afforded me so very much amusement just lately."

"Amusement!" said the other.

"Oh, yes," went on the bride. "I've been through my husband's desk and have read all his old love letters. I found several very affectionate letters from you, and I enjoyed reading them really ever so much."

"I'm so glad you enjoyed them," replied the other. "But do come and see me very soon. Here is my card. I have the answers to all those letters, and you might like to read them as well. Mr. X.'s letters are so much more affectionate than those I wrote to him. I know you'll enjoy reading them ever so much more than you did mine."

Size of Heads.

The average adult head has a circumference of fully twenty-two inches. The average adult hat is fully six and three-quarters size. The sizes of men's hats are six and three-eighths and six and seven-eighths generally. "Furies" hats are common in Aberdeen, and the professors of our colleges generally wear seven and one-eighth to eight sizes. Heads wearing hats of the sizes six and three-eighths and smaller or being less than twenty-two inches in circumference can never be powerful. Between nineteen and twenty inches in circumference heads are invariably very weak and, according to this authority, "no lady should think of marrying a man with a head less than twenty inches in circumference." People with heads under nineteen inches are mentally deficient and with heads under eighteen inches invariably idiots.—London Young Woman.

Then She Talked.

Reporter—Well, I've interviewed her. Editor—Did she talk without restraint? Reporter—I should say not! She wouldn't say a word until her husband came in and told her to keep still.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Daniel's Fame.

Deacon Johns—Why was Daniel the most popular man mentioned in the Old Testament? Brother Smith—Because he was lionized.

Uneasy at Bricklayers.

Bricklayers believe it is unlucky to lay the top brick at the north corner of a building. Some of them would hang a day's pay rather than imperil their fortune by doing such a piece of work. A bricklayer often bricks up in the corner of a wall a horseshoe with a cent tied to it. This he does for good luck. To lay the first and last brick of any building with chimes brings good luck to the bricklayer. Churches are the luckiest buildings to work on; the next are the unlucky. It is bad luck to break a trowel.—New York Press.

Not Even the Flesh.

Two ladies were being shown through the State Prison by the warden. As they entered a ward one turned to the other and said: "I pity her if that clock is right!"

"An inmate standing near overheard her and instantly replied: "Don't be sorry. It wouldn't be here if it was!"—Lippincott's.

The Difference.

Oh, what's the difference between the spinning of phonograph and reality? Why, nothing, only a person who can be prevailed to die, but never will die, will be ready.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Don't Lose Your Nerve.

Don't lose your nerve because you have been robbed. Don't lose your head because you have been bitten by a snake. Don't lose your temper because you have been insulted. Don't lose your money because you have been swindled. Don't lose your sweetheart because you have been jilted. Don't lose your life because you have been condemned to die. Don't lose your mind because you have been driven to distraction. Be bold! Bide patient!

Something to Remember.

Have you ever noticed the right way to put into a hammock when two people are present? Few persons know what it is. A man looks out of the side that is nearest the couch and backs in, keeping his face to it. This is wrong. If, on going in that way, you take the most comfortable couch you can come to easily and comfort, which otherwise is very apt

To Calculate Longevity.

"Bacon took a deep interest in longevity and its earmarks," said a physician, "and Bacon's signs of long life and of short life are as true today as they ever were. You won't live long, Bacon pointed out, if you have soft, fine hair, a fine skin, quick growth, large head, early corpulency, short neck, small mouth, brittle and separated teeth and fat ears. Your life, barring accidents, will be very lengthy if you have slow growth, coarse hair, a rough skin, deep wrinkles in the forehead, firm flesh, a large mouth, wide nostrils, strong teeth set close together and a hard, grisly ear."

Dogs That Worry

If you have ever seen a dog that has lost its master in a London street you will wonder whether even the lower animals have not the elements of worry to disturb them. But the man worries about many other things than loves or masters, and the dog never suffers from insomnia through fear of a future life or the state of his banking account.—Reader.

Wasted Sympathy.

Habgoodsit Dod Mac—I put poor Johnny to bed last night with a terrible stomach trouble. Poor fellow! He ate so much and he was so sorry for his poor little boy—he's not well.—Houston Post.

Lucky Diamonds.

The value of the diamond is all so much per carat, that is to say a certain fixed number of pounds sterling is the price of the stone increases. Suppose a carat diamond is valued at £100, a diamond weighing a half a carat is counted at the rate of £50 per carat. Three-quarter carat diamonds at £100 per carat, one and one-quarter carat diamonds at £160 per carat, one and one-half carat diamonds at £200 per carat, two carat diamonds at £400 per carat. Stones weighing more than two carats sell at about the same rate as that quoted for two carat stones, that is, the increase is rapidly going to the more limited demand for the larger sized stones.—New York Herald.

A Bungler.

Very few persons acquit themselves creditably in their maiden speech. At a wedding feast recently the bridegroom was called upon, as usual, to respond to the given toast, in spite of the fact that he had previously pleaded to be excused. Blushing to the roots of his hair, he rose to his feet. His intended, to-imply that he was unprepared for speech making, but, unfortunately, placed his hand upon the bride's shoulder and looked down at her as he stammered out his opening (and concluding) words:

"This—er—thing has been thrust upon me."—London Tit-Bits.

Oddities of Sight.

The two eyes really see two objects. If the two forefingers be held, one at the distance of one foot, the other two feet in front of the eyes and the foremer be looked at, two phantoms of the latter will be observed, one on each side. If the latter be regarded two phantoms of the former finger will be observed mounting guard, one on each side.

Good and Evil.

Accustom yourself to submit on every occasion to a small present evil to obtain a greater distant good. This habit gives decision, tone and energy to the mind, which thus disciplined will often reap victory from defeat and honor from rebuke.—Colton.

Gallant.

"That pea will never come to perfection," remarked a young woman walking through a garden with Sydney Smith.

"Then let me lead perfection to the pea," said he gallantly offering her his arm.

A Domestic Labor.

Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.—George Washington.

Caught the Policeman.

All the countryside is laughing at an experience of the police at Longi Nedzi, Arcoland. A recently recruited man screamed between birds from Lollodoliery and Antrim and was held on one of the islands in the lake. The police got wind of it and arrived, as they usually do, late. All the available police force had been pressed into service as spectators, and the police, after trying vainly to secure transportation to the island, determined to swim for it. Just as they arrived the local ended and every boat put off for the main land again. The police had a swim back for their pains, and when they reached the mainland they found that their clothing, over which they had neglected to leave a guard, had disappeared. They had a ten mile march in a frightful condition to the nearest barracks, where they were put to bed until new uniforms could be procured.—Liverpool Mercury.

Retaliation.

To do it seems a curious whim on the part of our ancestors at the eighteenth century that in their marriage announcements they should so often dresse and with such unfeeling complacency enlighten the world with regard to the amounts of fortune received with the bride. Take as we have in front: "Sir James Coutts of Jeffrey Sq., merchant, to Miss Pelgrom of Kinderhook Sq., spinster." Or: "Mr. Bentham, of the St Trinity or Horse Guards, to Mrs. Ann Dutcher, a maiden lady, with a fortune of £30,000." Chambers' Journal.

Not All Bad Fellows.

When I was very little boy, writes Mr. William Dressler in his autobiography, my father decided that I should be a lawyer, and he insisted, took me to the chief secretary's room in Dublin Castle and formally introduced me to that functionary.

After I had been with him for about a little while I said to him, "Oh, sir, isn't everything here good fellow like?"

"Yes," answered the secretary to a question from a stranger, pointing to a man who was sitting at a table writing, "that gentleman there is a splendid fellow, and a very good friend of mine." Then, addressing the man, he said, "Mr. Jones, I want to get out of the public service and I want you to get me a position."

The heavy frosts that we have been having the past two weeks has killed all vegetation dead. Look out for prairie fires, but be sure and not set any.

The Kuehnel post office was moved over to P.O. Wolds place this week, and Miss Kuehnel will make her home at Thief River Falls for the present.

We had good success this year seeding timothy on wild river bottom land, and have a splendid stand, that will give us a good crop of tame hay next season.

There are some of the boys that are still hanging out in Dakota and they may do better than the early retiring ones, as the weather is better out there now.

Peter Hodson soon landed a man and wife to work for him when he advertised in The SUNBEAM, nothing like advertising in a paper that the people subscribe for and read.

It is getting so dry that a prairie fire would be liable to do a large amount of damage. There is a heavy fine for setting fire. But of course it is pretty hard to catch the fire setter.

L. J. Olson representing the E. M. Marie medicine Co. of Foston was selling to the Eleven town merchants this week. He was accompanied by Mr. Engebretson of Foston; and they made a pleasant call at this office.

W. G. Hunt was down to Kratka on Saturday last, fixing up the bonds of Stephen Singer as boat master at that place. Kratka will be a money order office now.

MASCOT Flour is the best. After you have once used it your wife will always tell you to be sure to buy "the mascot." For Sale by Singer Bros., at Rhoda and Kratka.

We added two more names to our Kratka subscription list on Saturday last, that of John S. Johnson and Anton C. Skaug. Mr. Skaug had just finished his threshing on his fine farm here in Kratka, on which he got hundreds of wheat and 18 bushels of flax per acre. The Eleven Towns is a good farming country, "hey."

Under the October apportionment of school money by the state each district will receive $2.50 for each pupil enrolled, in addition each high school will get about $2.150. Each graded school gets $535 each and each semi-graded school gets $220. Where normal instructions are given in high schools an extra $720 is given.—T. P. F. News.

NOTICE TO PAY UP.

We have been sending out a large number of statements to our subscribers, asking for past due subscriptions and very few of them have responded. We feel that we have earned this money and are in need of it now, as we have a long cold winter ahead of us and poverty staring us in the face. Please remit.

Miss Emma Wolds and Miss Knuhnel were transacting business here Monday in connection with the transfer of the Kuehnel post office.

The P.C. Wolff threshing machine has moved into the neighborhood on the north side of the river and some of our farmers will soon know how rich they are.

Adolph Ranson made a trip down river this week with the Dan Patch station supplies for his store and some extras for the new barge which they are building for the farmers steam boat.

School will commence in this District next Monday morning with Walter Jollyson of St. Hilaire as teacher. As this is to be only a two months term, scholars should procure to go the first day.

There will be a wedding in Highlanding next Sunday. Faint us, and we wont tell who it is until after it is over for fear some of the "late mate" would stick their nose into the deal as they usually do if they think there is anything going on that they have not got a hand in.

Mr. and Mrs. Mike McAndrews drove over from St. Hilaire on Saturday last for a days visit with his brother Walt and family here. Mike took a little interest in helping us to secure a teacher for our school, and met with such good success that one arrived here today ready for business. If the County Superintendent is unable to secure you a teacher, just call on Mike.

When Josephine Kept House

By L. Robbins

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Miss Josephine Packard and Miss Alberta Hathaway were resting from their arduous studies of the Normal school, under the great elms on the grassy slope in front of the Packard farmhouse.

Josephine was 19 and good to look upon, with fair hair, blue eyes, a supple form and a dainty gown. Alberta, her friend, a year older, large, dark, dignified, stylish, was also good to look upon. Both were in the enjoyment of perfect health and each prided herself on her muscular development and powers of physical endurance—and intelligence.

In the farmhouse, in the kitchen, with a very hot stove for company, was Josephine's mother, ironing a much beruffled white muslin dress belonging to the aforesaid Josephine.

She was a plump, busy, cheerful little woman, whose greatest happiness in life was to have other people take comfort." She had two ideas of comfort; the one for her own exclusive use, the other for the rest of the world.

The first was work; she believed, or pretended, or imagined, that only in keeping everlastingly at it could she by happy. Her ideal for everybody else was idleness.

There was one exception, however, to this almost universal acquiescence, and as Mrs. Packard finished the muslin this exception appeared in the doorway, and resting his hands high up on either side of the door, looked into the kitchen—a well built young man with a frank, pleasant face. He remonstrated with his aunt in a half joking, half vexed way, for doing the work of "those two lazy, good-for-nothing girls."

"They are much better able to do it than you are, and I have half a mind to go and tell them so."

"Oh, well, they're young," said his aunt, indulgently. "Do let them take comfort while they can. Hard work will come to them soon enough."

"I wish it would come right now," said Sam. "They deserve a good shaking, and I'd like to be the one to give it them."

That evening a message came which was an urgent summons to the bedside of a dying sister.

"How can I go!" exclaimed Mrs. Packard, in great distress of mind.

"What is to hinder your going?" cried Josephine, warmly. "I should think it was great if Alberta and I couldn't do the housework for a day or two. You must go—you shall go."

Sam took her to the railroad station very early in the morning, speaking comfortably to the anxious little woman, who felt almost like a criminal in thus spoiling the sorely needed vacation of the two fragile maidens whom she left behind.

"Now, don't you worry, Aunt Elizabeth," he said, as he bade her goodbye. "I'll keep an eye on the girls and see them a bit now and then, and if they show signs of collapse, I'll take hold and do the work myself."

"Aunt Elizabeth seems to think you girls are a pretty helpless lot," observed Sam, carelessly, after he arrived home.

"I know it," returned Josephine, half vexed. "I don't see but what we get along beautifully, and I believe that nine-tenths of the complaining about housework being so hard and disagreeable is clear rubbish."

"I am surprised, really, to find it so easy and pleasant," said Alberta.

"I wish mother didn't make such hard work of it," continued Josephine, with pensive regret. "She keeps trotting all day long, and there isn't a bit of need of it. But of course," she added, excusingly, "she can't move or think as quickly as a young person."

Sam turned his head to look at a very broad smile.

"It seems a pity she should marry home, when it is so wholly unnecessary, now doesn't it?" he questioned musingly. "She so seldom gets away, and there are a host of relatives around there that she has been wanting to visit for years."

"Why not write and tell her to stay?" said Alberta.

"I could do that," said Josephine. "It would be great fun."

So the letter was written—indeed, each member of the family wrote a letter, even Mr. Packard, who detested letter writing from his very soul, and "Mother" was given to understand that everything went on harmoniously without her, and that her presence in the family circle was not desired for six weeks at the very least.

Sam very kindly offered the girls the loan of his alarm clock, and set it for them at half-past four, for Mrs. Packard was to begin on the meadows the next day, and they would want an early breakfast.

It seemed to Josephine and Alberta as though they had hardly fallen asleep, when "whir-r-r-r-rrrr-r-r—r-r" went the alarm clock, and it was time to get up.

They arose reluctantly and with many sighs. It would have been so pleasant to take one more nap.

Then their troubles began. The first day, Thursday, the meat for dinner was only half done; the beans were badly burned and the biscuits were as hard as rocks.

When the girls sought their beds that night they agreed that it was the longest day they ever lived, and that they had never before felt so tired.

The next day was Friday and bore a strong family resemblance to its predecessor. Saturday was not unlike Friday. The work dragged fearfully. Though Josephine was learning wisdom from experience in the culinary line, the food was still execrable, and Mr. Packard's countenance wore an expression of settled gloom.

That evening after supper Sam came into the kitchen, and finding it dark and still, was somewhat startled, on striking a light, to see his cousin lying face downward on the lounge.

"What is the matter, Josephine?" he asked, going to her.

"Nothing," was the muffled reply. "There is something—you are crying," he retorted.

"I'm disgusted with the horrid, hateful, everlasting, abominable housekeeping, then, if you must know," she exclaimed peevishly.

"Oh, that's it, is it? Well, I'm about to start to the post office—you can send for your mother."

The taunting way in which he spoke stung Josephine to the quick, and she bounced to a sitting position, her eyes blazing indignation.

"I know you think pretty meanly of me, Sam Wells," she burst forth, "but in this one instance I don't deserve your contempt. I haven't for an instant thought of sending for mother. I'm going to write to her to-morrow and paint everything rose-colored, and not tell of my failures. And I am going to insist on her staying six weeks longer. She's been working here like a slave for 25 years, and if I can't stand it for a few weeks, I'll—I'll perish in the attempt!"

Josephine and Alberta had been perfectly reckless about "putting things in the wash," and as a result it required their united efforts and two days to do the washing that week, and their united efforts and three days for the ironing, after which they decided that fastidiousness and light cotton dresses were to be dispensed with.

"I Am Disgusted with the Horrid, Hateful Housekeeping."

But as there is no lane so long but it has its turning, so in good time Alberta found herself away in order to pay a promised visit to another schoolmate, and Mr. Packard wrote that she was homesick and was coming home.

"I didn't expect you'd be so glad to see me," exclaimed the good little woman. "Josephine gave such glowing accounts of how well you all got along without me, that I began to think I wasn't of any use in the world."

"I've enjoyed every minute of my visit," she said a little later, as they lingered at the tea table, "but it does seem so good to get home. And how nice everything about the house looks, Josephine. It couldn't look nicer."

"Don't praise me, mother," begged Josephine. "I don't deserve it."

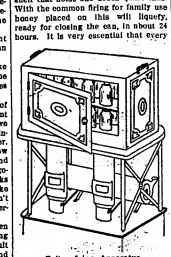
"Yes, she does," said Sam. "She's done nobly."

The next morning Mrs. Packard was up bright and early, as of old. Josephine was up bright and early, also, but her mother secured such surprised, as well she might, for early rising had never been one of Josephine's strong points.

"I'm as fresh as a daisy, and I don't need rest any more than a cat," said Josephine. "Mother, I have been looking forward almost ever since you went away, to these last days of my vacation, and thinking what a perfectly lovely time we would have working together. And now you must shirk your part of it all. Of course, if you don't want—my—company—"

"My child, of course I want your company," cried her mother, in a shocked tone, "but I didn't suppose you really wanted to help me. Why, Josephine, I've always wished that we could take comfort working together."

"Mother," cried Josephine, taking her by the shoulders and giving her an affectionate shake, while she laughed through the tears which had risen to her eyes, "you are a humbug—a regular little humbug."



POULTRY and the BEES

LIQUEFYING HONEY.

How Ona .Bee Keeper Managas .to Keep Ahead of His Orders.

After my honey is put up in glass cans, it begins to thicken, and look milky, as soon as cold weather sets in. This takes place, generally, during September, and, long before winter begins, every can, if let alone, would be as solid as a rock, figuratively speaking. But I don't give it the chance, if I can help it, writes a correspondent of Bee Culture, for as soon as it begins to look milky, I begin to remelt it. It takes less heat, and it can be more quickly done at that time than later, after it has had time to become solid. This, too, seems to squeeze all the purpose, for it will generally remain liquid all through the winter after this one treatment.

We have over our kitchen stove a shelf that holds one dozen quart cans. With the common firing for family use honey placed on this will liquefy ready for closing the can, in about 24 hours. It is very essential that every granule should be melted to prevent granulation a second time later on. I always unscrew the top of each can a very little when I expose the cans to the heat. This may not be necessary. Years ago I liquefied pound bottles in the same way without removing the corks, and it seemed to work just as well. However, I think it better to give the packages a chance to "breathe."

As long as I have liquid honey on hand to supply the market, I keep this shelf only occupied with cans, changing whenever necessary, but later on, when the markets begin to call more regularly for honey—the shelf is foo plow. To keep ahead of my orders, I use a two-wick oil-stove with a shelf of iron over. The latter accommodates two dozen cans at a time, and with blaze turned so low that the cans can be handled comfortably bare-handed at any time, two batches can be liquefied in a day. This gives me a liquefying capacity, including the dozen on the shelf, of five dozen a day, more than enough to keep me supplied.

BUYING BREEDERS.

Use Great Care in Their Selection If You Would Do Well.

During the fall season thousands of birds will change hands for breeding and show purposes. Great care should be exercised in their selection. It is much better to buy what you actually need than what you think you want. While there is a great deal of pleasure in rearing a bird that has won a prize there is far more pleasure and profit to be had from a specimen of the same breed, mate, and Mr. Packard wrote that she was homesick and was coming home.

"I didn't expect you'd be so glad to see me," exclaimed the good little woman. "Josephine gave such glowing accounts of how well you all got along without me, that I began to think I wasn't of any use in the world."

"I've enjoyed every minute of my visit," she said a little later, as they lingered at the tea table, "but it does seem so good to get home. And how nice everything about the house looks, Josephine. It couldn't look nicer."

"Don't praise me, mother," begged Josephine. "I don't deserve it."

MIX THIS YOURSELF

RECIPE FOR SIMPLE HOME-MADE KIDNEY CURE.

Inexpensive Mixture of Harmless Vegetable Ingredients Said to Overcome Kidney and Bladder Trouble Promptly.

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authority on Kidney diseases, who makes the statement in a New York daily newspaper, that it will relieve almost any case of Kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease. He states that such symptoms as lame back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe; try it:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

A well-known physician is authority that these ingredients are harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle. This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire Kidney and Urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of Rheumatism in just a little while. This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure the Rheumatism by forcing the Kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which causes the afflictions. Try it if you aren't well. Save the prescription.

WHEN MILESTONES CHEER.

They Always Gladden the Heart of the Pedestrian.

In a walking trip a milestone along the way is the most companionable fellow in the world; your spirits rise as you near him and sink as you pass him, though you seldom a human friend, and they keep almost consistently on his high level till the brother a mile distant advances to meet you.

And when you overlook one of this friendly company because of an encroaching bank or screening shrubs, says the Travel Magazine, his neighbor further on comes to you doubly welcome. At the latter end of this passage fo the journey your spirits flag a trifle as though oppressed by a sense of discomfort. You feel a lazy scowl at the overhanging bank which is more than a party to this concealment.

Those worthy persons who attend to the roads should see to it that every milestone within their province stands out frankly from its lowly background. Observance of this, however, would be the wayfarer of that leap of the heart which is his when the stone tells the story of the miles done rather than one. For however much the landscape and the minute world at his feet may claim the pedestrian's admiration he still keenly alive to the virtue of decent distances covered in his day's journey.

"Exterminate 'em?" said Ben. "Not much. Not much. Why, Mis' Cary an' I just paid $32 for screening the side piazzer that she's been pestering me about for years. How you goin' to get any good of it, if we kill off the skeeters?"—Youth's Companion.

OLD SOAKERS

Get Saturated with Caffeine.

When a person has used coffee for a number of years and naturally declined in health, it is time the coffee should be left off in order to see whether or not it has been the cause of the trouble.

A lady in Huntsville, Ala., says she used coffee for about 40 years and for the past 20 years has had severe stomach trouble. "I have been treated by many physicians but all in vain. Everything failed to give relief. Was prostrated for some time, and came near dying. When I commenced using Postum, I finally concluded that coffee was the cause of my trouble and stopped using it. I tried tea in its place, but then milk, hot—neither agreed with me; then I commenced using Postum, but I hesitated to make it as I was very pleasing to the taste.

"I have now used it four months and my health is so greatly improved that I can eat almost anything I want and can sleep well, whereas, before, I never could sleep, but would toss

"I have found the cause of my troubles and a way to get rid of them. Words fail to express how I appreciate Postum." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Lost Race of Hindo-China.

The great mystery about Indo-China and one which must ever be insoluble is the story of the lost race and the vanished civilization of that strange country.

The mighty walks of Angkor-Wat, rising in the midst of sparsely settled jungles, remain as the memorial of a great empire which has utterly disappeared and is altogether lost to history. No one will ever know who planned this gigantic temple or what tyrant hounded on his myriads of people to build up those immense blocks of stone and carve them with the utterly as the busy myriads who once populated the wastes and solitudes of Memphis.—Singapore Press.

Rich Mines in Cuba.

Active exploratation of a new Cuban deposit of iron ore, according to the Iron Age, has brought to light above 500,000,000 tons, which would add five per cent. to the figure representing the world's total iron ore supply, as published last year in a report of the Swedish government experts.

IN LIFE'S BRIEF SPAN.

Experiences, Joys and Sorrowes of the Human Existence.

The loves and friendships of individuals partake of the frail character of human life, and are brief and uncertain. The experience of a human life may be shortly summed up: A little loving and a good deal of sorrowing; some high ambitions and many bitter disappointments; some gorgeous Thursdays when the skies are bright and the heavens blue, when Providence, heeding over us in blessings, glads the heart almost to madness; many dismal Fridays, when the smoke of torment beclouds the mind and undying sorrows gnaw upon the heart; some high exhilirations and many Waterloo defeats, until the heart becomes like a charnel house filled with dead affections, embalmed in holy but sorrowful memories; and then the chord is loosed, the golden bowl is broken, the individual life—a cloud, a vapor, passes away.—Matthew Hale Carpenter.

A Whistler Criticism.

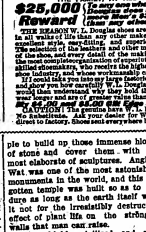
The late James McNeil Whistler was standing barehanded in a shop, the clerk having taken his hat to another part of the shop for comparison. A man rushed in with his hat in his hand and supposing Whistler to be a clerk angrily confronted him.

"See here," he said, "This hat doesn't fit."

Whistler eyed the stranger from head to foot and then drawled out:

"Well, neither does your coat. What's more, if you'll pardon my saying so, I'll be hanged if I care much for the color of your trousers."—"Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree" In Everybody's.

Old Coins Discovered.



Workingmen in demolishing the old cmelter house of the first United States mint, on Seventh street, Philadelphia, have uncovered a number of relics of the early days of the republic. These relics consist of a number of foreign and domestic coins, deting as far back as 1793. Some of the interesting finds are a number of test coins that were experimented with by the officials in the olden times. These coins are similar to Chinese money, each containing a hole in the center that was filled with various kinds of metal to bring up the value of the coin.

FIVE MONTHS IN HOSPITAL.

Discharged Because Doctors Could Not Cure.

Levi P. Brockway, 3. Second Ave., Anoka., Minn., says: "After lying for five months in a hospital I was discharged as incurable, and given only six months to live. My heart was affected, I had smothering spells, and sometimes fell unconscious. I got so I couldn't use my arms, my eyesight was impaired and the kidney secretions were badly disordered. I was completely worn out and discouraged when I began using Dodn's Kidney Pills, but they went right to the cause of the trouble and did their work well. I have been feeling well ever since."

The only royal doctor in Europe is Duke Carl Theodore of Bavaria. Few German princes have been a more romantic career then Duke Carl Theodore. He recently completed, with his wife as his assistant, his five-thousandth operation for cetaract.

AUTUMN ENTERTAINMENTS

By Mary Ross.

Several Novel Suggestions That Will Be of Aid to Perplexed Hostess.

A Harvest Home Supper.

A harvest home supper that is the proper thing this month. Hostesses who rejoice in country houses always wind up the season with one of these delightful affairs. Perhaps the invitations say "en costume," and then all the guests go in country guise, hayseeds from Podunk and gay farmer lads and lasses all gather in one big frolic.

Usually a hay wagon with four horses is sent to meet the guests, and tin horns are provided for the men with which to wind a merry tune as the load is conveyed along the road. After dancing, supper is served, and the ceremony of bringing in the last sheaf of wheat is sometimes observed by people who love to adhere to all the dear old customs of the past.

At such a dinner, which is to be given the last of the month, everything served on the table is to be home grown, and the favors, of which I had a glimpse, are all symbolic of gardening or farm work.

The centerpiece is to be a minature load of hay drawn by three horses abreast, and there is to be a real barn with the fascinating loft animals in the barnyard. The hostess said she spent nearly an entire day in search of these novelties with which to make her dinner complete.

The guests are asked to come promptly at 5, and there is to be a drive over the farm before sitting down to the table at 6 o'clock. To the invitation a time table was enclosed with the train to be taken marked, and it was also added that the guests were to come in hostless suits.

A recipient of one of these mouthdesired "invited" said: "There is a woman after my own heart; she never lestes a fellow in doubt as to just what to do." Many of us might take the hint and remember to be more explicit.

THE GIRL OF TO-DAY

She Must Be the Willowy, Hipless Girl of Centuries Ago.

Back to har own comes the willowy girl, the girl with the "Grecian bend." Away with the pads and bustles of the early nineties, back to the slender, the hipless state.

It is interesting to note the fickleness of our friend, Dame Fashion, from the time of the Grecian next-to-nothingness, down through the periods of hoops and pads, to the present day of tightly-strapped anatomy.

First the stately gowns of the Elizabethan period gave way to the picturesque Watteau costume. Then came the polonaise of Mme. Du Barry, succeeded in 1800 by the Empire period.

After the Empire period came the somewhat modest styles of 1830, with their short waists and short, full skirts. During the period of the Second Empire and the civil war period the waist line grew gradually longer and the skirts fuller. It was at this time that the hoopskirt reigned supreme.

The low-cut bodices of the preceding periods gave way in 1870 to the plain, high-cut basque, still with the extreme hoopskirt. In 1880 came the "tie-back" skirt, a modern modification of the clinging Greek robes. Then the fickle feminine fancy veered again to fullness and gave birth to the "overskirt." Next, in 1890, came the bustle. Five years later the bustle was supplemented by various kinds of hips bulged with startling audacdenness, augmented by the tiny girdle corset. With the new century came the "straight front" girl—the girl with the "kangaroo walk."

And, now, in the wake of the "girl with the sudden curves" comes the hipless girl. This winter's hipless models have the waist line halfway up the back behind, and well on the way to the knees in front. The "slope" from the middle point of the waist in back to the corresponding point in front is like the recent change of weather—sudden and severe. The coats have the "Empress Josephine backs and low dip fronts."

Long Wrap for Winter

The woman who hasn't a picturesque enveloping coat to wear over sheer frocks this winter will be, sartorially speaking, lost.

Not that many seasons past the separate coat or wrap has been gradually gaining in importance and taking unto itself more and more attractiveness, but the increasing vogue of sheer materials for all the year round wear has promoted the long wrap from a luxury to a necessity, and this autumn sees the cult of the garment at high tide.

There are, of course, many semi-fitting and somewhat formal separate coats of redingote character, but these belong more properly to the realm of the costume coats, and it is of the loose, flowing, artistic wraps we would speak, the wraps all soft texture and fluent lines and lovely coloring. Some of these are elaborate to an extraordinary degree, compact of rich embroideries and rare laces and hand stitchery, but others, the majority, while expensive because emanating from master hands, have a certain artistic simplicity, trust much to their lines and have but little elaborate ornamentation.

THE STORY OF A RECORD

That's Where the Driver Had the Best of the Preacher.

A New York clergyman, who often spends his vacation in fishing the streams of the Adirondacks, was on one trip adopted by a handsome setter dog, which insisted on following him from camp to camp, as he moved along the stream.

One day he met a party of men working upstream with a native guide. The guide immediately recognized the dog as his own property.

"Trying to steal my setter, are you?" he shouted at the clergyman. "I'll have you in jail for this! There's a law in the woods just as big as you have in the city."

The clergyman endeavored to explain that he was an unwilling companion of the dog, which had refused to be driven away, but to little effect until he added a two-dollar bill to his arguments.

"It's queer what strange things happen to a man up here," he said to the stage-driver who later carried him away from the woods. "That is the first time I was ever accused of stealing a dog."

"Yes, sir," replied the driver, sympathetically, and added, after a moment's pause, "For myself, sir, I have never been accused of stealing anything."—Youth's Companion.

Delicate Shade of Meaning.

A keen critic is credited in the late Dr. Hale Brown, master of Charterhouse.

His brother-in-law, Dr. Porter, the master of Peterhouse, another famous English school, wrote him, inquiring his precise meaning in an article that a boy's character was "generally" good.

"When I say generally," he replied, "I mean not particularly."

MISS ADELAIDE NICHOLS

PERIODS OF PAIN

While on woman it entirely free from periodic suffering, it does not seem to be the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely. Irregularities and pain are positive evidence that something is wrong which should be set right or it will lead to serious derangement of the feminine organs.

Thousands of women, have found relief from all periodic suffering by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, as it is the most thorough female regulator known to medical science.

It cures the condition which causes so much discomfort and robs

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Miss Adelaide Nichols of 324 West 23rd Street, New York City, writes:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"If women who suffer would only rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound their troubles would be quickly alleviated. I feel greatly indebted for the relief and health which has been brought to me by your inestimable remedy."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints such as Falling and Displacements, and Organic Diseases. Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, and inaugurates the whole feminine system. For the derangements of the Kidneys of either sex Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised.

Sons of the choicest lands in the grain growing belts of Saskatchewan and Alberta have recently been opened for settlement under the Homestead Regulations of Canada. Thousands of homeseekers and others are now available. The new regulations make it possible for every to be made by proxy, the opportunity that many in the United States have been waiting for. Any man or woman, or family may make entry for any other member of the family, who may be entitled to make an entry for himself or herself, at the Dominion Lands Office in the district in which land is open for entry. Any even-numbered section of Dominion Lands in Manitoba or the North West Provinces, except sections 8 and 26, reserved, may be homesteaded by the entry, personally, by the head of a family, or male over 18 years of age, to the extent of one-quarter section of 160 acres, more or less.

The fee in each case will be $10.00. Churches, schools and markets convenient. Healthy climate, splendid crops and good laws. Grain-growing and cattle raising principal industries.

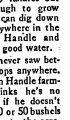
Your Rent Money Will Buy a Farm in the Texas Pan Handle

Do you know that you can take the money you would pay for next years' rent and buy a farm in the Pan Handle country of northern Texas, Western Oklahoma and eastern New Mexico?

Those fellows down in the Pan Handle don't rent. You can bet your bottom dollar on that. They can take the money you'd pay for next year's rent and buy a farm—out there. The rent money'll cover the first payment. The crops will take care of the other payments and make you a good living besides.

They don't have crop failures out there. It rains enough to grow most any crop. You can dig down 25 to 50 feet most anywhere in the Pan Handle and strike good water.



Don't Do It.

You never saw better crops anywhere. A Pan Handle farmer thinks he's no good if he doesn't get 40 or 50 bushels of corn to the acre. 20 to 30 bushels of wheat is nothing unusual, and they figure right along on getting 60 to 80 bushels of oats. You ought to see the alfalfa—2 to 2½ tons to a cutting is what they get from an acre and they cut 3 and 4 times a year!

The land is a dark chocolate loam 5 to 8 feet deep, with a clay subsoil and it ought to raise good crops.

Think of land like this, ready for the plow, selling for $10 to $15 an acre. It beats anything I ever saw.

It won't be so cheap very long. It's selling for more now ever was this time last year and I know what I'm talking about when I tell you it will sell higher next year.

Over a Farm Like This Ought to Sell.

The Pan Handle is filling up with the best people you ever saw.

The climate is so fine they thrive on it. Lots of schools and churches.

How do you stand alongside of the Pan Handle farmer? At the end of the year what have you got to show for the rent you paid? Nothing.

What's the Pan Handle farmer got? A fine big farm nearly paid for and getting more valuable every year. Who's got the best of it?

Why don't you go down to the Pan Handle and do the same? It would pay you to take a trip down there just to look around.

It doesn't cost much—only $20 from St. Louis or Kansas City and $25 from Chicago round trip. The Rock Island-Frisco lines have four routes to the Pan Handle—each one goes through a different part of the country.

I have got a book about Texas that's mighty interesting reading. Another about Oklahoma and another about New Mexico! I know you'll want to know all you can about the Pan Handle country before you go down there. They're yours for the asking.

The Rock Island-Frisco Lines have no land for sale, and are interested in getting good, energetic settlers for the desirable, but unoccupied, lands along our lines.

I have chosen several specific sections where conditions are especially favorable for new settlers, and I am advertising those sections. If you would prefer some other section than the Pan Handle country for any of the settlements of this people, write me for special literature about the section you are most interested in.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished Author and Traveler is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Non-Partisan Standpoint, and Sending Back Unbiased Reports. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

THE BOXERS AND AVENGERS HAVE TRANSFORMED CHINA

Peking, China.—Neither missions nor politics in China is comprehensible until the Boxer outbreak is understood. All roads of investigation lead back to 1900. That was the most eventful year in China's history. Already its vast economic and political significance looms so large that the massacre of more than 200 missionaries is coming to be regarded as a mere phase of a great epoch.

The Boxer trouble was the birththroes of a new China. In those terrible days the nation, all unwittingly, broke forever with her self-satisfied, self-secluded past. And the pariah-like treatment meted out to her, including all the horrible and shameful excesses of the foreign troops, and everything else that was outraged within that unprecedented orgy of lust, loot and lawlessness, has put the fear of civilization into the hearts of the Chinese. Whatever reaction may come—and I write in the midst of one—that fear cannot trace any conversions to the shining heroism of the men and women, native converts and foreigners, who laid down their lives for the gospel.

Instead, there are villages where all the Christians were murdered in 1900 into which the missionaries are still unable to penetrate. The people say that Christianity has caused them enough suffering; they want no more to do with it. In numerous communities where mission work was conducted before the massacres, there is no mission work now, although the missionary force has been increased. Similarly, for years after the troubles that inquirers concerning "the Jesus way" who had been reached through the street chapels, medical work and otherwise, were forcibly prevented by their families and friends from having anything to do with the church. All this is contrary to the expectation and preconceptions of Christendom, but the truth is more sacred than any theory.

Wherein the Boxers Failed.

Certain manifest results from the Boxer days are apparent. As already stated, that uprising, which was primarily directed against Christianity, secondarily against all foreigners, was a futile attempt to stamp out the western religion. China now knows that Christianity is here to stay, a force to be permanently reckoned with. This is an immeasurable gain for missions.

By the wiping out of mission work in North China, all the tactical mistakes of missions were obliterated. The missionaries were enabled to map out an entirely new plan of campaign. With the wisdom of experience, the most strategical places alone were reoccupied. A readjustment of forces and methods followed, which has borne fruit in a markedly increased success.

The Empress and the American.

For the reasons enumerated, and because of the spirit of progress which was imparted to China at the bayonet's point, the converts of the missionaries have not only been more numerous, since 1900, but also of a higher class as well. Before that time, while much —too much—was said about the favor of Li Hung Chang, of the presentation of Bibles to the empress, et cetera, the fact remains that the missions were reaching practically only the lowest class of Chinese. The "rice Christian" was far more in evidence then to-day. Now the sons and daughters of the highest officials attend mission schools. The social standing of the missinary has vastly improved. In Tung Chow, for instance, the proportion of gentry belonging to the church far exceeds the proportion in the community at large.

This state of affairs runs right up to the top. Probably no foreigners, certainly no foreign woman, has met the empress dowager so often as Mrs. I. T. Headland, one of the Methodist missionaries in Peking. On one occasion Miss Sheffield, of Tung Chow, met the empress, and that shrewd old woman, who seems never to forget a friend or forgive an enemy, asked, "Are you the daughter of Dr. D. Z. Sheffield, of the American board, who was so kind to Prince So-and-So, and treated him and his house so honorably during the foreign occupation?" Upon learning that her surmise was correct, the empress sent grateful messages to Dr. and Mrs. Sheffield and the other American board missionaries, whose conduct had been so greatly the reverse of hostile as they had saved the lives and property of one of the imperial princes. When, shortly afterward, Miss Sheffield was married to Dr. Steele, of the same mission, the empress sent her sumptuous presents. It is said, by the way, that the empress has richly rewarded all who assisted her in that hurried flight from the palace at the approach of the allies.

Rubbing Clothes with Murderers.

The world has never learned either the full extent of the horrors of the atrocities perpetrated by the Boxers and the allied soldiers (these last having violated every law of God and man), or of the part played by the missionaries in the siege of Peking. On the former point conditions forbid the feelings of the families and friends of the martyred missionaries has prevented a full recital of the indignities to which their bodies were subjected.

The magnanimity and the courage of missionaries now working at the scene of the Boxer troubles are beyond praise. They show no resentment, but only forgiveness. For the sake of these murderers of their friends the missionaries are glad to return. And they are unafraid, although they are not blind to their danger. They know full well that it is only the dread of the merciless and all-devastating foreign troops which keeps the Chinese from falling upon them again. At Paotingfu we were entertained at the Presbyterian compound, and Miss Bowman, a quiet, self-effaced, serene-eyed little woman from Canada, gave up her own room to us. Something was said about rugs and bureaus, and Miss Bowman replied, "You know I lost everything in the troubles, and I did not think it would be right, considering the possibility of a similar experience, to put in more expensive furniture." That was the only allusion made by Miss Bowman to the presence of danger, and she Hinerates freely out in the country; yet she lives, unruffled in spirit, in the constant presence of the realized possibility of following her friends to a martyrdom.

Yuan Shih Kai, China's Greatest Man, But Now Out of Favor and Power.

Yuan Shih Kai, China's Greatest Man, But Now Out of Favor and Power.

the nation will never again array itself blindly against the world. Furthermore, 1900 convinced China that Christianity is here to stay; the sword, the fire and the stake of torture cannot extirpate it.

Since 1900 each year in China's history has accomplished more progress than formarly was achieved in centuries. Undoubtedly this country has made greater strides in the past six years than in the preceding two millenniums. The change has been so swift, so startling, so kaleidoscopic, that the world outside cannot comprehend it. Missionaries who come back after a year's furlough have to pinch themselves to make sure that they are awake.

China's Greatest Man.

This province of Chili, which includes Peking and Tien-Tsin, affords the most extraordinary evidences of the Manchu reactionaries who now dominate Peking. It was Yuan Shih Kai who created and controlled the modern army of 70,000 men which is one of the assets of new China. It was Yuan Shih Kai who made over into a modern city a large part of old native Tien-Tsin. It was Yuan Shih Kai who established there and at Peking a police system and a fire department, and instituted regulations which have diminished to an enormous extent the filthiness of the streets. It was Yuan Shih Kai who made the narrow, rough and tortuous alleys which throughout centuries have passed for highways give way to wide, smooth, straight, avenues of approach. It was Yuan Shih Kai who fostered a system of modern education, of all branches, and who opened public reading rooms and lecture halls, thus instilling the leaven of modern progress into the minds of all young China.

To-day Yuan Shih Kai's sun is under a cloud. He has been shorn of the command of the army, of all his numerous posts except his viceroyalty, and of what is all important in Chinese politics, his enormous revenues. The Manchu reactionaries who compose the palace clique are on top; but no one expects them to attempt the mad folies of seven years ago. Hated as a reformer by these, Yuan Shih Kai is also hated by the extreme wing of reformers themselves, whom he betrayed in 1900, thus making possible the "coup d'etat" whereby the empress seized the reins of power from the feeble hands of the emperor. There is said to be a blood feud between the emperor and his most powerful subject, and all sorts of conjectures are made as to what will happen when the empress dies.

But the reform spirit grows daily. The revolutionary society is increasingly formidable. Nobody here would be surprised at a national political conflagration and revolution which would be as different from the present sporadic outbreaks as a war is from a skirmish. But, at the same time, nobody expects China to go back to the old days. From what I could glean of the opinions of Sir Robert Hart and the diplomats, merchants and missionaries, a general massacre of foreigners is not an impossibility; but it will not be by government connivance as before. And whatever comes, China is inevitably destined to become one of the nations controlled by the western ideals of civilization.

Martyrs Have Not Made Converts.

This much of the political consequences of the Boxer outbreak it has been necessary to write in order to make plain the religious conditions, with which this article is primarily concerned. On every hand I have heard in America, that "the blood of the martyrs" had again proved to be "the seed of the church." It is a surprise to find to what a slight extent this is true. Undoubtedly extraordinary progress has been made in mission work since 1900, but the direct results of the faithful testimony of the many who heroically sealed their loyalty with their lives I have looked in vain. I have talked with the missionaries in Pekin, Paotingfu, Tung Chow and other scenes of the great massacres. They sadly admit that they cannot trace any conversions to the shining heroism of the men and women, native converts and foreigners, who laid down their lives for the gospel.

Instead, there are villages where all the Christians were murdered in 1900 into which the missionaries are still unable to penetrate. The people say that Christianity has caused them enough suffering; they want no more to do with it. WEALTH BY BILLIONS

VALUE OF FARM PRODUCTS FOR THE YEAR 1907.

WHAT THE EARTH PRODUCES

Agriculturists Have it in Their Power to Curtail the Operation of Trusts and Prevent Unequal Distribution of Money.

Farms of the United States in 1907 will produce more wealth than all the mines of the world have ever produced in 20 years. Conservative estimates place the value of all farm products at approximately $7,000,000,000, or about $200,000,000 more than their value in 1906. The farmer is the magician, the alchemist, that makes use of nature to enrich the world. The farmers' corn crops alone average a billion dollars a year, and all the other cereals another billion, with cotton, tobacco, hay and flax worth another billion, and the fruit, garden truck and animals a few billions more. Thus it can be seen that the farmer, produces more wealth than all the men from it by the miners for its precious gems and minerals. There is no other foundation for the wealth and business of the world other than the land. Men cannot eat gold; the coal is only useful to him as a means of utilizing what the earth grows; there is nothing in the mineral world that will sustain life, or anything that is necessary unless mortals eat, drink and wear clothes. When there is abundance of agricultural productions there are prosperous times, and a famine when the opposite occurs. The whole financial fabric, the entire commercial system, is dependent upon the farmer, and his work.

One billion dollars is an amount beyond the comprehension of the average man. The life of an individual is not sufficiently long to count it cent by cent should he work ten hours a day, from his tenth year until death. This is the average value of the corn crop alone that the farmers of the United States produce yearly.

One would believe that if only a small portion of the vast wealth, which the farmers produce could be retained in the agricultural communities, there would be a class of rich men greater than in any commercial community. Yet statistics show that for the amount of wealth yearly produced, the farmers are retainers of only a small portion of it. The tendency is toward concentration of wealth in great financial centers. It is not the people at large who control this great wealth, that trusts are built up, and the machinery put in operation that automatically draws from the agricultural sections the great wealth produced. Farmers are at their will, living about as cheap by a simple adherence to the home trade principle; by patronizing of local business institutions instead of the concerns in the large cities.

D. M. CARR.

FOR THE HOME TOWN.

Be a "booster" for your home town. By patronising other than local institutions you are creating a boomerang that is likely to fly back and do you injury when you least expect it. No one can be an ideal citizen and talk and work against the interests of his home town. So long as you are a resident of a community, do your part toward assisting it to greater progress.

Those who are opposed to the evils of capitol concentration, the building up of trusts and work against the interests of the masses, should consider the fact that any end every system that tends to distribute instead of draw the country of the wealth it produces strengthens the system of business and financial concentration. One of the most baneful systems that at the present is working against the interests of the smaller cities and towns, and is the greatest medium of draining wealth from agricultural communities, is the mail-order plan of doing business. From some rural towns from 40 to 50 per cent. of the trade goes to foreign concerns. If that trade were confined to the home town, its business would be doubled, employment given to twice as many people; the profits accruing from mercantile business would seek local investment, and within a few years the population of the town would be more than doubled, and all living within the district would be benefited.

Every kind and class of goods have a real value, and this value is based upon the cost of the raw material, the price of the labor in producing it, and the profit of the farmer as well as the merchant that the latter use its columns freely to tell of the latest goods, goods freshly received, etc. The farmer wants to buy, and the merchants want to sell, and the farmer will buy when and where he can save money. The merchant who lets business go away from his town through lack of advertising rightly is not a very enterprising business man.

It is well to be on guard when dealing with itinerant agents, sellers of groceries, carriages, machinery, patent rights, etc. It is a pretty good idea to never take grab-bag chance when you wish to buy an article. See what you are purchasing before paying for it.

POOR GOODS, CHEAP PREMIUMS.

How Money is Sometimes Squandered in Patronizing Prize-Package Concerns.

The economical housewife is a blessing. She who will watch the prices, teas and coffees from some club-order concern with a view of getting cheap premiums that are offered with each lot of goods? There is no economy in this method. Women as well as men should remember that there is never anything of value given without an equitable compensation, and when purchased on the club plan the profits paid are generally enormous. You cannot get something for nothing. If you desire to purchase $10 or $20 worth of groceries, the best place to buy them is at some responsible grocery establishment in your own town. You can see what you are getting, and you know that the goods must be good or you can return them. When you get a premium with a lot of soaps or spices or extracts, you will find that while the goods may appear all right, there is a great chance of fraud that you little look for. The bars of soap will be of light weight, poorly dried, made of cheaper materials, and would be dear at your home store at half the price that you are compelled to pay for them. The spices will be half ground bark, and the extracts synthetic, never made from fruit flavors, but out of the dirty-looking coal-tar, a by-product of gas-manufacturing, and even the teas and coffees will be of the poorest kind and doctored up to look well. Then how about the premiums? You will find that they, too, are of the cheapest class, and could be purchased at the store for half what they are represented to be worth. Women are only doing their duty in trying to assist their husbands, but too often they waste money by patronizing premium and club concerns that operate from distant cities in small towns and rural communities.

CRIES OF THE SIREN.

Alluring Promises Made in Exaggerated Advertisements to Gain Trade.

"Don't be robbed," "Save the profits that your storekeeper makes," and many like catch phrases is the principal element in the stock of the concerns who claim to sell at "wholesale" prices direct to consumers. Their advertisements appeal to women and men who have little knowledge of commercial methods. It is the appeal of selfishness that wins for the concerns who seek business among the residents of farming districts rather than institutions instead of the concerns in the large cities.

The business of the big mail-order concerns has been gained by extensive advertising and continuous aggressive work. It has been the apathy of the merchants in the country towns that has allowed these concerns to take from them "under their very noses." Conditions that allow the steady drain of money from the agricultural districts to small towns to the big cities are to be deplored. There cannot be doubt as to the evils of the mail-order system as a factor in the concentration of wealth in the great financial centers, and the resultant building up of trusts. For the last quarter of a century the trust evil has been constantly developing and keeping pace with it, is the mail-order system. Much like the leprosy, its progress is such that the evil has a firm foothold in American attention is paid to it. The cry of "Save the dealers' profits" is synonymous with "Kill the Industries of your own town; help to build up the trust tiee firmer about your own heads." Don't be a traitor to your home town, even though there is a promise of a small saving in cents and dollars. Do your part to head off the business concentration evil.

FREE TREATMENT.

A Method That Should Cure People of the Habit of Patronizing Quack Doctors.

It matters little how widespread through the press it be the information as to frauds being operated in the country, there is always a field for the people who live by petty graft. One of the latest plans to defraud has recently been worked in a number of western states. Strangers, purporting to be agents of a free hospital, would approach a farmer, inquire as to his health, and promise him free treatment should he be ailing, claiming that the state medical department would furnish the medicine free. A lengthy statement of his complaint would be written and his signature secured. A few weeks later a note duly signed by the farmer would be presented to him by his home bank. This appears to be a fine scheme, but nevertheless more than a score of farmers in one Minnesota county were caught for from $50 to $200 each. Don't sign any contract or statement unless you are positive of its character.

Sporting Gossip.

Pitchers come close to being the decisive factors in baseball, after all is said and done. Batting by the teams is so much a matter of luck, chosen by the opposing pitchers that it is hard to arrive at a balance between the effectiveness of the pitcher and that of the batters. The only way to judge of the real batting ability of a team is by the work it does against pitchers of known efficiency, as teams and batters which hold good records against that of the weaker kind. That pitching holds the preponderances in the game over batting is shown by the fact that the best batters are doing well when they get one hit out of three times ot bat, and that when a pitcher is going at his best even the best batters fail to hit them successfully. One of the troubles in reaching e true balance in the relative importance of pitching, batting and fielding is that there is not always good pitching when the number of hits are made. There are two reasons for this. One is that the pitcher does not work with his fielders, and not a few errors are really due to bad pitching. The other is that pitchers do not always play their part in stopping base running. The catcher plays an important part in this latter respect in throwing to bases, but the pitcher is, if anything, of more importance still. The catcher must depend to no small extent upon him to hold men close to bases, and he can prevent the better from helping the base runner to advance by using the right kind of delivery. When a pitcher is twirling good helt, not only in the way of holding down the hits, but also in helping his fielders and catcher along, and doing his share in preventing base running, it is a poor team indeed which is not able to win.

If experience counts, Tom Brown, the new American league umpire, should make good easily. Brown worked in the Tri-State league until the season ended, when he was appointed by Jim Johnson and officiated in a few games before the season closed. Brown played baseball, starting out with Providence in 1882 and finishing the season with Baltimore.

TOM BROWN

He played with Columbus in 1883 and 1884, and then graduated into the National league, playing with the Boston Nationels in 1885-9. In 1890 he was a member of the Boston Brotherhood team, and a year later he associated himself with the Boston American Association team. Since 1892 he has played with Louisville and St. Louis, managed Washington, Springfield and Denver clubs, until 1902, when he branched out as a National league umpire. In 1903 he was an Eastern league official, and in 1904 handled the Indiator in the Pacific Coast league. He put in an idle year in 1905, but last year and this season he did excellent work in the Tri-State league.

American golfers are yearning for a simplification of the rules. They want to walk the links in calmneoo and serenity, unvexed by complications of a mixed and confusing code. Not long ego the executive committee of the United States Golf association sent an intimation of the frame of mind of our players to the conservators of the rules, and the committee of the Royal and Ancient Golf club of St. Andrews, Scotlnnd. In the friendly reply the latter said that the rules were to be revised and that a draft would be sent to the American committee for the consideration of the latter. Many of our golfers believe that it will be idle to tinker the old code again. It is plainly framed to suit conditions on a few Scottish links, the revisions of every five or ten years have not clarified the rules, and in some instances have created a conflict of judgments. "The rules have been added to, subtracted and divided enough," to quote an American player, "and it is time for a new act." But there must be no change in the old golf!

Dr. William Bull, who was graduated from the Sheffield scientific school in 1888 and who was one of the greatest drop kickers Yale ever had, is favorably impressed with the Yale squad and predicts a brilliant season.

Gossip of People and Events Gathered in Washington

WASHINGTON.—In the absence of President Roosevelt in the canebrake and with "Pete" the bull dog sequestered on Surgeon-General Rixey's farm, the white house grounds have not been left unguarded. A couple of bulls—not bull dogs, but real bovine bulls—have taken upon themselves the task, formerly well discharged by "Pete" of seeing that the grounds are supervised by undesirable citizens, mollycoddles or milksops.

Since the president and Pete went away newspaper men, mollycoddles and the criminal rich have roamed the white house grounds with impunity. Undesirable citizens have shown a tendency to stand on the walks and bark at the white house, and neither "Slippers," the six-toed cat, nor Quentin Roosevelt's snakes have proved oquni to the task of preserving the roquiate calm.

How the two patriotic bulls discovered the stots of thiags and decided that it was up to them to rectify it will never be known. It is a fact, however, that early the other morning they took up a position in front of the white house from which they could command both walks. The first trespasser to appear was an Afro American named Charles Lancaster. It was still dark when he arrived, and the bull at the west corner let him get a little distance by before he made up his mind as to Lancaster's undesirability. Then he discharged a bellow and advanced on the enemy, head down and tail up.

Lancaster moved eastward with some haste, and the bull did likewise. At the east corner the west bull's colleague came charging out with a few savage remarks.

Lancaster emerged from the east gate about as conservatively as a shot departs from a gun, and the two bulls fortunately got jammed in the doorway. The Afro-American never stopped till he got to the house of delegations.

How the two bulls, finding the mollycoddle crop a little short, tired of the job and wandered to Iowa Circle, where they were later arrested by a policeman and locked up.

EX-GOTHAM RAILWAY MANAGER

Herbert H. Vreeland, president of the Metropolitan Securities Co., the holding company of a number of the street railway concerns now under investigation by the public utilities commission in New York city, who resigned as manager of the New York Railway company under the federal court receivers, who appointed him to that post immediately after they took charge of the property of the insolvent corporation, is said to have presented to himself a bill for $25,000 salary and expenses, to have audited it himself and to have signed the check to pay it, without itemizing the expense account. This was testified to by Lemuel E. Quigg, who dispensed $217,307 of traction money "to mold public opinion" in favor of the traction companies.

Vreeland is said to be a direct descendant of Michael Jansen Vreeland, who came to the United States in 1636 from Broeckhausen, near Brabant. Mr. Vreeland began his career as an assistant engineer on the Long Island railway, which was shoveling gravel. He on a delivery wagon. His first railway work was shoveling gravel. He worked his way up to general manager. William C. Whitney first brought Vreeland prominently into the limelight by selecting him to bring order out of chaos in the many street railway lines which Whitney controlled. All these lines were changed from the old horse car and cable systems to electricity without a hitch on the part of Vreeland. Then Whitney, gaining complete confidence in the man, entrusted him with the financial and legal discipliaian of the sternest kind. He encouraged the organization of the 17,000 traction employes into the Mutual Benefit association, and for a number of years was president of the association. He also put into effect a pension system, the only one of its kind on any street railway in the world, to take care of the superannuated employes of the system.

Around the Metropolis

What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

NEW YORK.—The curb crowd is rapidly dwindling, and chaos reigns among the comperetively few brokers of the "outside" market who congregate on Broad street these days. At least 25 per cent. of the men who were selling unlisted stocks during the flush times have departed for more lucrative climes. Many have gone to the western mining camps, and a few have obtained positions in mercantile houses.

Stock Exchange houses that had been paying their curb representatives $50 a week have reduced the salaries to $25, and the men have not objected, being glad to get that sum. Only the salaried men on the curb are making money enough to live on. The veterans of the curb are in a measure pleased by this gradual elimination, for it is taking from the market what are known as "wildcat" traders, men who come there to make money any way and on any stock. These have been the first to go, and conservative men do not mourn their departure.

The effect of the lack of business in the outside market is pronounced in many ways. The traders, for instance, in flush times smoked Perfectos cigars and bought the best that the dealers in the financial district had. Since the slump in the market started they have taken to pipes, and now smoke a cheap mixture of tobacco, which they buy in bulk and load. The high-priced cafes have been deserted for cheap restaurants.

Formerly Commissioner Bingham's guardians of the peace were kept busy preventing the brokers during the dull periods matching coins. Now they have nothing to do, for money is so scarce on the curb and in the pockets of the brokers that they are not inclined to risk it. Again, every baseball and football game and horse race was made the excuse for a bet. Now the handbook men who reaped large harvests have departed to other fields, and no betting of any consequence is indulged in. Telephones have recently been given up by brokers, and arbitrage wires have been cut out of the offices of some of the largest brokers, as they, from the top to the bottom, from the employer to the messenger boy, there is sadness in Broad street.

ACT OF "DRYS" MAY EMBARRASS ROOSEVELT

IF congress at the coming session prohibits the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, as now seems probable, President Roosevelt will be in on embarrassing position—the prohibitionists say "between the devil and the deep sea."

For tactical reasons the prohibitionists will tack their bill to an appropriation measure so as to expedite its passage. Should an appropriation bill comes before the president he will have to decide, first, whether he can afford to jeopardize the interests of the branch of the government to which either and a dozen in the ottic set aside as a storeroom for liquors.

He did away with them both. The cellar is now used for machinery and the dark room is a part of the quarters for the servants.

furnish no wine to guests at the White House. There is no power on earth that can compel the president to observe any low.

As all writs in the District of Columbio run in his name, it is obvious that he would not arrest himself for disregarding the law. That he had disregarded it would be notice to all peace officers that he decided not to enforce it against himself.

All presidents of the United States have on times set wine before their guests. Until Theodore Roosevelt became president the White House had its wine cellar and a darker room in the

DRINK MIXER TO MAGNATE

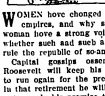
From o mixer of drinks to a dealer in jugglery is the life story in brief of Anthony N. Brady, the man who, it was brought out in the Metropolitan Street Railway company investigation, sold the Metropolitan a paper street car line for $965,607.15. As a wearer of the blue white apron Brady used to set the glasses out on the bar for some of the men he is now interested with in some of the biggest deals that ever were acted in Wall street.

Brady's first job was that of bortender in the bar of the old Delavan house in Albany. There are those who yet remember that when the young man across the mahogany mixed a cocktail he did it so well that the taste of its drink lingered long. Also young Brady was obliging and of a friendly disposition and he soon won the favor of many of the politicians and capitalists who resorted to the state capital, and their influence stood him in good stead in later years.

The bartender saved his money and in a few years he had enough to start a tea store. He made a study of tea (one of Brady's characteristics is that when he becomes interested in an enterprise he masters all its intricacies) and his store was soon such a success that he established others in Albany and then cut into other towns.

About this time Brady saw the possibilities of granite as a material for paving and building, and secured possession of all the quarries that were available. There was a boom in granite, and Brady was quickly roted as a rich man. Next Brady developed an interest in Albany gas; and he went to Roswell P. Flower, whose acquaintance he had made in his bartending days, with a scheme for controlling Albany lighting. The banker-politician financed the scheme, and both men made o vost omount of money out of it.

GOTHAM THE GREATEST THEATRE CITY IN WORLD



NEW YORK is the greatest theater city in the world. Its growth, theatrically, has been phenomenal since 1826, when the Bowery theater was built, in which went the large audiences of those days to hear Forrest, the elder Booth, Charlotte Cushman and others only a little less in ability. Since then the theater center, by easy stages, has come to Broadway at about Forty-second street, with its arms reaching out into the other boroughs until now the city has 36 places of amusement filled with pleasure seekers during the season.

While New York, with its 4,500,000 of population, has 96 places of amusement, London, with 6,500,000 in its metropolitan district, has 78, and though average n smaller ottendance than do these in New York, and during the season there is a large proportion of New Yorkers in their audiences. Theater for theater, New York hos more money invested in buildings and fittings than London.

At the height of the New York amusement seoson there are oe mony as 114,000 persons in its places of public amusement in oce night. They are now rapidly approaching, thet condition since the home-coming season has set in, and the number of strangers is increasing with the advneing autumn. The attendance is now growing from night to night, and is particularly noticeable in the houses where are the more successful plays.

Then New Yorkers ore noturol theotor attendents and many of them take on of their relaxotion in this monner. This is true of the mon with a small salory oe well on of the man of wealth, and vast sacrifices ore often modo to eave money for theater tickets.

PLEDGE TO WIFE KEEPS TEDDY FROM THIRD TERM

WOMEN hove chonged the faces of empires, and why should not a woman hove a strong voice in soying whether such and such a man should rule the republic of so-and-so?

Capital gossips ossert Theodore Roosevelt will keep his promise not to run orain for the presidency, and is that retirement he will be fulfilling not merely his promise to the people but his pledge to his wife.

Mrs. Roosevelt has informed exceedingly close friends that her husband and she long ago decided that, purely as a family affair, not a political one, they and theirs would leave the white house on March 4, 1909.

It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt reluctantly consented to introduce her young daughter Ethol to Washington society, probably in Christmas week of 1908.

Mrs. Roosevelt, says the confidante, is determined to shield Ethel from the publicity that came to Alice Roosevelt and she would prefer that the former girl wait until the family should be established in private life. Still she realizes what it is for a young girl to make her social bow in the white house, and for that reason she will grant to Ethel just three months as a social grown-up.

Mrs. Roosevelt from the first bour of the president's tenancy has been solicitous about its effect on her children. Often she has pleaded with persons not to spoil the children and has exerted all her influence to keep all their doings out of print.

It is likely Miss Roosevelt will spend the two years after she leaves Washington in traveling abroad and studying modern languages. She will not be 18 antil the summer of 1909.

STANDARD OIL OFFICIAL

Charles M. Pratt, who has been giving the most startling evidence in the suit to "bust" the Standard Oil trust, is one of the younger men who has done in comparative obscurity the real work of the trust. So carefully has he avoided the limelight, that few people have ever heard of him, although he has long been a director and secretary of the company.

To the surprise of everyone, Mr. Pratt has been a frank witness. He admitted that when the Standard Oil Co. of Ohio was "dissolved" by the courts it was simply reorganized. The stockholders of the old company were the stockholders of the new, and each held his proportion of the stock. It was the same company under a new name.

Mr. Pratt is the son of Charles Pratt, one of the founders of the Standard Oil Co. He has accumulated considerable wealth of his own, for while the elder Pratt left 22,302 shares of Standard Oil stock, his son has now accumulated 6,000 shares of his own. Mr. Pratt has two sons at college, and if their tastes lie in the same direction as their father's they too will be found in the future employ in overalls and learn the business from the ground up, just as their father and their uncle did, for Mr. Pratt's younger brother is now in the refining department of the company.

DAILY VISITS OF WIFE SOLE COMFORTS OF THAW

VISITING him daily in his cell at the Tombs, Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw is the sole comfort of her husband these days. Deserted by her husband's friends and left almost in the lurch by her counsel, who seem to carry cheer from the outside world to the men whose love for her caused him to kill Stanford White, the actress-wife has been faithful and uncomplaining.

Alone in her apartments in the Lorraine, the young wife seems to have been a prisoner herself, for her only ventures out of doors have been to the street, from where Thaw sits planning when they will take a trip to Europe. Her visits mar lift Thaw to cheerful hopefulness, for, of all those connected with the case, he is the most certain of acquittal in the next trial.

Although this strain of more than a year has told on the beautiful model, Evelyn Thaw still retoins the girlish appearance and olmost childlike demeanor. There are times that she has entered the living room of her husband pale and wan, but the clouds disappear before she reoches her husband. Her mission there is to carry sunshine.

While showing this devotion to Thaw, the wife gained one distinction last summer. She was the only wife of a millionaire who remained in hot New York while the summer resorts were open.

Thaw's buoyoncy is remarkoble. Far from fading and wasting away, the prison officials say that he eats like a laborer and his moody spells seem to have disappeared.

Thaw, for once, seems to be pleased with the legal arrangements, and appears willing to have his case in the hands of attorneys.

WINTER LIFE AT CAPITAL ATTRACTIVE TO WOMEN

THE fascination of Washington as a place of residence especially to those who have tasted the delights of official life, is once more illustrated by the announcement that Mrs. John E. Reyburn, wife of the recently elected mayor of Philadelphia, will continue her home at the national capital, notwithstanding her husband's position as the municipal chief of the city of Brotherly Love.

Quite another type of woman seeking a residence in Washington as a relief from a less satisfying city is Mrs. Thomas F. Ryan, wife of New York's great financier, who last season bought and furnished the former residence of the late Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnston with a view to passing her winters in Washington. Right in the heart of the smartest residence section with Representative and Mrs. Longworth as her immediate neighbors, Mrs. Ryan lives entirely apart from the social world.

Everybody, or nearly everybody, socially speaking, called on Mrs. Ryan, of conrse, but few persons got beyond the white and yellow portal, which is guarded by a sphinxlike butler, who gently informs all comers his mistress is "not at home." Within a week each person leaving a card receives one in return, with the written message that Mrs. Ryan regrets she is unable to receive or make visits.

To the few who have been fortunate enough to make her acquaintance and win her friendship, Mrs. Ryan is a gracions kindly woman of strong personality, interested in the affairs of the world as far as an intelligent appreciation of life goes, but far removed from its frivolities.

MAY BE AMBASSADOR

David Jayne Hill, minister to the Netherlands, it is reported, will succeed Charlemagne Tower as ambassador to Germany, taking over all the numberless problems that are continually arising from the restrictions placed upon American trade, and the annoyances to which German-American citizens are subjected in the Fatherland. Mr. Hill has several qualifications which will fit him for the post. He has made a special study of European relations, has a charming manner and speaks German fluently. Mrs. Hill is descended from German forefathers, but the family has been American since the Revolution. She combines wit, beauty and fascinating personality, and speaks German, French and Spanish as fluently as she does her native tongue.

The Hills are not so wealthy as their predecessors in Berlin.

Mr. Hill was a college professor at the age of 29. He served ten years as president of the University of Rochester, resigning that position to accept the chair of history and study international law. His work in organizing travel in Europe and study international law. His work in organizing a school of diplomacy in connection with the George Washington university attracted favorable notice, and in 1898 Mr. McKinley made him assistant secretary of state. It was said in Washington that he was not liked by President Roosevelt, and when the latter sent him as minister to Switzerland it was said to be a case of ordering him. Two years later he was transferred to the more important post of minister to the Netherlands.

FAMOUS POLITICAL CENTER WILL SOON DISAPPEAR

THE Passing of the Fifth Avenue hotel will mark the disappearance of the last of the city's hotels possessing a distinctively political atmosphere. The Fifth Avenue hotel has been the center of Republican activity in New York almost ever since the party came into existence.

Until the last campaign the party headquarters for the state was in the hotel, and during the years when Thomas C. Platt was the boss he resided there. Now Platt, boss no longer, has moved to an obscure side street, and only a few old-time politicians are to be met wandering through the corridors of the famous building on Madison square.

The Hoffman house once occupied a position in democratic politics similar to that of the Fifth Avenue in Republican affairs, but the old building has been replaced by a new one, much as the old leaders of Democracy have been.

About the only prominent political figure at present closely identified with any metropolitan hotel is Gov. Hughes, who has announced that his legal residence is the Hotel Astor, frooting on Broadway, at Longacre squore. If the Hughes political star rises as far as the governor's admirer's expect, it may be that the new Astor will fall heir to the political glorioe of the old Fifth Avenue. It is more probable, however, that the fate of the great new establishements like the Astor and the varied interests centered in them will prevent them from becoming famed especially for their political importance.

GERMANY WINNER IN BALLOON RACE

POMMERN CAPTURES BENNETT CUP, TRAVELING 990 MILES FROM ST. LOUIS.

L'lale Da France Second—Only the Ocean Checked Wonderful Flight—Lincoln Beachey Wins the Dirigible Airship Contest.

St. Louis, Oct. 24—Proclaimed as the most remarkable ballooning contest in the history of the world's aeronautics, with every racing record broken, the second international cup competition, which started from here on Monday last, ended Wednesday with Germany accorded the winning laurels.

The finish of the race was the closest and most exciting the followers of the sport have ever known, the victorious Germans balloon, the Pommern which landed at Asbury Park Wednesday morning, having but slightly more than five miles the advantage of the French contestant, L'lalo de France, second in the race, which descended during the afternoon at Hertbertville, N. J., a few miles from the Atlantic coast and slightly northwest of Point Pleasant.

Another German balloon, the Dusseldorf, stands third in the race. American entries are fourth and fifth, a third German team is sixth, a French team seventh, American eighth and English ninth.

Pommern Made 880 Miles.

The unofficial estimated air-line flight of the Pommern is 880 miles, and that of the L'lale de France is 875. The Dusseldorf landed near Dover, Del., and is estimated to have covered 790 miles. The official measurements will be computed at the geological survey of the United States government at Washington.

Only the proximity of the Atlantic ocean stopped the wonderful flight of the Pommern. The balloon could have remained in the air many hours longer and undoubtedly would have sailed several hundred miles in her record but for the expanse of water ahead.

French Make Duration Record.

While losing the distance record and possession of the cup, the French team selling L'lale do Franco gained the honor of the world's record for duration of flight. Starting from here at 4:10 p. m. (central time), they landed at 1:10 p. m. (eastern time), making their time in the air just 44 hours. The previous record was 41 hours 5 minutes, held by Count de la Vaulx, of France.

Germany having won possession of the silver trophy, presented by James Gordon Bennett, the race next year will be in the home of the German Aero club. Final possession of the trophy rests with the club which wins it three times. Aside from possession of the cup, the Germans won a cash prize of $2,500, also donated by Mr. Bennett.

Beachey Wins Airship Race.

Sailing to windward and return over a course measuring one mile and a half from start to finish, Lincoln Beachey, of Toledo, O., won the dirigible balloon or airship race Wednesday, which marked the close of the St. Louis aeronautic carnival of 1907. The prize was $2,000. In his "Beachey airship," a cigar-shaped affair propelled by a four-cylinder gasoline motor, the winner covered the distance in four minutes and forty seconds.

Busch Offers Balloon Race Cup.

St. Louis, Oct. 26.—In a letter addressed to G. H. Walker, representing the Aero club of St. Louis, Adolphus Busch announced Friday that he would offer a cup valued at $1,000 as the trophy for a balloon race to be held here next year and open to the world. The cup, to be known as the "Busch cup," is to be raced for annually by balloonists, starting in St. Louis, and any contestant winning it three times will be entitled to retain it.

ALFONSO HAS TUBERCULOSIS.

King of Spain Will Consult Specialist in London.

Madrid, Oct. 26.—The alarming reports circulated earlier in the morning regarding the health of King Alfonso appear to be confirmed. It is understood the king, who will travel under the strictest incognito, arrived at Toledo during his comlog visit to London, will submit to the examination of a specialist in tuberculosis, from which disease his father died. The king's open air life thus far has kept the hereditary disposition in abeyance and an operation was performed on him recently in the hope of checking the growing symptoms of consumption.

Miss Gould at Leavenworth.

Leavenworth, Kan., Oct. 24.—Miss Helen M. Gould was present Wednesday at the dedicatory services of the new army Y. M. C. A. building at Fort Leavenworth, given to the soldiers by Miss Gould.

Iowa Central Shops Burned.

Marshalltown, Ia., Oct. 26.—Fire Friday night destroyed the lowa Central car shops, paint shops, machinery, stock, coaches, box and flat cars and lumber, entailing a loss of $300,000.

Novelist and Poet Dies.

Hopkinsville, Ky., Oct. 26.—Hanson Penn Dilts, aged 50, novelist, poet and journalist, died Friday of an accidental overdose of chloral taken to relieve pain.

MOORS DEFEAT THE FRENCH

DRIVE DRUDE'S TROOPS BACK TO CASABLANCA'S WALLS.

Spanish Warship Helps Save the City —Castle Anfioos, Full of Treasure, Is Menaced.

Tangier, Oct. 23.—According to semi-official information received at the Spanish legation here Tuesday, the French forces at Casablanca, under the command of Gen. Drude, suffered a serious repulse at the hands of the Moors Monday.

Moorish troops, estimated to number 7,000 men and equipped with field guns and modern rifles, not only drove the French back to the city walls, but menaced the town to the extent that the French authorities found it expedient to request aid from a Spanish warship in the harbor to repel the attack.

Castle Anfioos, located at Timzourin, near Mogador, which is known to hold half a million dollars, is endangered by the advance of the Third division under Moulai Hafid. The castle is being defended by Caid Anfioos himself, who represents Sultan Abd-El-Aziz in the south.

WESTINGHOUSE COMPANIES HIT.

Put into Receivers' Hands Because of Money Market Stringency.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 24.—The Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing company, the Westinghouse Machine company and the Security Investment company, a holding company for the Westinghouse interests, were put in the hands of receivers appointed by Judge Ewing, of the United States circuit court, Wednesday.

The Pittsburg stock exchange was closed promptly when informed of the situation by the Pittsburg Clearing House association.

Statements issued by George Westinghouse, prominent bankers, officers of the stock exchange and the clearing house committee show conclusively that the financial position here is sound, and there is no danger.

The severe stringency in the money market is solely responsible for the Westinghouse difficulties. The solvency of the embarrassed companies is not questioned.

NEVADA BANK CLOSES DOORS.

Carson Concern with Several Branches Runs Short of Money.

Reno, Nev., Oct. 24.—The State Bank and Trust company, with head quarters at Carson and branches at Goldfield, Tonopah, Manhattan and Blair, closed its doors Wednesday morning. The state bank examiner is in charge.

The difficulty is due to inability to realize on stocks placed as securities for a $400,000 loan made to the Sullivan Trust company last year. T. B. Hickey, president of the bank, is one of the wealthiest men in the state, and the bank's assets are thought to exceed its liabilities. No fear is entertained that depositors will lose a cent. Hickey is now in San Francisco.

RUSSIA TO KEEP HER WHEAT?

Rumor That Emperor Will Forbid Exportation of Grain.

Portland, Ore., Oct. 24.—The Oregonian says that private cables were received in Portland late Wednesday from Liverpool stating that there is a well grounded rumor in circulation to the effect that the emperor of Russia will issue a ukase forbidding the exportation of wheat from Russia, as was done in 1892. The paper ventures the prediction that following this announcement, grain charters will go to 45 shillings or better.

Convicted Man Jumps Bail.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 24.—Charles S. Cameron, president of the Pittsburg Coal & Tube Railroad company, a line not yet constructed, failed to answer to his name when called for sentence before Judge Fraser in the criminal court Wednesday. Bonds amounting to $12,000 were declared forfeited by the court. Cameron and C. R. Richardson, a broker, were convicted some time ago of conspiracy to bribe councilmen.

Illinois Editors Choose Officers.

Joliet, Ill., Oct. 24.—The Illinois Daily Newspaper association closed its annual convention Wednesday, to meet in Chicago on the third Tuesday in May, 1908. Officers elected are: President, E. E. Bartlett, Rockford; vice president, H. M. Pindell, Peoria; secretary, A. A. Dale, Galesburg; treasurer, W. W. Millar, Quincy; directors, Verne E. Joy, Centralia; W. F. Short, Springfield; J. H. McKeever, Moline.

Back at the White House.

Washington, Oct. 24.—President Roosevelt reached the White House from his southern trip Wednesday afternoon. He said he was thoroughly pleased with his journey, and glad to be home again. He was gratified especially by the warm reception he received in the south.

Mikado Decorates an American.

Tokio, Oct. 24.—The emperor has conferred upon Judge Thomas Burke, head of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition commission of Seattle, the Order of the Third Class of the Rising Sun.

Killed by Fall from Window.

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 25.—A. G. Frey, a salesman of Springfield, O., fell from the window of his room on the seventh floor of the Seelbach hotel Thursday evening and was instantly killed.

STILL WAITING FOR GOOD ROADS.

NAVY NEEDS MORE MONEY NEXT YEAR

CABINET CONSIDERS SECRETARY METCALF'S ESTIMATES OF EXPENSES.

Canal Locks Discussed—Some Naval Officers Think Them Too Narrow—Congress May Be Asked for Three New Battleships.

Washington, Oct. 26.—Navel matters occupied the attention of the cabinet during a considerable part of Friday's meeting. Secretary Metcelf has just completed the compilation of the estimates for the maintenance of the naval establishment, and as these show a great increase as compared with the current fiscal year, thereby promising to cause much debate in congress at the approaching session, the president and the secretary of the navy are giving their most earnest attention to them.

The secretary advanced a proposition to increase by $5,000,000 the standing appropriation for the pay ment of enlisted men in the navy. According to his estimate, this increase would admit of the recruitment of about 3,000 blue jackets in addition to the present force. The proposition was received with favor and will be included in the estimates to be submitted to congress.

Wider Locks for the Canal.

Another matter, not entirely naval in character but deemed worthy of report by Secretary Metcalf because of its influence upon the character of naval vessels to be constructed in the future, was the recommendation of the isthmian canal commission, brought to Washington a few days ago by Civil Engineer Rossean, looking to the widening of the locks of the Panama canal, and this subject was discussed at some length.

Some naval officers, whose views were reflected by Secretary Metcalf, held that a width of 100 feet in the locks would be quite sufficient to meet all naval needs within the next half century, but it appeared that another element believes that the locks would prove too narrow in the course of ten years. The president decided to await a detailed report from the canal commission upon this important subject.

May Ask Three Battleships.

Secretary Metcalf also has before him the report of the naval general board, headed by Admiral Dewey, upon the new construction required to meet the plans of the board, and this was touched upon incident to the construction of the width of the canal locks.

It is pointed out that by reason of the fact that he last year expressed the opinion that one new ship would be all that should necessarily be authorized at this congress, the president has somewhat embarrassed himself, but as several of the battleships which were last year supposed to be perfectly serviceable have since proved to be unsafe type, it is not apprehended that the president will have any difficulty in explaining to congress the necessity for amending the original estimate, for it is now quite certain that no less than two and probably three battleships of the first order will be recommended in the estimates.

Automobile Kills $8,000 Horse.

Pittsburg Pa., Oct. 26.—A horse valued at $8,000 by its owner, H. Verrack, of Buffalo, N. Y., sent here for the horse show, which will open next week, had to be shot Friday after an automobile had struck it, breaking both hind legs. The driver of the automobile, George Schuman, was arrested.

Col. Stephen L. Littler Dies.

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 26.—Col. Stephen L. Littler, a capitalist, died Friday of typhoid fever, aged 37 years. During Gov. Tanner's administration he was a member of the governor's personal staff.

DR. W. R. GILLETE CONVICTED

FORMER INSURANCE MAN FOUND GUILTY OF PERJURY.

First Conviction in Cases Based on Disclosures in New York Legislative Inquiry.

New York, Oct. 25.—The first conviction in the cases based on the disclosures in the legislative investigation of insurance affairs in 1905-1906 was obtained by the district attorney's office Thursday night when a jury in the criminal branch of the supreme court found Dr. Walter R. Gillete, former vice president of the Mutual Life Insurance company, guilty of perjury in the third degree.

The verdict was accompanied with a recommendation for mercy. The maximum penalty for this degree of perjury is ten years' imprisonment.

The jury was out one hour and 25 minutes. In the interval Dr. Gillete chatted with his son and daughter. If he was at all nervous he did not betray his state of mind. When called to face the jury, however, he pale of perceptibly, the pallor giving way to a flush as he heard the verdict. For a moment he appeared surprised, but promptly recovered himself.

Dr. Gillete is 57 years of age and is well known in medicine from the practice of which he retired some years ago. He was born in Philadelphia.

The specific charge upon which Dr. Gillete was found guilty was that he had testified falsely before the grand jury on May 24, at which time he was vice president of the Mutual. The indictment alleged that Gillete, under examination by District Attorney Jerome, stated that certain moneys in the Dodds Ferry bank were his personal funds, and that subsequently under a cross examination he admitted that he there were really the property of the Mutual Life.

COOKE AND McREYNOLDS LOSE.

Illinois Supreme Court Confirms Conviction of Two Chicagoans.

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 25.—The decision of the appellate court affirming the six-month term in the circuit court of Cook county, which found John A. Cooke guilty of embezzlement, and the sentence of Circuit Court of Cook county, and sentenced him to imprisonment in the penitentiary was affirmed by the supreme court Thursday. The supreme court found no grounds for error in the case.

The supreme court also affirmed the judgment of the criminal court of Cook county, which found George S. McReynolds guilty of embezzlement and sentenced him to the penitentiary. McReynolds had issued warehouse certificates against grain owned by himself and his own elevator, and deposited the receipts as collateral for money borrowed from banks on the grain, and when the receipts were redeemed there was no grain in the warehouse.

HELPED WIFE COMMIT SUICIDE.

Jamaa Wardell, of New York, Convicted of Manslaughter.

New York, Oct. 26.—Charged with having aided his wife Laura to commit suicide on June 7 last, James Wardell Friday was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree. Wardell's defense was that his wife had committed suicide without his knowledge. The woman was found dead with a bullet wound in her head, but an autopsy showed that she had died from gas asphyxiation and that the bullet was fired into her body after death. Wardell, who is 22 years old, was remanded for sentence on Thursday next.

DEATH BY FIRE.

Exploding Coal Stove in Boarding Car Kills Two Men.

Walhalla, N. D., Oct.26.—Fire destroyed the office car of the O. Sutherland construction camp at Hokett, nine miles north of here at 4 o'clock in the morning, burning Foreman Mike Hannahan so that his bones remain, and William Stanbury, the time keeper, was so badly burned that his chances for recovery are very light. Both men were asleep in the car and it is thought fire started by the stove exploding and that they were partially smothered before they were awakened.

The night watchmen heard the explosion and saw the fire start and awakened the balance of the crew to save the train which was done by uncoupling the car.

Coal Deposits Found.

St. Cloud, Minn., Oct. 26.—A fair grade of lignite coal, close to the surface, in large deposits, overlaid by clay, and which is believed to have a commercial value worthy of investigation, has been uncovered on the land of a farmer in Benton county. Tests have been conducted in the offices of local attorneys, and the test showed a good grade.

Introduced Liquor.

Yankton, S. D., Oct. 28.—Abraham Four Generations and Charles Thundercloud, two Yankton Sioux, have been bound over by United States Commissioner E. S. White to the federal court on charge of introducing liquor into the reservation.

Husking Union.

Fort Dodge, Iowa.—The example set in other sections of the state has been followed in Blackhawk county, where the farmer boys have formed a corn husking trust, and a cent a bushel will be paid this year by all owners in order to get their crops gathered, unless outside help is imported. Meetings have been held at country school houses, and the young farmers are well organized. The movement is general thru the county, and fully 200 members have pledged themselves not to husk a bushel for less than 2 cents.

Everything Bad.

A prominent farmer recently had occasion to visit some of his holdings in southern Arkansoe. The land was situated several miles from a railroad, and it was necessory to finish the journey lo o buggy. So he took a hand with him and started out.

After traversing several miles of sporsely settled country, they came upon a man plowing corn on the side of e hill. The planter, whiling to appear civil to his neighbors, stopped his horse and yelled at the man, who came to the fence, mopping his face with a red bandana.

"Good morning, mister!"

"Mornlo', mister!"

"You live here, I suppose?"

"Yep."

"How's crops?"

"Fair to middlin'."

"That's a bad hill you're plowing."

"I know it. Bad hoss, pullin' th' plow, bad plow, bad everything."

"Why, you talk like you were the poorest man in Arkansos," laughed the planter.

"Well, though," was the response, as the young fellow smiled goodnaturedly, "Another feller owns half o' this crop."

Not Discharged.

An old Antebellum negro in o small southern town was orrested and brought before the village magistrate for drunkenness. He asked for a lowyer who had helped him out of scrapes before, and the magistrate sent for the attorney.

The young man came into the little court room and listened while the spectator had gathered, and asked the old negro: "Well, William, whot are you charged with this time?"

Sadly the ancient dorky replied: "Boss, I'e eborged wid whisky!"—Harper's Weekly.

Had Tried It.

"You ought to wear glosses. They'll sovo your eye," cold hie friead.

"Nuttin' in it," contemptiously answered the victim of fate. "I tought dey would meself wunst, an' I put on o pair when I heard a big chap wuz lyin' fur me. He said he saw me, yew know, to hit o men wid glasses on 'im. Well, sir, de big chap happened along. He couldn't see over, tried dem glasses off me face, on' den he bunged me eye up, good an' proper."

TAKE THEM OUT

Or Feed Them Food They Can Study On.

When a student begins to break down from lack of the right kind of food, there are only two things to do: either take him out of school or feed him properly on food that will rebuild the brain and nerve cells. That food is Grape-Nuts.

A boy writes from Jamestown, N.Y., saying: "A short time ago I got into a bad condition from overwork, but Mother having heerd about Grape-Nuts food began to feed me on it. It has not been long before I was over my other food, and the results were marvelous. I got fleshy like o good fellow. My nervousness headaches disappeared, and I found I could study for a long period without feeling the least tired.

"My face was pale and thin, but in less than a month after beginning to use now round and has considerable color. In strength as well as flesh, and it is a pleasure to study now that I am not bothered with my head. I passed each of my examinations with o reasonably good percentage, extre good in some of them. That is Grape-Nuts that has saved me from o yesr's delay in entering college.

"I will be glad ther after bove both been improved by the use of Grape-Nuts. Mother woe troubled with sleepless nights and got very thin, and looked care worn. She hss gained her normal strength end looks, and sleeps well nights." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Mystery Cleared Up.

Duluth—The mysterious disappearance of Fred Patarson of Two Harbors a year ago has been cleared up, but just how he came to his death may never be known.

The skeleton of a man lying beside the skeleton of a buck deer was found in the woods between the Split Rock and the Gooseberry rivers, and from some articles found in the clothing it is believed that the disappearance of Peterson has been solved. The rifle that Peterson carried has also been identified. The weapon lay near the skeleton.

The mystery now is, How did Peterson get killed? Had he killed the deer and was he packing it out of the woods, or did the himself misteken for a deer and shot? Did Petarson wound the deer whose skeleton lay on the ground, and did the animal attack and kill him? The theory of people who have investigated the case is that the buck, after being wounded, had attacked and slain the hunter.

A Deep Water Way.

Washington—"A navigable depth of water in the Mississippi from Minneapolis to its mouth, sufficient to carry heavy freights, is bound to come in the future, near or remote," said F. H. Newell, chief of the reclamation service.

Mr. Newell is a member of the inland waterways commission, members of which recently made an inspection of the Mississippi from St. Paul to the mouth, part of the time being with President Roosevelt.

"The time when the deep waterway project is approved by congress depends upon getting the people interested," continued Mr. Newell. "Of course, the people residing in the country immediately contiguous to the great river are enthusiastic over the the project. I mean that other people should be informed as to the value of making the river available for traffic along its entire length."

State Assets.

Minneapolis—According to the tax lists for 1907, Minnesota is a "billion dollar state" for the first time in its history. Last year the real estate assessment of Minnesota was $783,-583,000. The tax commission has added $121,000,000 in one lump, on the assessment of the iron mining properties. New assessments of real estate, for tracts added to the tax rolls and for improvements, add another three or four millions to the total, bringing the real estate valuation up to $875,000,000 in round numbers. Personal property was increased about $5,000,000 this year, and without deducting the exemptions will reach $190,000,000, bringing the total for taxable property in the state to $1,065,000,000. Even deducting the exemptions the figure will be at least $50,000,000 in excess of a billion dollars.

Lynx Came to Town.

Crookston—A big Canadian lynx was shot in the heart of the city of Crookston within half a block of Main and Robert streets, the busiest corner of the city. The animal was first sighted early in the morning by a boy on his way to work. He at once notified the police, and the latter, armed with rifles, started in search of the animal. The lynx was finally located in the rear end of a building on Robert street, and was shot as it was trying to escape. The animal is a fine specimen of the species, and is said to be the largest ever killed in this section of the country. It is supposed that the animal came down from the Red Lake river country, and was attracted to the city by the numerous rabbits that are found in the woods in the vicinity of Crookston.

Farmers Interested.

Crookston—The farmers of the Red river valley are showing decided interest in the fitting annual meeting of the Red River Valley Dairyman's association, which will be held in this city on Nov. 5 and 7. J. R. Morley and L. Sweet, of the State Dairyman's association, will deliver addresses. J. G. Moore, of Wisconsin, formerly secretary of the State Dairymen's association, will also be in attandance.

Sauk Rapids—Matt Fleigic received a check for $548 for 680 bushels, which he raised on seven acres of land. A few years ago he purchased this land for $5 an acre. He raised enough hay from it by the first crop to pay for the land.

Minneapolis—Soo Line train No. 75, west bound from St. Paul, crashed into a string of freight cars drawn by a Great Western engine, and delayed traffic on the Northern Pacific road between the twin cities for more than two hours.

Grand Meadow—An insane man about 20 years old was found stark naked in a barn in this village. His clothes were with him, but he refused to put them on until forced to do so by the officer. He had not been shaved for many months and seemed half starved.

Sauk Rapids—A rig occupied by Charles Peterson and Nick Wiedera was struck by a passenger train one and one-half miles this side of Rice. Peterson was hurled fifty feet in the air, one arm and several ribs being broken in the fall, besides receiving internal injuries.

St. Paul—It will be necessary for the state of Minnesota to borrow about three-quarters of a million dollars from the twin city banks very shortly, or else hold back payment for some time of special state aid to the school districts of the state. If the banks are unwilling to loan now on account of the crop needs, the schools will have to wait.

Winona—George Kromer has been arrested here by Sheriff Farr and has confessed to having sold jewelry stolen from Cohen's jewelry store in Minneapolis recently by James Moran and Jack Kline, who are now being held at La Crosse, having been arrested there through Sheriff Farr. The two rings recovered are valued at $1,500.

Duluth—Ole Hanson of 1915 First street was killed today in a thrilling manner. He worked at the Minneapolis docks here, and while going from one dock pocket to another slipped on the icy timbers and plunged sixty feet through one pocket into the hold of the steamer Sylvania. Hanson was twenty-six years old and has relatives at Cloquet.

Mankato—Samuel Mace, a prominent Brown's farmer, is suffering from a broken leg, dislocated knee and other injuries due to an accident while plowing. The horses overturned his plow and dragged it over him. He stopped them and unhitched them and climbed upon the back of one and rode home, but it was several hours before surgical assistance could be secured.

St. Paul—Mrs. Josie Raverty attacked her mother-in-law, Mrs. O'Connell, with a butcher knife at their home and but for the interference of neighbors might have killed the aged woman.

ANOTHER DREYFUS AFFAIR.

Franch Officers Arrested as Traitors —One, a Jew, Confesses.

Paris, Oct. 26.—The arrest of Engineer Charles D. Ullmo, of the French navy, at Toulon Thursday, on the charge of being a spy and his confession to having intrusted to secret naval signal book and the naval cipher code, was followed Friday by the arrest at Vendome of an officer named Berton, who is charged with negotiations with an agent of a foreign power for the sale of military secrets.

The arrests are creating a great stir, as Ullmo is a Hebrew, the papers term his case a second Dreyfus affair.

It appears that Ullmo offered certain documents to the minister of marine for $30,000, saying that unless his offer was accepted he would sell them to a foreign power. A dummy correspondence was begun, ending with Ullmo's capture.

A search of his lodgings revealed that he not only possessed the secret code signals, but was in possession of complete plans for the mobilization of the French navy, the location of harbor mines in the event of war, photographs of the mechanism of France's famous 75-millimetre field gun, etc.

KEPT HIS ENGAGEMENT.

Was Ready to Make Good on the Hot Air Proposition.

"I'm not much for a hand at card playing," said a thoughtful looking man the other day, "but I couldn't help listening to the line of hot air, fourflush talk that a fellow behind me on the Euclid beach car a few nights ago was handing to a girl. He kept it up all the way from East Ninth street clear out to the beach.

"Most of the talk he was getting off was about the princely salary his firm had to put up to keep him and about how smooth he was.

"I turned around and looked at the two of them out of the tail of my eye, and then I knew how he managed to get away with it, for the girl was one of those willow looking affairs that would believe you if you told her you were the men that built Niagara falls. I was tempted to lamp an him and he looked to me like a man whom you could rob of an entire two weeks' salary and yet commit only petit larceny.

"But I couldn't help listening to his talk, for when he left he gave him give the girl his telephone number. 'Call me up some afternoon when you're in town,' he said, 'and we'll have lunch together.'

"I jotted down his phone number and waited to get some slow to his name. By and by I heard her call him Frank, and I thought that would do.

"Two days after that about noon I had my stenographer call up his number and ask for Frank. Then I had her tell him that she wanted that lunch he promised her on the Euclid beach car. Frank was right in for it, and said that he would go over and order a lunch at a hotel that he mentioned. The girl promised to meet him in half an hour, if he would go ahead and order.

"In about 20 minutes I went over to watch developments. There sat my hot-air neighbor of the beach car at a little table for two, waiting—patiently waiting. I went away and came back for another look an hour and a half later and he was still waiting."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A GOLDEN BALL.

British Soldiers Played the National Game With It.

Probably no game of ball, by professionol or college team, was ever watched with such inner interest but with such outward indifference as one described in Gertrude Vanderbilt's "Social History of Flatbush." It happened in revolutionary times, when the British soldiers were stationed on Long Island. The inhabitants had hidden their valuables in the most possible places. One lady concealed some gold coins in a fatherly pincushion of the kind worn by the Dutch housewife, suspended et her side.

She was sitting sewing one day when a party of British soldiers entered the room. A young officer, spying what to him was a golden ball with the sword end ribbon by which the cushion was hung and began a game of ball.

Soon the rest of the company joined the sport. Bolsterously, from hand to hand, the ball was batted to and fro. It was roughly snatched and tossed, and sometimes it fell into the ashes of the fireplace, and there ensued a conflagration. Now and again a soldier would catch it on the tip of his sword and send it spinning on with a rush in its wake.

Every moment threetened to reveal the precious contents. To show that she had entirely lost interest in the secret and the owner was forced to sit unmoved, apparently intent on her work, while her fortune flying through the air, at the mercy of the enemy. At last the cushion, torn and battered, but still guarding its treasure, was returned to its mistress, and the incidents, tired of their play, left the house.—Youth's Companion.

A Joke Astray.

An English clergyman confesses in the London Tribune that once, relying on his hearers' fund of humor, he made a joke at a public meeting. He said: "In repose to a vote of thanks," ran one paragraph, "the reverend gentleman explained the joke in connection with the Cornish dialect by the fact that he himself worked in the Cornish mines until he was 21 years of age."—Youth's Companion.

Prizes for Farmers.

Austria provides an object lesson in dealing with waste lands. Prizes are given to farmers to encourage them to recover waste lands and lay their down as pasturage, and also to erect shelters or stables for cows in high altitudes. The importance of this may be seen from the statement that one-quarter of the total fodder required for cattle and horses in that empire is derived from Alpine districts.

CITY HAS BOY MAYOR

R. W. BINGHAM, 21 YEARS OLD, RULES LOUISVILLE, KY.

Entire Cabinet Composed of Young Men—What They Have Done—Youthful Gavernment Result of Court Declsion.

Louisville, Ky.—Mr. William Dean Howells described "A Boys' Town," in a book some time ago. Louisville would find materiel for "A Young Man's Town."

Louisville is now experiencing government by men who are comparative youths and is also experiencing the most vigorous administration of the laws she has enjoyed in years.

This youthful government is the direct result of the recent decision of the court of appeals which ousted the former administration of Louisville on the ground of an unfair election and delegated to Gov. Beckham, himself a man well this side of 40, the power to fill practically all the offices. Here are some of the principal officers:

Robert Worth Bingham, mayor, 35 years old; A. Scott Bullitt, sheriff, 39; Edwin P. Morris, commonwealth attorney, 28; W. W. Davies, chairman of the board of safety, 32; James B. Brown, chairman of the board of works, 31; Dr. Ellis Duncan, coroner, 34, and Will N. Cox, member of the board of works, 25.

The board of safety and the board of works control all the departments and have charge of all the work done by the city of Louisville, so the chairmen of these boards, with the mayor, practically dominate the city.

The first thing Mayor Bingham did when he came into office was to give notice that the "lid" must stay down on Sunday. He appointed a chief of police who would carry out his orders and his board of safety gave the police force a shaking up that proved decisively it meant business. The result has been to show that a "lid" can be kept on when it is meant to stay on. Louisville is a dry town on Sunday now. There are scarcely any attempts to tilt the "lid," and these are speedily checked by the police, who are exercising the utmost vigilance that is the price of a well fitting "lid."

The mayor did more. He took the police and fire departments out of politics, started an investigation of city institutions that revealed a fearful condition of the city hospital, that is being remedied; exposed and started a number of scandals and is now having an investigation of the water company, Louisville's prize municipal institution, the effects of which have been carefully kept from the public for 30 years and which is suspected of having been the scene of riotous extravegance.

A few days after Sheriff Bullitt entered his office he assembled his force of deputies, without saying where they were going, piled them into automobiles, dashed out to the pauirooms, raided them, arrested the operators and stripped down the blackboards and paraphernalia and closed the doors. They have remained closed tight since.

MAYOR ROBERT WORTH BINGHAM

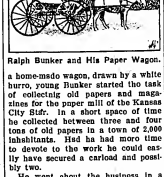
The cases of those arrested are pending in the county court, where Mr. Page, the youthful county attorney, is prosecuting them as vigorously as Sheriff Bullitt raided.

As the result of the vigorous work of these young men Louisville is enjoying the best city government it has known within the memory of a generation.



The latest achievement of Mayor Bingham and Sheriff Bullitt has been to prevent a street car strike which threatened the greatest industrial conflict ever known here.

OLD PAPERS PAY HIS WAY.

Kansas Youth's Unusual Way of Defraying College Expenses.

Boston.—Ralph Bunker, a graduate of the Sobotha high school in Kansas, took an unusual way of assisting in defraying his expenses at Harvard college for the ensuing year.

Several weeks ago, with the assistance of two or three hired workmen, a home-made wagon, drawn by a white buro, young Bunker started the task of collecting old papers and magazines for the paper mill of the Kansas City Sfar. In a short space of time he collected between three and four tons of old papers in a town of 2,000 inhabitants. Had he had more time there would be no doubt but what nearly five secured a carload and possibly two.

Ralph Bunker and His Paper Wagon.

He went about the business in a methodical manner. Monday mornings he visited the residences, securing therefrom the voluminous Sunday editions of city papers, as well as the week's accumulation of newspapers and magazines. At some houses there were many old magazines that their owners had long wished to get rid of. Others gladly gave him the advertising sheets from the magazines when they desired to retain the reading matter.

Bunker called at the stores three times a week. His supplied all business houses with boxes into which every scrap of paper was thrown. When he called there was no necessity for moving any one; he simply cleaned out the box.

All alleys and outlying districts were visited one of the remaining days of the week end were left to better shape than they had been found in.

The last day, Saturday, which was too busy a dey for both housekeepers and storekeepers to be disturbed by any one, Mr. Bunker wisely devoted to packing and binding his papers in bundles to be ready for shipment.

Sabetha woman and merchants ware rather enthusiastic over the efforts of Mr. Bunker, which not only assisted him, but disposed of the summer problem of what to do with papers with no farmace running. Sebetha, always a well-kept town, was absolutely Spotless Town during the paper collection.

Mr. Bunker made enough money to pay for his board and room for several weeks.

FEW WOMEN WANT OFFICE.

Experiences in Colorado Shows Fair Sex Cares Little for Political Plums.

Denver, Col.—Contrary to expectation, it was found in a recent investigation of the subject in Colorado that few women had any desire to hold office. The position of state superintendent of public instruction was the only state office which bns been conceded to woman, and that of county superintendent is the only active one which has been filled by her to any large extent. During the first years of equal suffrage it was the custom to elect three women members to the legislature from the county of Arapahoe (Denver), but this is no longer done. Neither of the last two legislatures has had any women members. There are now 29 women county superintendents elected, 505 school directors, and scattered throughout the state one woman representative in the offices of county

At the present time there is only one county office, outside of that of county superintendent, held by a woman, namely, the treasurer of Gunnison county. Seventy-eight are now directed almost entirely by the men.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30. 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3. 1879.

An Exchange tells of a farmer who sold his wheat and put the money in the bank, and then paid all his bills by check, so he had a receipt for all of them. It is a nice way to do business, but we found it had one drawback, and that was the money in the bank became exhausted before all the bills were paid.

The meeting of the County Commissioners to act on the new county seat removel petition resulted in the matter being thrown into court, where it will remain until next summer, at least. We wonder if anyone has looked lately to see if the petition was in the pigion hole, all safe?, but we suppose it will be safe enough uutil the lawers get theough with it, then look aut.

Homestead entrys made after today November 1st, 1907, will have to be lived on and cultivated for at least fourteen months before final proof will be allowed. This rouling only applies to homestead entries made after this date, so do not get excited and flood the Land Office with letters of inquiry abont it. The rouling was undoubtly made to protect the government from spectulators who never had any intentions of making their home on the land, but it is a goodeal like locking the barn after the horse is stolen, so far as this reservation is concornad, for they came and are now gone, and took the deed for the land with them.

The Undertaker's Shop.

"The one thing in New York that I can't get used to," said the country visitor, "is the manifold uses to which undertakers put their shops. I used to be of the opinion that the only possible errand a person could have at an undertaker's was to purchase funeral supplies, but in this town I find that people go there for all sorts of purposes. They go to vote, to get married and to transact all the legal business that a notary public is capable of transacting. Yesterday I even saw a party eating luncheon in an undertaker's establishment. They had come into town apparently to attend a funeral and instead of patronizing a restaurant they calmly munched their midday meal in the midst of those lugubrious surroundings." — New York Globe.

Irascible Carlyle.

A lady who lived near Thomas Carlyle kept Cochin China fowls, and their crowing was such a nuisance that the philosopher sent a complaint to her. The owner was indignant upon hearing the appeal.

"Why," said she, "they crow only four times a day, and how can Mr. Carlyle be seriously annoyed at that?"

Upon hearing of her attitude upon the subject Carlyle replied, "The lady forgets the pain I suffer in waiting for those four crows."

Once Too Often.

"What's all this excitement about?"

"Nothing worth mentioning. Man got knocked down."

"Accident?"

"Not exactly. One of these men who always catch hold of you and push you out of their way when you happen to meet them at a crowded corner grabbed the wrong man just now. That's all."—Chicago Tribune.

Brides Priced.

To us it seems a curious whim on the part of our ancestors of the eighteenth century that in their marriage announcements they should so often choose and with such seeming complacency to enlighten the world with regard to the amount of fortune received with the brides. Here are two cases in point: "Mr. James Coutts of Jeffry's Sq., merchant, to Miss Peagrum of Knightsbridge, £30,000." "W. Smith, gentleman, of the 2d Troop of Horse Guards, to Mrs. Ann Gardiner, a maiden lady, aged, 'tis said, near 70, with a fortune of £20,000."—Chambers' Journal.

An Arabian Legend.

The Arabians had a tradition that when the devil started forth from his own place to the garden of Eden he was too lazy to walk and begged all the animals, one after another, to carry him. All refused except the serpent, which was then a quadruped and the most beautiful of all beasts. Yielding to the entreaties of Satan, the serpent took up the devil on its back and carried him the rest of the way, no one knows how far, and after the consequences of the devil's entry into the garden became apparent the angels were commanded to look up the serpent and punish it, so Michael cut off its legs, and it was doomed henceforth to travel about as best it could flat on the ground.

Out of the Public.

When I was a very little boy, writes Sir William Gregory in his autobiography, my grandfather, who was then undersecretary for Ireland, took me to the chief secretary's room in Dublin castle and formally introduced me to Lord Melbourne.

After I had been with him for some little time he said, "Now, my boy, is there anything here you would like?"

"Yes," I answered, pointing to a very large stick of sealing wax.

"That's right," said Lord Melbourne, pressing on me a bundle of pens; "begin life early. All these things belong to the public, and your business must always be to get out of the public as much as you can."—Pearson's Weekly.

A Remarkable Bridge.

Among the many odd nooks and corners and crannies of the auld Emerald Isle is Carrick-a-rede, on the Great Northern railroad of Ireland. It is an isolated rock, separated from the main land by a chasm sixty feet wide and more than eighty feet deep, and it is at this place that the salmon are intercepted in their retreat to the rivers. A rude bridge of ropes is thrown across, which remains during the fishing season, and this bridge, which is protected by a single rope rail, swings about in the most uncomfortable manner, often rendering it a dangerous feat in stormy weather save to the natives, who cross it with the utmost indifference. The name is derived from "Carrig-a-ramhadh" (the rock in the road) on account of the intercepting of the salmon. Near by on the west side of the island is a cavern in which have been found the bones of horse, ox, deer, sheep, goat, badger, otter, water rat and of several kinds of birds.

Persian Justice.

Professor Williams Jackson tells in his "Persia Past and Present" some stories illustrating character in the land of Omar Khayyam. One is of a man who, suffering from inflamed eyes, went to a horse doctor for treatment. The veterinary gave him some of the salve that he used on animals, and the man lost his eyesight. He then brought suit in court to recover damages. The judge, after weighing the evidence in the case, handed down his decision as follows: "There are no damages to be recovered. The man would never have gone to a veterinary if he had not been an ass."

Nemesis.

Nemesis is lame, but she is of colossal stature, and sometimes, while her sword is not yet unsheathed, she stretches out her huge left arm and grasps her victim. The mighty hand is invisible, but the victim languishes under the dire clutch.—George Eliot.

DO YOU OWN A HORSE?

Electric Light Plants Are Like Horses In Some Respects.

The subject of depreciation is well worthy of the careful consideration of those who are prone to ignore that item in estimating the cost of lights supplied by municipal plants. But as more people own horses than lighting plants it may be helpful to consider depreciation as applied to horses.

You pay $250 for a five-year-old horse. That's original cost. If you borrow the money you must pay interest on it. If you don't borrow it you lose the interest you would get if you didn't buy the horse. Either way it's interest. You feed the horse, and perhaps hire a man to take care of him. That's operating expenses. You get him shod occasionally and call in the veterinarian when he is sick. That's renewals and repairs. After a few years, in spite of the best of care, the horse is no longer capable of doing the required work and is sold for $50, a loss of $200 as compared with the original cost. That's depreciation. If you haven't laid that by year by year out of the horse's earnings, you've got to borrow it to buy a new horse, and you may not find it easy to do so if you haven't repaid the original loan. That's what happens to municipal plants that don't provide an adequate depreciation fund

Great Writers Not Correct Writers.

There is not a single great author in our literature in whose works numerous errors have not been pointed out or thought to be pointed out. They are charged with violating rules involving the purity if not the permanence of the language. A somewhat depressing inference follows from the situation thus revealed. The ability to write English correctly does not belong to the great masters of our speech. It is limited to the obscure men who have devoted themselves to the task of showing how far these vaunted writers have fallen short of the ideas of linguistic propriety entertained by their unrecognized betters. As a result of these critical crusades there is no escape from the dismal conclusion that the correct use of the language is not to be found in the authors whom every one reads with pleasure, but is an accomplishment reserved exclusively for those whom nobody can succeed in reading at all.—Professor Thomas R. Lounsbury in Harper's Magazine.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rolls or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Contrasted Types.

The saltspoken romance of the fin quan is sometimes trying to those of a different habit. The author of the traveling notes called "From a Holiday Journal" describes a young girl whom she met at a Geneva bath, a pretty, doll-like creature, named Marie, who knew how to sit still and do nothing all day long.

Presently it was discovered that Marie had a lover. She disclosed the fact boldly.

"My beautiful is young, handsome, rich," she said proudly looking up to a tall English girl of seventeen. "And have you not a bridegroom too? Or did you never have one?

The English girl felt never before felt the humiliation caused by the lack of a bridegroom. So she shamefacedly confessed that some one liked her, only this spring, but—

"But you do not love him," interrupted the German girl in loud but very bad English. "Oh, I love my treasure so! I love him so!"

The English girl shuddered and blushed to the roots of her hair. The words had been distinctly spoken and had evidently proved very amusing to a party of English in the vicinity.

"Oh," she implored, "would you mind saying 'like' instead of 'love' next time? We never say 'love' in English. We have co such thing!"

How She Died.

A minor poet who talked of his lady's person being "curiously mix'd" would not be enthusiastically reviewed nowadays. But so startlingly beautiful was the lady in question, one Susanna Perwich, who died of rheumatic fever at Hackney on July 3, 1661, "in the flower of her age," that these lines in praise of her have not only been preserved, but they have even escaped classification with nonsense verse. This explanation is, perhaps, necessary before quoting the inspired account of her death:

Behold, damp sheets
Cling close about her in the bed,
At which she, waking, said, "I'm dead!"
Shall I the careless maid go blame
And tell her what a horrid shame
It is that by her negligence
So choice a one is lost from hence?

—London Chronicle.

Dancing.

It is quite usual after a ball to find that the action of the heart shows traces of fatigue, particularly in delicate young women, who complain of a vague sensation of uneasiness, sadness and even of pain and are, in a word, in a peculiar condition that is not yet disease, nor is it health—much nearer the former than the latter. Diseases caused by dancing are commoner in women than in men. The most frequent are laryngitis, particularly in women who talk a great deal while dancing; colds, bronchitis and sometimes pneumonia and pleurisy. Dancing should be absolutely forbidden in all cases of consumption, which may assume a very rapid form from this cause. It is counter indicated as well in all cases of heart trouble.

To Waterproof Canvas.

Scientific American gives this recipe for waterproofing for canvas: Soft soap dissolved in hot water and a solution of iron sulphate added. The sulphuric acid combines with the potash of the soap and the iron oxide is precipitated with the fatty acid as insoluble iron soap. This is washed and dried and mixed with linseed oil.

Masculine.

Mrs. Hix—Mrs. Jinx strikes me as being entirely too masculine for a woman. Mrs. Dix—Yes, indeed. Why, every time she has an ache or a pain she makes as much fuss about it as a man would.

Discretion.

First Lawyer—It seems to me you let that last witness down pretty easily in your cross examination. Second Lawyer—I had to. He is my tailor, and I owe him a big bill.

Liquid Metal Polish.

Take eight ounces of Spanish whiting, which must be perfectly free from grit, and put in one quart of gasoline. Shake up the whiting and gasoline thoroughly. You will notice the whiting settles immediately, leaving the liquid as clear as water. To remedy this and, farther, to make it a better polishing agent, add to each quart of the mixture thirty-two drops of oleic acid—no more, no less. Shake again and the whiting will not settle. Apply to gold, silver, nickel, brass, glass or any kind of metallic surface with a piece of cotton flannel, rubbing well. Polish with a piece of same cloth.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Waterproofing Dress Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is on the lines of the old alumino process. In this case the factor used is rosin dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabrics to be proofed are passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of rosin which is deposited on the cloth and leaves each single fiber with an exceedingly thin film of rosin on it.

The Small Mouthed Bass.

The small mouthed bass fully deserves his reputation for being vicious and gamy from infancy. He is extremely pugnacious by nature and has fighting tactics peculiarly his own, which for strength, activity and cunning are unequaled. I once took a bass four inches long on a spoon hook, the bowl of which was more than two inches long. This bass does not hesitate to tackle that terror of all other fishes, fierce and voracious pickerel. With his first dorsal fin rigidly set, up he lays of some ten or twenty feet and then makes a rapid dash right into and under the "long jack," forcing him to clear out at once or ripping his so badly that he is hors de combat. The fact has been established that bass introduced into a pond containing pick erel will ultimately destroy the latter. The same fate awaits other fish, including trout.—Outing.

Oldest of British Sports.

Hawking is the oldest of all British sports. To the uninitiated the most marvelous feature of hawking is the manner in which the hawks themselves, naturally the wildest and wariest of the feathered tribe, have been trained to surrender voluntarily their liberty and return literally like a bolt from the blue in obedience to the will of the falconer. This indeed seems the more remarkable when one learns that the best birds are those which have attained maturity in a wild state. —London Ladies' Field.

"'Get off my shadder.'

"I was standing, by crimus, on his shadder, the shadder of his stomach. I skipped from there to the face. He groaned. When I got on to sunlit ground again he says to me:

"'Didn't you never have no bringup? Look at you now, lengthenin' out your shadder league's mine. Crouch, consarn you, or I'll warm your hide with this here club.'"

The sailor gave a long laugh and emptied his glass of milk.

"Them Kaffirs," he said, "regards their shadders as part of themselves. A polite Kaffir would no more walk on another's shadder than a polite American would hit a lady. They have a regular shadder etiquette. You mustn't on no account let your shadder be longer than a superior. You must crouch to make it smaller, and that there crookt for the purpose of flattenin' the shadder is thought by the Spencerian philosophers—I don't say I think so, mind—to be the origin of the bow."—New York Times-Democrat.

It is revealed therein that while many women deprived of the power of speech have been sought in marriage by men whose five senses were unimpaired only a few the comparative willingness and unwillingness of men and women to marry mutes is a question, but the fact re-

Mandy's Emancipation

By Ella Randall Pearce

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

'Mandy did not resemble either of her parents. So far as appearances were concerned, one might trace in sort of composite likeness. There was the Osborn nose, but the prominent lump of that feature was modified in her case to an aristocratic little curve, and the straight, red mouth would have been the Alger mouth but for the dimples at the corners.

As 'Mandy grew up the same antagonistic spirit grew with her parents. She was very pretty, and her childish ways clung to her. At 19 she was slight and undeveloped, with her soft blue eyes wide open and innocent as a baby's under their curling brown lashes, her cheeks round and pink.

Frank Day and 'Mandy had been like brother and sister since Frank had appeared at the Jersey farmhouse, a poor, forlorn orphan boy from the city, and asked for work.

Nathan Alger gave him a chance on the farm, and he proved such a quiet, trusty, active worker that he kept him, allowing him to go to the village school with 'Mandy during the winter and treating him as one of his household. He was only two years older than 'Mandy, and he said pa and ma just as she did, and considered himself lucky that he escaped parental disputation.

"Dear time 'Mandy was thinkin' of gettin' married, ain't it?" said Nathan, one evening.

"Married! That child!" replied the wife. "Are you in such a great hurry to get rid of her?"

"Rid of her? Lor' no. I'll keep her right here all her life."

"An' let her be a lonely, spiteful old maid! Nice future for a pretty young girl!"

Nathan smiled covertly.

"'Mandy is pretty," he said. "An' I guess others see it, mother. Cyrell Newman can't keep his eyes off her at meetin'."

"Cyrell Newman!" repeated Mrs. Alger contemptuously. "He needn't make eyes at my daughter."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I don't like his family."

"They're rich," said Nathan, who was inclined to place a high estimate upon an extensive tract of fertile land.

"I'm. I don't like the Newmans, an' Cyrell's wild."

Mrs. Phebe had her plans for 'Mandy, but it was useless to broach them then. She had not been visiting the Manosquan store for nothing. She could buy goods cheaper in Asbury Park. She knew why she always took 'Mandy with her, and why a deep delight possessed her soul when the proprietor's son, a pale, slender, light-haired young man, who sat at the desk, peered out between the wires that surrounded him and forgot to attend to his customers for a while after mother and daughter had left the store.

Arthur Gleason was dignified and intellectual, and his natty attire and debonair air had made a deep impression upon Manosquan belles.

Cyrell was really very fond of the slender, golden-haired girl, and the Newmans had always been known to be "very set in their ways."

Young Gleason from New York was a cipher to 'Mandy's fresh charms also, and, despite his languid efficiency, he took not without a will of his own. He had been a spoiled child at home and used to having his way in all matters. Now he was determined that no Jersey farmer should triumph over him.

Frank came out of the barn one day. He saw a blue skirt whisking into the summer kitchen, which was used only for storage purposes then. Walking up to the little square window, he peered in. To his surprise he saw 'Mandy sitting in the little rush-bottomed chair near the table, with her face buried in her apron. In an instant he was beside her.

"What's the matter, sis?" he asked, acutely.

'Mandy raised her tear-stained face. "Oh. Frank, I'm so wretched," she said.

"I'm and nun at it again?"

"It's nothing now," replied the girl hopelessly. "You see what they're trying to do. They think I haven't got any feelings."

"Which one do you like best?" asked Frank, as he had done once before.

"I don't know, I don't know!" wailed 'Mandy. "They're both nice, and they both want to marry me; but if I marry one, pa'll disown me, and if I marry the other, ma'll never speak to me again. Oh, I wish I was dead!"

She covered her face with her apron again.

"There, sis, don't worry," said Frank, stroking her rippling hair and trying to comfort her, just as he used to do in the old school days. "I wish I could help you. Come, let's talk it over."

The next day, during 'Mandy's temporary absence from home, her affairs approached a crisis. Arthur Gleason and Cyrell Newman had driven up to the Alger gate at the same time and alighted together. Unpleasant words were exchanged, and Cyrell, who had been indulging in Newman thirst, struck the storekeeper's son, whereupon young Gleason, his dignity gone, his white face set, and his opponent, whose whip was out at hand, had snatched a billet of wood from the woodpile. Then, after a further exchange of hostilities, the young men had sprung into their respective vehicles and driven away at a furious rate in opposite directions.

Mr. and Mrs. Alger, witnessing the scene from the sitting room windows, felt that the time had come for decisive action. At five o'clock that afternoon 'Mandy returned. On either side of the fireplace her parents were respectively seated, grim and hostile. All the brightness died out of the girl's face.

"'Mandy," began her mother, solemnly, "Mr. Gleason an' Cyrell Newmon were here today, an' that mis'ble drunken wretch struck Mr. Gleason in the face. I don't b'lieve he will ever come here again."

"It mostun brought it on hisself," retorted Nathan, with the Alger mouth tense. "His'n knew him to it. I don't blame Cyrell a bit."

"'Mandy," pursued her mother, "you must write a note to Mr. Gleason an 'tell him how sorry you are. Tell him that Cyrell Newman will never darken your door again."

To His Surprise He Saw Mandy.

"Tell him you're goin' to marry Cyrell Newman!" shouted her father, feeling that strategy was no longer available.

"Do as I tell you," said Phebe, her voice rising and her eyes snapping. "I've promised you to Mr. Gleason."

"An' I've promised you to Cyrell," thundered Nathan, bringing his fist down upon the oaken table.

Silence stood in the center of the room with her head bent, her lashes touching her cheeks, her arms hanging before her with interlaced fingers. Her lips moved once as if to speak, and closed again. Then her slender shoulders arched in a queer, tense way, and her fingers gripped each other silently.

"Pa, ma, you can't promise me—you can't dispose of me, either of you," she said in low, faltering, but clear tones. "I'm married!"

An awful silence followed. Phebe Alger said afterward that she felt as though 'Mandy had slapped her in the face. Undoubtedly that action would not have left the mother without an idea of a punishment fitting the crime, but now she sat forward in her chair, dazed and speechless.

Nathan looked helplessly from mother to daughter.

"It ain't true, 'Mandy?" he asked at last.

"Yes, pa," came in the girl's soft tones, and beneath the drooping lashes a tear crept, leaving a shining trail across one flushed cheek. "I was married to-day."

Mrs. Alger's eyes began to sparkle again. Which one of the belligerent lovers had sought 'Mandy that day and persuaded her into hasty wedlock?

"Are we lookin' at Mrs. Gleason or Mrs. Cyrell Newman?" she asked sarcastically. "I'd like to know, seein' as I'm interested, if I wasn't asked to the weddin'."

'Mandy looked up then, straight into her mother's eyes, and for the first time in her life the Osborn nose and the Alger mouth seemed to form an aggressive combination.

"I'm married to Frank," she said, steadily. "I didn't want either of those other men. I like Frank better than anyone I knew. You both wanted me to get married, but I couldn't marry two men. Frank wanted to tell you, but I said no, we'd get married first. I knew how 'twould be if we told you. Pa'ge you'll both be mad. I can't help it. All my life I've tried to please you, but I—I couldn't marry—I—I'm—I'm—I'm—"

Then she broke down and, as the door opened, she turned and ran toward it and laid her face against her young husband's broad shoulder. And Frank put his arm around her and stood there with uplifted head, calmly facing the stupefied parents.

It was six months before Mrs. Phebe Alger spoke to either of them; but Nathan was so rejoiced over his wife's defeat that he forgot his own, and gave the young couple a tract of land, upon which young Day had a small, neat cottage speedily erected.

Autumn Neckwear

So long as blouses remain in fashion the subject of neckwear must, perforce, be an important one. At present wash ties are in order, but oo vast is the number worn that it is really impossible for any definite statistics to be given. Hand embroidery, of course, has an important place on both stocks and ties, and although there are no striking novelties in design, individual taste often results in pretty variations of the fashionable modes.

Turnover collars are still usual, and great favor is shown for those worked in polka dots. Sometimes a bit of color is introduced into the collar, but rarely. The color is usually found in the tie. Small butterfly bows still are done in the womanly fashion, so becoming are they to most people that their days will be long. Drop folds of plaited batiste, lace and embroidery are much worn, because the plaited frills look well at the throat where the coat leaves an open space.

Here are three new designs, indicative of present taste. The lace yoke is an excellent arrangement, for it will serve upon many blouses. Frills for the front of the shirtwaist are as popular as ever, and this season stripe of lace edged with ruffles of lace or embroidery will also be worn.

PATCHWORK AGAIN A FAD

Delightful and Fascinating Pastime Is In Favor.

Patchwork is once more in fashion. Our grandmothers used to do patchwork when they were sedate, prim little girls, and then for years it was never done and was called old-fashioned. Now it is in vogue again and it is delightful and fascinating pickwork. Mothers will be wise who who will interest their little girls to start on patchwork. Delightfully dainty quilts and slumber robes may be made of odd pieces of gingham and any kind of wash goods. Others are made of scraps of lightweight woolen goods. Surprisingly quaint and pretty pillow covers may be made of scraps of silk and satin and ribbon.

This work is really the best practica work for girls learning to sew, as the stitch used is the simplest one there is and the work grows so rapidly as to keep up the interest of the little worker. These patchwork articles are made in the most elaborate designs, but there is none much prettier than the simple square pattern. Cut a paper pattern of the size you desire your squares to be and measure each block by it. Never cut one square by another; always go back to the original paper pattern. Lay the pattern on the goods to be cut by. Cut exactly and carefully, for the quilt will be spoiled if the blocks are not perfectly even.

Sew the blocks together in long strips, the length of the quilt, overseaming them with close stitches. The children can do this when the weather is bad.

Dolly Varden Styles.

Dolly Varden styles that are different are being revived daily. A stunning green silk blouse made very full by means of myriads of pin tucks hundrun is fashioned of two pieces of silk tucked on the shoulders instead of the usual seam, and ending in a high-fitted girdle made of repeated folds accurely stitched to a firm foundation. The sleeves are very full and wrinkled with a narrow band of Greek embroidery done with fine gold threads and from under them fall rather scant draperies of old lace.

Mauva Carpets tha Latest Novelty.

Since mauves and purples have become so universal in dress a matter of much consequence is that fashion's sway would invade the carpet factories, says a writer in Vogue. Yet this has been done and a royal purple wilton is the latest novelty in that line. It remains to be seen how the room in which such carpeting is to be used will be handled by the decorator chosen. White and gold wood and wall treatment or carved mat white woods and pale mauve silk wall covering, perhaps?

Close-Fitting Coats.

Some fashion authorities predict that with the coming of winter the very long coats will be more closely fitted, but the chief reason for the pause in accepting this prophesy is the fact that a similar style prevailed two seasons ago, and consumers much prefer to go back to early century modes for their new ideas than to anything so recent.

THE STYLES IN SLEEVES

No Hard and Fast Rule In Fashion This Season.

Ever since last spring women have been interesting themselves inarguably in sleeve development. Now it is settled that a woman may wear a big sleeve if she sort of has chosen, a long silky sleeve in her house or evening bodice if she will, but the short bodice sleeve, the three-quarter sleeve for dreasy coote—theee are as modish as they have been for a year past.

For novelty's sake many women will have at least one or two frocks made with the long close wimpled sleeve which has had a place among summer modes and is illustrated in many lovely fall models. Moreover, a sleeve of this sort will essentially change a last season's bodice, and since the prettiest of the sleeves are of transparent stuff, such as net chiffon or lace, they can be used for freshening an old bodice even when there is none of the bodice material available save for the inevitable shoulder drapery, sleeve cap or kimono shoulder.

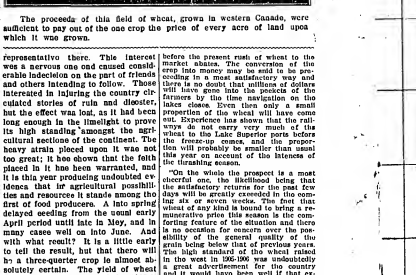
Sleeves with long transparent cuff below upper sleeves of the frock material are shown, but usually the small gigot lines are retained, the cuff and upper sleeve merging without the appearance of a definite cuff and puff top such as prevailed among dressy long sleeves of earlier seasons.

Modified kimono lines are a feature of overskeeves and sleeve adjustment, and the short overskeeve with transparent undersleeve is seen as frequently among the short sleeves as it was last season.

Wanted Plain Food.

Richard Mansfield had long cherished a plan of establishing a chain of English inns throughout this country, with plain furnishings and good plain food.



THE CANADIAN CROPS

THREE-QUARTERS OF THE AVERAGE YIELD IS REPORTED.

THE FARMERS DO NOT LOSE

Increased Prices for Grain More Than Compensates Them for the Decrease in Quantity—Reports from Crop Experts.

Most of the states of the union felt the unusually severe winter of 1906-7, and the effects of the succeeding late spring were everywhere apparent. Corn was pleasted two and sometimes three times, the winter wheat suffered and generally there was a nervous feeling on the retarded growth was in evidence. From the Dokotas to Texas the feeling of dread existed, and the fears were entertained that the crop of corn, wheat, oats and barley would be a distinct failure. How far this was the case is best left to those who passed through the experience. Naturally the same conditions were prevalent throughout the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in western Canada, and with from 250,000 to 300,000 farmers there from the United States a large degree of interest was manifest in almost every state of the union, for every state has some representative there. This interest was a nervous one and caused considerable indecision on the part of friends and others intending to follow. Those interested in injuring the country circulated stories of ruin and disaster, but the effect was, as it had been long enough in the limelight to prove its high standing amongst the agricultural sections of the continent. The heavy grain placed upon it was not too great; it has shown that the feith placed in it has been warranted, and it is this year producing undoubted evidences that its agricultural possibilities and resources abound in the similar six or seven weeks. The fact that wheat of any kind was bound to bring a remunerative price this season is the comforting feature of the situation and there is no occasion for concern over the possibility of the general quality of the grain being below that of previous years. The yield per standard of the wheat raised in the west in 1905-1906 was undoubtedly a great advertisement to the country and it would have been well if that exact record could have been continued, but it is not reasonable to expect that 90 per cent. of the wheat will be of the same grade every year as it was in the years mentioned. If 75 per cent. or even 60 per cent. of this season's yield be up to the contract grade there will be room for congratulation. The west will from such large returns of the investment of money, time and labor this year as it did in any previous season, and in so doing it will have done its whole duty to those who have placed faith in the fertility and resourcefulness. The breathing spell it affords will enable the transportation companies and other elements in the problem to catch up with and do some of their obligations and the improvements effected by that means will more than offset any inconvenience which will result from a relatively smaller production. The general commercial outlook in Canada and the contributing factors are due to the position of a few representative writers quoted in which there is a small return from the crop.

The proceeds of this field of wheat, grown in western Canada, were sufficient to pay out of the one crop the price of every acre of land upon which it was grown.

"It is true the season has not been so favorable as other seasons but this applies to the west as widespread. The corn crop in the states of the union, where it is a prominent crop of the farmers is subject to frost. Frost has undoubtedly materially affected the total yield in Alberta this year, but after every allowance has been made for this and similar causes there remains that the total grain in Alberta will be the largest in history, while in the other provinces the yield will not fall far short of other years.

The following extract from the Edmonton Bulletin fairly describes the situation in Saskatchewan and Alberta generally:

"Cutting is practically completed, stacking is in progress in some places, threshing will commence next week. Late sown wheat which were sown for green feed are being cut for the grain as well and everywhere the glow of autumn mingles with the silver of harvest. A large number of oat fields show the typical yellow of ripened grain, the latter, however, are too pale a yellow to indicate full development and ripening. Some late oats will be fed in the straw which is held by good cattle leaders to be the best way to feed oats in no year in the history of the spring wheat industry has there been a better growth and production of plant and if the crop of 1907 had been favored with more propitious condition during September all previous records of wheat production in this country would have been eclipsed. On the farm known as the Macleod farm 4½ miles northeast of the city on the Fort Saskatchewan trail, samples of Red Fyfe were taken that were uniformly plump and hard and of excellent color. This field should run 35 bushels to the acre.

The above is the reproduction of a photograph of the home of a recent settler from Germany, who has been located in Saskatchewan, western Canada, for two years.

000. It could not be expected that June-sown grain would mature and cure in this country. The May sown ripened, and this is the feature that has proved western Canada's superiority as a grain-growing country. It demonstrates that the length of sunshine is so great that the growing and ripening season is sufficiently long to allow of the maturing of wheat sown in May. Moreover, a large number of days than in parts farther south, in hours is as great or greater. A correspondent of the Toronto Globe, a most careful purveyor of news, writing from Winnepeg, Manitoba, says:

"Excellent progress in the process of converting the crop into marketable commodity has been made. The days have been fairly warm considering the season of the year and while the amount of sunshine per day is less than in an ordinary harvest the grain has matured well. The reports from far and near show that the aggregate yield for the whole grain-growing country is likely to be large, and there are those who assert that the quantity will be equal to about 75 per cent. of that secured last season. The quality will be the important consideration especially in view of the steadily rising markets. Cash wheat in Winnipeg closed yesterday at 81.11⅛ per bushel, Fort William delivery. The cost of freight and handling for wheat strikes an average of 11c per bushel for the whole west. This means that the average price to the farmer for contract wheat all over the prairie country is exactly 81 per bushel. The farmers have been looking for the day when dollar wheat would rule and they have it now. Some old wheat is still coming forward from the elevators and a little of last year's crop remains in the hands of the farmers. This nearly all grades up to the contract, and it means a great gain for those who held it. The new wheat is still grading very high. Taken into consideration the conditions under which it was produced. Out of 493 cars, 228 in two days contained wheat which would answer for delivery on contracts. In other words over 200,000 bushels of wheat which would bring the farmers an average of about $1 per bushel, reached Winnipeg in two days. The significance of $200,000 worth of wheat being passed by the inspectors in two days at the close of an admittedly unfavorable season should not be allowed to sink out of sight at a time when returns from agricultural activity in the west are being anxiously awaited. These figures do not take account of the lower grades, of which there were 121 cars. More than one-third of these contained milling wheat, which would remunerate the farmer at the rate of 85c per bushel on the basis of to-day's closing figures. The balance consisted of low grade stuff which would vary greatly in quality and would show great "averade" in price.

"The approximate value of the two days' receipts of wheat, however, would be more than $400,000 calculating the capacity of a car at 1,000 bushels and eliminating the cost of freight and handling. As many of the modern cars contain more than 1,000 bushels and as the freight rate to Port William is less than 10c per cwt. on most of the wheat which is now coming forward, the estimate of $400,000 is low. The circulation of $200,000 per day among the farmers will not continue for the whole year, of course, but that figure is likely to be exceeded

BUILD YOUR OWN SILO.

Put in the Spare Days in Providing a Store House for Green Fodder.

Don't pay for ready made silos when you can build one for less than half the money. A square silo is just as good as a round one, undressed lumber is as good as dressed. In building a square silo, build it high and small in the square so that the pressure of the ensilage will be the greater. The joists, cautions Missouri Valley Farmer, have to be tight—either set in paint or painted on the outside to exclude the air.

A Round Silo.

Any farmer can haul a few logs to his local mill and have his lumber sawed for about 50 cents. He can then build his silo himself.

COVERED MILK PAILS.

Facts Which Go to Prove That They Are Best.

The Storrs, Conn., agricultural experiment station has carefully tested the various devices in covered milk pails in producing sanitary milk and in reducing the incident bacteria in the process of milking. In bulletin 49 in which these experiments are shown is the following summary of results and recommendations:

1. The use of the covered milk pail is of great advantage in any stable in excluding dirt and bacteria from the milk. The relative advantage gained by the use of the cover depends upon the sanitary condition of the stable.

2. The special form of cover does not seem to be important provided it is a device practical for use and the area through which dirt can gain access to the milk is reduced as much as possible.

3. Whether or not a strainer on the covered pail is desirable depends upon the style of the straining device.

4. The use of the strainer in a pail where the dirt which falls into the opening is likely to be driven through by the succeeding streams of milk is not desirable. Its use tends to increase the germ content of the milk and injure its keeping quality.

5. In pails where the dirt which falls in does not remain where the succeeding streams strike against it a strainer cloth aids in keeping down the number of bacteria which gain access to the milk.

DAIRY NOTES.

Keep in mind the old axiom, "a merciful man is merciful to his dumb beast."

Now is the time of year to begin throwing some fodder corn over the fence to the cows.

Have the cows freshen in the fall. The fall cow makes the most money for her owner.

Stand by your home creamery and help to build up a home trade in which you can have an interest.

No man can make a success building up a dairy herd who does not take good care of the calves.

Plan on rearranging the barn or shed in the fall if necessary in order to keep the cows warm next winter.

Don't milk the cow right up to the time of calving just because she shows a willingness. She needs a couple of months' rest.

If better is worked too much, it will show an oily or greasy look, and it is then that the grain is injured.

The dairy house should be so arranged that the temperature is directly under the control of the dairyman.

Feed only clean, wholesome food, and never feed strong flavored foods, such as cabbage, turnips, potatoes, etc.

Be Quiet With Cows.

The milking must be done in a quick, quiet manner and the milk removed to a clean, cool place as soon as possible after milking. It should then be thoroughly strained into crocks or immediately run through a separator and the skim milk fed to the calves, pigs or poultry.

Value of Good Care.

Don't give all the credit of great yields of butter to the breeding of the cow only. Remember good care is a factor to be reckoned with also, and counts next to good blood.

Care of Milk.

Cleanliness in milking is one of the most essential acts in the care of milk. The cow's udder should always be wiped clean with a clean, damp cloth.

VALUE OF DAIRY EXPERIENCE.

Dairy Experience Good for the Man Who Uses His Thinker.

The value of dairy experience depends on the man that has the experience. The man that thinks and sees and figures and calculates makes something out of his experience, while the man that never sees and never changes gain nothing in particular by his experience. He is like the race horse running round and round in the ring. He may in time gain a little extra muscle and be able to go a little faster, but he gains nothing else.

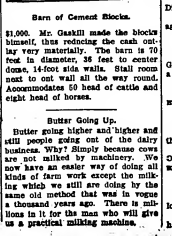
The progressive man experience is worth much. He is a scholar and is in the school of experience. Every day brings a new lesson and every day he is more able to do well with his work than he was the day before. He figures and calculates. He weighs the milk of all his cows and learns in a few months which cows are giving little and which much. He tests the milk of his cows and with the two kinds of information he is able to pick out his poorest cows and discard them. On the other hand, he is able to pick out his few very best cows and breed them to males that will give him excellent milkers. This kind of experience he turns into money, while the other kind of a man would not even lay hold of the facts in the case.

The value of experience depends on the man, says Farmers' Review. Many men run in a circle and are always contemplating the same facts. A few men try hard to get out of their circles and do this by a close scrutiny and analysis of the facts they see, by which they are able to mark out for themselves new circles on a broader plan. We all run in circles in spite of ourselves, but we can enlarge our circles if we try, and there is nowhere a greater necessity for trying than in dairying.

WHAT IS IT?

A Query as to the Difference Between Two Dairy Cows.

Two cows stand side by side in the stable. To both cows the same ration is fed yet one will extract from that food as much again butterfat as the other. The butter product of the cow is 100 per cent. greater with one cow that the other. This fact is seen in too great frequency in all herds of cows. What is that inner quality whereby one cow can produce so much more than the other from the same food? It is hard to find the right name for it, but it may be called "dairy quality." Now, certain breeds of cattle are distinguished for this quality. They have the power to so compilish this work in greater proportion and perfection by reason of having been bred to that purpose from generation of ancestors of like quality. One would think that there would not be a dairy cow in the land who would not be keenly alive to the necessity and economy of using such cattle for dairy purposes. Even soon would we think he would cut hay with a reaper and call it the best way.



The application of general purpose notion has destroyed in not a few men the power to look into this question from the economical way, says Hoard's Dairyman. They seem to be unable to take the same advantage in their choice of cattle as when they do in choosing their mechanical machinery. They cannot be fooled into taking a horse for a cultivator, yet thousands of farmers will spend their lives in trying to make cows of beef-breeding do dairy work. If they were close students of "cause and effect" they would not be beguiled this way.

Why should not the farmer be a close student of cause and effect?

A GOOD ROUND BARN.

One Which an Indiana Farmer Built at Moderate Cost.

The illustration shows a round concrete barn, built by J. A. Gaskill, Greene county, Indiana, at a cost of $1,000. Mr. Gaskill made the blocks himself, thus reducing the cash outlay very materially. The barn is 70 feet in diameter, 36 feet to center dome, 14-foot side walls. Stall room next to out wall all the way round. Accommodates 50 head of cattle and eight head of horses.

Barn of Cement Blocks.

Butter Going Up.

Butter going higher and higher and still people going out of the dairy business. Why? Simply because cows are not milked by machinery. We now have an easier way of doing all kinds of farm work except the milking which we still are doing by the same old method that was in vogue a thousand years ago. There is millions in it for the man who will give us a practical milking machine.

SUMMER QUISH.

"Martha," said Mr. Harker, as they started on their vacation, "what kind of literature was that you were reading in the waiting room?"

"Why, that was the latest summer novel," replied Mrs. Harker, with much enthusiasm. "It is so interesting. So much variation, you know, it is easy to lose yourself in the plot."

"That so? Well, how does the first chapter go?"

"Why, it starts off by stating that 'he held her hands and kissed her.'"

"Does, eh? How about the second chapter?"

"He kissed her and held her hands."

"Great Caesar! Skip ten chapters. How about the thirteenth?"

"He held her hands and kissed her."

"Great Henry James! And the finish—quick, the finish!"

"The finish, dear? Why, 'He kissed her and held——'"

But poor Harker had fled to the smoker.—Chicago News.

Dons.

"Of course," said the visitor, as he came in to bother the professional humorist, "I'm not any good at this business, and you can fix it up to suit yourself and—well, I don't want to take up too much of your time, but I thought maybe you could work up something about success d'estime, steam meaning hot air—success d'hot air—see? You could work it up and sell it somewhere." So we did.—Puck.

A Risk.

"Many a man has by simple economy, laid the foundation of a fortune."

"Yes," answered the man who doesn't figure closely, "but by the time you get your fortune, you are so liable to be grounded in habits of economy that you won't enjoy spending the money."—Washington Star.

Faster Than All.

The great man gave a cry of joy. He had just solved the problem of how trains could be made to run at the rate of 300 miles an hour.

"The speed will be wonderful," he cried. "Only one thing in the world can beat it."

"And that?" they asked.

"A bit of racy scandal."

Sorry.

"A man in your position must occasionally say something he is sorry for."

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum, "in naming a price for certain services I once mentioned $50,000 and subsequently discovered that I might as well have had $100,000."—Washington Star.

Did He Speak from Experience?

"Heiter not wait for Charley say longer. You know what its when a fellow is calling on his girl. Ah, there they are now. He is just holding her good night."

"All right; let us go and have a game of billiards. We'll just have time."

Similarity.

Stubb—Yes, the fancy gardener has named his special radish after his wife.

Penn—Rather a warm compliment. Did he say why he did so?

Stubb—Yes, he said they never agree with him.

A Typical Case of Kidney Trouble and a Typical Cure.

Mrs. Chloe Page of 510 S. 7th Street, Alexandria, Va., says: "My back hurt me terribly, I had sharp, darting pains, changing to a dull, dragging ache. I could not stand for any length of time and my back hurt me when I sat down. My feet and ankles were badly swollen every evening, and my stomach was out of order. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me of these troubles in 1902, and for five years I have had no return."

THE NUMBER OF ANIMALS.

Recent Attempts to Tabulate the Beasts That Perish.

Every now and then some naturalist endeavors to make an approximate numerical count of known animal species. This kind of attempt is surely not without interest, but it must be acknowledged that its results are very uncertain. We are far from knowing all species, and there is yet a delightful prospect ahead for those who love systematic zoology and for zoologists who bestow mutual honors by giving each other's names to some animal hitherto unknown.

As Nurmann remarked to a recent meeting of naturalists at the museum, to which he presented his "Catalogues Mammalium," the species of rodents known in 1880 were only 970 in number; now they are 1,900. The number has thus, at least, doubled in 27 years. The number of living species of this creature now known is about 1,500, divided among 160 genera. This family is the most numerous of the class of mammalia.—Wissen fur Alle.

Awful Humor Eating Away Face—Body a Mass of Sores—Cuticura Cures in Two Weeks.

"My little daughter broke out all over her body with a humor, and we used everything recommended, but without results. I called in three doctors, but she continued to grow worse. Her body was a mass of sores, and her little face was being eaten away. Her ears looked as if they would drop off. Neighbors advised me to get Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and before I had used half of the cake of Soap and box of Ointment the sores had all healed, and my little one's face and body were as clear as a newborn babe's. I would not be without it again if it cost five dollars, instead of seventy-five cents. Mrs. George J. Riese, 701 Coburn St., Akron, O., Aug. 30, 1905."

A Simple Method.

"How do you make the distinction between popular and classical music?" asked the very young man.

"Oh, that's easy," answered the discouraged philosophic philosopher. "It's popular if I enjoy it and it's classical if I don't."

GIRLHOOD TO WOMANHOOD

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

ELLEN M. OLSON

CLARA E. DARMSTADTER

The responsibility for a daughter's future largely rests with the mother. The first influence and the later formation which is of vital interest to the daughter imparted at the proper time by the mother. A timely word at the time has not only saved the life but insured the success of many a beautiful girl.

When a girl's thoughts become sluggish, with headache, dizziness or a disposition to sleep, pains in back or lower limbs, eyes dim, desire for solitude; when there is a mystery to herself and friends, her mother should come to her aid, and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, will at this time prepare the system for the coming change, and that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for them, are constantly being received.

Miss Ellen M. Olson, of 417 N. East St., Kewanee, Ill. writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham—

"I have had the best doctors in our town for my sickness and they all thought that an operation was necessary. I had headache, sidesache, and my feet were so sore I could hardly stand. I took two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound when my periods were established and now I am perfectly well. Many days she went to bed with pains in her head. I have told our girl what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me and she is taking it now."

Miss Clara E. Darmstadter, of 453 Breckenridge St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham—

"For about a year, except during the past few months, I suffered with severe pains every month, with headaches and backache. I had no hope as I had tried so much. It is a pleasure to tell you that I have used Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash, with all this time prepare the system for the coming change, and that I am free from pain and am glad to give them."

If you know of any young girl who is sick and needs motherly advice, ask her to address Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and tell her every detail of her symptoms, and to keep nothing back. She will receive advice absolutely free, from a source that has no rival in the experience of women's ills, and it will, if followed, put her on the right road to strong, healthy and happy womanhood.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs, is the remedy to use where others fail.

No other remedy has such a record of actual cures of female ills. Thousands of women residing in every part of the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it has done for them.

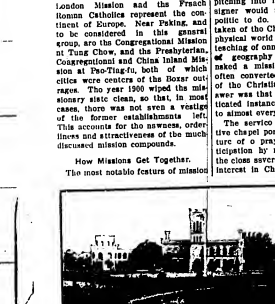
ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Fair and Discerning, Sympathetic and Non-Sectarian Standpoint.
Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.



BOTH BLAME AND PRAISE FOR MISSIONS AT PEKING.

Peking, China.—The missions at Peking are often pointed out as models. And with reason. The workers are of a higher grade than ordinary, and they maintain pleasant social relations with the legation people and with the few other Europeans in the capital. They are on friendly terms with eminent Chinese. Their work is substantially planted, and housed in fine quarters. They display a degree of denominational comity far in advance of what is generally to be found in America. At least one prosperous native church exists, and a medical and educational service is rendered to the community which commands the praise of all observers. There are various grounds for criticism, also, and these will be mentioned later.

The American missions are the Northern Methodists, the Congregationalists, and the Presbyterians, the London Mission and the French Roman Catholics represent the continent of Europe. Near Peking, and to be considered in this general group, are the Congregational Mission at Tung Chow, and the Presbyterian, Congregational and China Inland Missionary tent clean, so that, in most cases, there was not even a vestige of the former establishments left. This accounts for the nawness, orderliness and attractiveness of the much discussed mission compounds.

How Missions Get Together.

The most notable feature of mission work hereabouts is the union educational plan, to which all the missions are united. Thus the Congregationalists put into the schemo tho fino new college for men at Tung Chow, and the college for young women at Peking; the Presbyterians, the theological seminary, and the London Mission the great medical college and hospital at Peking. The Methodists unite only in the medical college. Each denomination has representatives on the faculty of all these institutions, and they are jointly managed. Each mission maintains its own primary or day schools as before.

The North China College and the American Board Compound, Tung Chow.

The result is on educational work for the Chinese which must evoke the admiration of every one who sees it. The empress dowoger is a contributor to the medical school and hospital. All the buildings are large and well equipped, with the possible exception, to the last particular, of the theological seminary, and it has a fine body of students, and with high grade instruction. The quality of the teoching throughout, both in the institutions mentioned and in the leading universities, is the strength of the enterprise. If there were room, I should like to mnumerate the names of women who are pouring their power into the creation of a new leadership for China. Such teachers as Miss H. W. A. F. Martin, long head or the Imperial university; Rev. Dr. D. Z. Sheffield and Rev. Dr. J. Wherry, the eminent authors and educators; Rev. Dr. C. Goodrich, linguist and theologian, whose dictionary is the best way to keep young and happy is to go to the foreign mission field.

Growth in Two Years.

Two years ago, in Pao-Ting-fu the martyrs' memorial church is worthy of a visit, having beeldn it the grave of 26 martyrs, including by simple headstones those of tho missionaries being no different from tho Chinese. Here in the bodies of Dr. Howard Taylor and Horace Tracy Pitkin. The Presbyterian martyrs are buried on the other side of the city. This is an independent Congregational organization of natives, who not only support all their own work, but maintain various philanthropic enterprises besides. The outstanding personality in Pao-Ting-fu is Rev. Dr. W. Lowrie, of the Presbyterian Mission, the man who saved the city from destruction by the allies. Although his own friends and comrades as well as his converts, had been massacred in liberalled upon the militant various philanthropic enterprises beside. no sad of Manchu reactions can overcome.

How Chinese "Get Religion."

I dropped into two street chapels in Peking, one belonging to an independent native church and oon attached to the American board compound. The street chapel is the approved method of reaching the crowds in Chinese cities. It is a typical Chinese room, open to the street, where a natives or a missionary spends two or three hours ovary afternoon expounding Christianity to whoever drops in, and there is a deal of coming and going, since it no longer brings disgrace upon a man to listen to the preaching of "tho Jesus way."

Various methods of approach are used, all depending upon the bent of the preacher's mind. At the Congregational street chapel I heard a native pitching into idol worship as a foreigner would scarcely consider it politic to do. Advantage is often taken of the Chinese ignorancn of the physical world to lead him up to the teaching of son God, opened to the facts of geography and astronomy. I naked a missionary if natives are often converted by a single hearing of the Christian story, and the answer was that occasional well-authenticated instances of such are known to almost every missionary.

The servico I attended in the native chapel portook largely of the nature of a prayer- meeting, with participation by numerous persons. At the close several hearers expressed no interest in Christianity and n dcsire

I found his church full of attentive hearers, many soldiers being among the number. Dr. Lowrie's mother, who came to China more than two years ago, is still working at Pao-Ting-fu. Here is a fine girls' school, conducted by Miss Grace Newton, and two hospitals. It was a spectacle to watch Dr. Charles Lewis put through a crowd of dispensary patients at the rate of more than one a minute, including minor operations.

From Pao-Ting-fu and Tung Chow itinerating is done out into the surrounding country, as also from Peking. Revarting to the capital itself, a word must be spoken concerning the weekly union service for English-speaking persons in th Congregational church, which are quite well attended. These are conducted by various missionaries, and managed, I believe, by Rev. Dr. W. S. Ament, the dominant personality of thn American Board Mission here. There is a weekly church of England service in the British legation chapel. There are also German and French churches.

The army and navy department of the International Young Men's Christian association maintains an association for the legation guards, but the general impression seems to be that it rather misses the mark. I visited it at three times when the American marines were off duty, but I never saw a soldier about the building.

A Much Criticised Compound.

All the mission compounds in Peking are imposing, but most impressive is that of the Northern Methodist Episcopal Mission, concededly the finest in China. In addition to the large buildings of the boys' school—or "Peking University," as it is called—and of the girls' school, there are the residences of the missionaries and the large church. The entire grounds are said to be larger than any of the extensive legation grounds, on which are housed not only ministers and attaches, but a detachment of legation guards as well. Their impressiveness is heightened by the park-like arrangement of the spacious gray-stonn homes of the missionories.

This is the most criticised mission compound in China. I havn heard legationers business men, traveling and other missionaries speak of it in terms other than praise. Most of these critics, it is fair to add, do not know that all except two of the missionary families living in these attractive homes have incomes indspendent of their salaries.

The compound was enlarged immediately offor the Boxer outbreak, when the Chinese were in a state of terror and poverty. The ground was bought at what one of the Methodist missionaries characterized as "good Chinese prices," the charge frequently made that the property was "looted" is unfounded. Nevertheless, the opinion seems to prevail among many Chinese and foreigners that an unwiso advantago was taken of peculiar conditions and that the Methodist church will ons dny rus its great "bnrgain," for the Chinese never forget. The buildings were erected with indemnity money.

A Methodist Scandal.

In connection with the securing of the land for this compound occurs the name of thn man whose personal intinitive put through the transaction, the senior member of the Methodist Mission. Concerning him I have heard repeatedly the charge that he has served as the representativn of corporations seeking mining and railroad concessions at Peking, using his influence as an eminent and honored missionary to secure privilego from the government for the companies employing him.

Sizing Up the Denominations.

Reverting to the splendid equipment of the Methodist mission nt Peking, it has been notsworthy that everywhere I have gone I have found the Methodist stations possessing thn best plants. Their work and their workers are better cared for than those of any other mission, so far as I have observed. Other missionaries have repeatedly spoken in admiration and praise of this; personally, I think thg on great personality stationed in a city or a village is better than a big institution, but most missionaries seem to think otherwise. It has also been pointed out to me that the large Methodists havn hy no means furnished the proportion of great men in China that have come from the ranks of the Congregationalists, the Presbyterians and the British societies, they have yet maintained a high average of general fitness and efficiency. As one Presbyterian missionary said to me: "Have you noticed that you almost never see a Methodist missionary of whom you would say, because of personality alone, he should go homn?' I do not recall one such in all China." Nor do I.

In contrast with the Methodists, the Presbyterians often under-man and under-equip their missiods. They seem to be spread out too thin. Good management would seem to advise fnwer stations and stronger. For instance, the Presbyterian hospital at Peking is closed, because it was made dependent upon one man, and when he fell sick, thn work stopped. Similarly, the Presbyterian seminary which went into the union of North China educational institutions most have made the Presbyterian workers blush for the inadequacy of their contribution to this great enterprise. One man, D. Courtenay H. Fenn, who still wins praise for the direction of the same qualities which earned him fame as "the miller of the Peking siege," is bearing two men's load in trying to make up for the shortcomings of his denomination in the matter, of the seminary.

GRAFT AND GRAFTER

ONE LITTLE HOMELY WORD THAT CONVEYS MUCH.

MANY HUMBUGS IN DISGUISE.

Human Nature Much the Same in All Ages—Psopis Easily Deluded Into Making Poor Investments.

Cant phrases have been invented, and words more noted for their force than elegance, havn hecoms popular as expressives of common things. In all that is sinng, it is doubtful if there is any hatter word than "grnft." Long before Chaucer indited what would now bn called "pigeon English," witty Greeks and Romans indulged in their aesthastic forms of vulgar expression, and there is no doubt that good old Socrates impressed Plato and some of his other pupils with pungent idioms, and in turn was called by Aristophanes an impious old grnftar.

It is quite evident thet "grnft" has a place among eupemiual words, and conveys an idee plainly and tersely. The famous Barnum, who sold some thing about the people almost as humbugged had a pretty good idea of human nature, and made the most out of his knowledge. The business man of to-day does not ignors the gullibility of the masses, and yearly millions of dollars are spent in printers' ink to convy to the people various kinds or information that will stimuate the lasting pr of dollars for the benefit of the grafter.

Pick up a copy of any current Sunday newspaper, flnd several religious publication, magazins or other periodical and look ovnr its pages!; Grnft is evident in such and every one. It is covert under the guise of artistic advertising. Thousands of cure-alls, wonderful discoveries, great bargains from bankrupt sales, exceptional chances for investment and Lord knows what not, heams from the pages to catch the eyes of the person who has not received sufficient lessons in the "school of grnft." The people like to be fooled. Thrn seems to be mors or less evarics in the meksup of most men, and women, too. The spirit of investing for a few littls or nothing is a common offer to gather in the dollars for the benefit of the grafter.

There was once a young man with ambition and o liking for work struggled along in the mercantile line in a small central western city. He decidsd to enlarge. Hn needed money. A spindrift theme presented itself. Why not get dollars needed to carry on a big business from the people? They needed a chance to investment. He was the fellow to help 'em out. Hn organized a big cooperative concern. He advertised broadcast. Told of the wonderful possibilities of his business, and lo! the dollars rolled his way by the hundreds of thousands. Soon the government ended his gams. He was charged with using the mails to defraud. Hundreds of thousands of dollers were lost by those who invested in his "cooperative society." Many similar schemes are on the consideration day after day. The people nsver tire of them. Just like hoping a lottery ticket comes to us or the world, and as long as the proposition looks good, the grnftar flourishes.

The wise men, he he farmsr or doctor, stockmen or storekeeper, will avoid jumping at such offers for investment. Look out for the cooperative organizer. Bewars of the grafters who want to "help you" in your business affairs, and at the sams time hold the combination to the safe.

AGAINST PREMIUM GRAFT.

Laws Passed by Some States Prohibiting Prizes in Packages of Foodstuffs.

Some classes of peopls when they wish to purchase goods, look more after specialled bargains than quality, and quite often thn bargains prove expensive. It seems that the getting of something for nothing is attractive to the ovnrage person. Of late years there has grown up a practice among manufacturers of staplh articles, particularly in thn food line, of giving a prize with each package of their goods. It is apparent that there is an inclination towards gambling in thn making up of most people, and this spirit is appealed to largely by thn giver of prizes. The purchaser seems to overlook the fact that he is paying more for rather than he pays for. Whatevnr article is given as a premium represents so much more money taken from the manufacturer does not lose by the operation. Thn value of what is given must be made up by either the retailer or the consumnr, and it is generally the consumnr who pays the cost.

Retail grocers, as well as the people in general, havn cause to be thankful for the lawmaking body of some states in Premium and prize giving has been a cause of trouhln and disturbance, and has resulted in the making of inferior goods, palming off their poor productions, relying more upon the prize given to attract trade than the merit of goods. Thn wise housewife in whatevnr state she may live will be careful to discriminate between quality, and quality backed up by prizes. It is well when you buy articles in the food line to avoid buying anything which has a prize attachment. You are compelled to eat stone you pay for and that you require, but the prize as well.

WEALTH CONCENTRATION EVIL.

Operation of Injurious Trusts Can Be Curtailed by Efforts of the Masses.

An evil that at present is receiving more than ordinary attention is the process in the concentration of vast amounts of money in the hands of corporations. Thn accumulation of wealth in individuals when controlled by natural law, will inevitably become divided. The millionaire who has a family, at his death will apportion to each member a share of his wealth. Even though thsn divisions may be increased by work and by speculation and investment by thn children, they in return will divido the accumulations among their offspring and eventually, it matters not how great the fortunes of any one of thn family may become, it is only a matter of time until there is a scattering of the money, and a great portion of it will pass from the members of the family. On the other hand, corporation methods mann the building of a system that prevents the operation of the natural law. In other words corporations are machines that work continously, and when one part is broken it is replaced hy n new ons. Thus the accumulation goes on. The death of Rockefeller will not result in a discontinnance of the Standard Oil company; the death of the present stockholders of nay of the large trust companies, banks or insurance companies will make little difference in their existence. All will go ahsad.

The safsguards of corporations in many cases are excellent. But thn inclination to control trade by the crushing out of smaller concerns and the destruction of legitimate competition and the controlling of prices, assms against public policy. All classes are compelled to pay prices dictated by these trusts for the goods produced. Ench year finds new combinations to control trade. It is the centralization of capital, that makes such operations possible. The person who assists in concentrating money in these financial centers does his part toward hsping along such combines. It is only by individual action on the part of every small producer, and laborer in the country that conditions can hn changed. Stnnd by svery home industry and do your part in keeping money in circulation at homs, and thus bring ahout conditions that will make the operations of trusts and combinations impossihle.

SCIENCE OF TOWN KILLING.

Unwise Booming and Maintaining Exorbitant Prices an Effective Way.

There is a county seat town in one of the central western states that has a population of about 3,000. It is surrounds by one of the richest farming countries. For years this town has been at a standstill. If anything it is retrograding, and evsn form values near it are lowering, while poorer land some 20 miles away is advancing.

Why should such a condition exist? The answer is plain. A dozsn years ago there was a boom. With the boom real estats went to the top notch. Kesping pace with the hoom the prices of products of that town went up. There was a colisps in real estate values, but the merchants refused to accept to the high-price habit. That is they wanted more than an equitahle share of profit. Another boom came and carried them up to the heights. One of the farmers want there. It was found that the merchants were selling goods at a lower price. The stock buyer and ths grainbuyer paid a few cents a hundred more for their purchases. The habit of trading at the new town grew. Thn business men of the old town couldn't lenrn a lesson. Before they knew it their customers were leaving them. So it has been since then. The merchoots have been plodding along. Their money that should be retained in ths town went elsswhere. Much of it went to build up the competing town.

Mistakes like this one are made frequently. Towns hecome dead pinces instead of growing. Many of these towns are so dead that the farmers who withdrew their trnde from them are beginning to increase farm values. They take no interest in these places, other than to visit them now and then. Thn money that the healthy prices made by the merchants, and which are foolishly maintained, are quite certain to find its way, although it may be a county seat and have some advantages nearhy towns may not have.

Support Home Newspapers.

Thn country newspaper is a power in the land to-day. Its place can nnvar be filled by the big daily papers or the hnkky magazines that abound. Joh. Wanamaker said: "Thn ads a fluid entirely its own. It is the barometnr of, the place in which it is published. Before he him home represent thn life of the people, and its advertising pages should reflect the business activity of the town. It is the duty of every good citizen to give his support to the local press. Particularly should the business men patronize it with a view of bettering his trade. It is not money wasted to use advertising space in it. One good merchant in the town who understands how to advertise rightly, can make the town great in a few years. But every other business man in it. Bnt all should do thnir part, and the storekeeper who does not give him home paper thn support it merits is not the wisest kind of a business man.

Make Good Packing Paper.

Old newspapers make excellent packing paper, in which to put things in storage, as printing ink is disliked by insects.

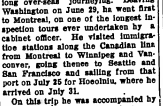
Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital



WASHINGTON.—During the summer months just closed the nine members of President Roosevelt's cabinet have spent more than 600 days away from their desks, and their vacation journeyings and business trips have covered thousands of miles over land and sea.

Of the nine, Secretary of War Taft is the greatest traveler. Already he has been away from his department more than 80 days, and, as he now is on his way around the world, he has traveled, including his vacation journeying and his official trip of the orient, something like 10,000 miles, with much more yet to come.

Next to Secretary Taft, Secretary of State Root remained from the capital longer than any other official, and, including his trip to Mexico, he will have been away so long that it will be hopeless for any other cabinet officer to attempt to equal his record.

Until Secretary Taft returns, Secretary Straus will hold the palm for long over-seas journeying. Leaving Washington on June 29, he went first to Montreal, on one of the longest inspection tours ever undertaken by a cabinet officer. He visited immigration stations along the Canadian line from Montreal to Winnipeg and Vancouver, going thence to Seattle and San Francisco and sailing from that port on July 25 for Honolulu, where he arrived on July 31.

On this trip he was accompanied by his wife, son, daughter and private secretary, only Secretary Straus' own expenses, of course, being borne by the government. It is estimated at the department of commerce and labor that Secretary Straus' trip cost the government not more than $1,500. And it is claimed for it that it was of immense business benefit to the department.

SOME MEMBERS ABSENT ON GOVERMENT BUSINESS

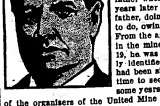
SECRETARY WILSON is another of the cabinet to have put in some strenuous traveling while inspecting conditions in his department in the west. He looked into the big timber reserves, and Secretary Garfield investigated while absent the public lands, Indian questions, etc., forming an important part of the work of the interior department. He spent only two weeks' actual vacation at his home in Ohio.

The vacations of the other cabinet officers were entirely for recuperative purposes. Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou spent the summer on his farm on Long Island, near the president's home at Oyster Bay, and only an hour's ride from New York. Hence he was able to keep in close touch with the financial situation, and his actual presence here was not essential.

Secretary of the Navy Metcalf went to California, his home state, and spent his entire vacation tramping through the mountains around Sacramento hunting small game, while Secretary Root, in addition to spending some time at his home in New York, took the now famous cure for several weeks at Muldoon's.

During his absence from Washington Postmaster General Meyer, with the exception of about ten days, when he was fishing in Canada, kept in close touch with the postal affairs in Washington, and Secretary Taft, while he was at Murray Bay, Canada, also found time to keep up with the more important matters requiring action by the head of the war department.

Attorney General Bonaparte, in addition to spending about a month at Lenox, was absent at different times during the summer at his home, near Baltimore, but he was at Washington every few days attending to important legal business of the government, so that it is hard to classify him.



ASSISTANT CHIEF CLERK THOMSON, progenitor of the scheme for having postal employes skate to work, undertook to demonstrate the other day and arrived at his office much confused and concussed. In rounding curve on Pennsylvania avenue he hit a "thank you, marm," and smote the asphalt with his nose. During the afternoon he was dispatched to hark at folks who came in to ask him questions about the roller skate procession.

His ideas, however, will be taken up in higher circles. A well defined movement among leading statesmen is said to be under way for having senators and representatives skate to the capitol when the session opens. A large number of them have been desirous of skating to work for a long time, but each has been back to the idea of being thought singular. Now a considerable number have agreed to start the skating movement simultaneously, and a general movement on the capitol is announced for the first Monday in December.

STATESMEN TAKE UP THE ROLLER SKATING IDEA

Speaker Cannon has been enlisted in the movement and promises to skate all the way down Pennsylvania avenue on the opening day, with John Sharp Williams, the minority leader. Mr. Williams and Mr. Cannon have been practicing holding each other's hands, and while this has been a little difficult because of Mr. Cannon's greater speed, they have now got so that they can keep step fairly well. Mr. Williams will go to the speaker's house on the opening day and make the start with him.

Senator Bailey at first held aloof on the ground that it would not look dignified to skate in a frock coat, and that he declines to remove that garment for any consideration. His friends, however, have put forth such strong arguments that in a letter received here the other day Mr. Bailey promises to skate, frock coat and all, if his rival and foe, Senator Culberson, can be induced to do likewise. Culberson wears a cutaway, but it is believed he will consent.

PENSION ROLL OF THE GOVERNMENT ON DECLINE

THE loss to the government pension roll, during the fiscal year 1907, by the death of civil war veterans, was 21,207, lowering the names of 844,238 survivors of that war on the roll June 30, 1907. During the year 1,993 more soldiers of the civil war died than during the preceding year.

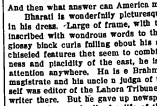
The total number of pensions on the roll at the end of the fiscal year just ended was 967,871. The net loss to the roll for the year was 19,600, which was the greatest net loss for any year since Uncle Sam began to pension his soldiers. The present fiscal year began with the smallest number of pensioners remaining on the roll since 1893.

The amount disbursed for pensions during the year was $138,156,412.46. This money was paid to the pensioners from 18 agencies throughout the country, the largest amount being paid from the agency at Topeka, Kan., which includes Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and New Mexico. The amount paid from Topeka was $15,507,638.24, and the number of pensioners on the roll at that agency was 111,508, or 2,089 less than June 30, 1906. Recently, at the end of the year had 49,335 pensioners, who received $6,990,729.74.

These figures and facts are contained in the annual report of Pension Commissioner Warner. The report shows that the pension roll reached the high-water mark January 30, 1905.

If there were no deaths during the present fiscal year it would require $140,650,380 to pay Uncle Sam's pensioners. The average annual value of each pension is $145.46, this being an increase of $7.43 over last year.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT



MAY SUCCEED MITCHELL

William B. Wilson, international secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, is a candidate for president after the retirement of John Mitchell, whose health has given way. Mr. Wilson is a Scotchman by birth, but his native place was Blantyre, but he came to America with his father when he was only seven years of age. Two years later he was working underground with his father, doing the work that the latter was unable to do, owing to an accident that injured his back. From the age of nine the boy worked continuously in the mines of Pennsylvania until at the age of 19, he was driven out because he was too actively identified with the labor union, whose secretary he had been since he was 14. He was forced at that time to seek work in Iowa, but he returned after some years and resumed his old life. He was one of the organizers of the United Mine Workers, and was elected a national secretary-treasurer, which position he has held ever since.

Mr. Wilson has had little of schooling in the ordinary sense, but he has educated himself by reading, for he has all the thirst for knowledge and eduction that characterize his race. He has also the scrupulous honesty of his forefathers, and although he has handled $20,000,000 in a year he has accounted for every cent that came into his hands. He looks upon money as being a "commodity" and cannot understand the fascination it has for some people. He has been the warm friend and personal adviser of John Mitchell for many years and Mitchell has profited much by the shrewd judgment of the canny Scotchman.

Wilson made his debut in politics in the Fifteenth district of Pennsylvania last fall by running for congress against the machine candidate. He succeeded in converting a normal Republican majority of 14,000 into a substantial majority for labor, defeating the machine candidate in his own town and le his own precinct. He takes his seat in congress in December.

PICTURESQUE HINDU ASCETIC

Baba Bharati, Hindu ascetic, philosopher and apostle of the purely spiritual life, is on his way back to his native India, with the fear in his heart that the peace on which he sets his heart more than on anything else, is to be broken within a very few years by the orient pitting itself and casting out the white man. He has been studying the situation in America for five years and has come to the conclusion that before President Roosevelt leaves office, he will sign an exclusion act to which Japan will reply with an edict of nonintercourse, and the result inevitable will be war, between the races, and the white man will be driven out of the east. He says:

"America is trying to exploit the whole world, but would shut out foreigners from her borders. Is it not likely that foreign nations will retaliate?

And then what answer can American make?"

Bharati is wonderfully picturesque, both in his personal appearance and in his dress. Large of frame, with the yellow prayer cloth of his "Krishna" inscribed with wondrous words to the Hindu faith wound around his turban, glossy black curls falling about his shoulders, with bright eyes end strongly chiseled features thet seem to combina the vigor of the west with the calmness and placidity of the east, he is a figure that would command attention anywhere. He is a Brahmin of the first order. His father was a magistrate and his uncle a judge of the high court of Calcutta, while he himself was editor of the Lahore Tribune when Rudyard Kipling was a newspaper writer there. But he gave up newspaper work to become a religious ascetic, and for 12 years he lived a life of the most austere simplicity in Brindeben, one of India's most holy places.

MADAME FALLIERES

Probably the wife of no ruler over the destinies of a great nation possesses the unique accomplishments of Mme. Falliores, wife of Clement Armand Falliores, president of the French republic. The daughter of her husband at Lonpillon for a district sung in the troubadour lays and illustrious in the annals of romance and history. In the midst of Paris frivolities she leads the simple life of the Gascon gentlewoman, spinning, weaving, embroidering and directing, cves at a distance, the big country estate of her husband at Loupillon for Loi-et-Garonne. M. Falliores owns a farm of less than a hundred acres at Loupillon, but under the attentive care of madame he gets a comfortable income out of his flax and dairies. The wines and the fruits and the grain lands are his special care during the months he spends there.

Mme. Falliores, now in her sixty-fifth year, has been busy all her happy life, and the results nf her industry seem almost incredible. For she has spun and woven and embroidered all the household linen for the table covers and 13 dozen dollies of varying sizes and for different uses. Each piece bears the monogram of its fitnre owner and all are kept in a great chest awaiting the division of the patrimony, after the demies of the elders.

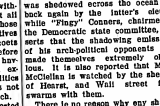
Mme. Falliores is utterly oblivious to Paris frivolity or Parisian extravagance. She gowns herself after the fashion of Gascon women, in plain dark silks enlivened with a bit of yellow lace or iridescent trifles and is as oblivious of the passing fashions as though she lived in a convent.

PROFESSOR FIFTY YEARS

Dr. Basil L. Gildersleeve, professor nf Greek at Johns Hopkins, the great university at Baltimore which takes as freshmen the graduates of other universities, has the unique distinction nf having been a professor for 50 years. He is preparing to celebrate his jubilee. He was appointed professor of Johns Hopkins several years after the age allotted to man by Dr. Osler, for he had already served 20 years in the University of Virginia, but there was no chloroforming process for him. He felt that he had wasted some of his youthful years and he was seeking to recover lost time, so he was an indefatigable worker.

The first 25 years of his life were spent in Charleston, S. C. In the summer nf 1850, after a college course, he took a trip to Germany on a sailing vessel, perfected his knowledge of the language and took a degree at the University nf Gottingen. In 1856 he became professor of Greek at the University of Virginia, "but when the civil war broke out he joined the southern forces."

For five months he lay in a hospital studying Spanish, for he expected that he and the other impenitent confederates would be shipped out of the country, and he intended to strike for South America. He was dealt with more leniently, however, and resumed his professorship, which position he held for 20 years in all. Then he went to Johns Hopkins, where he has made an enviable record. He has a world wide reputation and holds honorary degrees from a score of universities both in this country and abroad.



Gleanings of Gotham

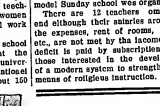
Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

NEW YORK.—The very latest style in New York is to have a shadow, and there is scarcely a man of prominence in the city, especially in the great financial district, who is without one. While they are worn at all times, these shadows are not those cast by the sun, but real detectives disguised in second-hand frock coats and false whiskers. Never before has there been such a rage for having people shadowed, and with exposures in high finance and politics coming daily the person who has not a shadow does not emount to much.

Stuyvesant Fish recently asserted that he has been followed for more than a year, and strangely enough E. H. Harriman has not the naturel allowance of one shadow, but five. While the public adds two and two and makes shrawd guesses, each of these refuses to say whom he suspects of having him shadowed. Comptroller Metz, who recently refused to shake hands with Police Commissioner Bingham, asserts thet he was shedowed across the ocean and back again by the inter's sleuths, while "Fingy" Conners, chairmen nf the Democratic state committee, asserts that the shadowing emissaries of his arch-political opponents have made themselves extremely obnoxious. It is also reported that Mayor McClellan is watched by the shadows of Hearst, and Wall street fairly swarms with them.

There is no reason why any shadow should be without a job. The number of private detective bureaus in the city hes more then doubled in the last two or three years, and ell ere kept busy. The New Yorker who has not e shadow nowadays is accredited with little standing.

MODEL SUNDAY SCHOOL TO INCREASE ATTENDANCE



ONE of the problems of child life in New York which is e source of much thought and worry on the pert of the mothers is that of the Sunday school. Churchmen heva been facing e steady decline in Sunday school attendance for the past ten years, and now there is to be a systemetic investigation of the whole subject by a number of women's organizations connected with verious churches.

A peid teaching corps is one of the suggestions offered as likely to improve the attractiveness of the Sunday school, and several churches hova lately employed specialty trained teachers for the older children. Fortunately for the women interested in the general betterment of Sunday schools in this city, there is e unique opportunity to study methods of teaching and observe the work of women who ere making Sunday school work a profession.

This is at the model Sundey school held every Sunday morning at the Teachers' College, Columbia university. This school is undoubtedly the end has an attendance of about 150 children of ages from the kindergarten to the high school grade. A tuition fee of $15 is peid by the pupils, although there are also a number of free scholarships. The teachers are peid and are women who are working out new systems of teaching Bible history and ethics in a way to hold the attention of their classes and instill a thorough knowledge of the Christien religion.

Four years ago the first class was formed as a private family affair and about 20 children were enrolled. Arrangements were made to use the chapel and some classrooms at Teachers' College, and as the idea grew in favor some of the members of the faculty of the university and of the college became interested and a regular model Sunday school was organized.

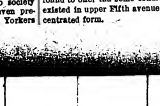
There are 12 teachers employed, and although their salaries are small, the expenses, rent of rooms, music, etc., are not met by the income. The deficit is paid by subscriptions from those interested in the development of a modern system to strengthen this means of religious instruction.

AUTHOR STUDIES HIGH SOCIETY FROM THE INSIDE

DISGUISED as a servant, Upton Sinclair, the author of the scandal has been absorbing local color for his forthcoming books by living himself out in the midst of the rich at Newport, according to a report.

He is said to have found employment at "The Breakers," the seaside home of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, and to have worked several days until a fellow menial caught him recording observations in a notebook and reported him as e spy. He was then, says the report, summarily dismissed.

Another of his experiences was on the Niagara, Howard Gould's yacht, the story goes. Sinclair is said to have had no difficulty in getting a job as steward for Mr. Gould. There he had opportunity to stuff the pages of his diary with sufficient material to run a book press into the scrap heap. He is represented as having been a model flunky, patient and willing to please every whim nf his wealthy employers.



At "The Breakers" he is said to have appeared well in livery, and to have passed the less and spotted character even with the sincerity of one born to the place.

Sinclair is the past made it a point to write from experience, he says. Before he brought out "The Jungle," he lived among the working folk of Packingtown, and managed to look into every corner of the big peckeries.

He applied for jobs in different departments and was said to have got them, related to foremen and superiors with bosses, loafed about the saloons where many of the toilers spent their evenings, and at last came forth with a mass, or mess, of alleged horrible facts, which gave the nation long cause for meat.

Just whet sort of "society exposure" the young men is planning remains for time to tell.

ARISTOCRACY STILL RULES 'ON UPPER FIFTH AVENUE

KNICKERBOCKER families still prefer the aristocratic Fifth evenue, notwithstanding the influx of many mull-millionaires from almost every quarter of the globe, who have "taken" palatial residences in the most beautiful thoroughfare in North America during the last decade.

All the talk about Fifth avenue being overrun by ontsiders is without foundation, although the personnel of the city's best society is constantly changing. Ward McAllister's 400 eligibles may have become 4,000 available, and the residents of Fifth avenue come from many states, as befits the cosmopolitan spirit of American cities.

But the newer additions to society dn not rule. They dn not even predominate, because the New Yorkers still own upper Fifth evenns, and some of the newcomers would be unable to break into their society with e colddashed.

New York society, however, hes become more and more of an established institution. The rulers nro ell natives of Menhetlan. Many of the so-called Knickerbocker families removed uptown. Even the new older homes nn Washington square, lower Fifth avenue and Grammercy park, and if Murrey hill is pervoded by the atmosphere of quiet conservatism, these sections are, after all, offset by the newer hotels and epertment houses, by Central park west and the Riverside drive not behind. When the cross streets are considered they ere found to offer the some conditions that existed in upper Fifth avenue in a concentrated form.

QUIET PREVAILS IN MONEY CIRCLES

CASH ONCE MORE FLOWING INTO THE STRONGER BANKS OF NEW YORK.

More Gold Engaged—Lusitania Bringing About $10,000,000—Pittsburg Adopts Small Check System—Oklahoma Growers to Withhold Cotton.

New York, Nov. 2.—The financial situation was gradually clearing Friday without showing any striking features. Runs on the banks and trust companies are practically over, money, which was temporarily withdrawn from banks subject to runs, is flowing into the stronger banks and currency is being provided in most cases where the demand for it is considered legitimate.

Further engagements of gold by Boston and other points have brought up the total engagements abroad under the recent movement to $26,550,000. The Lusitania, which sailed from Liverpool Friday, has on board about $10,000,000 in gold, one of the largest single shipments ever made. Prices on the exchange were firm during the early part of the day and did not yield seriously at any time.

Domestic Exchange Blockade.

Balances with the clearing house have settled down to a normal condition, but there is still something of a blockade in domestic exchange through the unwillingness of New York banks to pay currency on drafts from other cities and the unwillingness of other cities to pay out their currency upon drafts from New York. The condition of affairs indicates a continued pressure for currency rather than a breakdown of credits, but reasonable demands are being met for regular customers of the banks.

The possibility of hastening the export movement of wheat and cotton still engages the attention of foreign exchange dealers, and also of those who endeavor to keep in touch with the general situation.

To Pay by Check in Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 2.—The Pittsburg clearing house committee Friday night announced the details of a plan upon which it has been working for some days, whereby the vast industrial army of the Pittsburg district is to be paid in bank checks of small denominations in lieu of currency. The object sought to be attained by the action is to insure the steady operation of oil mills and factories in the district during the existing money stringency and to continue the present unexampled prosperity. It was decided to have the various manufacturing establishments pay their workingmen with checks in denominations of $5, $10 and $20, in place of cash. These checks, when properly signed by employers, will be used as currency and will be accepted as cash by tradesmen.

Will Withhold Cotton Crop.

Guthrie, Okla., Nov. 2.—Cotton growers in all parts of Oklahoma and Indian Territory Friday held secret meetings and discussed the cotton market situation. It was decided to hold the 1907 pick until cotton prices have advanced to a certain point.

The cotton growers have a compact organization and each member is sworn to secrecy. It is rumored the minimum price at which farmers will sell was fixed at 16 cents.

The action of cotton growers to hold the crop is considered in a favorable light by financial concerns, as indicating that the "flurry" has not frightened the agriculturists and that they are not in need of ready money. The fact that the banks will not be called on to supply cotton purchase funds will have much to do in restoring normal conditions. It is estimated that over 10,000 bales of cotton will be held out of the market in Logan county alone.

Guthrie Banks Reopen.

At one o'clock Friday afternoon the five Guthrie banks reopened for business under the limited payment plan, after a four days' holiday during which no business was transacted. The deposits greatly outnumbered the withdrawals. While there were scores who took advantage of the five dollar a day allowance the currency in each bank was increased by several thousand dollars.

SEEKS TO ENJOIN FOOTBALL.

Kankakee Lawyer Says High School Games Are Prize Fights.

Kankakee, Ill., Oct. 31.—Charging that football is prize fighting, Attorney S. R. Moore Wednesday filed a bill in the circuit court for an injunction restraining high school students from playing the game.

Moore declares that F. N. Tracy, superintendent of public schools, and L. W. Smith, high school principal, have aided and abetted prize fighting among students; that the game of football not only injures but demoralizes the student body; that the members of the team use profanity on the field and the game is degrading, unAmerican, unchristian and uncivilized.

Diphtheria in Kankakee Asylum.

Kankakee, Ill., Nov. 2.—Two male inmates and one woman nurse are sick of diphtheria at the Illinois Eastern Hospital for the Insane and two cottages are quarantined. The cases, with one exception, are mild, and Superintendent Green believes that the disease will be under control in a few days.

NO TOBACCO CROP IN 1908

GROWERS OF KENTUCKY AGREE ON RADICAL ACTION.

Efforts to Form Pool and Drive Buyers from Fields Are Causing Much Disturbance.

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 31.—With "peaceful armies" of invasion in the dark tobacco districts and the buyers growers having reached a decision not to raise any crop next year, the tobacco situation in Kentucky appears to be serious.

From the western end of the state, and especially in the Green river and Henderson stemming districts, reports of rather an unsettling nature were received Wednesday. Bodies of growers claiming to be members of the American Society of Equity are riding through McLean county notifying buyers to quit the tobacco fields until the 1906 crop is sold and urging growers to pool their crop with the society. The same thing has already been done in Daviess county, of which Owensboro is the county seat; in Henderson county, of which Henderson is the chief city, and in several other neighborhoods.

In many instances the buyers have agreed to quit and the majority of the growers have expressed their determination to pool their crops, but especially in Henderson county has there been considerable opposition to the plan of the growers. In fact, the buyers of Henderson have refused to accede to the request of the growers.

Every warehouse of any consequence in Henderson and Owensboro is guarded by armed men and there is considerable uneasiness. Especially is this true as the time for delivering the tobacco which has been bought outside the pool approaches.

MUTINEERS IN BOLD BATTLE.

Crew of Russian Destroyer Fights Four Vessels and Fort.

Vladivostok, Oct. 21.—An exciting little naval battle took place in this harbor Wednesday between the mutinous crew of a Russian torpedo boat destroyer and their loyal comrades. The mutineers were finally subdued, but not before a number of men had been killed or wounded.

The mutinous boat is the Skory, and she gave fight to the gunboat Mandschur, the destroyers Garnovor, Smely and Serdita and the garrison of one of the harbor forts manned by the Twelfth regiment of artillery.

The Skory soon was overwhelmed and she had to be beached to save her from sinking. This was not accomplished, however, before her guns had done considerable damage and several officers and men of the other ships had been killed or wounded.

RECEIVER FOR PAPER CONCERN.

Friend Company, of West Carrolton, O., Is Embarrassed.

Dayton, O., Oct. 31.—The Friend Paper company, of West Carrolton, a suburb of Dayton, was placed in the hands of a receiver Wednesday afternoon on application of its president, J. Howard Friend. Henry L. Newell was appointed receiver by Judge O. B. Brown, of the common pleas court.

The petition states that the company has notes aggregating $1,000,000; that the petitioner is surety on 60 notes aggregating $300,000. Further it is charged that the stringency in the money market renders the payment of these notes impossible at present. The company is reported to as a protection measure to shield the property from attacks of small creditors. The company is declared, is entirely solvent and is doing a prosperous business.

South Freeport, Me., Nov. 1.—The yacht Kingdon, with about 60 members of the Holy Ghost and Us colony at Shiloh on board and a crew of 20, sailed Thursday for the Holy Land. Among the number was Charles E. Hofter, known as "Moses," and who, during the absence of the leader, Rev. Frank W. Sanford, has been in charge of the colony.

Assassin is Hanged.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 31.—The warrant for the execution of Mile. Ragozinnikova, who on October 31 shot and killed Gen. Maximoffsky, director of the department of prisons of the ministry of the interior, was signed Wednesday by Gen. Hasenkampf, chief of the St. Petersburg military district and who has charged Wednesday night. This was done in spite of Gen. Maximoffsky's wish, expressed before he died, that the young woman be not executed.

Cleveland Traction Man Indicted.

Cleveland, O., Oct. 31.—The grand jury returned an indictment Wednesday against John J. Stanley, vice president and general manager of the Cleveland Electric Railway company, charging him with endeavoring to influence a witness. The specific allegation is that Stanley endeavored to influence the testimony of two witnesses in the investigation of cases of alleged illegal registration of voters by the grand jury.

Wood Alcohol Kills Four.

Tucson, Ariz., Oct. 31.—The bodies of four unknown men were found by a railroad track walker Wednesday at Maricopa. Investigation showed that death resulted from drinking wood alcohol stolen from a box car.

THINK HITCHCOCK MAY BE MURDERED

FRIENDS OF INDICTED ACTOR WON'T ADMIT THAT HE HAS RUN AWAY.

Accuses Blackmailers — Attorney Fromme Believes Gen Has Kidnaped the Man They Had Been Persecuting for Two Years.

New York, Nov. 1.—The disappearance of Raymond Hitchcock, following his indictment by the grand jury, which had been the storm of three years' trouble, was the absorbing topic Thursday on Broadway, where those who had known the star intimately during his ten years on the stage advanced half a dozen theories in explanation of his defeat.

The actor's closest friends, who have energetically defended his name since he became involved in trouble, are divided in opinion. Many insisted that, driven desperate by serious accusations, he had committed suicide.

Others were satisfied that he had been spirited away and possibly murdered by men who had practiced blackmail on the comedian and who feared exposure if the case against their victim came to trial.

This theory was voiced by Herman Fromme, the missing man's attorney, and by Mrs. Hitchcock, who before marriage was Zabelle Mangasarian of Chicago.

"Kidnaped or Murdered."

Mr. Fromme said: "Hitchcock did not go away of his own accord. He has been either kidnaped or murdered by the hand of blackmailers by which he has been annoyed, threatened and hounded for the past two years.

"Six of these men are known by name to me. Mr. Hitchcock has lived in a state of continual terror on account of their persecutions for two years. Nevertheless he has not left his wife voluntarily. He is an innocent man and there is no proof against him that there is the slightest foundation for the accusations made.

"Four men have been trailing him for months. Now it turns out that they are blackmailers. Last Monday Mr. Hitchcock was anxious to have this entire matter aired in court. The case was called for Thursday afternoon. I believe that he is the victim of blackmailers, who are not anxious to have the case thrashed out."

Police Hunt Diligently.

While these theories gained some credence, the police did not relax their efforts to locate Hitchcock. All outgoing steamers were visited and their passenger lists scrutinized. A wireless message was sent to the Majestic, which sailed Wednesday. Detectives also watched the train stations, but their vigilance was not rewarded. District Attorney Jerome sent two detectives to Boston. This action probably grew out of the statement of a railroad conductor who thought he had identified Hitchcock as a passenger on this city to North Adams Wednesday.

Some of Hitchcock's acquaintances think it likely that he has sought seclusion where, undisturbed for a few days, he can think over his predicament and decide upon a course of action.

Girl in Man's Clothes Arrested.

Kankakee, Ill., Nov. 2.—After travelling around the country dressed in man's clothes for six weeks, a girl, giving her name as Rosa Moore, of Newark, O., was arrested Friday. Houghton, Mich., Nov. 1.—Notices posted about the Calumet and Hecla works announce a reduction of wages on December 1 of 12½ per cent, approximately equal to the increase granted early in the year. There is no reduction in the output of the metal or the size of the working forces.

BANK CASHIER A SUICIDE

OFFICIAL OF FIRST NATIONAL, CHARITON, IA., KILLS SELF.

Frank Crocker Notifies Bank Examiner the Institution Is Overloaned and Then Takes Morphine.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 1.—Frank Crocker, cashier of the First National Savings bank of Chariton, committed suicide early Thursday. His daughter found him dead in bed. He had taken morphine.

The bank is believed to be in good shape.

Worry over losses sustained in alleged use of Modern Woodmen funds is believed to be the cause. Crocker left a note saying:

"I can't bear this strain any longer."

Crocker was once grand treasurer of the Modern Woodmen of America, and held a national office in that order at the time of his death.

Chariton is a town of 5,000 inhabitants, 100 miles from Des Moines.

National Bank Examiner H. M. Bostwick is in charge of the bank. Crocker, before killing himself, addressed a note to Mr. Bostwick, whose visit was expected. This note explained briefly that the bank had overdrawed and requested the examiner to take immediate charge. The bank has a capital stock of $50,000, a surplus of $50,000, and carried about $900,000 in deposits.

The other banks of Chariton are entirely unaffected by the closing of the First National. The Bank of Russell, a private institution of Russell, Ia., of which Crocker was president, also closed its doors temporarily.

POLICE HEADQUARTERS BURN.

Incendiary Fire in Buffalo Destroys Records and Injures Fireman.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 2.—Police headquarters of this city was practically ruined Friday afternoon by fire discovered in the basement and which spread rapidly through the two top floors.

All of the 30 prisoners were removed safely, though the fourth time the building has been on fire within a few months.

Valuable records, the rogues' gallery and many important documents, including the original copy of Leon Czolgosz's confession to the assassination of President McKinley, were destroyed. The fire was of incendiary origin. Two companies of firemen were caught in the collapse of the roof and cupola and eight men were seriously injured. None will die.

GAY NIGHT IN PITTSBURG.

Halloween Celebrated with Great Enthusiasm and Vigor.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 1.—Halloween was celebrated here Thursday night with more enthusiasm and vigor than ever before. The authorities enforced few restrictions and the result was that the people of this city and from many towns within a radius of 100 miles thronged the streets en masque and pandemonium reigned far into the night.

Halloween is to Pittsburg what the Mardi Gras is to New Orleans and New Year's are to New York. It is the one night in the year when everybody turns out for a good time.

Knoxville Saloons Closed.

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 1.—As a result of the application of the Pendleton law by which cities of Tennessee can reincorporate without the saloon, over 100 saloons closed their doors in Knoxville Thursday night. The city is quiet and whiskies are being sold at any price. The people voted on the law by special legislative enactment last March.

Philadelphia, Nov. 1.—Dr. Richard Mohr, general director of the Hahnemann hospital in this city and professor of materia medica and therapeutics, dropped dead Thursday while walking down Chestnut street. Dr. Mohr, was 63 years, of age, and was widely known in his profession.

EXTRA SESSION OF CONGRESS

MAY BE CALLED TO DEAL WITH THE EXISTING FINANCIAL CONDITIONS.

President Roosevelt Is Urged to Convene National Legislature for the Purpose of Averting a Possible "Dangerous Condition."

Washington, Nov. 4.—It was announced here Saturday from undoubted sources that President Roosevelt is being urged to call an extra session of congress to deal with the financial situation. The request comes from conservative leaders in the financial world.

The president has been assured from the most reliable sources there will be no opposition on the part of the great industries of the country to the enactment of legislation necessary to carry out his ideas of federal control.

These assurances are made at this time to avert what has been represented as the most dangerous situation which has confronted the country during an extended historic period—that is the seeming lack of confidence based on known irregularities in business methods in some quarters and no sure and speedy means of separating the good from the unsound.

To this end it is suggested that the president set congress to the task, first making such amendments to the financial laws as will result in the maximum of flexibility with the minimum of basic change in our system. Next and perhaps most important since, that the president embody his suggestions on corporation control into sufficient recommendation for enactment into law.

The president has been told that the call for an extra session might have the reverse effect from that desired, that it would tend to emphasize in the public mind an apprehension of unfavorable conditions which do not exist.

Treasury officials are agreed that the financial situation is distinctly improved day by day, and advices from financial centers today were of a very reassuring character. News item opening this morning for business of the banks in Oklahoma and New Mexico was received with great satisfaction, and there is said to be abundant evidence that the fear of more serious conditions is subsiding. National banks in all parts of the country are arranging to increase their circulation, and the treasury officials and clerks are working overtime in the effort to keep up with their vastly increasing correspondence.

A DEADLY PRANK.

A Boyish Trick Results in Death of an Unsuspecting Austrian.

Duluth, Minn., Nov. 2.—A Halloween prank cost Joe Vosnich his life at West Duluth. It was thought at first he was murdered, but it developed he met death by electrocution.

Some boys connected a bay wire with an electric light wire and then grounded it in an ort house where people going in and out might run against it and get a shock.

Vosnich grounded it was dead when found. He had just come from the Mesabe range where he had been working and was going west.

Two hundred and fifty dollars was found in his pockets. Three boys are arrested. They are Arthur Ehrburg, Herbert Daller and George Lazaroi, ranging from 12 to 14 years of age.

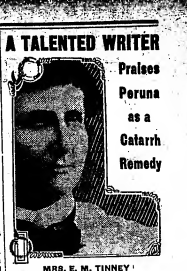
SHOOTS WIFE: DIES.

William Miller of Austin, Minn., Shoots Spouse and Then Himself.

Austin, Minn., Nov. 2.—After wounding his wife with three shots from his revolver, William Miller entered the room which caused his death soon afterwards. Mrs. Miller is expected to recover.

The tragedy was enacted in the Miller home on Water street at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Divorce proceedings, started by the woman as a result of differences of control of her property, is said to have caused the shooting.

Mrs. Miller, widow of Elmer Norton, a well-to-do farmer, married Miller several years ago. They have one small son, and Mrs. Miller has two children by her first husband.



Shoots Down Two Men.

Rapid City, S. D., Nov. 4.—A double murder may be the result of a shooting affray here among the colored element who were holding a party. Angered because he was restrained from beating up Cora Devoe, Ed. Wallace turned a gun on John and Frank Graves, well known brothers, and shot down both. Wallace is held pending the result.

Train Robbers Arrested.

Helena, Mont.,—A dispatch from Kalispell says Sheriff O'Connell has arrived there with the two men arrested in Spokane on the charge of having robbed the Great Northern train here Sunday night, and which netted $40,000 to the desperadoes. The men put up a desperate fight in order to regain their freedom after the sheriff had managed to bring about their removal to Montana without extradition papers. The men give the names of Frankhauser and Mc-Donald.

A TALENTED WRITER

Praises Peruna as a Catarrh Remedy

MRS. E. M. TINNEY

Mrs. S. M. Tinney, story writer, 826 E. Nueva St., San Antonio, Tex., writes:

"During 1901 I suffered form nasal catarrh, which various remedies failed to relieve.

"One bottle of Peruna, which I took, entirely cured me, the catarrh disappearing and never returning.

"I therefore cheerfully recommend Peruna to all similarly afflicted."

Mrs. Ellen Nagle, 414 4th street, Green Bay, Wis., writes:

"I have often heard Peruna praised and is more widely known here than any other medicine, but I never knew what a splendid medicine it really was until a few weeks ago when I caught a bad cold which settled all over me.

"The doctor wanted to prescribe, but I told him I was going to try Peruna and sent for a bottle and tried it.

"I felt much better the next morning and within five days I had not a trace of any lameness or any cough.

"I consider it the finest cough remedy."

PERUNA TABLETS—Some people prefer to take tablets, rather than to take medicine in a fluid form. Such people can obtain Peruna Tablets, which represent the solid medicinal ingredients of Peruna.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Rattlesnake Loose.

St. Paul—Passengers at the Union depot were given a bad scare as the result of the escape of a Texas rattlesnake from a box in charge of the Wells Fargo Express company.

The snake was one of six consigned to E. J. Erickson, Hamline, and had been shipped from Brownsville, Texas, Sept. 7. According to the officials of the express company the consignee refused to accept the snake, stating that they had arrived too late for the purpose for which he wished them, therefore the snakes have been kept at the express company's Union depot office since Sept. 7.

During the early hours of the morning one of the larger snakes managed to get out of the box and crept across the platform. Several passengers who were boarding the early morning trains saw the snake and a panic followed.

Finally a brakeman on the Great Northern who had evidently had some experience in handling rattlers, picked up the snake and carried him back to the box, which has been tightly nailed.

Forgery Charged.

Rochester—Charged with a series of bold forgeries, Mrs. Aimee Lloyd, of San Francisco, twenty-two years old and endowed with a charming personality, is a prisoner in the county jail. Mrs. Lloyd was Miss Sickle before her marriage and was well known here during her childhood and early girlhood. She is unusually pretty.

Several days ago Mrs. Lloyd came to Rochester from the West. She had not been in this city for ten years, and her old friends gave her a cordial welcome.

She made numerous purchases about town, and it is in connection with these transactions that it is alleged the laws were transgressed.

Badly Burned.

Franklin—Mrs. A. J. Olin received painful burns while cleaning a gasoline stove. She was pouring a fresh supply from a five-gallon can, which was partly filled, into a small vessel, when the fluid became ignited by coming in contact with a heated stove, causing an explosion and setting fire to Mrs. Olin's dress. Her hair was singed and her face, hands and other parts of her body were severely burned. She ran out of doors and neighbors helped her to smother the flames in her clothing. An infant child was sleeping in a baby carriage close by, but when the vehicle took fire the baby was rescued uninjured.

Suicide.

St. Paul—Miss Rachel Goldstein, 148 State street, returned home with a portion of the wedding trousseau she had purchased during the afternoon, and saw, thru a window, the body of her father, Samuel Goldstein, hanging from a rope. She gave the alarm, and several neighbors broke into the house and cut down the body. It was thought that Goldstein was still alive. A physician was called and pronounced him dead. Coroner J. W. Miller decided that it was a case of suicide.

Lid is Tilted.

East Grand Forks—Six affidavits were mailed to Attorney General Young to call his attention to the fact that Mayor John O'Connor has failed to put the lid on open gambling in East Grand Forks. The affidavits are signed by parties who claim to have gambled in resorts openly conducted. A communication was served on the mayor telling him of the affidavits and making a demand that he enforce the law. It is claimed that the mayor has wholly failed to keep his promise.

Dropped Dead.

Duluth—Charles W. Potter, of 1424 West First street, dropped dead at Lake avenue and Third street while attending with the local bodies of the Ancient Order United Workmen from their hall to the First Methodist church to listen to the annual memorial service, this being the thirty-ninth anniversary of the order. Mr. Potter was 74 years old, and is survived by a widow and five children. He was a steamfitter by trade.

Suicide in Court.

Minneapolis—Rather than again face a prison sentence Willam Blackman, 26 years old, 2116 Twenty-second street south, Minneapolis, a paroled prisoner from St. Cloud, shot himself thru the head while standing at the sergeant's desk at the Central police station. The ball, a 32-caliber, passed thru his right temple, killing him instantly, a portion of the brain oozing out on the floor.

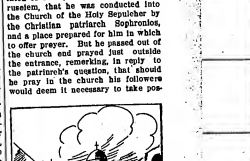
THE SITE OF CALVARY

INTERESTING ANCIENT REMAINS DISCOVERED IN JERUSALEM.

Wall and Gateway Undoubtedly Built During Time of Constantine to Inclose Shrines Covering Tomb of Christ.



New York—Within the past few days some ancient remains have been uncovered in Jerusalem that are of unusual interest and throw a clear light on the much discussed question of the site of Calvary. The contiguous and imposing Russian hospice, to the east of the site of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, was rearred for the purpose of inclosing and conserving a bit of ancient wall and a gateway which were unearthed some years ago. The gateway is covered with a large glass case.

On the northern side of the rear wall of the Russian hospice there has just been brought to light, by the removal of rubbish in preparing for some alterations and improvements, another bit of old wall which is on a line with and part of the wall within the Russian hospice, and another old gateway. It is now clear that all of this wall and both of these gateways date from the time of Constantine, having been built by him to inclose the area on which he erected the shrines covering the then recently discovered tomb of Christ and Calvary. The gateway just uncovered opens toward toward the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, the massive pillars being rabbeted on the western side. It is nearly on a line with the two domes of the church, thus opening almost exactly upon the present church, which occupies the site of Constantine's original buildings. The place where the old bolt of the door shrouded the south pillar is plainly visible. From this gateway the wall extends south to a point within the Russian hospice, where it turns eastward, and the lower, or other old gateway, so carefully conserved, is in this part of the wall, and so at right angles to the recently discovered gateway. The pilot rock-ets in the stone sill, made for the door to swing in, show that it opened southward into the same area. With in this gateway still exists, in situ, fragments of the old pavement of Constantine.

Some eight years ago in digging in the narrow passage way on the north side of the Russian hospice, an old inscription was found, in Cufic characters, which has been cut in the stone of Constantine's wall on its outside face, and a little to the south of the gateway just discovered. It reads as follows:

"In the name of God the most merciful, the most gracious. The high command has gone forth from his majesty's victorious presence for protecting and repairing this place of worship, and that no non-Moslem should enter it, and that no one should transgress this decree, but rather should comply with it."

What spot this may refer to is not certain. It could not point to the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, which has never been used as a Mohammedan shrine. On the contrary, it is related of Omar, after he had taken Jerusalem, that he was conducted into the Church of the Holy Sepulcher by the Christian patriarch Sophronius, and a place prepared for him in which to offer prayer. But he passed out of the church and prayed just outside the entrance, remarking, in reply to the patriarch's question, that should he pray in the church his followers would deem it necessary to take possession of it as a mosque. Omar's praying there is a much valued item of Moslem history, and is said to have been the reason for the mosque which stands to the southwest of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher being called, after him, Omar's mosque. This is the assumption that it was outside the south entrance to the church that he prayed. The above inscription, however, proves that it was outside of this newly discovered entrance from the east.

The photograph from which the accompanying picture was made was taken looking eastward from a point immediately above the newly unenrthed pillars of the time of Constantine shown in the other photograph. It indicates the relation of the old portal to the Church of the Holy Sepulcher and to the open air sunlight upon the shrines of Constantine. The largest dome seen in the picture is over the rotunda of the Holy Sepulcher itself, while the smaller and nearer one is over the Greek church. The bell tower of the church is also seen above to the left. The wall on the left with double windows is the rear wall of the Russian hospice.

GERMAN SOCIALIST COMING.

Herr Bebel to Lecture and Look for Slow Growth of His Cause.

New York.—One of Germny's most remarkable public men is to visit this city. Herr Bebel, the spectacular leader of the German Socialists, has planned for a tour of the United States at an early day. He wishes to study the working man and politics here, the politics of the American Republic, and to learn why it is that in the country which, in his view, has suffered most from the greet moneyed trusts socialism has made so little headway.

Herr August Ferdinand Sebel.

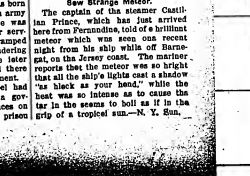
Herr Bebel will lecture in New York and other cities. He expects to spend considerable time in the coal and iron regions and the great manufacturing centers to learn first hand how the American workingman is treated.

Herr Bebel is himself a wealthy man, his wealth is counted in German millions, acquired largely by bequests from wealthy admirers of which business thrift has augmented.

August Ferdinand Bebel is now seventy-seven years old. He was born in Cologne, the son of a German army corporal. In early boyhood he was apprenticed to a turner. After serving his apprenticeship he tramped shont the country as a wandering journeyman in his trade. He later opened a shop in Leipsig, and there joined the workingmen's movement.

As early as 1868 Herr Bebel had attracted the attention of the government to his radical utterances on socialism, and he was put in prison for his temchings. In 1872 he was arrested with the Socialist Liebknecht on a charge of high treason, and was sentenced to two years imprisonment in the fortress of Hubertusburg.



Altogether Bebel has been behind the bars fifty-seven months for political offenses.

For thirty years Bebel has been a member of the reichstag parliament of Saxony and has sat in the Relchstag for the second district of Hamburg.

THE MEXICAN CARGODORE.

Takes the Place of Drays and Express Wagons in Many Cities.

Mexico City.—The Mexican peon is capable of hearing great burden upon his back. The cargadore of Mexico answer the purpose of express wagons and drays in all of the principal cities and towns. They meet the trains at the depots and offer to carry the trunk and baggage of passengers to the hotels and other stopping places. They handle practically all the transfer business of the country. These men are capable of carrying several hundred pounds of weight. One of the industries in the vicinity of the town of Silao is the gathering and sale of wild sunflowers for fuel. It is formed into enormous bundles and brought into town upon the backs of the cargadore peons. Sometimes these bundles or wild sunflowers are Saw Strange Meteor.

The captain of the steamer Castilian Prince, which has just arrived here from Fernandina, told of a brilliant meteor which was seen on recent night from his ship while off Barnegat, on the New Jersey coast. The mariner reports thet the meteor was so bright that all the ship's lights cast a shadow "as black as your hand," while the heat was so intense as to cause the tar in the seams to boil as if in the grip of a tropical sun.—N. Governor Johnson will not be a candidate on the democratic ticket for president in opposition to Roosevelt. Pretty smooth politician that man Johnson.

Money has been tied up in the banks for a few weeks, and the fellows that are doing the most kicking about it are the ones that didn't have any money in the bank, but some of them are expecting a remittance of their share of the Rockefeller millions as soon as the Socialist party get into power, and they want the banks in shape to cash their drafts when they arrive.

There is some talk in the Democratic party of nominating P. M. Ringdal, of Crookston for Governor next year, if Roosevelt does not run for president, and Johnson should become the candidate of the dems for president, and if, but never mind any more if's, as the above is enough to put him out of the deal, but we might add, that if he was nominated he would not be elected.

Government To Dredge.

Petitions are being circulated asking for government aid to improve the Red Lake River, and make it fit for navigation, a petition is as follows:

To the Senators and Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, Washington D.C.

This petition for the improvements for Red Lake River, between Thief River Falls and Red Lake in the State of Minnesota, is by the undersigned respectfully presented for favorable consideration:—

1. The construction of a lock and dam at the outlet of Red Lake for the regulation of the flow of water from that lake; for the improvement of navigation on the river below.

2. Channel dredging and the removal of obstruction from the channel and bank of Red Lake River between Thief River Falls and Highlandita.

The above is the copy of the petition as it will be presented to the voters for their signature, and every man living within ten miles of this river should see to it that his own and his neighbors name gets on this petition.

We shall have more to say on this subject a little later on, for we have been pounding at it for two years and shall keep at it until we get our railroad fixed up so we can ship goods on it.

An Event.

When a Man Lies.

"If you want to tell whether or not the man you are talking to is telling the truth, don't look him in the eyes," said a Denver bank teller to some friends last night. "I thought it was just the other way," said one of those present. "I've always understood that it made no matter for the liar if you looked squarely in his eyes." "That's a wrong impression," continued the bank teller. "The man who knows how to lie knows how to look you in the eyes when he's doing it. And the man who isn't a regular liar, but who has made up his mind to lie to you, decides first that he must look you straight in the eyes. It is the voice, when you don't look at the eyes, that tells you whether the other fellow is lying. We use the system frequently in the bank. A man will come in to tell us some business tale. We look at his feet or his hands or his knees, but never in his eyes. If he's telling the truth his voice will be firm and straightforward, and the absence of your gaze in his eyes will not effect it, but if he's lying he'll be confused by your action, and his voice will tremble. He'll ben and haw and clear his throat. You may rest assured then that he's stringing you."—Denver Post

Here Ben Jonson.

The epitaph, "O Rare Ben Jonson," engraved on the tablet marking the burial place of the celebrated playwright in the "poets' corner," Westminster abbey, is said to have originated with Jack Young (afterward knighted), who, "walking there when the grave was covering, gave the fellow 18 pence to cut it." Dr. Brewer in his "Phrase and Fable" says Shakespeare called Jonson "Rare Ben," but does not say where. According to Chambers' "Book of Days," the phrase formed the concluding words of the verses written and displayed in the clubroom of Ben's clique at the famous Mermaid tavern. The epithet "Rare Ben Jonson" is said to have been first uttered after the appearance of his highly successful farce, "Bartholomew Fair." The epitaph has been copied once at least. When Sir William Davenant was interred in Westminster abbey the inscription on his covering stone was "O Rare Sir William Davenant."

Deception of Wild Birds.

Falcons—hawks the largest species—often compromise their dignities and look very thin if they think it necessary to do so. As to the owls, they can bump do so. As to the owls, they can bump and sometimes their think most suitable. It is useless to look for these self preserving traits in any of the family kept in zoological collections, for the birds are so accustomed to see large numbers of people passing and repassing or standing in front of them that they treat the whole matter with perfect indifference. They know that at a certain time their food will be brought to them and that they are otherwise perfectly safe. The raptores in a wild state have a bloom on their plumage, like the bloom on a bunch of grapes, which is rubbed off often even when in captivity.

A Train For Taft.

During Mr. Tyler's incumbency of the presidential office he arranged to make an excursion in some direction and sent his son Bob to arrange for a special train. It happened that the railroad superintendent was a strong Whig. As such he had no favors to bestow on the president and informed Bob that his road did not run any special trains for the president. "What?" said Bob. "Did you not furnish a special train for the funeral of President Harrison?" "Yes," said the superintendent, "and if you'll help your father in that condition you shall have the best train on the road."

A Casual Clock.

The famous cleopedra or watch clock at Dunkeld in Perthshire, Scotland, is a curiosity in its way. Three big earthen jars on successive shelves find a fourth and lowest one with a wooden cover contains the whole cleopedra. The water descends by slow drops from one jar to another, the brass scale on a float in the last jar telling the hours as it rises. Every afternoon at 5 o'clock since 1740 A. D. the lowest jar has been emptied, the upper one filled and the clock thus wound up for an other day.

Blessing the River.

In the little Balkan state of Montenmih it has been the custom from time immemorial for towns by the river Danube to keep the Christmas feast by a peculiar ceremony called "blessing the river." This used to be carried out on a scaffolding erected on the frozen river, but owing to an accident, when the ice broke, and hundreds of people were drowned, it is now held upon the bank. The people wear turbins of colored paper and carry long, white wands. Some are dressed to represent Biblical characters. The service, conducted by priests, lasts about half an hour, and then the ice is broken and a small wooden cross thrown into the water. Then people rush into the icy river after the crucifix, and the person who secures it is supposed to be assured of great good luck for the coming year.

His Modest Claim.

A claim for damages against a railroad company is so often a license for exorbitant charges that a simple bill, such as was rendered by an American railroad company many years ago, even apart from its humorous aspect, is refreshing. It ran as follows:

Yes — and — Railroad company Dr.
to John Smith
July 12, 1887.—To running your Locomotive into my wife, as per Doctor's bill for curing her $10.00
To smashing tan box and spilling her hat 2.25
To upsetting my deer horn (wagon) and breaking it 6.00
To hurting me 5.00
$23.25

There is authority for stating that the claim was paid immediately.—Scrap Book.

Her Chilly Retort.

The late Dr. —— Middleton, after pouring forth the story of his unfortunate love in the most touching manner for over an hour to a young woman who he hoped would become his fourth wife, was accepted the second time. He started for the door, but, looking ordered, he said in a most thrilling tone, "By heavens, you are the coldest woman I ever saw!"

The young woman looked up and answered sweetly:

"Oh, no, doctor; you have seen three colder than I!"—Boston Herald.

A Curious Notice.

This curious official notice was duly published in Germany: "At the request of Herr Wilhelm Leigsen of Inhabitant, Hamburg, Adolph Leigsen, who was drowned in May, 1899, on a Sunday from Steinhofer to Steinhorn in the river Elbe, Frederick, is hereby called upon by the courts to appear and report himself, or, in default thereof, will be declared dead."

Financial Item.

Terrell—Dogs you pay me that 5 dollars you owe me? I owe Johnson some money, and want to pay him that debt. Weil, I'll tell you what, pay Johnson, and you owe him and then I'll believe in shillings or 2 dollars and pay you.

Mistaken.

Finally Young Young let the diamond before the man in front of him in order to take a good look at it. Then he began talking about the stone, and the man, thinking he was being addressed, turned around and said: "Excuse me, but I was not talking to you, sir."

Young, with a look of pity, replied: "That's perfectly natural, for you will please not use your eyes for anything but looking."—Tit-Bits.

Caught the Policeman.

All the countryside is laughing at an experience of the police at Lough Neagh, Ireland. An intercountry cockfight was arranged between birds from Londonderry and Antrim, and the men and some of the islands in the lough. The police got wind of it and arrived, but they usually do, late. All the available boats had been pressed into use by the spectators, and the police, after a stiff chase, succeeded in intercepting the boats, determined to swim for it. Just as they arrived the fight ended, and every boat put off for the mainland again. The police had a swim back for their pains. When they reached the mainland they found that their clothing, over which they had negleted to leave a guard, had disappeared. They had a ten mile march in dripping underclothes to the nearest barracks, where they were put to bed until new uniforms could be procured.—Liverpool Mercury.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Mark's Lung Balsam with tar, is sold by all dealers, Price 25 cent. 50 cents and $1.00.

Many of the former neighbors of Mrs. Audrés Christianson in Deer Park will learn with regret, that she is at the present time in the hospital at Grafton N. D., suffering with typhoid feavor. Mr. Christianson has met with the usal luck of about 90 per cent of the farmers who sell off their stock and move to town, which is financial ruin.

Martain Moe, of Deer Park found 10 calves that had strayed away from his place two months ago over at James O'Briens in the town of Kratka on Monday last. Mr. O'Brien had been trying to find the owner and Mr. Moe had been trying to find the calves, but if either one of them had put a Notice in THE SUNBEAM, they would have met in a week.

BROILING.

If the fire should be too hot, sprinkle salt over it.

Birds and other things which need to be basted should be broiled inside first.

Always grease the gridiron well and have it hot before the meat is placed on it.

Never put your fork in the lean part of meat on the gridiron, for it allows the juice to escape.

Fish should be buttered and sprinkled with flour, which will prevent the flesh from adhering to the gridiron.

Remember that a hot, clear fire is necessary for broiling all small articles. They should be turned often to be cooked evenly without being burned.

Cover the gridiron with a tin pan or a baking pan. The sooner the meat is cooked without burning the better. The pan holds the heat and often prevents a stray line of smoke from touching the meat.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Paying Through the Nose.

"Paying through the nose" is to be indirectly swindled in a transaction or to pay an exorbitant price for a thing in consideration of long credit. A variant is "to be bored through the nose," "bored" here having the meaning of cheated, deceived:

At the instant he bores me with some trick—Henry VIII., b. i. [illegible]

Cho.—that hath fooled you, that hath bored you through the nose?—Taylor's Nat. H. 2d. iii. 1.

And Howell in his "Instruction For Forren Travell" (1650), page 59, "had knowne divers Dutch gentlemen grossly gull'd by this cheat (the selling of forged manuscripts to young travelers in Italy), and soon English bord also through the nose this way by paying excessive prices for them."—Notes and Queries.

How He Got a Drink.

An Indiana traveling man told a story the other day of an incident on the road. He was in the smoking car of an express train reading his paper when a man rushed in from the car behind the smoker, evidently in great agitation and said: "Has anybody in this car any whisky? A woman in the car behind has fainted". Instantly dozens of flasks were produced. The man who had asked for it picked out the largest one, drew the cork and put the bottle to his lips. With a long, satisfied sigh, he handed the flask back and remarked, "That did me a lot of good, and I needed it, for it always makes me feel queer to see a woman faint." Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Samuel Warren's Vanity.

The vanity of Samuel Warren, the author of "Ten Thousand a Year," in his early years of authorship at least, was remarkable, and there is a story told of him to the effect that on one occasion at a friend's house he had to take down to dinner a lady whom he had not met before, and as soon as they were seated at table rowed her if she had ever heard of Samuel Warren. "Oh, certainly," was the reply. "My husband prefers Warren's blacking to any other. We always use it."—Westminster Gazette.

Choice of Evils.

"Well, old man," said Simkinson after the performance, "I certainly was surprised to see you in private theatricals."

"Yes," replied Brightly, "but you see if I didn't appear on the stage I'd probably have to sit in the audience and be bored to death."—Philadelphia Press.

DILLY'S DREAM

By MABEL GIFFORD

(Copyright.)

Such great, great troubles from such small, small offenses. That is the way my trouble grew. When you get into a little bit of a temper you had better "watch out," for you can never tell that a little bit of temper will not grow into a furious tempest before it clears off.

At home they called me "Dilly Dear," and after I was Dixon, it was "Dilly Dear" just the same. So it doesn't matter what comes after the first name, for it's always "Dilly Dear."

But that little bit of a temper—I will tell you about it. First, you should be informed that I live in a little country town. It's pretty enough and pleasant enough, but you know a little country town is about the same all the year around. This town is. And sometimes, you know, you wish something would happen.

One day a theater troupe came into town. Such a thing never had come to pass in this town long before to my knowledge.

I rushed at Donald when he came home to dinner and told him about it.

"Pshaw!" was what he said.

Now, such a dash of cold water over one, after one has been dancing all the morning in happy anticipation, is a tremendous shock to one's nervous system. Especially if one is not used to shocks.

"Dilly Dear, you don't care anything about that affair;" he put his arm about me and was leading me to the table as if there was nothing in the world of any consequence but dinner.

By this time I was feeling the reaction of the shock, and the hot blood rushing fast to my head set fire to my bit of a temper, and I answered Donald sharply:

"But I do care; I am going to the play."

"Oh, no, Dilly Dear; you will not go to such a low place as that," he said, marching me right along to the table.

"Low! It isn't low. It's nice green grass and a nice, big white tent and beautiful music and elegant people. Nothing ever came here before. I never saw anything anywhere, and I am just wild to go. I have been thinking of it all the morning; I couldn't wait for you to come home."

I leaned my head against Donald's shoulder. I did not expect it would be necessary to say anything more.

"Dilly Dear, I am sorry you care so much, but you must not go. It is not a fit place for you."

"Must not go!" just think of that; "must not!" Who ever had said such words to me before? I must go; indeed I must. I could not bear to be disappointed. I had promised my friend Mrs. Chase, I would go with her.

"Dilly Dear," then he put his hands on my shoulders and looked very kindly into my eyes, "then I shall have to forbid your going."

"Forbid!" indeed! I shook his hands from my shoulders. He made up his mind that I was an obstinate child, and dealt with me accordingly.

"If you cross me, I shall forbid you, but do not come back. Do you understand?"

Ah, yes, I understood. He meant to frighten me. Partly because I did not believe he meant it, and partly because I was so nervous, and partly, I believe, to tease him, I laughed.

"Mrs. Dixon," he said, with such a face as I never had seen before, "I mean exactly what I said."

Then he went out, and I listened until he was out of hearing. When I got to Mrs. Chase's I was out of breath.

When we got to the tent it was half filled with people, mostly men and boys, and the women—there were several I had seen in the street, but they were not my acquaintances, and the rest were not like any women I had ever seen in our little country town. I was not pleased with the audience.

But the play; I will not try to describe it. I had expected to be charmed, to be "carried away" by excitement, to laugh and cry and forget that it was not real. Instead of all that, it seemed affected and disgusting. The characters made silly jests and leered and frowned and threatened and fainted and raved, and I tried to forget that it was acting, and couldn't.

From the Chases' I went home alone. The house was dark.

"The hall lamp is left for me," I thought, and I ran up the steps and gave the door a good push and scrabbed to get in out of the rain as soon as possible.

The door did not open. I turned the key again and again, but in vain.

"Donald is so used to bolting it, he has forgotten," I said, and knocked vehemently. All was silent. It was the most desolate moment of my life.

I knew that Donald should have been the house lighted and been waiting for me. This lockout was ominous.

I ran back to Mrs. Chase's.

"Donald is so used to bolting the door, he has forgotten and bolted me out, and I can't make him hear without rousing the neighborhood."

Of course they carefully ushered me in and middle[illegible]ed me the night, but I saw them exchange significant glances, and I knew that Donald was not right. I forgave him that night as I forgave him many times after.

Morning came at last, and with difficulty I made my way to my home.

It seemed as if I must die then and there when I found the house closed, shades drawn, door locked and no sign or sound of a human being about the place. But pride and indignation came swiftly to the rescue. I feared some one would see me trying in vain to enter my own home and turned quickly away and walked on, thinking as I walked what my next step should be. I was very indignant with Donald for punishing me so severely for braving his displeasure. Now I would frighten him a little. Probably he had gone to my sister's or his brother's. He knew I could find him easy enough. He had been town lovers, cruel. Now I would take my turn. I had a roll of bills in my purse that Donald had given me the day before. I would go out of town for a day or two and let him find me if he could. And all the time something kept asking: "If he does?"

I had often heard people say that these mild-tempered people are terrible when once aroused, and now I began to understand something of it. I had not believed anything like this of Donald.

I recalled every possible acquaintance I had ever had that lived in the city. I decided upon an old school friend, whom I had not seen since she married and went to the city, and of whom I really knew nothing. I hunted her up, found her living humbly but comfortably, and quite delighted to see me. I told her I was taking a little outing and would like to engage a room for several days, she was so contented to be an ex-rustic that I wished to visit. Little she dreamed of the tragedy I lived during those days. I bought the daily papers and scanned their columns, hoping for some word meant for none of the thousands of readers but myself.

All in vain. My courage failed me so that I was afraid to go home. Then I began to scheme out how not every scheme failed. Little by little my pride and anger cooled away, and at last I was ready to go down on my knees before the whole world and beg my husband to take me back.

Then I went to my friend and bade her good-by and set out on my unhappy journey homeward. The thought of my husband now filled me with terror. He had grown into a sort of ogre during the last few days.

I was in such a fever of suspense as I neared the house that I could hardly walk. If it should be closed still!

I did not know what happened after that, until I heard some one saying in the tenderest of voices:

"Dilly Dear, what is it? Are you frightened? Are you ill?"

I opened my eyes to find myself in my own room and Donald bending over me with the most anxious concern in his face. I just put my arms around his neck and cried so violently I could not speak. He smoothed my hair and said "Dilly Dear, Dilly Dear," until I was quieter.

"What would you say to me, Donald, if I went to the play?" I asked, as soon as I could speak.

"Do you care so much about it? Is it that has sent you into hysterics?"

"Just supposing I go, what will you do?" I persisted.

"Why, do? Why—I shall have to go with you, I suppose. And if you are going to take it to heart like this we had better go. But, Dilly Dear, I am surprised at you."

And then I began to laugh, and laughed so long that Donald begged me to tell him what I was laughing for.

"Because you are the dearest husband in the world," I answered blindly, of course he was puzzled over that. "You wouldn't let me go off alone. would you? You wouldn't call me 'Mrs. Dixon,' would you? You wouldn't 'forbid' my going, and tell me I never should come back again if I went, would you?"

Having received a satisfactory answer to these questions I told him my dream. And he smoothed my hair all the time I was relating, and when I finished he said: "Dilly Dear,"

"Mrs. Dixon, I Mean Exactly What I Say."

Knitting Bag

A very practical bag for holding knitting is shown here; it may be made of art linen, silk, velvet or cloth, with lining appropriate to the outside material. The piece that forms the bag is cut 9½ inches long and 13 inches deep; turn the two horizontal ends over to form a hem, in which run two strips of whalebone; they keep the edges in shape and open well. Bind the edges with ribbon, and ornament the outside with straps of silk or ribbon, and sprays of holly berries and leaves worked in satin-stitch with embroidery silk.

Cut two circles of the material for the ends, tack them over buckram and line with silk, then bind the edges; they should be four inches in diameter. Seam the circles in the end of case, leaving about three inches at the top unseamed. Sew two straps of ribbon on the top for handles, and if an extra fastening is desired, a loop might be sown in the center of one edge of opening, and a button on the other.

FOR THE YOUNGSTERS

Warm, Hugging Garments of Gray Squirrel Have Tiny Fur Toques and Russian Caps.

Wee lads and lassies in the Gretchen shops are rigging themselves out in masqueraders as Teddy bears in warm, hugging coats of gray squirrel with tiny toques of fur and Russian caps of fierce aspect. Gray brilliantine cloth is lined with white fur to snuggle baby bruinlings in.

Truly wind-resisting top coats for the pet youngsters are genuine moleskins, some of which cost several gold pieces at the furriers, but which mothers, knowing how Gretchens grow, are willing to put up with moleskin cloth, of which a really nice coat trimmed with silk braid may be had for $10 anywhere.

The furry bearskin coats for toddlers are as popular as ever. One shown was of real white bear skin, thick and long haired, which was rather heavy for toddling, and yet the snuggest sort of a wrap for riding out in a perambulator.

A white bearskin cloth coat is decidedly cute. It is trimmed with claws and heads of funny animals that look like the Teddy bears in a picture book. White leggings accompany this garment, and a peaked Teddy cap with quaint ears is designed especially for it.

The pussy cat in the rival of the Teddy costume, and is equally realistic, while practical.

The pussy cat, or as some call it the baby bunting, outfit for cold days for youngsters under five years, is fashioned in toto of rabbit skins, from the white jack rabbit of the plains, and a few are shown of the big gray rabbit. The fur may be taken for thick ermine.

A pussy cat box coat is double breasted and buttoned on a flap under in front. The white fur collar turns up if necessary to protect the ears. At the throat a quaint cat's head made of white and black fur with whiskers and cat's eyes hides the big hook to hook over. Little cat heads and paws are applied in different ways to the coats.

Another novelty is a Brer Fox coat. This, of course, is of the rare white fox with pointed nose, head, paws and long brush and is intended for the period baby of a magnate. A red Brer Fox coat is lined with white silk and the foxy eyes look from heads on each shoulder while the tails hang down behind the pointed hood.

Thrifty folks who do not live in the cold prefer astrachan, bearskin and broadcloths. Bewitching arrays of these fur trimmed and braid trimmed ready to wear are ready to be seen at the department stores. All that a baby or toddler could think of is shown in cold-weather things.

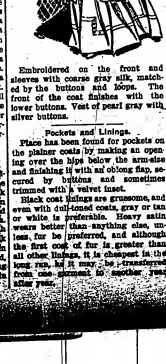
BUTTERFLY DECORATION

The Imitation, If Not the Real Insect, Is High in Favor Just at this Moment.

The season seems a little late, perhaps, to talk of butterflies, but at present the artificial insect, if not the real, is in high favor for various decorative purposes.

A few years ago impossible creatures of gigantic proportions served as light-shades upon lamps—crepe paper monstrosities—but the butterfly craze of to-day is of a more realistic nature.

For luncheons charming paper butterflies of yellow, tinseled, are to be had. These may be scattered over the table or perched on the floral centerpiece. For a yellow luncheon this idea is a very pretty one.



So much for the paper butterfly. But the real butterfly preserved in marvelous fashion is to figure largely in the season's fashions. The craze for butterflies upon hats is obtaining largely in London, where rare specimens are used with beautiful effect. It is impossible to imitate the gorgeous coloring and varying hues of the metallic wings of the South American electric blue butterfly or the exquisite Java specimens in black and yellow. On hats these butterflies are mounted on pins and rare moths are used in the same way.

On gowns both the real and embroidered butterflies are used on chiffon or net foundations.

Another butterfly novelty just coming into vogue in this part of the country is a medallion or locket showing portions of the butterfly wings under glass, just as clover leaves and such things have previously been worn.

The iridescent hues of the wings so preserved are extremely beautiful in their gold settings and sometimes very small butterflies, the whole insect mounted against a background, composed of a wing of a large butterfly. As pendants, pins and lockets, these butterfly charms promise to attain considerable vogue.

CLOTH SUIT

Embroidered on the front and sleeves with coarse gray silk, matched by the buttons and loops. The front of the coat finishes with the fronts of the jacket. Vest of pearl gray with silver buttons.

Pockets and Linings.

Place has been found for pockets on the plainer coats by making an opening over the hips below the arm-size and finishing it with an oblong flap, secured by buttons and sometimes trimmed with a velvet insert.

Black coat linings are gruesome, and even with coat-tinted coats, gray or tan is preferable. Heavy satin wears better than anything else, unless for be preferred, and although the first cost of fur is greater than all other linings, it is cheapest in the long run. Satin and sometimes figured serge, to match, are pleasant to another year after year.

Chinese Embroideries.

Chinese and other oriental embroideries, done in several shades of one color or a mixture of colors on silk bands, are to be more or less used on many of the handsome reception and calling costumes in the late autumn. These are especially effective with sheer black wools, also with the silk crepes. These bands have been in use for some time, and have indeed been the most appropriate trimming in connection with a mixture of silk sleeves.

Collars and Cuffs.

Collars and cuffs of velvet are to be worn with the fall suits, and the latter are to be of the three-quarter length. Velvet is also to be used for the trimming of the tailor-made suits, and the fashion is to be carried out in the lining of the coat.

Fall Hats.

Felts play a distinguished part in the new models, those with stitched velvet linings and deep borderings of the same being usually selected for the smartest hats. Fashions in colors for linings have undergone successive changes this season. At first it was black that had the running, then a brilliant shade of deep violet; lately a vivid green has been adopted, which in some few cases is applied to the new felt shapes, mostly those of a dark gray, drab and brownish hue. As a rule the lining is mostly of a lighter color or shade than the hat. Probably milliners next season will not confine themselves, as they have done this season, to a special color for linings. Carefully thought-out harmonies will be more fashionable than daring contrasts.

WILD TRIBE OF POETS.

Picturesque People That Are Found in the Philippines.

Among the wild tribes to be found in the Philippines are the Bogobos, the most picturesque people in the tropics. Their origin is unknown, and all sorts of opinions have been expressed concerning them. One tale told of them is that their first ancestors were all poets and musicians, and that the dislike for the practical which is always noticeable among them has come down through the generations.

Those that have taught among the Bogobos say that given a song or a poem to learn and they will study and dream over it for hours, but give the Bogobo a problem in arithmetic and he immediately becomes ill and wants to go home.

Living at Santa Cruz, in the Davao district, is Miss Benedict, a Chicago university woman, who is collecting everything peculiar to the Bogobo.

It has been found that the headwork done by them is quite like that of the American Indian, but there is no other likeness in the races beyond that.

FAMILY'S SKIN TROUBLES.

Eczema, Heat Rash, and Scalp Affections Affect Different Members, But Cuticura Cures Them.

"My wife had eczema for five or six years. It was on her face and would come and go. We thought we would give the Cuticura Remedies a trial. We did so and she has never had a sign of eczema for four years. I myself used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment some time ago for falling hair. I now have a very heavy head of hair. We used Cuticura Remedies for our baby, who was nearly bald when young. She has very nice hair now. She is very fleshy, and we had so much trouble with heat that we would bathe her with Cuticura Soap and then apply Cuticura Ointment. It would dry the heat up so much quicker than anything else. ONE-HUNDRED-HEN HOUSE.

Structure Which Can Be Built for One Hundred Dollars.

A good, comfortable house well suited to our climatic conditions can be built to accommodate 100 hens for $100. It must be dry, free from drafts and low enough in the roof to confine the natural heat of the hens' bodies close to them on a night. Let it be 48 feet long and 12 feet wide; four and one-half feet at the rear and five and one-half feet high at the front.

Cut your rear rafters nine feet long and front rafters five feet long. This will make the peak of your roof about seven and one-half feet high.

We give an end view or cross section of a house with the above dimensions, says Farm and Home. Let the front and rear rafters of each pair of rafters be tied with a cross beam three feet long and under these, both at the ends and every 12 feet from the ends, place uprights six and one-half feet long and two and one-half feet apart. These serve to stiffen and support the roof and also serve as door posts, for your 48-foot house should have three partitions dividing it into four compartments each 12 by 12 feet.

There is no projection of the rear rafters, which must terminate with the outer edge of the 2x4-inch plate that runs lengthwise on top of the rear posts. The front rafters may project as to give an eave if desired. The rafters may be either three or four feet apart, according to the strength of structure you wish. A roof of this construction is much stronger than a simple shed roof.

When the framework is complete, cover it with sheeting. We use 16 foot boards, one inch thick, surfaced on one side. Make these sheeting boards fit smooth and snug, so there may be no breaking of the paper that is to cover them. Round off the ends of the boards that meet at h, also those that meet at c, so that the paper may not be broken at these important points. In purchasing roofing paper, only the best is good enough.

Of course the front of the house should be toward the east or the south, the latter preferred, and each compartment should have a front window about three feet wide and four and one-half feet high. It is well to have these windows on hinges. They may be taken off in April and replaced until December by light wire screens, also on hinges. An exit door, 2x6 inches should open from each compartment into its corresponding yard.

At fg in the drawing is shown the dropping board, over which are the perches, h and i. This dropping board is two and one-quarter feet from the floor, is three and one-half feet wide, runs the whole length of each compartment and should be hinged close into the rear wall, so there cannot be any draft of air passing down over the front when on their perches. The dropping board should be tight and smooth; this will help much in keeping it clean.

The perches are 2x4-inch scantling, 12 feet long and are laid loosely on supports, flat side up. If these flat perches are sprinkled, top and bottom, occasionally with a good liquid lice killer, you will have little trouble with lice. We greatly prefer a double board floor, smooth, close and tight. The nest boxes should be set close to the front wall, on each side of the window, and at least one and one-half feet above, that the hens may scratch under them.

Eggs Wouldn't Hatch.

A poultry judge was greatly chagrined at being approached in a company of friends and censured for sending out eggs which failed to hatch a chick. "But that couldn't be," he explained. "My eggs are holding splendidly this year." "These didn't," asserted the other as positively. "Not one egg hatched." "Who bought them, and when?" asked the judge. "Mr. B. B." A retrieved look passed over the judge's face. "You bet those eggs didn't hatch," he said. "Mr. B. B. bought them at 20 cents a dozen for cooking. He told me he wanted fresh eggs for an invalid. Those eggs came from a pen that hasn't had a male bird in it for months." And the group of friends wondered if it was possible that the buyer was often as much to be blamed for poor hatches as the seller.

Best Turkey Hens.

In the selection of bronze turkeys for breeders, the body should be long and deeper at the center, with a full breast, broad back, strong thighs and shanks of moderate length. In young birds the shanks are a dead black, but they grow lighter with age, until they become of a pink or flesh color.

The ben turkey is more in demand in market than is the cock.

MITES IN POULTRY HOUSES.

Pest Can Only Be Kept Out by Cleanliness and Spraying the Roosts.

An interesting bulletin has been issued by the state entomologist of Minnesota in which the author discusses the mite as found in the poultry house. The following extract from Entomologist Washburn's bulletin will interest our readers:

"These nocturnal blood suckers, not true lice, nor even insects, since they belong to the class Arachnida, are found during the daytime on the under side of the roosts and elsewhere in a neglected chicken house.

"The miles, just visible to the naked eye, have eight legs when adult, and are whitish, brownish or red, depending somewhat upon the time elapsing since the last meal.

"They breed in nests, in hen manure and in cracks and crevices in the dirt of neglected henhouses.

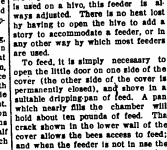
"Roosting fowls are attacked at night, and if these parasites are very abundant serious results follow. In ordinary numbers even, they prevent fowls from sleeping. Sitting hens, as well known, are sometimes forced to abandon their nests because of the presence of these pests.

"Cleanliness is all-important. If roosts rest in sockets, from which they can be lifted, allowing the vermin to gather in those places to be killed, a strong point is gained.

"The writer has been in the habit of spraying the roosts with strong kerosene emulsion, taking particular pains to drench the under side of the same and all cracks and crevices in the interior of the house. Kerosene alone will accomplish the same results.

"This treatment was followed by a thorough whitewashing. These precautions and the removal of all droppings should be resorted to frequently to insure exemption from this pest.

"On account of these mites it is a bad plan to keep fowls in close proximity to other stock; hens, for instance, should not be kept in the same building as horses, nor should the hen house be built against the barn for the same reason.



"Nests intended for sitting hens should be most carefully prepared in such a way as to discourage the presence of this parasite.

"The entomologist has used ashes or a mixture of lime and ashes as a basis upon which to place hay or straw for the nest and has scattered insect powder among the eggs and litter in the nests from time to time, if he had reason to suspect the presence of this mite."

A COVER FEEDER.

An Arrangement Which Makes Feeding of Bees an Easy Task.

The cut partly describes a feeder I have adopted, writes a correspondent of Bee Culture. It is excellent for feeding at any time of the year, but particularly in cool weather, as it is always very close to the bees. Other feeders may be just as good after they are adjusted; but as long as the cover is used on a hive, this feeder is already adjusted. There is no heat lost by having to open the hive to add a story to accommodate a feeder, or in any other way by which most feeders are used.

To feed, it is simply necessary to open the little door on one side of the cover (the other side of the cover is permanently closed), and shove in a suitable dripping pan of feed. A pan which nearly fills the chamber will hold about ten pounds of feed. The crack shown in the hive wall of the cover allows the bees access to feed; and when the feeder is not in use the pan may be shoved a little further over, and the crack is closed.

In cold weather the pan could be taken out and a thin cushion substituted, thus making a warm cover. One objection to this is that such a cover would necessarily be rather expensive.

POULTRY NOTES.

A medium sized carcass sells best.

Keep the hens free from vermin as the pouits suffar greatly from these pests.

When the least indisposed, the turkey will hold its head down between the shoulders and refuse food.

Children should not be set to teach the young turkeys to roam and forage as they should. Turkey hens are better.

Mashed potatoes mixed with corn meal, alternated with shelled corn, is the most general diet used for fattening turkeys.

Breeders generally will not breed from the same gobbler more than one year, unless the same breeding hens are also retained.

The Fat Fowl.

Remember that a fat fowl not only looks better when prepared for market but is healthier and brings a higher price per pound. Therefore, be sure that all young and old stock that is to be marketed this year is thoroughly fleshed and fattened.

BEST EVER WRITTEN

PRESCRIPTION WHICH ANYONE CAN EASILY MIX.

Said to Promptly Overcome Kidney and Bladder Affliction—Shaka Simple Ingredients Well in Bottle.

Mix the following by shaking well in a bottle, and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. A prominent physician is the authority that these simple, harmless ingredients can be obtained at nominal cost from any druggist even in the smaller towns.

The mixture is said to cleanse and strengthen the clogged and inactive Kidneys, overcoming Backache, Bladder weakness and Urinary troubles of all kinds, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease.

Those who have tried this say it positively overcomes pain in the back, clears the mine of sediment and regulates irritation, especially at night, curing even the worst forms of bladder weakness.

Every man or woman here who feels that the kidneys are not strong or acting in a healthy manner should mix this prescription at home and give it a trial, as it is said to do wonders for many persons.

The Scranton (Pa.) Times was first to print this remarkable prescription, in October, of 1906, since when all the leading newspapers of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other cities have made many announcements of it to their readers.

JUST WHAT HE WANTED.

Surely Here Were Musical Tastes Enough to Suit Anybody.

A gentleman of the most cultivated musical tastes, wishing to change his residence, advertised for rooms in a private family "fond of music." The next mail brought him the following reply:

"Dear Sir: I think we could accommodate you with rooms, and say for music one of my daughters plays the parlor organ and gittar; another one the correct and sweet piano; I play the harmonica and my son the flute. We all sing and if you are good at tenner singing you would fit right in when we get to singing gospel hims evenings, for none of us sings tenner. Or if you plays the bass vial we have one right here in the house. If you want music as well as rooms and board we could accommodate you and there would be no extra charge for it. Lippincott's.

Time Sometimes Flies So.

"Mabel," asked the dear girl's mother, "what time did that young man leave last night?"

"Why," replied Mabel, "I believe it was nearly 11 o'clock."

"What? I am sure it was later than that," said the mother.

"How strange!" remarked Mabel, dreamily. "We both thought it couldn't possibly be that late."—The Catholic Standard and Times.

HER "BEST FRIEND."

A Woman Thus Speaks of Postum.

We usually consider our best friends those who treat us best.

Some persons think coffee a real friend, but watch it carefully awhile and observe that it is one of the meanest of all enemies for it stabs one while professing friendship.

Coffee contains a poisonous drug—caffeine—which injures the delicate nervous system and frequently sets up disease in one or more organs of the body, if its use is persisted in.

"I had heart palpitation and nervousness for four years and the doctor told me the trouble was caused by coffee. He advised me to leave it off, but I thought I could not," writes a Wis. lady.

Then the advice of a friend I tried Postum Food Coffee and it so satisfied me that I did not quit for coffee after a few days' trial of Postum.

"As weeks went by and I continued to use Postum my nerves increased from 98 to 118 pounds, and the heart trouble left me. I have used it a year now, and am stronger than I ever was. I can bustle up stairs without any heart palpitation, and I am cured of nervousness.

"My children are very fond of Postum and it agrees with them. My sister liked it when she drank it at my house, but not when she made it at her own home. Now she has learned to make it right, but it according to directions, and has become very fond of it. You may use my name if you wish, as I am not ashamed of praising my best friend—Postum."

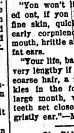
GEORGE KEPT HIM BUSY.

Matrimonial Engagements Seemed Always in Order.



A well-known Virginia clergyman, onetime president of William and Mary college, was married three times and on each occasion the ceremony was performed by his brother, an even more renowned bishop. When the first marriage took place, the bishop had to refuse a tempting invitation from an old friend because—so the letter ran—"I am going up to Williamsburg on that date to marry my brother George."

The same friend happened to be on the train with him, years afterward, when he was traveling to the second ceremony. "I am going to marry my brother George," the bishop explained, benignly, after the business of greeting was over. Again many years passed, and the same journey was taken once more for the same purpose. By a strange co-incidence, the identical friend ran into the bishop as they hurried through the depot on their respective trains. "Where going bishop?" the former sang out as they grasped hands and dashed by each other.

"I am going where I am always going," the answer came back, ponderously, "to marry my brother George!"—Harper's Weekly.

TESTED BY TIME.

A Cure That Has Held Good for Four Years.

Mrs. Mary Crumlish of 1130 West Third Street, Wilmington, Del., says:

"Some years ago I began to feel weak and miserable and one day awoke from a nap with a piercing pain in my back that made me scream. For two days I could not move and after that I had backache and dizzy spells all the time. My ankles swelled and I ran down dreadfully. I was nervous and had awful headaches. I wonder that any medicine could do what Doan's Kidney Pills have done for me. They cured me four years ago and I have been well ever since."

Signs of Long Life.

"Bacon took a deep interest in longevity and its earmarks," said a physician, "and Bacon's signs of long life were all short life are as true to-day as they ever were.

"You won't live long, Bacon pointed out, if you have red, fine hair, a fine skin, quick growth, large head, early corpulence, short neck, small mouth, brittle and separated teeth and fat ears.

"Your life, barring accidents, will be very lengthy if you have slow growth, coarse hair, a rough skin, deep wrinkles in the forehead, firm flesh, a large mouth, wide nostrils, strong teeth set close together, and a hard, gristly ear."—Minneapolis Journal.

She Did Not Fear Death.

An old lady on her seventy-third birthday once said, "I do not mind getting old, and I do not fear death, but I live in constant fear of paralysis."

"For some time I have been wanting to tell you of the great good your wonderful Sloan's Liniment is doing here," writes Mr. James F. Abernethy, of Rutherford College, N. C. "In fact, all your remedies are doing noble work, but your Liniment beats all. In the spring of 1907 I was taken with neuralgia and I get all to use it I possibly can and know there is great virtue in it. I have helped the sale of your noble remedies about here greatly, and expect to cause many more to buy them, as I know they can't be beat."

The Mystery.

"Your husband knows a great deal about the horses?"

"Yes," answered young Mrs. Torkins. "He knows all about what they ought to be done and what they ought to do. But he can't find out what they are going to do."

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Commercial, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

China Does Not Want the Missionary, But Needs Him

Hong Kong, China.—Ejculatns the fervid missionary speaker, "China's millions are crying for the Gospel."

Rubbish!

China's millions would like to throw Christianity into the Yellow sea, and they would have a fete day in the bonfirment or murder of every missionary within the borders of the Middle Kingdom, if they had their way. It is only the fear of foreign gunboats and armies that makes China endure the missionary. Everybody in China knows that, be he missionary, merchant or legatlooer. The untruthfulness of the sort of sentimental presentation of the missionary cause that is so frequently indulged in throughout christendom is clearly understood and correctly deplored by every thinkiog missiooary.

China does not want missionaries or missions. Sir Ernest Satow was right when he declared that China does not desire the spiritual side of western civilization. Not for a minute. From the shrewd, unforgetting old tigress on the throne down to the ignorant, superstitious, coiling coolie straining at a horse's load, the Chinese people may be said to be practicnlly one in not desiring the "Jesus way." True, they now want the appliances of western civilization, to make more effective their old spirit, as when the officials of North Central Chios conspired by telegraph against foreign-administered famine relief. Put the principles of Christian civilization thoy care for not at all.

Desires Versus Needs.

Chioa does not want the western religion. But does she need it? Ahl that is another story. While there is almost no basis for the enormous missionary propesanda in the desires of the people, there is abundant warrant for it in their necessities. As little as a dirty small boy desires a scrubbing, so still requires it; so with this vast nation. Let me, after a careful investigation that has ranged through many cities and villages, from remodeled Peking to little settlements in the headless trunk of the north, have put on the map, indicate a few of the reasons why, in the eyes of an ordinary mnn of common sense, the presence of the missionaries, those pioneers of civilisation, is justifiable in China.

Chinese Family Dining While Surrounded by Indescribable Filth.

China is dirty. The first day I landed on her shores I said that her greatest apparent and immediate need was 400,000,000 cakes of soap, and an ocean of lisinfectant. At this point I am writing to uncomprehending readers; for America can never understand or imagine the unspeakable filthiness of the Chinese, in their persons, in their clothes, in their dwellings and in their streets. It is almost impossible to hint at the true stata of affairs in any publication less unlicensed than a medical journal.

The tourist who "does" China, by passaing through the port cities stopping at the big hotels—although these are bad enough, in all conscience—can have no understanding of what China's dirtiness means. The man who live or travel in the interior can comprehend this. I have found many reasons for admiring the missionary as a whole; none of these is greater than the manner in which they maintain, amid such miserable surroundings, the ideals and standards and practices of cultivated American life. To be a lady in interior China is to be a heroine.

John Chinaman Too Much for Germs.

The germ theory is all upset by a study of China. By all the laws of modern medical science, the country should be continually ravaged by destructive plagues. The Chinese seem to grow fat on germs; they eat them alive, as they also eat, in order to heap back their blood," certain unnamable creatures which they pick by the dozen from their persons and raiment. "China's millions" is a good, reputable missionary phrase at home; out here it is used to designate the uncounted guests with whom you are obliged to share your bare room in a Chinese inn, or your sleeping-car in a Chinese boat. I can scarcely imagine any power short of a supernatural religion, that can clear up the Chinese, even externally. As for his inward, mental and spiritual filthiness, that must be passed over in silence. To hear, and understand, one Chinese as he reviles another is to discover a new and horrible world of corrupt imagination.

Making Sport of Suffering.

The first day we landed in China, we saw some children having fine sport in killing a kitten by the gentle process of jumping upon it. The impression then formed has been strengthened by despair, that the Chinese are a cruel people, cruel to dumb creatures, but crueller to one another. The statement is almost warranted that here is a nation without a sense of pity or sympathy. A roadside death is a pastime for the bystanders. When a coolie was cut clear in half by the swinging of a heavy steel plate against the hatchway of a ship at Tien-Tsin on which he was working, his work fellows laughed heartily.

As our ship was being warped into her moorings at Shanghai a boatman fell overboard, and the crowd laughed; although he spoiled the point of the joke by managing to scramble out. At an execution I saw crowds pressing eagerly about the headless trunk of the victim, and laughing merrily over his fate. One must hear on the spot the unreportable blasphemies of the Chinese mobs toward massacred missionaries to realize the unfathomable depths of Chinese cruelty. The gentleness of Jesus, who taught: "Blessed are the merciful," is sadly needed in China.

A Nation of Liars.

The "truth in the inward parts" which is supposed to accompany Christianity is utterly lacking in China. This is a nation of liars. Not to lie is considered foolishness. There is nowhere the Anglo-Saxon assumption that the other man is playing a fair game; you simply have to match him in guile or suffer. The inconvenience, the annoyance, the exasperation of having to live surrounded with consummate liars must be experienced to be appreciated.

Take one of countless incidents, as illustrative. We are fare from Chinkiang to Nanking by boat is two dollars. Upon buying my return ticket I was told by the official that it was four dollars; when the gentleman who was escorting me to the boat, a missionary, made it plain that he was an unpaid traveler, man promptly and without embarrassment, accepted the right fare. That missionaries main-age to maintain their simplicity and open-heartedness in this land of guile is a marvel of religion's power.

Being a liar, the Chinese is also, logically, a thief. That steamship clerk thought no more of stealing two dollars from a stranger than the victory thinks of "squeezing" the public revenues. He would also doubtless have worked off his counterfeit money in change, had chance been required. On that very occasion I discovered, by the refusal of a Chinese to accept it, that I had one of the lunmerable counterfeit coins with which the land is flooded. When I threw it into the river the surrounding Chinese plainly looked as if they thought that I should be thrown after it, as a fool and a madman. Simple honestly in most matters seems beyond the Chinese kon, although they have a scrupulousness about keeping contracts once made, and about fulfilling trusts, which has been frequently and justly praised.

No Work for Cupid.

One day a certain native senator was pointed out to me, a man who really loved his wife. This was considered so rare as to be noteworthy. Marriage here is a matter of barter and convenience. Yesterday I dined with a progressive official whose head wife sat at table with us, in concession to western ways, while his three subordinate wives stood around the room, or peeped in at the doorway, and two of his pretty little slave girls waited on the table. The family feeling, or rather clan feeling, is not based primarily on effection, but mutual self-interest. The quarrelsomeness of the Chinese family is potent to the care of every resident. If any one thinks that the ordinary Chinese woman, especially after she becomes a mother-in-law, is a crushed and down-trodden sister, he should hear her in action for five minutes. No man is better abls to look out for himself than this same small-footed creature.

The absence of anything approaching the home life known to western Christendom is a conspicuous fact about China. The cities are noisy, not with traffic, for they have no wheels, our ear-splitting western sort, but with the perpetual and everywhere-present sounds of squabbling and strife. Here it is "Every man for himself, and the devil take the hindermost." Only yesterday as I came along the street in a rickshaw, I saw a grown man trying to steal a bundle of old straw fuel from a group of tots whose ages must have ranged from four to eight. And the furious fashion in which they were assailing him showed how early young China learns to look out for itself. China is a synonym for selfishness.

In all these observations I have not had out of mind the virtues of the Chinese—their patience, their industry, their frugality, the obedience to authority and their respect for the established order. All these have been magnified in their place. The present design is simply to point out certain deficiencies which Christianity, ideally, at least, would remedy. Missionaries would not be wanted in China, if they are needed.

Are the Christians Better?

A study of the facts compels the statement that in the case of many entire converts these objectionable Chinese characteristics have been eliminated, showing that Christianity really has the power to make over the people. From one viewpoint this is the crux of the missionary question. Are these converts genuine? Do they display the virtues which are commonly supposed to accompany the Christian religion?

While it is true, as the oldest living missionary to the Chinese said to me recently, that "There are more heathen in China to-day than there were when Robert Morrison began work 100 years ago," owing to the increase in population, yet there is also a body of native Christians whose faith is ineradicable. The Boxer movement convinced China that Christianity among her people is here to stay, and cannot be stamped out.

These native Christians are for the most part sincere and steadfast. But any one of those who may in any way be called "rice Christians" and who, so far as I can ascertain, are a decided minority, there remains a body of men and women who have been made over by Christianity. The light in their faces alone is enough to mark them. Repeatedly, in various parts of the empire, I have seen hundreds at once; some I have come to know personally. The unpleasant traits of their former countrymen which have been enumerated have been cast off by them; they bear the marks by which sincere disciples of the Lord have been distinguished in all ages.

Slow, hard and discouraging are the labors of the missionary, but a handful of such converts are his reward. Despite the dead weight of inertia which continually confronts him, and the more or less active opposition and hostility of the people as well, he is steadily winning his way, undercutting the foundations of the old errors, disseminating a new spirit of understanding, tolerance and sympathy among the people, and preparing for the advent of that day whose dawning he confidently expects, when the century of Gospel seed-sowing in China will burst forth in a great harvest of conversions.

Bonuses Often Given and Little Benefits Gained by the Towns That Give—Protecting Established Industries.

Within the past few years a commercial club organization fever has taken hold of many towns in the western country. It is a kind of good fever to have, for quite often, like other of the less harmless fevers that afflict the physically, passes away and doesn't make much difference with the our general health.

Town-building is much like running a good bridge. It is essential that a good foundation be laid. Natural conditions have much to do with it. Cities and towns spring up where there is a good cause for their existence. Artificial means may be employed for "booming" purposes, but unless there be something substantial and lasting, all the booming that can be done will not result in the accomplishment of a permanent good. The average rural town receives its principal support from the business given it by the agricultiguous territory. The trade of a limited section of country will not support a town any number of business establishments. If a town possesses natural advantages, location, etc., for manufacturing, it may prove a valuable factor in some of the western towns.

When a commercial club is organized, especially hundreds of expenses. The army of unemployed and chose seeking to better their conditions is always large. Of late years a large eisment of workers from cities are looking toward the farms for employment. They realize that the farm offers more permanency of occupation and greater independence than like efforts in the city can possibly afford. Before you concentrate your attention on employment in city or town, weigh every matter well, and then act according to what reason dictates. You will be very likely to conclude that the farm is a good enough place for you, and that your own little home town is preferable to the overcrowded city. Remember that your greatest interests center in what you call your "home town." Do all you can to assist in its improvement, and make it a better business piece.

OPPOSED TO LOCAL PROGRESS.

Journals That Help to Concentrate Business in Large Cities.

There are thousonds of so-called agricultural papers published in the United States in all of more or less merit. Yet few are all that they should be. There is an inconsistency about the man who invites careful study. While they are supposed to represent the best interests of the great class of people whose only gain support from in the way of subscriptions, the majority of them apparently work against the interests of farming communities by becoming the mediums, a part of the machinery, which draws country towns the support which they should bave.

It is to be regretted that many of these so-called agricultural papers are merely published for the purpose of circulating the advertisements of concerns which seek to secure trade from residents of farming districts to the detriment of the home towns. These establishments take money from the rural communities to the large financial centers. The thoughtful man of woman can see how injurious it is to the interests of the farmers, to take away the surplus earnings which should go to build up the home community. It requires but little observation and study to understand that to take money away in business, will result in a decrease of farm values. Such papers as advise the farmers to trade farther than home institutions and which advocate systems that are opposed to the up-building of industries in the home community are not worthy of support.

Education.

Intelligence is the distinguishing mark between the savage and the civilized man. Education in one of the greatest of God's blessings, and ignorance one of the curses. In America there exists no valid reason why every man, woman and child of normal brain capacity should not have an education. There is no phase of life where knowledge is not necessary. In the most progressive communities is where the superior schools are found. Help along your town and help along education in general. By affording your children a chance for a good education, you offer them riches that cannot be destroyed; it is ready cash in bank assets that one cannot be robbed of only by act of Providence.

Sporting Gossip.

The life of the average pitcher is short, according to Byron Clarke. A lot of the best men to-day have been in the game from away back. It is easy to think of a dozen who were pitching in 1900. Patterson, McGinnity, Willis, Dinsen, Howell, Young, Frazer, Leever, Cheabro, Waddell, Tannehill and Killian were all pitching in that year and some of them previously. Patterson went to the White Sox in 1900, where he has pitched ever since. McGinnity was pitching in Brooklyn that year. He started pitching practically in Peoria and went from there to Baltimore and from Baltimore to Brooklyn. One of the most remarkable games he ever pitched was in Peoria. It was between Peoria and St. Joe, and there was 1 to 4 at the end of the twentieth inning. The St. Joe team went to pieces at the twenty-first inning and Peoria scored four runs. McGinnity not only never beat hie own record, but no other great pitcher ever equaled it. Rosiisch coming the nearest wit a twenty-lining game in Philadelphia. McGinnity has always been a pitcher walking and for being ready any time to pitch two games in one afternoon. He has probably pitched more double-headers than anybody else. Willie was pitching for Boston seven years ago and Dinsen also. The next year Dineen jumped to the American team in Boston. Howell was with the St. Louis Browns in 1900, where he has been ever since, and Cy Young was there, too. Soon after that he was traded to Boston, and he next was beerd from when he pitched a game against Philadelphia in which they were beaten a hit nor a run—not a man reached first base in the nine innings.

GEORGE CASE

Veteran star coltke of the University of Minneoto, who line successfully passed his examinstioce and is again playing on the football team.

There is a strong possibility thot next season may see an important change in footbal! scoring methods. The practice of making a goal from the field equal in value to a touchdown was changed some oeceoos ago, and at least one influentiel and important member of the footbali rules committee is in favor of abolishing the extra point allowed when a goal is kicked from plncement after a touchdown. This mao, who was a member of the old rules committee before the reformotion of the game in 1905, thinks that the difficulty of kicking this extra goel is not by any means one-fifth os great as that of scoring a touchdown, and that there is no real reason for continuing to award a point for each a good.

It is thought by a good many persons that there is so little difficulty in kicking this goal that many games are delayed by the time taken to punt the ball and the kick. Of course, many goals are missed, but it is not denied often that a critical game is decided by the scoring or failuro in scoring a single point. Probably the last case of the kind was in the championship contest game in 1903, when the score was 12 to 11, and there is a good deal of reasonable argument that touchdowns in such a game should hinge on such a point. It is often the case, when a goal is missed, that a sudden wind had more to do with the direction of the kick than the player's foot, and such a thing as such a case, decide an important contest.

John J. Ryan, the well-known turf plunger, has declared the Vanderbilt cup races dead and turned his attention to automobile racing. He recently became a devotee of the sport and intends making part in the contests on Ormond Beach, Florida, this winter. "And reckon I can distance that. Honest, I'd rather drive a 90-horse power car than back a ten to one shot and watch him come home on the bit."

Ryan says that besides taking his car south he is going to take every bet offered. He thinks nothing short of a Vanderbilt Cup racer can get near him.

"I saw Leland do a mile in 41 4-5 seconds at Atlantic City," he added, "and reckon I can distance that. Honest, I'd rather drive a 90-horse power car than back a ten to one shot and watch him come home on the bit."

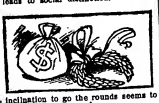
Gossip of People and Events Gathered in Washington

WASHINGTON—Just at present matters are dull socially, but there is an air of expectancy and enough people are in the city and more are returning every day to keep up the interest.



Houses and visiting lists are being overhauled, as visiting is the joy as well as the bete noir of the Washington woman and has to be attacked scientifically as well as diplomatically to accomplish all that is required by an exacting public.

There is a regular etiquette in regard to visits, and woe betide the unlucky stranger who unconsciously sins against the cast iron rules laid down in this supposedly most democratic of cities.

The judges of the supreme court must be called on by the cabinet, senators and representatives first, and the members of the cabinet call on one another and on the senators and house members. The senators make their supreme court and cabinet calls and finally reach one another. But a senator's wife whose husband has been in office six years cannot demean herself by calling first on the wife of one who has only served his country three years.

The senatorial and congressional records are called in requisition and lists made out and the length of time men have held an official position. House members are not as exacting, and a little more license is permitted them, but still an immense amount of form is necessary to steer clear of the breakers of social political life.

Washington is an especially easy city for outsiders, as they have the right of way and must call first on all those who hold an official position. These visits are returned and thus the thin edge of the wedge is inserted that leads to social distinction.

ROOT-GRANT WEDDING TO BE MOST SIMPLE AFFAIR

IT probably will be a relief to the great masses of the people to know finally and positively that Miss Edith Root, daughter of the secretary of state, and Ulysses S. Grant III. are to have an extremely simple and quiet wedding at the home of the bride's parents on Rhode Island avenue. The children of the big ones, especially in Washington, ordinarily have enough Washington, ordinarily have enough spent on the gowgews of their weddings to keep them in household supplies for 10 years. The only social affairs in Washington more costly than funerals are the weddings.

The daughter of the secretary of state is to marry the grandson of a president and the greatest soldier of his time, and few people are to be entbered together to witness the ceremony. It is a flas and an appealing arrangement. There probably will be a lot of presents. Neither the bride nor the groom, it is supposed, can prevent the flood of gifts which the prominence of their families will start.

Young Grant is a quiet, unassuming studious fellow, with a bent of mind for mathematics, for he graduated into the army's engineering corps. The bride is a girl of domestic tastes. She has been comparatively little known in the swirling circle of Washington society. It is said that she has good sound sense, and her disinclination to go the rounds seems to prove the point.

It is understood that young Grant has no money beyond his pay. He is a first lieutenant of engineers and his wage is about $125 a month. He gets an allowance for quarters, however, provided he is on detached duty where there are no army quarters. The government will give him and his wife three rooms to live in, or if he is away from an army post it will give him the equivalent of the rent of three rooms.

It is said that Edith Root, although the daughter of a rich man, is perfectly capable of keeping house in three rooms, and keeping house there contentedly.

Ulysses Grant has an enormously wealthy aunt, who lives part of the time in Chicago, but he has no expectations from her, and he is too much of a Grant to take anything if it were offered. Elihu Root's father was a college professor, who was earning about $1,500 a year, perhaps less, when Elihu was a boy.

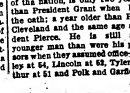
It isn't at all probable that he will contribute largely to the household funds of his future son-in-law. He doubtless would prefer to let the young couple go it alone for some time to come. This wedding promises to be entirely satisfactory from every intrinsically valuable American viewpoint.

THE voyage of the battleship fleet to the Pacific will be veiled in impenetrable secrecy.

No news regarding the maneuvers to be conducted on the trip around South America will be allowed to filter through to the American taxpayer. Newspaper correspondents will be rigidly excluded from the war vessels.

The journey of Rear Admiral Evans' large squadron will be virtually on a war footing, for the only information that will be allowed to reach the people who are paying out millions to keep the navy up to the highest state of fighting efficiency will be in the form of meagor reports furnished by naval officers specially appointed for that purpose and who will carefully edit references to those things in which the public is interested.

These decisions were arrived at by President Roosevelt after a consultation with Secretary Metcalf, Rear Admiral Evans and Rear Admiral Brownson.



After a conference, Secretary Metcalf announced that the fleet would set sail from Hampton roads on December 16. The president has been informed on all important items in the itinerary.

ROOSEVELT CELEBRATES FORTY-NINTH BIRTHDAY

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT celebrated his forty-ninth birthday a few Sundays ago. He spent the day, as is his custom, attending church in the morning, and spending the afternoon in the open air.

In the afternoon he received a committee of ten representing the Hungarian Republican club of New York, of which the president is an honorary member. The custom of the club of extending its congratulations to Mr. Roosevelt on his birthday began when he was governor of New York. He became a member on his return from Cuba in 1898, and during his first campaign for governor of the state of New York the club took an active part in New York city. The committee extended congratulations on the president's successful hunting trip and heard a partial description of it.

Aside from this visit the day was marked by no special observance. There were family congratulations and presents, and the president attended Grace Dutch Reformed church as is his custom. Returning from church, he spent an hour in the White House office, and in the afternoon took a long walk into the suburbs of Washington, on which he was accompanied by Secretary Bock.

Although 49 years old, President Roosevelt, after six years as the head of the nation, is only two years older than President Grant when he took the oath; a year older than President Cleveland and the same age as President Pierce. He is still a much younger man than were his predecessors when they assumed office—McKinley at 54, Lincoln at 52, Tyler and Arthur at 51 and Polk and Garfield at 50.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

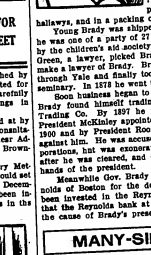
A SUCCESSFUL SPECULATOR

J. Brandt Walker, the speculator, who made $2,000,000 on Wall street in three months and is now operating in Chicago with $6,500,000 in his pocketbooks, not to speak of 15,000 shares of stock he is keeping to scalp the market with, has no love for the "men of the chambers" known as Wall street. For the "men of the chambers" known as Wall street. For the "men of the chambers" was, in the language of the street, "down and out" and about a million to the bad.

Mr. Walker is a splendid specimen of humanity physically. He is about 6 feet in his stockings, broad-shouldered and deep-chested. His hair and his close cropped mustache are tinged with gray, and he looks about 45. He has a cool eye and a frank smile. He dresses well, but not in the latest fashion, and is not at all averse to attracting public attention. He is particularly fond of a dull brown suit with a greenish stripe, and a waistcoat of English flannel with a white silk back, and a tie of lustrous dull gray silk, pinned with a great white pearl. His coat he discards in the office, Chicago fashion. His office is done in dark green, with green velvet carpet, green matting walls, Japanese screens, oil paintings and numerous prints. On his desk are six telephones which are ringing almost continually, and across the room are three more. On the center table is a box of cigars and numerous bottles and siphons.

Mr. Walker's father, Edwin Walker, of Chicago, is attorney for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway.

MILLIONAIRE SOCIALIST



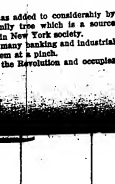
William English Walling, of Indianapolis, who with his wife and his wife's sister, Rose Stirnsky, and Kellogg Durland, an American friend, of Walling, was arrested and placed in jail in St. Petersburg for a short time recently, because of their association with members of the Finnish and progressive party, is the son of William English Walling, former U. S. consul in Edinburgh, Scotland. He is a millionaire and an ardent Socialist. Opposition to child labor in factories, which he first took up, made him acquainted with leading Socialists, who got him to share their other views. Since his marriage to a Russian he has devoted much time to studying conditions in Russia and this was his third extended visit to St. Petersburg.

Walling returned to Russia a short time ago from Germany and France, where he attended Socialistic congresses. He is the author of a book entitled "The Russian Bastile," accused of having given their friend of many leading revolutionists and was not the basis of his arrest. cause financial aid, although this charge was not the basis of his arrest.

Walling is a grandson of the late Wm. H. English, who ran with Gen. Hancock on the democratic presidential ticket in 1880.

BRADY "GONE BROKE"

John Green Brady, three times governor of Alaska, has to be the "tool of the corporations" and accused of being in their pay. Those who believed the charges thought that he was enormously rich in wealth, yet today he is practically bankrupt, with not a dollar to his name, and he goes back to his old home in Sitka, "broke," on the miners say. He is 58 years old now, and he is forced to begin life anew, youth, health, strength, money and friends all gone as a result of a disastrous investment.



Brady is the son of a longshoreman who lived in a water front tenement near the foot of Roosevelt street, New York. When he reached his 8th birthday he had sold newspapers, blackened shoes, run errands, carried satchels for travelers and picked up junk. He slept in packing cases and hallways, and in a packing case a policeman found him one night.

Young Brady was shipped to Randall's island and in the summer of 1859 he was one of a party of 27 orphans and homeless boys who were sent west by the children's aid society. When the company reached Tipton, Ind., John Green, a lawyer, picked Brady out, and took him home. Green wanted to make a lawyer of Brady, but Brady wanted to be a minister. He worked himself through Yale and finally took a degree in divinity at the Union Theological seminary. In 1878 he went to Alaska as a missionary.

Soon business began to demand attention in Alaska and the missionary Brady found himself trading at Sitka. He became manager of the Sitka Trading Co. By 1897 he was looked on as a fit man for governor and President McKinley appointed him. He was reappointed by Mr. McKinley in 1900 and by President Roosevelt in 1905. In that year charges were filed against him. He was accused of doing improper things in the interest of corporations, was exonerated. Gov. Brady's friends advised him to resign after he was cleared, and on Feb. 14, 1906, his resignation was put in the hands of the president.

Meanwhile Gov. Brady has been interested in the plans of H. D. Reynolds of Boston for the development of Alaska, and all of his money has been invested in the Reynolds enterprises. On Oct. 11 it was announced that the Reynolds bank at Valdez had failed. The downfall of Reynolds is the cause of Brady's present difficulties.

MANY-SIDED NEW YORKER

August Belmont, whose name has figured so frequently in the New York traction scandal, is a many-sided man.

American representative of the Rothschilds, a firm which ranks high in the public estimation of honesty as any in the world, he is accused of "keeping into the unlawful combination and conspiracy" to manipulate a public service corporation for his own ends.

An ardent churchman, he has been condemned by his own bishop for his connection with the state racing association, which wins at the law prohibited betting on races.

He claims to be a democrat and is said to have financed the campaign of Alton B. Parker.

The descendant of the famous Commodore Perry of Lake Erie fame, and of that other Commodore Perry who opened up Japan to the exploitation of the world, Mr. Belmont is a business man pure and simple with a taste for the excitement of horse racing.

His inherited a plethoric fortune, which he has added to considerably by Wall street methods. He inherited, also, a family tree which is a source of envy to those who are comparative parvenues in New York society.

He is a member of 20 clubs, a director of as many banking and industrial corporations that he could not call off half of them at a pinch.

He is a member of the aristocratic Sons of the Revolution and occupies a box seat among the Four Hundred.

What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

NEW YORK.—There is a wide range to the luncheons of Wall street. It is a far cry from the simple elegance of the Stock Exchange Luncheon club, in the Chsage building, to the five-cents-a-dish restaurants that afford a reasonable sustennance to that element in the financial district that is "on its uppers."

Stock exchange brokers who are members of the luncheon club, of which John C. Toppin is president, use the club dining-room to a great extent, although a considerable number of men on the floor like to run across the way to Fred Eberlin's for their noonday morsel.

Scores of brokers and bankers have their luncheons served in their offices, where they can keep an eye on the ticker and an ear on the telephone. The Empire building at noon regularly resembles a huge restaurant, and its corridors are thronged with waiters bearing heavy trays at that time.

Cotton exchange brokers lunch most frequently at Delmonico's; produce exchange men at either "The Dutchman's," near the exchange, or at "Chef's" in Stone street, and coffee exchange men at Steutzle's in Hanover square (the place made known by Johnson, of drink mixing fame), and strangely enough, at restaurants up in the Meiden lane district.

Consolidated exchange brokers seat ter at luncheon hour, while the men on the curb take a hasty noonday bite at one of the "counter" restaurants that marshal their "surpassing coffee" fronts along Broad street.

Wall street—that is, the street proper—is decidedly interesting at the club dining-room to a great extent, although a considerable number of men on the floor like to run across the way to Fred Eberlin's for their noonday morsel.

LITTLE MODERN FICTION READ BY NEW YORK MEN

NEW YORK men are not novel readers. This conclusion is reached after a careful round of the libraries of the city. Out of 500 readers of modern fiction not more than one is a man. What little fiction reading the men do is of books written more than a quarter of a century ago.

From the 147 public libraries in New York city about 16,900,000 volumes are drawn for home reading each year, the very large majority of them being fiction, of which 90 per cent. are taken out by women. During the same time about 2,500,000 reference volumes are consulted and 89 per cent. of their readers are men.

On a late morning visit to the Astor library recently 214 readers were found, of which 187 were men. Forty-six were reading history, 51 science, 7 biography, 7 encyclopedias, 15 mechanics, 6 fiction, 1 poetry, 13 magazines, 9 newspapers, 5 religion and 4 dictionaries. Of the women 5 were reading history, 1 science, 12 biography (including genealogical tables), 8 fiction, 2 poetry and 2 religion.

Of the six volumes of fiction read by the men, one was "Les Miserables," one Irving's "History of New York," two by Dickens, one by Scott and one by Thackeray. Of the fiction read by the women all were more modern than these excepting one, "Ivanhoe," read by a miss about 16 years old.

In the middle of the afternoon Cooper Union was visited, and all of the readers were men, only two being found reading a novel written within ten years. About 23 persons were seen reading fiction, which showed the favorite writers to be Irving, Cooper, Hewthorne, Dickens, Dumas, Victor Hugo, Thackeray and "Mark Twain."

Not fewer than 100 readers had books of history, biography and science, with political economy and sociology conspicuous.

THE largest "stag" hotel in the world has opened its doors at Thirty-sixth street and Seventh avenue. Within the first hour 85 men had registered. By seven p. m. there were 392, and they were still coming. Within the first 24 hours the management expected to show a total of nearly 600 patrons. There are 1,878 sleeping rooms on the 14 floors for bedrooms. These are all single rooms.

One hundred corner rooms that have two windows each rent for 40 cents a day. All the other rooms are to be had for 50 cents a day. Applications are not accepted before six p. m. A man registering before that must take a room for more than one day.

NEW "STAG" HOTEL FOR MAN OF MODERATE MEANS

The Mills hotels make a modest interest in the investment, as they are Mr. Mills' pride. People come to them from all pan's of the world, and all are expecting men are welcome. The restaurant, kitchen, bakery, laundry and baths are on the basement floor; all the windows of which are above the surface. The baths are free to patrons. The prices are reasonable in the restaurant, but the management says they are sufficient as a business proposition.

Girls are employed in the restaurant, and they are pretty girls, too. The latest addition to the Mills hotel for the man of moderate income was built at a cost of $1,750,000.

FIRE LOSSES FOR A YEAR; CARELESSNESS IS COSTLY

FOR carelessly dropped cigarettes and matches New York city pays in fire losses the tidy sum of $2,500,000 in a single year. If the other causes of New York's 23 daily fires —defective or mismanaged heating and lighting apparatus and machinery, badly constructed hatildings, greasy waste, hot ashes and similar fire accourages—are taken into account the bill for fooling with fire in New York is $10,000,000 a year, distributed among 8,500 different alarms.

This figure, based upon the official fire patrol reports, does not, however, include $415,000 paid directly by the taxpayer for damages to fire department property. For every time the fire bell rings in this city, and the apparatus goes out, even for a false alarm, it costs at least $50 for damages to trucks and strain on the veluable fire horses. Nor does it include half a million of dollers of damages to asphalt pavements from conflagrations.

This annual fire loss has grown to such proportions that bosses of underwriters, and also the fire patrols, are making an elaborate study of the causes of fire. In fact, they take the fewer temperature of New York's buildings es carefully as a physician follows the fever line of a typhoid fever patient. And these observetione are charted carefully by expert statisticians and made the subject of deep study by pyro-specialists.

The most recent of these yearly charts, covering the 1907 fires in the borough of Manhattan and the Bronx, which did over $7,000,000 damage, gives some beuchar statistics,

NOT HOLDING ON TO THEIR MONEY

NEW YORK BANKS TRYING TO SUPPLY THE COUNTRY INSTITUTIONS.

Aiding the West and South—Lack of Currency Checks the Cotton Movement—Gold Imported from Europe Will Distributed.

New York, Nov. 9.—The leading New York banks were exerting themselves actively Friday to meet the demands of their country correspondents and depositors for currency. They declare that the suggestions made from several western sources that there are not meeting legitimate demands for currency from the west are entirely unfounded and that they are, on the contrary, taking every practicable measure to aid the west and south.

One of these large banks, with several thousand correspondents, has deposited its reserve by about a quarter during the last few weeks to supply currency where it is most needed, and has made large shipments to banks in San Antonio, Galveston, Memphis, Mobile, Atlanta and other southern points. The country banks have been allowed to draw down their balances to a point which affords in many cases hardly more than enough to meet the drafts sold in the ordinary course of business.

Cotton Movement Checked.

It is admitted that the cotton movement is actually checked by the lack of small bills and silver to pay the small growers and by the inability of the southern banks to handle the immense volume of business accumulating at southern points. The gold shipments are in better shape, owing to the gold secured by the banks of Minneapolis and St. Paul from the ransomists for paying cash in New York on grain bills.

The New York banks feel bound to retain a certain proportion of reserve to guard against possible contingency, because they fulfill in addition the function which is fulfilled in London by the Bank of England and in Paris by the Bank of France—as the ultimate resource in emergency.

Foreign Gold Well Scattered.

The stream of surplus gold pouring into New York has not been halted here to meet local demands, but is being allowed to flow through the financial arteries of the United States and relieve the needs of agriculture and other industries generally. Gold importers state that nearly all of the $21,000,000 which has already reached here will soon find its way to every quarter of the country. Nearly $17,000,000 has been shipped to the interior this week. Gold has been shipped from here to Chicago in such large amounts, it is announced in local banking circles, that the issuance of circulating bank scrip in Chicago may not be necessary.

Hoarded Money Appears.

New York, Nov. 8.—The magnet of high premium rates for currency is attracting the money hoarded by depositors in steel vaults and strong boxes, and within the last two days over $2,000,000 has been enticed from its hiding places and sold for a premium to money brokers.

The placing of these large amounts of hoarded currency in circulation is performing an important work in loosening the monetary stringency and brokers are confident that more currency will soon find its way into circulation from safe deposit vaults, the owners of which, now being reassured as to the financial future, are disposed to take advantage of the large premium rates.

The falling off of the premium rate for currency Thursday from 3½ to 3 per cent. was brought about by the large amount of gold and silver that was taken from safe deposit vaults and offered for sale.

Foreign Discount Goes Up.

The coolest of the European money markets to retain their gold reserves was indicated by the simultaneous action Thursday of three of the large central banks of Europe and a call for a meeting Friday of the governing board of a fourth.

The Bank of England advanced its rate of discount from six to seven per cent., a rate which has not before been reached since 1873. The Bank of France advanced its regular discount rate from 3½ per cent. to 4 per cent. and fixed the rate for loans on securities at 4½ per cent. The Imperial Bank of Belgium advanced its rate of discount from 5½ to 6 per cent., and Dr. Koch, the governor of the Imperial Bank of Germany, called a meeting of the governing board for Friday, which is expected to advance the present rate of the bank from 6 to 7 per cent.

Won't Stop Gold Importation.

Even these high discount rates; however, are regarded as insufficient to prevent the further importation of gold into this country, in view of the large credits which are being created by the shipment of wheat and cotton.

The stock market reflected the pressure for money by considerable declines Thursday, but these declines generally were expected by bankers who looked upon the rapid advance in quotations of Wednesday as hardly justified by the situation.

The engagements of gold Thursday brought up the total importation on the present movement to $40,425,000.

PROHIBITION IN 17 ILLINOIS

MANY COUNTIES VOTE SALOONS OUT OF BUSINESS.

City of Jacksonville Goes "Dry" by a Narrow Margin—Surprises in the Coal Sections.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—Prohibition of the Heeseed saloon won a decisive victory yesterday in sixteen Illinois counties. In that first test of the new local option law, made in counties not under township organization, seven counties went absolutely dry, and in former strongholds of the liquor forces the saloons were swept out of legal existance.

The claim from the headquarters of the Anti-Saloon League at Springfield that in the sixteen counties voting yesterday 150 saloons had been put out of business and that 90 per cent of the territory affected and 85 per cent of the saloons involved had been brought into "dry" territory.

The results of the election are summerized as follows:

The most spectacular victory of the antisaloon forces was at Jacksonville, where by a majority of 175 thirty-two saloons were voted out. At DuQuoin a terrific battle was waged between the two elements, the "drys" won by 26 votes.

BANDITS CRIPPLE A BANK.

Hold Up Town of Canova, S. D., and Escape with $6,500.

Canova, S. D., Nov. 8.—Badly crippled financially and with its quarters almost ruined as a result of an early morning visit by bandits, the International bank opened its doors as usual Thursday, wealthy residents going to the bank institution with ready cash to tide over the embarrassment.

How the bandits came and where they went is a mystery. Everything of value was taken from the safe with the exception of $2,500, which the cashier of the bank had bidden the night before. The loss, amounting to $6,5000, is fully covered by insurance.

Some of the bandits held the citizens in check while the others blew open the bank vault.

FORMER BANKER IS SENTENCED.

F. J. Tygard of Butler, Mo., Given Five Years in Penitentiary.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 7.—F. J. Tygard, president of the Bates National bank of Butler, Mo., when it failed September 20, 1906, was sentenced Wednesday to five years in the penitentiary by Judge McPherson in the federal court. The conviction was on the charge of misapplying funds of the bank.

Mr. Tygard is past 70 years of age and is practically paralyzed. He pleaded guilty to the charges and was given the minimum sentence. Judge McPherson intimated that if application was made for pardon it might be favorably considered on account of the prisoner's age and physical condition.

SANTA FE FINED $330,000.

Road Found Guilty of Rebating Receives Its Punishment.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 8.—Judge Olin Wellborn, in the United States district court Thursday, fined the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe company $330,000 for rebating. The fine was what the court denominated "an intermediate penalty," the maximum which might have been assessed being $1,230,000 and the minimum $66,000.

Wire Strike Comes to End.

Chicago, Nov. 7.—The telegraph strike is ended. After six weeks of a struggle which has involved nearly 15,000 commercial telegraphers throughout the country, the final action toward terminating the strike was taken Wednesday afternoon, when Chicago local union, the largest local in the country, voted to call off the strike and return to work unconditionally. Similar action was taken at a meeting of the New York local, operators there being directed to return to work.

Threatened Lynching in Washington.

Spokane, Wash., Nov. 8.—Sheriff Ratliff received word Thursday night that a mob was forming at Silverton to lynch James Raymon, who is in jail at Coltax, charged with maltreating his 13-year-old daughter. Royleston is said to have confessed.

British Railway Strike Averted.

London, Nov. 7.—Richard Bell, M. P., announced Wednesday night that the railroad dispute had been settled. The details of the settlement, however, were not given out.

DEEP WATERWAY GETS SEVERE BLOW

STEAD HOLDS ECONOMY LIGHT & POWER COMPANY LEASE TO BE VALID.

Dam May Be Completed—Illinois Plan for Issue of $20,000,000 Bonds Undoubtedly Killed—Only Hope Now in Government.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 8.—A heavy blow was dealt the deep waterway advocates Thursday afternoon in an opinion prepared by Attorney General Stead at the request of Gov. Deneen. The opinion dealt with the navigability of the Desplaines river and the state's rights in the stream.

Briefly, Mr. Stead interprets the law in the subject as follows:

"The navigability of the Desplaines river is a question of fact and not of law, if the Desplaines river is not navigable in fact, no action will lie by the state to remove, or prevent, the completion of the dam now in course of construction by the Economy Light & Power Company of Joliet at Dresden Heights. The Economy company holds a valid lease to state property a cashier of the bank had bidden the night before. The loss, amounting to $6,5000, is fully covered by insurance.

Some of the bandits held the citizens in check while the others blew open the bank vault.

MUST RETAIN PHILIPPINES

CONGRESSMAN M'KINNEY TELLS OF THEIR GREAT WEALTH.

Declares the Tariff on Sugar and Tobacco Should Be Removed at Once.

San Francisco, Nov. 9.—After an extended tour of the orient, Philippines and Hawaii, Congressman James McKinney, from the Rock Island district, Illinois, returned to this city Friday on the steamer Persia, and will proceed east at once.

As a member of the territorial committee which left here last June, Congressman McKinney visited Honolulu and later the Philippines, where an exhaustive study of conditions was made. According to the congressman, we must never entertain any idea of letting the islands go. He said:

"The resources of the islands are unbounded. Great coal, copper and gold deposits have been found and even greater wealth seems in store for the United States in other respects. The immense timber holdings, for instance.

"There is one thing," he added, "that must be done quickly for the Philippines if America would better conditions there, and that is to remove the revenue on sugar and tobacco."

At Honolulu, Congressman McKinney declared, shipping conditions should be more encouraged, although prosperity was to be found on all sides. While proceeding to Hong Kong the congressman experienced a terrible typhoon while a passenger on the steamer Kow Loon.

During his stay in Japan he was shown every courtesy and says that he failed to notice any belligerent attitude on the part of the Japanese.

Other arrivals from the orient on the Persia were American Consul J. Boyd from Shanghai and J. H. Sharp, formerly of Kobe, Japan.

YOUNG KRIPPENDOFFER FOUND.

Son of Cincinnati Millionaire Discovered in San Francisco.

San Francisco, Nov. 9.—Albert Krippendoffer, missing son of a Cincinnati millionaire, has been found at the St. Francis hotel, where he has been staying since the night of November 5.

When young Krippendoffer disappeared from the office of the shoe manufacturing company of Cincinnati, where he was employed as secretary, on the night of October 23, his family supposed that he had been murdered and his body concealed.

Copper Miners Threaten Strike.

Calumet, Mich., Nov. 9.—The copper miners in the employ of the Calumet & Hecla Mining company have issued an ultimatum to the management that the employes of the company will strike next Monday unless the management rescinds the wage reduction of 1¼ per cent. which it was recently announced would take effect December 1. About 4,000 men are involved.

University Safe is Cracked.

St. Paul, Minn., Nov. 8.—Crackesmen blew open the safe in the vault in the accountant's office at the University of Minnesota Wednesday night, being evidently under the impression that the $12,000 taken in at the Minnesota-Chicago football game last Saturday was still in the safe. It had been removed and the robbers got only five dollars.

FOUR MEET DEATH IN NEW ULM FIRE

HENRY GINNER AND HIS THREE GRANDCHILDREN ARE THE HAPLESS VICTIMS.

They were Alone when the Dwelling Caught Fire. They were Locked in and Before Help Arrived all Chance of Rescue was Gone.

New Ulm, Minn., Nov. 11.—An aged man and his three grandchildren were burned to death in a fire that destroyed their home at noon Saturday. The dead are:

Henry Ginner, aged seventy years.
Louis Ginner, aged five years.
Mary Ginner, aged three years.
Charles Ginner, aged one year.

Henry Ginner was an invalid, practically paralyzed by rheumatism. His daughter-in-law, Mrs. Lon's Ginner left home just before noon to go to her father's house on an errand, and in order to prevent her children from leaving the house she locked the door. She had not gone long when Mr. and Mrs. John Karl neighbors noticed the house was in flames. They gave the alarm, but when the rescue was attempted it was found the entire inside of the dwelling was ablaze, and nothing could be done to save the victims. The mother was overcome when she reached home and found the house in flames.

It is supposed that the children either played with matches or meddled with the stove and in that way started the fire. As the house is on the outskirts of the city and removed from other houses, the flames were not discovered until they doubtless had brought death to the four persons within.

Burned to Death.

Beadstown, Wis., Nov. 9.—Gus Olson, a section hand on the Richmond branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road, committed suicide in the Beadstown calaboose, where he was locked up for being drunk and disorderly. He set the building on fire and was burned to death.

COUNTERFEITER ARRESTED.

Secret Service Men Make Important Capture in St. Paul.

St. Paul, Nov. 11.—What epparantly was one of the boldest counterfeiting games ever attempted in the Northwest was stopped in the bud when Secret Service Agent Thomas R. McManus walked into a room in the Union block, Fourth and Cedar streets, and arrested a man supposed to be Ernest R. Woskman of Winnipeg and secured $20,000 in counterfeit money. It was one of the cleverest pieces of detective work that has come to light for some time, and likewise one of the biggest catches ever made by the secret service department in this section.

When Agent McManus grabbed Workman's arm, the suitcase that he carried at his left hand dropped to the floor. This was opened and in it were found 1,000 $20 gold certificates. The counterfeit had been quite finished. Only a few minor details were lacking, and the counterfeiter would have had passed many many people in the condition that the officers found them.

BANDITS SHOOT UP TOWN.

Seven Men Terrorize Canova, S. D., and Blow Open Safe.

Canova, S. D., Nov. 9.—Seven bandits came down on this little town like the wolf on the fold between 2 and 3 a.m., robbed a hardware store of rifles and shotguns and a blacksmith shop of tools, blew the safe in the Interstate bank and carried away $6,500 in currency.

Three explosions in quick succession aroused the sleepers in a hotel across the street from the bank. Several men rushed out on the street, but were fired upon by the robbers and warned to return to the hotel and keep in hiding on penalty of being shot. In the meantime everybody was driven under cover. Anybody who had the temerity to show a light was made to extinguish it.

The village marshal fired upon the robbers several times and was himself a target for bullets from their guns. He was not hurt and the bandits apparently escaped without a scratch.

Judge is Removed.

Bismarck, N. D., Nov. 8.—Following the syllabus of the supreme decision by Chief Justice Morgan, all proceedings, sale and the appointment of A. G. Burr, district judge of the Ninth district, State of North Dakota, ex rel. Henry Erickson vs A. G. Burr.

Think He Is A Fugitive.

Moorhead, Minn.,—A man who gave the name of Rogers, who was accidentally shot at the Lally block, has been examined for identification by a postoffice inspector and other federal officers. They allege, and give as evidence a photograph and other description, that Rogers has done a ten-year term in an Ohio penitentiary, and that he is an escaped prisoner from that penal institution. His counsel another post were discharged and left Moorhead saying they were headed for the Far West.

New and Liberal Homestead Regulations in

WESTERN CANADA

New Districts Now Opened for Settlement

Some of the choicest lands in the famous districts of Saskatchewan and Alberta have recently been opened for settlement. Under the Revised Homestead Regulations any even numbered section of Dominion lands (640 acres) may be homesteaded by the head of a family or any male over 18 years of age, on payment of $10 for entry and the issue of patent after three years' cultivation of 30 acres. Pre-emptions may be obtained in certain districts at $3 per acre. Entry must be made personally at the Agency for the district in which the land is situated. Certain districts are now available. The new regulations make it possible for entry to be made by proxy, the conditions that must be fulfilled by the settler before obtaining patent remaining as before. Any number of homesteads may be entered for by the settler, but only one can be patented to him. Entry may be granted to any person who is the sole support of his mother, father, grandmother, grandfather, brother or sister of an intending homesteader.

"Any even numbered section of Dominion lands" is defined by the Regulations as meaning sections, or any part of them, in ODD numbered townships, according to the system of survey, except sections 8, 26 and 29. Each quarter section, of 160 acres, more or less.

The fee in all cases will be $10.

Schools and markets conveniently situated in all the districts now open for settlement. Healthy climate, splendid crops and good laws. Grain-growing and cattle raising principal industries.

Mexico's Indian Women.

The beauty of Indian women is one of the charms of Mexico. In the capital, where the Indian has degenerated through poverty and social service it is rare to see a beautiful face in the smaller towns and in the country. But the beautiful faces one takes in money are many. Mexico is free from the ugliness of Indian women. Fine eyes are universal, and, what one hardly expects, the features, according to Caucasian standards—broad brows, straight noses, well-formed mouths and chins full but not coarse or heavy. The expression is very generally intelligent, and often one is struck, both in Indian men and women, with the likeness of refinement of the countenance. One frequently sees types among the lower classes to belong to some highly civilized ancient caste —an Egyptian priest of royal blood, a Roman centurion, or a Roman emperor. The women are gently lovely where they are beautiful, and the men of their best type have in carriage and in countenance are strikingly like the very advanced product of civilization. —Modern Mexico.

Restricted Choice.

"The people are the corporations," said Senator La Follette the other day, "remind me of a woman and her little boy. There was a very large chicken and a very small duck on the table and the woman, gussing with the carving knife around, said: 'Johny, which will you take, chicken or duck?' 'Duck,' piped Johnny. But the mother shook her head. 'No, Johnny,' she said in a firm, yet kindly voice, 'you can't have duck, my dear. Take your choice, darling, from your choice, but you can't have duck.'"

Taking Immediate Steps.

Ruggles (the bookkeeper)—I'm more than half sick with the bay fever.

Ramage (the cashier)—That's bad. You ought to go to some place where you would be sure of finding frost.

Ruggles—I'll do it, Ramage. I'll go this minute and ask for the cold sum for a raise in salary.—Chicago Tribune.

PLEASANT SUMMER.

Right Food the Cause.

A Wis. women says:

"I was run down and weak, troubled with nervousness and headache for the last six years. The least excitement would make me nervous and cause severe headache.

"This summer I have been eating Grape-Nuts regularly and feel better than for the six past years.

"I am not troubled with headache and nervousness, and weigh more than I ever have before in my life. I gained 5 lbs. in one week."

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Butter Output.

St. Peter—The butter output of Minnesota has almost doubled in fifteen years, and the total expense of manufacture is less than it was then. The development of the creamery system has increased the capacity of the plants and led to greater economy.

Figures compiled by W. W. Wall, secretary of the state dairy and food commission, make an interesting comparison between the creamery output of 1889 and of 1904, the last year for which there are complete records. The butter output of creameries in 1889 was 44,907,283 pounds, and the cost of manufacture to the creameries was $910,739.95, or 2.1 cents a pound.

In 1904 the total output was 79,605,450 pounds, and the expense was only $884,392.94, or less than in 1889. It amounted to only 1.1 cents a pound.

This saving went into the pockets of the farmers who supplied the creameries, and they also gained by the higher price secured for Minnesota butter in the eastern markets.

In 1889 creamery patrons were paid for milk the sum of $6,969,914.55, and the average price paid for butter fat was 17.5 cents a pound. In 1904 the total paid to patrons was $12,294,460.55, and the average paid for butter fat was 19.4 cents a pound.

A Brave Girl.

Robbinsdale—All our people are talking of the bravery of Ruth Trump, 12 years old. The girl discloghished herself early Sunday morning, when two yeggmen cracked the safe in the Robbinsdale State bank. When her father jumped from his bed at the report of the explosion in the bank across the street from his home, the girl pluckily ran to the town hall and rang the fire bell.

Citizens rushed to the hall and joined John Trump, the girl's father, in the pursuit of the fugitives.

When the chase was abandoned the girl was found tugging at the rope.

Mr. Trump heard the first explosion shortly after 3 o'clock. Looking out of the window of his home, he saw two men at work in front of the safe. Before he could dress himself a second explosion was heard.

When Trump and his son rushed to the street and opened fire on the fleeing robbers, Ruth ran to the town hall and rang the fire bell.

For Full Taxation.

St. Paul—The state tax commission is preparing for a campaign of education with the purpose in view of securing a more nearly complete listing of the property of the State Public Station. A pamphlet is being prepared containing all of the tax laws, including those in a revised law to be in session laws of 1905 and 1907, together with the court decisions bearing on those laws. Two thousand copies of the pamphlet will be prepared primarily for the use of the assessors and the other local taxation officials.

The pamphlets will probably be issued early in the spring, and during March and April after the assessors have been elected the board intends to make a tour of the state for the purpose of conferring with the assessors about their work. This will be done during March and April before the assessors begin their work.

The Lid Tightens.

Minneapolis—Orders to close all saloons and public bars at 11 o'clock at night were given to Police Superintendent F. T. Corrigan by Mayor James C. Haynes.

Superintendent Corrigan acknowledged the order and said it would be enforced to the letter.

To prepare the saloonkeepers for what was coming, instructions were sent to the different police captains to warn the saloons in their respective precincts that the lid would be applied at 11 p. m., in compliance with the laws of the state.

Found Dead.

Alexandria—Lying cold in death in a sheltered nook two miles from his parents' home, the body of the 18-month-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Brown was found, and the search which has been kept up for four days by over 100 men was ended. How the little fellow endured the long tramp is a mystery, but there is nothing to indicate that he was carried away.

NEWS NOTES.

New Ulm—While returning home from a vaudeville show in the town of Lafayette, Albert Rantenberg received painful injuries by the accidental discharge of a shotgun.

Minneapolis—Ten thousand dollars has been pledged to the cause of peahlism for use in the Minnesota campaigns of the next two years. This is made up or subscriptions of fifty men in the state, about half of whom are residents of the Twin Cities.

Minneapolis—Emil R. Lieck was attacked by a gang of toughs on the streets and fought a desperate battle before he was able to drive off the brutes. Lieck was badly bitten and bruised, and is now taking treatment at the state Pasteur institute at the university.

Battle Lake—Albert Erickson of Main township, 17 years old, was drowned in Twin lake when his duck boat overturned.

Granite Falls—The silver wedding of Ole N. and Anna C. Sherdal took place at their home near here.

St. Cloud—J. Dombovey, a saloon keeper, was found guilty before Justice Donohoe of selling liquor to a minor. He was fined $10 and costs.

Red Wing—The city of Red Wing is indebted to Mrs. Anna L. Sheldon for an offer to contribute $500 toward the purchase of the Col. Colvill property in East Red Wing.

St. Paul—D. P. Ronssopoulos, 866 Goodrich avenue, secretary and treasurer of the Northwestern Stamp Works, was found dying in his bedroom with a pistol shot in his right temple.

Faribault—A young son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Stronskey, aged about twelve years, was accidentally run over by a Rock Island freight train and one of the boy's legs was cut off above the ankle.

Alexandria—Three launches and a dozen rowboats stored in an outhouse at the summer hotel of John Blake on Lake Carlos, have been destroyed by fire, the origin of which is unknown. The loss is $1,200.

New Richland—Peter Rasmussen was suddenly stricken blind while at work. He started to pick up a sack of bran and his eyesight instantly left him. Doctors think that his affliction will be but temporary.

Mankato—Frank Brooks, a high school student, met with an accident while riding to school in the morning. He lives five miles north of the city and has been making the trips on a colt. The animal shied on the pavement and fell on young Brooks, breaking his leg.

Minneapolis—Minneapolis broke its former records for building permits during October. The total issued during the month call for an expenditure of $927,115 as against $850,720 last year in October. The total building operations up to the time this year amount to $8,987,780.

Spooner—The building and ditching of roads is a big item of expense in Northern Minnesota. The village of Spooner has built a road to old Spooner, a distance of 2 miles. Every rod that was laid cost not less than $6, and some rods cost $10. The village spent more than $2,000 for the job.

Vesta—Carl Lemke, a clerk in a local store, reached home too late for supper, so he went to the butcher shop and procured one dozen oysters, which he proceeded to eat raw. In one of them he found two pearls about the size of a small pea. He has been offered $200 for the gems.

Glenwood—The dedication of the new church of the St. Martini Lutheran congregation in Belle Plaine will take place on Nov. 17. Rev. F. H. Dicke, who about forty years ago served this congregation as pastor, and is now eighty-four years old, will preach the last sermon in the old church.

St. Paul—The Great Northern road is now the owner of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company and all of its properties and rights. The Great Northern has been operating this road since 1890 under a 999 year lease, but on Oct. 11 the property was purchased outright for $35,000,000.

Glencoe—Carl Jensen, an aged gardener of this place, met with probably a fatal accident while visiting his daughter's household goods. He mounted the loaded wagon and took his seat on the tailboard in order to drive. He lost his balance and fell to the ground, the wheels passing over him and breaking five ribs and crushing his hips.

Brownsville—Workmen digging into a bluff-side to place the foundation for an extension of the property of H. Daschner, uncovered the entrance to a cavern, regarding which there is considerable mystery. As yet none has mustered the courage to enter its cold depths, for it appears to be enormous, and a cool breath of wind seems to gush from tha cavity.

St. Cloud—When the state legislature meets next winter it will probably be asked to amend the hunting laws so as to require holders of hunting licenses to report to the commission the number and kind of game killed during the year. The plan is to attach to each license a return coupon to be sent by the hunter at the end of the year to the commission giving this information.

There seems to be no lessening of the public interest in the story of that quaint little country girl, "Sila Hopkins," who has been before the public for eight full seasons and is now retelling her story for the ninth time. Miss Rose Melville, the originator of the character, is still playing the title role and this season is surrounded by a stronger company than she has ever had to second her efforts. Miss Melville will be seen at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, the week of November 19th.

Minneapolis—The state board of emigration, through Commissioner George Walch, is preparing an immediate campaign for extensive advertising of Minnesota and its special advantages for new settlers.

Almora—The sharp edges of the town "lid" have scraped Pete Cosgrove, the only local saloon keeper, so severely that he has been forced out of business and the town is "dry."

St. Paul—Mrs. Esther Knutson, 77 St Valley street, was fatally burned by the explosion of a lamp she was carrying.

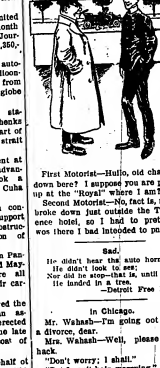
OUR OFFICE BOY.

On Monday morn the boy was hired.
He went to work like one inspired.
"I do not care for holidays.
A baseball game? It never pays."
Said Jim to me, "He'll get a raise,
That boy I hired."



On Tuesday he was more inspired.
"Some relative," said he, "has wired
Grandmother's life—perhaps she may Be buried on next Saturday."
Says I to Jim, "He wants to play,
That boy you hired."

Next Monday morn the boy retired.
We did not tell him he was fired.
We begged, implored, his boy to stay.
His grandma left him millions. Say!
We're sorry he has gone away.
Says Jim to me, "I'm tired!"

What It Costs to Dress Stylishly

A woman who wishes the name of being well dressed, as fashion knows the term, must have at least five or six imported costumes; also an equal number of domestic afternoon and evening dresses and of tailor-made gowns. There must be an appropriate hat for every out-of-door gown; and these cost anywhere from $50 to $100 or $200 apiece. In summer a fashionable woman must have 40 or 50 lingerie gowns, ranging from the cobweb of lace to the simple mull, costing not more than $150. She must have morning gowns—she will pay $125 for a simple muslin with perhaps two yards of inexpensive lace on it. Half a dozen evening coats for winter, and an equal number of lace or silk for summer, are a matter of course. When the Irish lace crochet coats first became popular, one New York shop sold 450 in a month, no one of them priced less than $200. And the accessories, are in proportionate extravagance; for lingerie, handkerchiefs, coats and fans $5,000 or $6,000 e year is a conservative estimate.

A pair of gloves is worn but once; and delicate shoes, made of imported leather to match the tint of a fabric, suffer a similar eclipse after a debut in a ballroom. For many women pride themselves on never wearing a cleaned garment. After a couple of wearings they will send an imported gown to a second-hand dealer, receiving a $100 bill for the creation that may have cost $600. The dealer sells it to an actress starting on her tour, to the society leader of a small town, or to a member of the demi-monde.

On the other hand, the women who patronizes the cleaning establishments spends there from $1,500 to $1,800 a year. For when one pays $20 to have a lace gown cleaned after a single wearing; when gloves by the hundred and blouses 50 at e time are sent to be renovated, it does not take long to reach a sum that penalizes the sedary on which many a man supports a family.—Gertrude Lynch in Everybody's.

FOR THE AFTERNOON.

Ribbons for Hats and Jackets.

Speaking of the trimming of the new hats, which is paramount to any consideration for the benefit of one's neighbors and is growing so huge in size that there is no getting round it, ribbon will be used extensively this fall. Ribbons have fallen a little into neglect the last few years, but this season many of the most fashionable hats are decorated with large bows as well as with imitation flowers and plumes fashioned from ribbon blouses, tea jackets, tea gowns and evening wraps will be made of ribbon joined together in various ways, either by lace insertions and narrow embroidered ins, or where striped or figured ribbon is used, by braids of silk to match the leading color. This is also used in the lining. Long scarfs for evening wear will also be made of ribbons, these being invariably linked together by bows and many being finished at the ends by a lace frill.

Hold Waist in Place.

Sew on the wrong side of waist, at the waist line, a double strip of ribbon about four inches long and two inches wide, stitching on upper side only. Before putting on your skirt pin this fap securely with safety pins to corset and your waist never will wrinkle in the back.

How to Provide Fun for Guests

Shakespeare Whist Party.

The invitations were the most unusual thing about this party. They were as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. John Smith send greetings to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Tupp.

November Twenty-sixth

Eight O'clock.

"Lend thy serious hearing to what I shall unfold."—Hamlet.

"Sir (and lady), you are very welcome to our house.

It must appear in other ways than words. Therefore, I scant this breathing courtesy."—Merchant of Venice.

"Say, what abridgement

Have you for this evening"—Midsummer Night's Dream.)

"What will be the pastime—passing excellent."—Taming of the Shrew.)

"If your love do not persuade you to come,

Let not my letter."—(Merchant of Venice.)

The prizes all savored of the great bard—his photograph framed, a stein depicting Falstaff with a cup of sack, etchings of Romeo and Juliet and a book of Shakespeare's quotations.

A Musical Entertainment.

To each guest the hostess handed a card which was cut out in the shape of a man's head. It was immediately recognized as "Mozert."

At the top of each card was the words "Who—What," followed by figures with spaces for answers. The piano was concealed by a screen so that the performer and the music were both hidden from view. The hostess explained that there would be several bars of music played and when the melody was recognized it was to be written down, with the composer's name, if possible.

The first tune was "Yankee Doodle," then Schubert's "Serenade," the "Hoyden's Chopin's "Funeral March," the "Shepherd Boy," "Maiden's Prayer," "Last Rose of Summer," Mendelsohn's "Wedding March," "Ben Bolt," etc. In all there were 35 pieces. Suitable prizes were awarded for having the most articles correct and to the person who had the most composers.

Ice cream was served in shape of musical instruments and the quotations were on musical subjects. They were written in colored ink on dainty folded paper cards. Every one pronounced the affair a decided success. A hostess may use her own preference in selecting the music to be rendered and may combine both instrumental and vocal with good results.

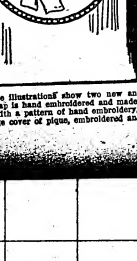
Giving a Tennis Party.

A coterie of eight who have played tennis all summer banded up the season with this pretty party. The invitations were written on cards decorated with water-colored racquets and nets. The rooms were made attractive with nets on the wall and a net stretched across the floor. In this were pasteboard racquets, each attached to several yards of ribbon of many colors. The contest was to wind up this ribbon on the requests and see who could get the most ribbon.

(I think a few more racquets at the favor counter that would have been better, even than the ones of pasteboard.)

Racquets were crossed and hung between doors, also from the overhead lights. Partners were found by matching racquets that had been cut in half and on which quotations had been written. The prizes were acted as waiters, serving the refreshments on tennis racquets in lieu of trays. Paper cartoons were used and the affair was delightfully informal.

MADAME MERRI.



Foxtail Feathers.

Millinery is a point that confronts us in an autumn month and here, indeed, the difficulty is where to choose from among what is practically a very embarrassment of richness. There were more styles to choose from and greater variety in trimmings, and the season gives a fresh impetus to those delightful fruit garnitures which were rampant on our earlier season's hats. But if the trimmings vary, the shapes of the summer still hold their own. Brims continue to droop more than ever, and we are still in danger of being extinguished by the too pronounced "cloche."

Evening Hoods.

Young girls have taken up the matter of evening hoods with enthusiasm, and the best shops are showing a bewildering variety of those effective little possessions in countless materials and designs.

To Make for Baby

The illustrations show two new and pretty things for the baby. The little cap is hand embroidered and made in a new style. The bib is of nainsook with a pattern of hand embroidered medallions, finished with lace frills. The baby carriage cover of pique, embroidered and scalloped in wash cotton.

Our Standing Army.

Uncle Sam is credited with having the smallest standing army of any world power, says a Twin City paper.

And this is true so far as the actual standing armey is concerned, but to get an insight into the propotions of Uncle Sam's potential standing army one should investigat the hunting question.

Ability to march and shoot are the two great requisites in time of war and Uncle Sam is well supplied with men who possess these qualifications.

In the state of Minnesota there have been issued approximately 10,000 licenses to hunt. There are about 5,000 hunters who do not go out of their own county and consequently do not need to secure a license.

On this basis it would appear that thruout the United States ther must be about 600,000 men who hunt each year. Reduceing this by 100,000 to allow for communities where hunting is not a popular pastime, there are 500,000 hunters, most of whom own their own guns.

With 500,000 men trained in stalking game, inured to fatigue and exposure, skilled in shooting at living targets, the nation have a standing army of great possibilities.—Crookston Daily Journal.

What His Music Biff Meant.

An architect who had planned and superintended the building of a west side residence had turned over the completed house to its owner. The architect had been in nowise hampered in the expenditure of money, yet his customer, being a good business man, gave his personal attention to the details of the construction.

"Does this mean?" he asked on a final inspection of the bills. "Three hundred dollars to a quartet of trained musicians. How can anybody have given a concert already in my house when no one is living there?"

"They were testing the acoustics of the rooms," the architect explained. "Every room in your house has been submitted to that test. There will be plenty of music there later on, and I certainly wouldn't want to finish the house without being sure that the sounding properties were satisfactory. In these days every private house or hotel that amounts to anything is put through the acoustic test before it leaves the architect's hands."—New York Sun.

Blind Man's Dreams.

One of the most intelligent inmates of a blind asylum, who came into the world blind, says that he never dreams of the things he has read about and never dreams of any thing or person that he has not in some way come in personal contact with. He dreams of music, of the voices of persons he knows, of such incidents as might happen at the home or in some place in which he has actually been, but never of incidents in other places or in other lands. Even although he has read descriptions of beauties, of natural beauties, of the appearance of a street or a city, no idea of what they look like comes to him in the form of his sleep. There is a class of blind people who become blind when quite young. Such blind people never dream of any scene or object except those which have remained in the memory from what they actually saw before they became blind.—Pearson's Weekly.

Fish in Inclosed Waters.

Most people not without education and a general knowledge of natural history are mystified by the presence of fish in inclosed waters. For many years there was open mouthed wonder over the perch, bream and crayfish found in the newly cut dams near the Macquarie river, in New South Wales. In some cases the water had scarcely settled after the rain had filled the dam that the fish were observed, and the Australian farmers started a theory of spontaneous production. This obtained and gained wide credence until a Sydney professor chanced to pick up a wild duck and found its broad feathered and webbed feet well dotted with fertile and almost hatched fish eggs, on which the "spontaneous production" theory was promptly withdrawn.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

TRIALS OF THE RICH.

Financial Prosperity and Its Worries and Perplexities.

Once upon a time a young man and a girl loved each other fondly. He was poor, but bright, energetic and persevering. She was pretty, cheerful and amiable. They married. Their friends thought they might have waited until their prospects were better but they laughed prudence to scorn.

Two years after the marriage the wife met one of her friends.

"How are you getting along?" asked the friend.

"Very nicely," said the wife, beaming. "My husband is so good, and I have such a lovely baby. And, just think, we have $1,000 in the bank, and we don't owe a cent to anybody!"

Five years later the friend met her again.

"I hear you are doing very well," she said. "Some one told me your husband had $10,000 invested in real estate."

"Yes, yes," said the wife, "but it's such a worry. There are repairs and taxes and interest on mortgages, and one of the tenants has just moved out owing us a whole month's rent. Isn't it a shame?"

Five years more elapsed, and again the friend met her.

"They tell me you're growing rich," she said.

"Yes-es, but I'm awful so about the stock market. My husband has $50,000 in stocks, and he thinks they're going up, but I'm not so sure about it. Indeed, I didn't sleep a wink last night."

Five years later—another meeting.

"From what I hear your husband will soon be a millionaire."

"Oh, I don't know," said the wife. "He hasn't more than half a million yet. And it is so tied up in all sorts of investments—one never knows how they will turn out. I just wish we had enough to put the money in government bonds so that we wouldn't have to worry. But of course he knows from half a million in government bonds wouldn't be enough to make both ends meet. And yet, do you know, some people have such absurd notions about the amount of money we have! One crank has even sent a letter to my husband threatening to shoot him just because he is rich. I declare, sometimes I'm so worried I don't know what to do."

It would be pleasant to give this story a happy ending, but that isn't the life it is. The lady's wealth continued to increase as long as she lived, and she never ceased to be unhappy except in those brief intervals when she forgot all about it.—Boheminn.

THE BABY POST.

A Curious Institution That Once Flourished In England.

Although few people are probably now aware of it, the fact remains that there are scattered in England a regular "baby post," the rates of postage being fixed on a strictly by-laws basis, according to distances traversed.

The curious institution came into existence in connection with the foundling hospital in Guilford street. When this charity was first established, it was understood that its operations would be confined to London and its environs. But the people of the country town and village heard of it and showed a decided disposition to share in its advantages, hence the "baby post."

All over the country there were men and women who entered vigorously into the business of carrying children to London and depositing them at the gates of the foundling hospital. The charge was 8 guineas from distant localities like York and Monmouth, down to a guinea from places situated within thirty to fifty miles of the metropolis. The unfortunate infants were borne on horseback in panniers, two to each carrier, or in wagons lined with straw, for which the charge was something what less.

Naturally shuses grew up in connection with the traffic. But, even apart from them, the mortality among the "dusted" babies was terrible. Thus, out of 14,824 received at the hospital in four years, only 4,400 lived to be "apprenticed out," being a mortality of more than 70 per cent.

Eventually parliament passed a measure abolishing the practice, and the "baby post" ceased.—London Answers

Euphemisms For "Mad."

In order to avoid the blunt word "mad" many euphemisms are resorted to in the English language. While "bunny" refers to the supposed influence of the moon, "disease" simply means unhealthy; "fishecite" signifies only weak, and "crazy," meaning decrepit, student corresponds to the slang "cracked." "A iffe off," "not all there," "a bee in his bonnet," are only a few of the efforts slang has made to carry off the sad fact with an uneasy joke. "Lunatic asylum," for the old "madhouse," represents not only a great improvement in the institution, but also in the term used to designate it.

A Tiny Well Digger.

The mole is one of the thirstiest of animals. It never burrows at any great distance from water, and at times of drought when the supply of the needful element is diminished or cut off the "little gentleman in the velvet coat" counteracts the scarcity by digging wells until it comes to a depth at which water may be obtained.

Old Time Mountebanks.

Coryat, describing the mountebanks he saw at Venice in the seventeenth century, who were adepts in the art of advertising, speaks of the "oration to the audience of half an hour long wherein he doth most hyperbolically extol the virtues of his drugs and confections, though many of them are very counterfeit and false." And the author of a "Tour Through England" (1725) writes of a mountebank he saw in Winchester: "He cures all diseases and sells his packets for sixpence apiece. * * * It is a prodigy how so wise a people as the English are gulled by such pickpockets."

Duplica.

As usual, he complained that the biscuits were heavy, the coffee weak, the bacon blurred, and so forth.

His wife in the end looked up calmly from her letters.

"Don't growl so over your breakfast," she said, smiling. "Nobody is going to take it away from you."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Hardly Negotiable.

Stories have been told of buttons, tacks and various extraneous substances found in contributions boxes, but it is seldom that a church member strikes a blow so severe as was that delivered by Deacon Bludd of Pattersville on one occasion.

It was at the close of a missionary sermon that Dr. Bindl, whose wont it was to contribute 10 cents to each of the charities to the support of which the church subscribed, were seen to take a blue slip from his pocket and look at it keenly and affectionately.

When after a slight but evident hesitation he dropped the slip carefully folded, into the box Deacon Lane, who was passing it, could hardly refrain from an exclamation of joy.

"The Lord will bless you, Brother Bindl," he said, when the sermon was over, hurrying down the aisle to overtake the prosperous grocer.

"I hope so," returned Mr. Bindl dryly, "but I'm afraid you can't take on that being a check that I dropped in the box. It won't. 'Twas a receipted bill for kerosene the church owed me last year, and it had been overlooked. Of course it's just the same as money, though, when you come to that."—Youth's Companion.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

MAISIE'S PRESENT

By INA BREVOORT ROBERTS

(Copyright.)

Max felt decidedly pleased with himself as he walked up the steps of a palace belonging to one of New York's millionaires. This millionaire and all his belongings were of special interest to the public just at that time because his daughter was shortly to be married to a titled foreigner and the wedding, in the magnitude of its splendor, was to eclipse all previous weddings.

A well-known photographer had received an order from a magazine for photographs of the important rooms in the home of the bride-elect, and Max, who was the photographer's right-hand man, was now on his way to take the pictures.

Arrived at the house, Max began with the drawing-room. When he had the light and his camera arranged to his satisfaction Max sent away the servants who were helping him and prepared to take the picture. As he was about to remove the cap he heard the rustle of a gown and a woman's face appeared between the curtains that hung in a doorway directly in range of the camera.

The face belonged to a tall, slender creature, half girl, half woman. When she saw Max she seemed startled, but at sight of his camera she recovered her composure.

"May I come in?" She asked the question in a hesitating way.

Max smiled at her. "I would rather you waited a few minutes," he returned, uneasily, "unless you want to be in the picture. Just step back out of sight and I will call you in a moment."

The girl's astonished face as she obeyed him made Max realize that he had been a trifle dictatorial to someone who had more right there than he. She evidently lived in the house and he found himself wondering as he timed his exposure, in what capacity.

He came to the conclusion that she was probably companion or secretary to one of the family. Her dress, as well as her way of carrying herself and her manner of speaking, told him she was not a servant and he knew that the millionaire and his family were out of town. They were supposed to have slipped away to give the bride-elect a few days' rest and shelter from publicity before the wedding.

"You may come in now," Max called.

As the girl entered the room he noticed that she was very pretty. She walked over to his camera, which she examined with interest. The girl seated herself before the fire and began listlessly to turn the pages of a magazine, meanwhile asking questions about his work until Max found himself growing communicative. He told her how busy they were at the studio and that he preferred photographing interiors to taking portraits of actresses and celebrities. Interior work was harder, but portraits became monotonous.

"This house is a beauty, isn't it?" he remarked.

The girl looked surprised, then she smiled. "Yes," it is a nice house," she said.

"You don't say that very enthusiastically," observed Max, turning to look at her, "but I suppose you're too used to it to have it impress you as it does me. There'll be a fine time here when that wedding comes off," he went on. "It's going to cost something, I tell you, but I like to see rich people spend their money. It seems queer, though, making such a fuss over a girl not out of her teens. Do you know her?" he asked suddenly.

"Yes, I know her."

"Do you like her? I have always heard that she had a very lovely disposition, sweet and gentle, you know, and all that."

"Oh, I suppose under all her moods she has a fairly good heart," said the girl, rising and going over to look out from one of the windows.

A silence followed which was broken only by the faint splashing of the fountain in the hall. Max was intent on his exposures and his companion, who had returned to her chair, appeared to be absorbed in a book.

"I wish Maisie could see this house!" Max cried suddenly.

The girl looked up quickly. "Who is Maisie?" she asked.

Max's face grew red under his fair skin; he had spoken without stopping to think. "Maisie is—" he began in a blundering way; "she is the girl I'm engaged to," he ended bravely. The shyness in his manner, in such contrast to his former easy assurance, seemed to amuse and please his companion.

"So you are going to be married, too?" she said smiling at him.

"No, I am not going to be married for a long while yet," Max answered, ruefully. "I only wish I were. But there's no such luck."

"Doesn't she want to be married yet?"

"Yes, but we've got to wait."

"Why?" The girl's voice was full of interest.

"Too poor," Max answered, laconically. "We must wait till I get my salary raised and save up something for a rainy day. Can't live on love, you know."

"The girl's face grew wistful. "Sometimes I think I should like to try," she said.

Max laughed. "It wouldn't work. You can't enjoy life when you're worrying about money all the time. But, after all," he continued, going back to his own affairs, "it does not really cost such a lot to keep a house, and Maisie is a fearless manager. If I only had more saved up, we would not be actually obliged to wait for the 'raise.' It makes me mad when I think of all the money I wasted before I knew Maisie. I tell you, it takes a girl like her to take the meanness out of a fellow. Now, just to show you the kind of girl she is," he went on, "she is crazy about diamonds. So I made up my mind not to propose to her until I had saved enough to buy her a solitaire ring. When I had $50 (you can get a very fair stone for that nowadays, you know) I asked her to marry me, and after she had said 'Yes,' we went together to get the ring. And what do you think that girl did? Picked out a plain moonstone and flatly refused to have any diamond. She said diamonds were a foolish extravagance for people like us, and I must put the money away toward furnishing our flat. Now, what do you think of that?" Max looked at his companion as if challenging her to cite an instance of greater heroism.

"I think Maisie is a girl worth having."

"Well, she has made a man of me," declared Max, "and I'll wager that's more than the girl who lives here can do with her prince. In fact, I don't believe she'll even try. All girls are not like Maisie."

Max's companion had risen and was staring into the fireplace, where the flames of the gas log leapt and curled. "You are right," she said; "all girls are not like Maisie. But perhaps she will try," she added softly, and then went away without waiting to say good-bye.

"Who is Maisie?" She Asked.

Max looked after her retreating figure with a perplexed face. "Well!" he ejaculated, "she did go off in a hurry. I wonder if I hurt her feelings? She seems to be touchy on the subject of that wedding. It isn't often I talk to any one about Maisie, but that girl was different, somehow, from the general run of people. Pretty and nice, too, with fine manners. I suppose that comes from watching how the rich live. She comes back, I'm going to ask her who she is. I wanted to before, but didn't dare. It's funny when there is about some people that you won't let you ask them questions."

But his companion of the morning did not appear again.

At the door, as Max was going out, a pompous servant handed him an envelope and a small package. "I was desired to give you these," he said.

"What?"—began Max.

"You were not to ask any questions, sir," interrupted the man gently, as, without giving Max time to speak, he swung open the massive door, letting in a flood of light and a dim roar of mingled noises.

Bewildered, Max went out into the sunshine and down the marble steps, opening the envelope as he walked. There was a letter inside, written on heavy, monogrammed paper:

"I want Maisie to have what I want with this ring. It will be to wear it, not because it is the gift of one who will soon bear a title, but because it comes from a woman she has helped. And tell her, too, that all the diamonds in the world could not weigh against being loved as she is."

The letter bore the signature of the bride-elect whose marriage would make a princess. With a grave face Max took the wrapping from the package and touched the spring of the jewel case it contained. The cover flew up disclosing a ring set with a radiant diamond, a priceless stone that caught the sun's rays and flashed and sparkled, blazing with light and fairy colors.

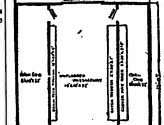
THE DAIRY

RAT PROOF BARN AND CRIBS.

Plan Recommended by a Farmer of Neosho County, Kansas.



I built a small barn 32 by 32 feet, with cribs on the sides set upon rock foundations 12 or 15 inches high, using two by six for the floor joists and flooring the crib with good shiplap planks. The cribs are six feet wide, 32 feet long and ten feed high. This leaves a space between the cribs, not floored, 16 by 32 feet and about 11 feet high. This central space I inclosed in part by sliding doors nine feet wide and ten feet high and shut up seven feet of the open end space by shiplap siding.

The sides of crib next to the large central space I railed up by using heavy undressed one by four crib stuff set about one and one-fourth inches apart, which gave the corn access to the air. The ends and outer walls of these cribs are of shiplap barn siding. Above both central space and cribs is the haymow, 32 by 32 feet. This haymow is tightly floored with good shiplap lumber, which forms the covering for the cribs.

From a wirecloth mill I obtained sufficient wire sand-screen No. 4, ten meshes to the inch, to cover the rafted inner wall of the cribs, and also to cover the floor. After spreading the screen on the floor I put on it another shiplap plank floor, letting the wire turn up at the edges of crib about about five inches. The screen on sides was put on the outside of rails next to the central barn space, and was fastened in place by laths nailed down with shingle nails.

Overhead between the joists I spread an extra heavy galvanized wire fly netting, of about 196 meshes to the square inch, and held it tight to loft floor over crib, by nailing laths on it. I have not seen a rat since I put on the screens, although it has been on several years. It will last a lifetime.

The heavy galvanized No. 4 sand screen cloth will cost three and one-half cents per square foot. However, there has since come to my attention a wire cloth of finer mesh that I think decidedly better for the purpose. It is No. 8 evaporator, 64 meshes to the square inch, and costing four cents to the square foot. The extra heavy galvanized wire fly netting costs two and one-half cents per square foot in unbroken rolls of 100 linear feet, on which prices quoted are based.

I find this plan for a rat-proof crib much better than building one on stilts, which will compel you to climb a ladder 730 times a year for the rest of your life.—Missouri Valley Farmer.

The Dairy Business.

The dairy business does keep a man tied down; there is no mistake on that score. But is there any branch of farming that includes live stock that doesn't keep a man "tied down?" We can't get something for nothing in dairying any more than in any other business, and the more responsibility a man takes the better his work is apt to be paid.

Stop up the cracks in the barn with mortar and nail with feed given to the

And Many There Are Will Say Senator Platt Was Right.

A rather cynical joke has been recently credited to Senator Platt.

The senator, on his last visit to the Manhattan Beach hotel, allowed a pretty little girl, a western millionaire's daughter, to be presented to him.

The little girl, in the course of one of her many chats with the aged statesman, said:

"Tell me, won't you, senator, what political economy is?"

"Political economy, my dear child," Senator Platt is said to have replied, "is the art of never buying more rotes than you actually need."

BABY'S ECZEMA GREW WORSE.

Hospitals and Doctors Could Not Relieve Him—But Cuticura Remedies a Speedy, Permanent Cure.

"Eczema appeared when our baby was three months old. We applied to several doctors and hospitals, each of which gave us something different every time, but nothing brought relief. At last, one of our friends recommended to us Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. A few days afterwards improvement could be noted. Since then we have used nothing but Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, and now the baby is six months old and is quite cured. All that we used was one cake of Cuticura Soap and two boxes Cuticura Ointment, costing in all $1.25. C. F. Kars, 343 East 65th Street, New York, March 30, 1906."

Martins' Revenge.

A correspondent tells the story of two house martins' nests built against an attic window of a farm, to which the birds came for several successive years. Last spring, however, before they arrived, a sparrow took up her abode in one of the nests.

Shortly after the martins returned as usual, and one day the farm people noticed that the hole of the nest which the sparrow occupied had been blocked up. Next morning a boy climbed up to ascertain the meaning of this, and not finding any nested broke away part of the nest, to find the poor little sparrow dead on her eggs.

The house martins had walled her up for daring to take possession of their house.—Country Life.

A Waiting Map.

"The maps we have been giving as premiums to subscriptions caused a little temporary excitement in our office the other day," says the editor of the Adams Enterprise. "Ben Spudge called and casually remarked in the presence of seven intending subscribers that the said maps weren't worth the paper they were printed on. As this observation caused the seven intending ones to keep their cash in their pockets we proceeded to make a map of Ben's countenance, and we succeeded so well that he is now the best walking advertisement our map industry ever had. Call again, Ben, old boy!"—Atlanta Constitution.

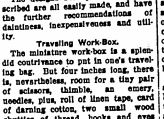
PUTNAM FADELESS DYES

TO MAKE FOR XMAS

LITTLE GIFTS THAT MAY BE MADE AT SMALL EXPENSE.



A Miniature Work Box, Rose Pin Cushion and Other Things That Will Prove Acceptable to Many.

Most of us have begun to think in earnest about our Christmas giving, and every woman who enjoys fashioning her own gifts is on the lookout for attractive little things that come within the limits of her purse and her needlework ability.

The designs here pictured and described are all easily made, and have the further recommendations of daintiness, inexpensiveness and utility.

Traveling Work-Box.

The miniature work-box is a splendid contrivance to put in one's traveling bag. But four inches long, there is, nevertheless, room for a tiny pair of scissors, thimble, an emery, needles, pins, roll of linen tape, card of darning cotton, two small wood shuttles of thread, hooks and eyes and a few buttons. For the case pretty ribbon should be selected, a trifle less than two inches wide. Cardboard, ribbon-covered, does duty for the two sides, which are neatly overcast to the singular strip of ribbon forming the bottom and ends, and extending out further than to two flaps. To one of these are tacked two or three flannel leaves for pins and needles. The other is for tying over the top with narrow ribbon, and serves as a cover.

Rose Pin Cushion.

For the pin cushion, buy, or make, a small foundation—the one in the illustration is two inches wide by three high—and use three inch pink satin ribbon for the covering. The petals of the two little roses at the top are formed loops, knotted once, of slightly narrower double-faced satin ribbon. Yellow artificial centers are used, and either a bit of green foliage or a bow of pink ribbon completes the gift. An additional touch is given by placing a few fancy-headed pins on the cushion.

Bodkin Holder.

For the fancy bodkin holder, cover a small cotton roll with ribbons and then with alternating rows of narrow cut insertion and beading. Tie a bow of ribbon at each end, and put a bodkin through each strip of beading.

A Thread-Holder.

For the thread-holder cut two hearts of pasteboard, making tiny slits, or eyelets, through which narrow ribbon may be run to hold the spools in place. Cover the shapes with silk or linen, buttonholing the slits. A spool of black silk, and one each of black and white cotton make a good combination.

M. H.

WITH PALM LEAF FANS.

Make Pretty Decoration for Sewing-room or Bedroom.

A very inexpensive thing to do if one has a large number of friends whom she wishes to remember, and does not mind giving them the same things, would be to buy one or two dozen calendars—just the little 12-sheet ones—and the same number of small thermometers, which may be had for five cents each. Tack a calendar to the lower left-hand side of a palm leaf fan; to the upper right-hand side fasten a thermometer, and tie a good bow of corn-colored ribbon to the handle, up against the fan. This makes a pretty and really useful adornment for a bedroom or sewing-room.

Time Needed.

"Going to lunch now? Why, it's only 11 o'clock."

"Well?"

"Well, surely you're not hungry so early as all this."

"No; but I will be by the time the waiter condescends to serve me."

FOR BABY OR GRANDMOTHER.

Stenciled Basket That May Be Put to Various Uses.

One of the beauties of stenciling is the variety of materials upon which it may be used. This means an endless variety of things to make, and without having them seem to have been run off by machinery. With different materials, different designs and different colors, the finished objects bear little relation to one another.

Wood is the nicest thing for stenciling because it will take anything that has color in it from the indigo in the laundry to the ink on the library table. Dyes, tube paint, house paint thinned down with turpentine until the oil is overcome—literally anything with color, may be used for stenciling wood. The design is traced on a piece of stencil paper of light cardboard, and cut with a pen-knife or manicure scissors. This pattern is then anchored to the wood and the color applied with an ordinary artists' brush.

A good thing to experiment on is an ordinary little fruit basket with a handle. Let the design be some of the oriental little Dutch figures that everyone is so fond of, or some of the sun-bonnet children that have taken their place in almost every household. These may be traced from the original pictures on tracing paper for the pattern from which to cut the stencil. Or, if you can draw, make an original design. Two figures, or even one, are enough and they can be repeated around the basket.

Lay the stencil in place on the basket, and stick it fast with two or three pins. Then apply the color as already directed. Let the colors of this be gay, and if part of the space be left uncolored it gives a variety. For instance, let the bows of the men and the aprons of the women be bare basket, the trousers of the men and the skirts of the women red or orange, the men's coats full blue, and the bodices of the women the same blue thinned down a little to make it paler. Then hats and caps may be made of whatever color is left. Always a little touch of black here and there brings out the other colors. It gives a good poster look to outline each figure with a thin line of black. The handle and rim of the basket may be tinted with any one of the colors, and here you have a pleasing combination for eyes which may interest a child enough to act as an inducement for him to pick up his own playthings now and then and save his mother the trouble. A lining might be put in the basket making it receptable to grandmother for a darning basket.

AN ORRIS ROOT RING.

Nice Present for the Boy to Give His Mother.

The small boy is really forlorn when it comes to making Christmas presents for mother. He wants to give her some of his own handiwork, but his fingers were not meant to sew and his carpentering and carving usually end in cut fingers and general distress. A ring of orris root can be made by any boy or girl who possesses a small gimlet, a sufficient quantity of ribbon and the price of orris root, to be had at the druggist. This orris root must be in its natural state before it is ground to fine powder. A hole is bored in each one of the pieces and they are strung, together in a ring on a ribbon. This is tied into a big bow at the top. The fragrance is exquisite and lasts really for years, which is not always the case with the Christmas sachet. The orris ring is intended to be hung in a wardrobe where it diffuses its delicious scent long after the Christmas festivities are a thing of the past.

Threaded Ribbon.

Bed linen, lingerie, table linen and even brica-brac seem to have been drawn into the fad for threaded ribbons. All these articles as well as the ordinary wearing apparel, hats included, are run through with ribbons of various widths. Hemstitching, double-hemstitching and eyelet embroidery are having tremendous vogue as the means whereby the ribbon effect may be added. In the case of crystal vases and the like the ribbons are of exactly the shade of the glass, run through or around the brim and tied with a bow at one side.

MARK TWAIN'S PASTE CAT.

Humorist Furnishes Something for Scribner to Puzzle Over.

Mark Twain, as is his custom, hides himself during the summer from the head hunters, those persons seeking autographs, photographs, or interviews. This year he selected Tuxedo Park as his retreat, renting an old colonial house until the latter part of September, when he returned to his New York home. There, during the heated days, Mr. Clemens wandered about the country byways or spent the time in various shady nooks in his grounds.

A visitor who succeeded in discovering his whereabouts found the great writer in his famous suit of white flannels, seated under a tree petting a kitten.

"Where did you get it?" queried the friendly intruder.

For a moment there was a twinkle in the aged humorist's eyes; it was succeeded by a solemn look as he replied: "I rent it from a neighbor. You see, I cannot afford a cat—not even a young one."

Subsequent inquiry proved at least the first part of Mr. Clemen's statement to be true. He had actually rented the kitten for the summer season. What does he pay for it? Nobody knows what Mark Twain pays for anything. All the world is interested only in what Mark Twain is paid.—The Sunday Magazine.

TO PRETENDERS.

A Wholesome Word for Guidance.

Just a word to you, "Collier's" and other glaring examples of Modern Yellow Journalism and Cigarettes.

Environment gives you a view point from which it is difficult to understand that some people even nowadays act from motives of old fashion and honesty.

There are honest makers of foods and healthful beverages and there are honest people who use them.

Perhaps you are trained to believe there is no honesty in this world. There is, although you may not be of a kind to understand it.

Some of you have been trained in a sorry class of pretenders, and your training does not taint the old fashioned person trained without knowledge of pretense and deceit.

These letters came to us absolutely without solicitation. We have a great many thousand from people who have been helped or entirely healed by following the suggestions to quit the food or drink which may be causing the physical complaints and change to Postum Coffee or Grape-Nuts food.

You are not intelligent enough to know the technical reasons why the change makes a change in the cells of the body. Your knowledge, or lack of knowledge, makes not the slightest difference in the facts.

You can print from old and worn plates all the cheap books your impressario will produce and sell them as best you can, but such acts and your "learned" editorials set but common clay, and seek only "dollars" and much by pretence.

When you branch out into food values you become only ridiculous. Stick to what you know. The field may be small but it is safe.

Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.,

Battle Creek, Mich.

Dear Sirs:

I am, this morning, in receipt of the enclosed mighty good letter from one of my subscribers, which I forward to you, and which I am sure you will be glad to use. I am personally acquainted with this lady, and know that she has no object in writing, other than to do good.

Cordially,

John W. Pritchard, Pres.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1907.

Dear Mr. Pritchard:

Noticing Postum Food Coffee advertised each week in your reliable paper, I concluded to try it, and feeling it a duty toward those who may have suffered as I have from indigestion, desire to state what wonderful benefit I have received from Postum already. "How much I have improved and how well I look", and I tell the facts about Postum every time, for since using Postum I have had one attack of indigestion. It is invigorating, healthful; does not affect the nerves as ordinary coffee, and if properly made, a most delicious drink. Although I have not am more inclined to "brave all things, hold fast that which is good." I am so thankful for good health that I want it known what a blessing Postum has been to me. You may use these few lines as an ad. if you so desire and my name also.

Very truly yours,

Anna S. Reeves.

THE FACULTIES OF JUSTICE.

Blind, Perhaps, But No Reasonable Proof of Deafness Also.

Judge Harlan, who lives up on the hill, was a passenger on a Fourteenth street car the other day and was seated next to a couple of clerks who were deeply interested in some discussion, which caused one of them to raise his voice to quite a high pitch, says the Washington Star. This appeared to make the other man rather cautious, as he glanced warily around to see if any one was listening to the talk of his friend. At this moment he discovered the presence of the dignified justice and turning hastily to his loud-talking comrade, he said: "For heaven's sake, lower your voice; you may have heard that justice is blind but that doesn't necessarily mean that it's deaf also." Whether Judge Harlan heard the remark it is impossible to state, for all the same, a calm smile flitted over his face at the conclusion of the young fellow's admonition to his friend.

Saying "Hello" in Heart Throbs.

"It is a curious thing," said a prominent lecturer recently, "how some books have a strong radiating personality, so that one feels like saying 'Howdy' every time you come across them. Last Christmas I visited friends back at the old home in the farm. When the supper dishes had been put away, the chores done and the evening lamp lighted, I found myself behind the organ for a good old fashioned 'sing.' On the center table were strewn the Christmas remembrances taken from Christmas tree on the evening before. Glancing over them I suddenly encountered a 'Hello!' my school friend, Hello!' and as the others looked up with surprise, I picked up a copy of Heart Throbs and read to them from its pages the 'piece' I spoke in school 40 years ago.

"Then the ice was broken to set in motion the friendly entertaining spirit of Heart Throbs, and the music was forgotten as we all fell into reading the humorous and pathetic bits of prose and verse that have been preserved in the wonderful volume. Some books have great literary value, some have historical significance, but Heart Throbs is the only book I know that slaps you on the back in a friendly sort of way, suiting itself to your moods and proving faithful to every emotion. Next to my love of the Bible I love Heart Throbs. It is the most notable book of the times."

The Peaceful Cow.

She was even more afraid of cows than most girls, so when she espied a placid animal recumbent under a tree, peacefully chewing its cud, she at first refused to go through the pasture at all. But her companion's fears to some extent, and they started by, when the cow slowly commenced to get up, hind legs first, as they always do. At this the little lady shrieked with terror, and said:

"Oh, Bob, hurry, hurry, he is getting ready to spring at us!"—Harper's Magazine.

Carefully Compromised.

"Father is in a perfectly lovely mood," remarked Clarice. "Don't you think you had better ask him this evening?"

"Suppose you ask him?" suggested Clarence.

"Oh, I can't," protested the girl. "I'm too shy."

"You ask him just this one time," pleaded Clarence. "I promise you that in the future I will ask him, no matter how shy I am."—Judge.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

A Critic of Missions Finds Many Surprises

Shanghai, China.—What sort of person is the missionary, when seen on his native heath? China is the best place to make answer to that question, for here are to be found the greatest variety of missionaries, from the China Inland lay worker, with keel as his chief equipment, to the eminent author and scholar and counsellor of statesmen, such as Dr. Arthur H. Smith, of the American board, Dr. W. A. P. Martin, of the Presbyterian board, or Dr. Timothy Richards, of the English Baptist society. Between these extremes range all sorts and conditions of men.

The American conception of a missionary is a man with a book going out among the natives preaching, preaching, preaching, always and everywhere preaching, "as a dying man to dying men." In experience one finds very few of these flaming gospel firebrands. It is rather unexpected and disappointing to discover missionaries plodding along a routine way, pretty much as does a clergyman at home.

The Missionary's Big House.

Of necessity, since no early learns that he must take thought for a comfortable home and physical sustenance. Thus arises that much mooted question, the missionary's residence. Time without number it has been charged that the missionary dwells in a palatial house, and subsists on the fat of the land, with an army of servants to minister to his wants.

There is some ground for this criticism, but first let me say that, in common with most others who have investigated the subject, I do not believe in an European's trying to live as natives live. The China Inland Mission early adopted that method, and it has been obliged to maintain a hospital and sanitorium, and to rebuild-home a large percentage of its workers. As a consequence, the practice of conforming to the native life is less general even in this organization than formerly. A white man cannot live as a yellow man, and keep his health; serious and costly mistakes have been made by missionaries attempting to do so. As to the wearing of native dress, little need be said: most missionaries in the interior do so, in order to appear inconspicuous, and because Chinese clothes are comfortable, cheap and easily obtained. There are disadvantages in living a hundred miles from a button.

Nevertheless, in many cases—by no means in all—the error is made on the side of failure to conform as closely as possible to native style. My own judgment has affirmed the criticism made to me in numerous specific cases, that the dwellings of the missionaries are entirely too sumptuous for persons of their vocation. Rightly or wrongly, the church and the world associate the idea of sacrifice with the missionary's calling, the latter quickly come to see the apparent discrepancy between the preaching of self-denial and the practice of material luxury; some of the most serious strictures upon the missionary's style of living have come to me from native preachers. Often, I am convinced, the fault lies directly with the boards at home; some missionaries have lamented, in my hearing, the elaborateness of the houses sent out to them by the boards.

Inside the missionary's home one usually finds manifest evidence of painstaking economy. It is as difficult for the missionary, living as he must, on imported foodstuffs and wearing, for part of the time, clothes imported clothes, to "get along" as it is for his brother clergyman at home. No little scrimping and saving is necessary to "make ends meet;" the missionary's salary is on the average about a thousand dollars a year, and even in China or Japan, one cannot "live like a prince on this sum.

As to Missionary. Heloes.

Now I come to a delicate question, which long discussion of the subject causes to appear more serious than might at first be supposed, namely, the quality of the missionary's halo. The great bulk of church people who give thought to the matter at all have become accustomed to think of every missionary as a saint and a hero. He is praised and prayed for as Christianity's knight errant, "without fear and without reproach." "Our noble missionaries" is one of the stock phrases of religion. The man or woman who engages in foreign missionary work is commonly regarded as a person of peculiar sanctity and chivalry and devotion and sacrifice and courage. In a word, he is invested with a halo all his own.

Occasionally I have met a missionary, usually young and second-rate, who takes himself quite as seriously as his friends at home take him, and who, well aware that he is one of the noble army of martyr spirits, goes about wearing his halo with all the self-consciousness of a girl with a new bonnet. But most missionaries, on the other hand, feel foolish because of the false attitude in which they are placed by their idealising admirers at home. Some of them have used quite unnecessary forcibleness of speech on this point. They say that they are neither extraordinary saints nor heroes, and that they are not living lives of physical hardship and sacrifice; those who really have hardships say nothing about them. That in reality they do not correspond to the image of themselves ever being held up in sermons, speeches and articles, no one knows quite so well as themselves. If permitted to speak frankly, they would say, as many have said to me, that they have fewer material discomforts than the average home missionary or country pastor; that they are ordinary men and women, with all the limitations of human nature, who are trying to do one sort of Christian work, feeling, whatever its glamour when seen ten thousand miles away, to be actually beset by all the difficulties and discouragements of religious endeavor at home, besides certain other hindrances due to the non-Christian training and beliefs of the natives. They would plead for a little less romance and a little more reality in dealing with the foreign mission propaganda; for neither they themselves, nor their work, can measure up to the enthusiastic portraiture of uninformed supporters.

A Motley Assortment of Missionaries.

It is impossible to speak of "the missionary;" human nature does not lend itself to generalizations. Missionaries are almost as various a company as editors or doctors or lawyers. An honest critic cannot unqualifiedly approve or condemn "the missionary." Even at the risk of shocking many readers, let me say that I have met missionaries who are as incompetent as the bitterest enemy of missions represents all missionaries to be. I have met others who are so small that they may be classed as negligible quantities. I have met unmannered missionaries, lazy missionaries, cowardly missionaries, gluttonous missionaries, bad-tempered missionaries, avaricious missionaries, bigoted missionaries, eccentric missionaries, selfish missionaries, and even, in two cases, I know missionaries who have been cast out for gross immorality. There is scarcely a charge which has been made concerning missionaries as a whole that I have not found true of individual missionaries. Let those who know little of the facts on the field rush into unstinted defense of missionaries as worthy of holes; I cannot do so.

Yet, in perfect fairness and frankness, I can say of the very large majority of the hundreds of missionaries whom I have visited that they are thoroughly honest, competent, self-immolating and devoted servants of a great ideal. The applies to men and women of all denominations and bodies—Roman Catholic and Protestant, churchman and independent; and to all the mission fields which I have thus far investigated. In quiet modesty, and with self-denying service, these men and women are patiently seeking, against great odds, the conversion of the people among whom they dwell. Their lives are the best recommendation of their message.

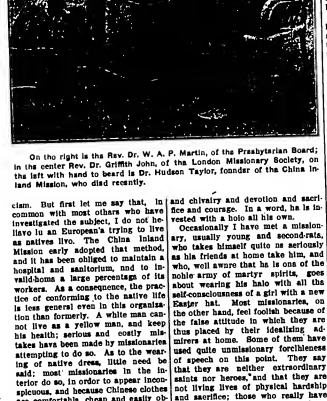
On the whole, they are persons of more than ordinary ability and refinement; the charge may be, and often is, practically in toto, that missionaries are incompetents who have been driven into their field by inability to cure a livelihood. So eminent an authority as Dr. Arthur H. Smith assures me that there is no class of professional worker, except only the college professor of whom so high a standard is required.

The number of missionaries of independent wealth, who give liberally to the foreign mission work of which they themselves are a part, is a surprising revelation to an investigator; and at once an evidence of the confidence of those persons in the missionary enterprise, and of their own disinterestedness in pursuing this vocation.

The Troubles of the Missionaries.

Nevertheless, there are certain trials of missionary life worth noting, many of them quite inseparable from any kind of pioneer work. The first of these, which bears most hardly in the beginning, is the separation from family and friends; as the years soften this, and the foreign field becomes home, there ensues, usually, the greatest trial of all, separation from children, who must be sent away to be educated. This is the heaviest burden borne by the missionary.

Very little is said by missionaries in China about the danger from mobs, although all the older workers have thrilling stories to tell when you get them to talking upon this topic.



When Natives Get on the Nerves.

Another price that must be paid for life amid an alien people is the fact that the natives gradually wear upon the nervous system of the missionary, who as a rule, is a person of more than ordinary culture and of a sensitive temperament. Gradually the natives do get on a foreigner's nerves, to a degree incredible to one who spends his days with people of his own color and speech and manner of life and thought. The white man and the native are in the east for their own advantage usually arrive speedily at the point of detesting and despising the native, even to the extent of abusing him, if he be a Chinaman of a Korean; they also abused the Japanese until the latter would stand it no longer.

While on this point of the character and culture of the missionary, the testimony of a British war correspondent with whom I traveled into the famine district of China, is worth recording. When we started out he was bitterly prejudiced against missionaries; he thought them "no good" and a crowd of imbecile makers. Upon his return, after meeting many missionaries, he wrote a glowing tribute to their character, their disinterestedness and their efficiency.

Well do I recall his astonishment at one evening at the dinner table of a missionary, far in the remote interior, when he found this little company of missionaries quite as cultured, as cosmopolitan and as brilliant as himself. His education in one of Philadelphia's most fashionable schools, and his experiences in the Quaker City. Yet here they were, hundreds of miles from anything that could be called civilization, spending their lives cheerfully for a horde of dirty, ungrateful and uncongenial Chinese and secure in the confidence that they were making the best possible use of life. It was of a member of this same missionary community that my British friend said to me later, "Mr. Patterson is the finest man I have ever met anywhere in all the world."

NEED CO-OPERATION

ESSENTIAL TO SUCCESS IN ALL BUSINESS UNDERTAKINGS.

ON SOME LATE IMPOSITIONS

Schemes Devised to Deceive the People and to Gain Control for Unsound Financial Propositions.

Harmonious co-operation is essential to any successful business. By co-operation we do not mean such organization as the communistic and monastic societies found in parts of the European countries, and occasionally existing in America. As co-operation relates to manufacture and commercialism, it simply means a righteous regard on part of employer and the employed for the liberty and privileges of each. It means for the worker a just day's work for a just day's compensation; and for the employer, a just compensation for the wages he must pay. Interests of both are paramount. One has his capital invested, his own employed and the other has also his capital represented by his ability to labor either in a mental or physical capacity.

In England and in parts of Germany, there are numerous societies, the workers in each being common stockholders and participating in all profits according to their holdings. In fact these societies are nothing more than the great railroad companies and industrial concerns of America, only that in the latter the stockholders seldom take an active part in the work performed. One who takes stock in one of these companies in the countries where this form of co-operation exists, will find conditions far different from what he obtains in the United States. In various places and at different times attempts to offer the English co-operative societies have been made in the United States. Failure has resulted in each effort. Some few communities flourished for a time, then decayed.

Propped up by the success of the few successful organizations in the old country, shrewd schemers have started different communistic societies in the cities of the United States, supposed to be operated upon the co-operative plan. When carefully studied, the plans of the promoters dissected, it will be found that co-operation in these cases seems simply to be getting into business on other people's money, and weaving around the enterprise such appearances as will lead the unsophisticated to believe that from few dollars invested, great savings can be made. In fact the co-operative plan is more for the purpose of advertising a private business proposition and gaining trade from those who invest their dollars in the plan.

It is a foolish thing for the resident of any town or farming community to invest money in such enterprises, which means competition for his home town, the killing off of its business and the building up of concerns in large cities. The earnest man or woman can see in their own home place splendid chances for co-operation. Established business systems are found in the rural towns, as splendid examples of what co-operation should be. The home merchant supplies the residents of the place with the commodities that they require; the merchant is the medium also for the products of the farmer. In the transactions employment is given to home labor, and the profits are kept at home for the benefit of all in the community. Co-operation can be simmered down to the simplest of rules, principle, and there can be no higher form, no system inaugurated that will bring better results to the masses. Before you invest in co-operative mercantile schemes devised by shrewd business men in the large cities, study every phase of the question well, and you are likely to conclude that in your own town there is plenty of room for co-operative work.

EQUITABLE PROFITS.

Cost of Production Should Always Be a Factor in the Matter of Prices.

Profits should bear an equitable relation to cost of production. The farmer has capital invested in lands, agricultural implements, stocks, and other things necessary to the basic operations; when selling his products he must take into consideration the interest on his money invested, the wear and tear of large equipment, the wages of hired help and a salary for his own service. When he sells his products he must pay the expenses necessary to carry on his work and cultivate his crops, care for his stock, etc., for the year. The same principles apply to the person engaged in any other line of business. There is interest on capital employed, wages, taxes, license and cost of articles which comprise the stock necessary for operations. One must be sold at a certain percentage of profit or there will be a case for the absent or the bank. Whenever any one dealing with our fellow men we should always bear in mind the principles of business, and not exact too great profits or sell or buy at prices other than equitable. It is also a good thing to remember when great bargains are offered that cost of production and legitimate profits must be considered. To low prices give cause for suspicion that goods are inferior in some way, or that there is a "nigger in the fence."

FIGHT AGAINST CORRUPTION.

Prosecution of Oppressive Combines Afford a Lesson to Home Traders.

Never before has there been such a stirring up of the masses and an awakening as to rottenness in financial affairs among the large corporations as at present. Some one at one time said that "when thieves fall out the devil gets his reward." So it seems at present when faction is arrayed against faction in exposing crooked operations in great financial and business deals, in which the little fish are swallowed by the big ones, and the men in control, like wolves, lead on to the slaughter.

It is amazing how tampered are the frauds practiced, and how high up in public estimation are the manipulators of the rotten deals. The stealings of the millionaires and multi-millionaires, the intrigues and their perfumous lying and misrepresentations to accomplish their ains; the intricacy of the machinery used in their operations, the perfection of the means, the combinations employed to fleece the people of dollars, would do credit to a Gaztlostro or a Machiavelli, or a Capt. Kidd.

There cannot be doubt that these various articles appearing in the magazines and general newspapers will have the result of opening the eyes of the public to things that few heretofore ever gave serious consideration. They will have the effect of making the people more cautious in making investments of their earnings, and will result in lessons that are beneficial to the country at large. Home trade principles prevail to the possibilities of people losing by the operations of such gigantic schemers. Money invested in your own community in the development of its latent resources will give excellent returns, is ever under your own observation, and while the percentage of profit from some home investments may not be up to the representations made by the manipulators of stocks and the shearers of lambs in general, you are not so likely to be a loser.

MARKET DAYS IN TOWNS.

Successful Plans to Entertain Visitors and Attract Trade.

How to attract trade to towns is a question that interests every business man. There must be some attraction for people of the surrounding country; some entertainment to please. Many means have been put in operation by different towns to bring about the objects desired. The people of the small towns in different western states have inaugurated street carnivals, fall festivals and similar enterprises to entertain people from the surrounding farming sections. These methods have been universally successful, and have resulted in bringing trade to the towns that otherwise would have gone elsewhere. Now comes this, that the residents of the rural districts are brought in contact with the city people on a friendly basis and harmonious relations established that are highly desirable.

In many towns market days have been established. From early spring until into in fall one day in the month is set aside for "market day." For this occasion bands of music are engaged, balloon ascensions, baseball games, races and similar attractions are engaged to interest the people. All these are free, the expense being borne by the business interests of the town. The farmers are invited to bring to the town their horses, cattle, hogs, in fact, every product that they have for sale, and the same is auctioned off to the best advantage. On these market days all kinds of articles can be had at bargain prices. Each storekeeper makes special efforts to offer bargains, and generally the sales are enormous. A few enterprising small towns that have adopted the market-day idea have become noted for many miles about as lively trade centers and take trade away from territory in the neighborhood of less enterprising towns. The market-day idea is worthy of consideration by business men in small towns who desire to pursue a more progressive method of attracting trade to the place.

Duty of Good Citizens.

Home and its protection is the safeguard of all governments. The most common way in which the love of home and fealty to home interests, is a worthy representative of a commonwealth. It is the mass of such men that are the backbone of any community, and, figuratively, the mainstay and the bulwark upon which the nations are founded. Whoever lives in a community and fails to support the public institutions and does not assist in the building up of industries that add to the greatness of the community, is like an alien. While he lives on the place, his heart is in another. He is not the kind of man he is to be relied upon with those who are his neighbors. It is the duty of every resident of a town or community to do his utmost to advance its interest. By thus doing he not alone assists himself, but his neighbors, his town, his county, his state and his nation.

Time to Awaken.

Any plan devised that tends toward greater business centralization makes easier the building up of harmful money away from the home town

Sporting Gossip.

Some one with a taste for figures has discovered that over $20,000,000 has been spent racing for the American's cup, the original cost of which was only about $250. Possibly this is true, but what if it is? The races have been enjoyed by pretty nearly the whole civilized world, extending through several generations. The advancement in the art of building speed yachts has been most wonderful, and has surely been a benefit to the sport of yachting. The men who have furnished the money to build and handle the challengers and defenders were wealthy enough to furnish such luxuries, and the people who have witnessed the contests have surely been well repaid for the outlay. It will be a distinct loss to the public should there be no more races for the America's cup.

The figures referred to on the past performances for the famous sea trophy are as follows:

Number of defenders which have raced for cup since it was won by the American	12
Other boats built and used in trials since 1851	18
Total value at average cost of $125,000	$ 3,125,000
Original cost of America, (estimated)	15,000
Spent in trials and races by cup committee	4,000,000
Public spent at thirty-one races in America	5,000,000
Cost of seven challengers	2,000,000
Expenses of challengers, crews, etc.	6,000,000
Cost to Sir Thomas Lipton in three races	1,500,000
Total	$22,640,000
Cost of the America's cup	250
Present value of the cup (largely for scraps)	15,000

All talk to the contrary, it is one good bet that Fred Tenney not only will not manage the Boston National league next season, but that he will not be on the team, going to some other club in return for a first baseman. President Dovey made no boast of saying the season of 1907 was a decided disappointment to him, on top of the fact his club was severely crippled by injuries. He first great disappointment was the death of "Cozy" Dolan early in the spring; then the catchers were crippled. Flaherty and Pfeffer went on the hospital list when they were most needed, and Young was unable to deliver the goods as he had for two seasons before. The handling of the club was execrable. Game after game was lost by wretched base-running and poor coaching. The team work was far from good. President Dovey said nothing, for he had given Tenney entire charge of the team, perfectly free from any interference on his part. He now is on the lookout for men who will help his team. Everything which was secured with Randall in trade for Howard, made good, and will be a fixture on the team next season, but Randall has not proven a success. It is doubtful if either Catcher Needham or Brown will be on the team next season.

Ralph Rose, the California giant, is seriously considering the quitting of athletics. In amateur athletics Ralph Rose, the California giant, is the big man beyond question. Any man who can take seven firsts hand running and win a new record in each is going some. It will be a long time before the Californian's feat will cease to be a topic of lively interest among athletics. Rose was something of a sensation three years ago and great things were expected of him, but his failure at football, got into trouble with the athletic authorities, and so far as can be learned he was regarded as out of the game. That the eastern estimate was at fault is evidenced by his remarkable work in Jamestown and later at New York. In quitting athletics his loss would be a terrible one to the team for the London Olympian games next year, as he could win the shot put with ease and probably come in close to the weight events. athletic experts have styled Rose "the perfect man," but he can hardly be so if he pattern set up by physical culture experts counts. In all his muscles there is not a knot. His shoulders are round and his knees slant in a manner anything but athletic.

Football is as strenuous a game as it ever was. The large number of injuries sustained by players this year is evidence of the fact. The new game is thoroughly established and still bones are set and tendons snapped. It is the very nature of the game to test bone and muscle. It's a more polite game than it used to be, and more can be taken, but when runners are felled they hit the earth just like they used to and when the ball goes into the line tucked in the arms of a back, there is going to be opposition, just as of yore.

It's a game for the rugged and they even sometimes suffer. Does the bone fit derived overshadow the danger, is the question to ask. The American college youth and his supporters evidently think so.

The navy coaches chuckle every time nay one asks about Shafroth, the 210-pound substitute, who played against Barr of Harvard. Shafroth is a powerful player, who has been acquiring great speed.

Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

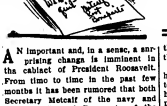
WASHINGTON.—By the authority vested in him by the government of the United States, Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief chemist of the department of agriculture, will attempt to turn twelve young men of good habits into "dope" fiends.

If he is successful the once immaculate twelve will be forced to go to a "dope" sanitarium at the expense of the government. If he fails he will acknowledge that his experiments have been futile.

For a long time Dr. Wiley has been looking with suspicion upon a number of drinks that are sold over the marble slabs of soda fountains. He has suspected and still suspects that many of them contain a large amount of what is commonly known as "dope." He has called for volunteers and 12 employes of the department have stepped forward. The experiments are to begin at once.

Each young man will devote his attention to a particular brand of "soft" drink. He will begin by drinking three glasses of his assigned beverage daily. The dose will be increased gradually. If he shows no symptoms of having acquired the drug habit, that particular brand will be regarded as harmless, and Dr. Wiley will cross it off his list of suspects. His experiment will have fallen short of success. But if the volunteer begins to take on the pallor of the drug fiend and shows an increased craving for the drink, Dr. Wiley will have been vindicated. The beverage will be tabooed throughout the country, and the young "dope fiend" will be dispatched to a sanitarium to take the cure. In the progress of the experiments Dr. Wiley will test each member of the squad many times a day with wonderful instrumants having long names ending in "graph," and the end of it all for the brave dozen is either failure or the "dope college."

BLAME FOR BROWNSVILLE AFFAIR FINALLY PLACED



THE blame for the shooting in Brownsville, Tex., last year, which resulted in the killing of one man, the maiming of another, the dismissal from the army "without honor" of a whole battalion of colored soldiers, and the institution of one of the warmest political fights in recent history, has been definitely placed upon Company B, of the Twenty-fifth infantry, according to the annual report of Brig.-Gen. William Crozier, chief of ordnance of the army.

His conclusions, he says, were reached after a most careful and technical investigation, the object of which was to identify the rifles from which the bullets and cartridge cases, received in evidence, had been fired.

"With this end in view," he continued, "a trial was made at Springfield armory to determine the possibility of ascertaining from a microscopical examination of the gun marks on a fired cartridge case the rifle from which it had been fired. The trial developed the fact that such identification was possible by virtue of the characteristic marking on the various external surfaces of the cartridge case produced by the similar compleman-tary markings in the chamber and on the breech mechanism of the rifle.

"Thereupon all the cartridge cases received in evidence and all of the rifles which had been at Brownsville in the hands of troops at such times as would render it possible for the cartridge cases to have been fired from them were sent to the Springfield armory for examination. As a result, it was found that of the 39 cartridge cases in question 11 had been fired from the same rifle, eight from another rifle, 11 from another rifle and three from a fourth rifle, the remaining six having insufficient gun marks to classify them.

"The markings on the cartridge cases of each group were then compared with the markings produced by all of the above-mentioned rifles, through the medium of ordinary cartridges fired at Springfield in each of the rifles. In this way it was found that the cartridge cases comprising the eight-and-three group had probably also been fired from another of the rifles in the same company."

THREE CABINET MEMBERS LIKELY TO RETIRE SOON

AN important and, in a sense, a surprising change is imminent in the cabinet of President Roosevelt. From time to time in the past few months it has been rumored that both Secretary Metcalf of the navy and Attorney General Bonaparte of the department of justice were likely to retire from administration life. While the rumors have been denied, it is not unlikely that one, and perhaps both, of those officials may leave the cabinet before the president completes his present term.

That, however, is for the future, and the latest information as to a change in the cabinet affects neither Mr. Metcalf nor Mr. Bonaparte. It relates to the retirement of no less a personage that the secretary of state, Elihu Root.

Mr. Root is not a well man. His health is impaired, and he is inclined to feel that he ought not to jeopardize his remaining strength, mental and physical, by the performance of the exacting duties of secretary of state.

It is not likely the change will take place before next spring, as Secretary Root has some matters he desires to bring to the attention of congress during the approaching session, but there is strong ground for the belief that it will take place within a comparatively few months.

A woman is so contrary she could like a man because she didn't.

BUREAU AND ARMY AT OUTS OVER TREATMENT OF UTES

AND now there is another case of the Indian bureau and the army being at outs on the proper treatment of the Indians. Captain Carter P. Johnson, than whom there isn't a better officer in the service, thinks it would be unwise to try to force the Utes to go to work by the same starvation method. The Indian bureau thinks that the withholding of rations is the best plan to make the Utes take up the shovel and the hoe.

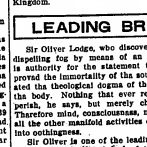
Without any attempt to go into the merits of this present case, it may be said that the history of the country shows that where the army has been left to deal with the Indian in time of peace better results have been attained than when the civilian tried his hand at the dealing. The only Indian is said to be the good Indian. The hungry Indian is always a bad Indian. If Captain Johnson gets a chance to feed the Utes and to treat them as he wants to treat them, it is a pretty safe assumption that he will have them at work within a week.

The army has always been called in to take a hand in Indian troubles when the civilians had done things that made the Indian want to fight. The army has thrashed the red out of him time after time, and yet the Indian likes the soldier 99 per cent. better than he likes the civilian.

The army officials in Washington desire that Captain Johnson be allowed to have his way with the Utes. The president stands with the Indian bureau in the matter. It is to be another case probably of long-distance regulating of a matter that might better be done by the men on the spot.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE ABROAD

MAY LEAD GREAT STRIKE

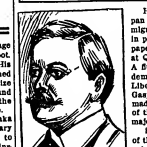


Richard Bell, M. P., general secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants of England, will be the manager of the greatest strike on record, if the railway companies do not consent to concede some of the demands of their employes. And Mr. Bell is not a man to be trifled with, either. He is a strong, determined man of moderate views, but iron purpose, who has consistently refused to wage a demagogic war upon capital, and who has always urged the unions to remember that capital has its rights as well as labor.

When the labor party, intoxicated with its own success at last election, introduced a resolution in the house of commons in favor of socialism, Mr. Bell refused to have anything to do with it, even when urged and threatened by the Amalgamated Railway Servants, from whom he draws the magnificent allowance of a little more than $25 a week. They intimated to him as plainly as possible that unless he supported the resolution they would never elect him again. Still he refused, but strange to say, his independence of mind only raised him the higher in the estimation of those who disagreed with him, and there was never a whisper of deposing him as leader of the amalgamation.

Mr. Bell's father was a quarryman in Wales, but, having narrowly escaped death himself and seen his brother crushed by a fall of stone before his eyes, he gave up his dangerous occupation and became a policeman. The son went to work in overalls and although his mind had been steeped in socialism from his earliest youth and he became general secretary and manager of the union which comprises practically all the railway men in the United Kingdom.

LEADING BRITISH PHYSICIST



Sir Oliver Lodge, who discovered a method of dispelling fog by means of an electric current, is authority for the statement that science has proved the immortality of the soul, but he repudiated the theological dogma of the resurrection of the body. Nothing that ever really existed can perish, he says, but merely changes its form. Therefore mind, consciousness, memory, love and all the other manifold activities can never vanish into nothingness.

Sir Oliver is one of the leading English physicists. He is the principal of the University of Birmingham, and holds honorary degrees from nearly all of the great British universities for his educational works, of which he has published a dozen or more. One of these, "Signalling With Out Wires," was the forerunner of the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy. Others of his books are regarded as standards on scientific subjects, among them "Electricity," "Lightning Conductors and Lightning Guards" and "Life and Matter." It was while experimenting with lightning conductors that he discovered the effect an electric current has upon fog. He noticed that electricity projected particles of dust from a charged body, and determined to test its effect upon the fog immediately disappeared by the precipitation of the dust carrying the moisture.

Although 56 years of age Sir Oliver is an active man and an enthusiastic golfer. He still contributes largely to scientific magazines.

ON DELICATE MISSION

Hon. Rodolpha Lemieux, who has gone to Japan to insist upon the limitation of Japanese immigration to Canada, has had a most rapid rise in political life. In the early 90's he was a newspaper reporter with a seat in the press gallery at Quebec, preferring that to the practice of law. A flaunt and convincing speaker, he was in much demand at political meetings. In 1896, when the Liberals determined to "redeem" the county of Gaspe, he was nominated as a forlorn hope. He made a whirlwind campaign and, to the surprise of the party leaders, was elected by a substantial majority.

Several years later he was appointed professor of the law in Laval university, and has since been selected to represent Canada before the privy council in England. He was advanced to the position of solicitor-general for Canada, and in 1906 to postmaster-general and minister of labor, one of the most important positions in the Canadian cabinet. Now he is selected to carry an ultimatum to Japan. His task is a delicate one, for the British government recognizes no distinction of race or color, and Canada will get no support from that quarter.

HAS FINEST HAREM

Ali Bin Hamood, the youthful sultan of Zanzibar, who is now touring Europe, is said to be on the lookout for possible additions to his harem. The dusky ruler enjoys the distinction of having the finest collection of female beauties in the Orient. Rival harems, such as those of the sultan of Turkey and the shah of Persia, may be more extensive, but Ali is credited with exquisite taste, and he does not leave the duty of selection to his subordinates. Each candidate for admission to his seraglio receives the personal and critical attention of the youthful Sultan. Such care has had its inevitable result. Turkish, Arabian, Circassian and European beauties combine to make the royal harem of Zanzibar the most superb institution of its kind the world over.

The sultan is almost as much a European as an African. He was brought up in England and educated at Harrow and Oxford. Although he is only 22 years old, his great idea in life is to develop his own country and to bring it well to the front. At Harrow School Sultan Ali was immensely popular, and was a great success at cricket.

In 1902, the year of King Edward's coronation, the young sultan first became generally known to London society.

Since then the young sultan has been a familiar figure in all the courts of Europe—and many other places besides the courts. But although he appreciates the good things of the earth, he is a man of large ideas, and his mind is devoted to the industrial development of Zanzibar.

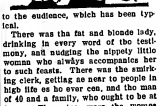
Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

NEW YORK.—New York's population supremacy is moving fast into the suburbs. Manhattan builders are providing new homes for 50,000 persons this year, although their output in recent years has been more than twice that volume.



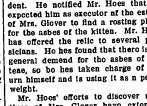
Renting agents in middle-class districts say that there is a tremendous movement of flat dwellers away from Manhattan. A large part of the families are moving to new houses in Brooklyn, Queens and New Jersey on the lines of the underriver tuoocis which are to be opened this year. Brooklyn is getting by far the largest share because transit facilities there now are fairly good.

In all the new rapid transit suburbs flat buildars have begun work on 5,000 houses during the first three-quarters of the year. They will contain homas for over 30,000 families. Manhattan builders have started during the same period less than 200 houses. They will house less than 10,000 families. It is estimated that the Manhattan flats begun during the first nine months of the year will not house more than 35,000 persons.

But the reduced construction more than supplies the population needs of Manhattan. There are more vacant flats in old centers then have been seen in nearly a decade.

Flat owners in many parts of Harlem, on Washington Heights and in the Bronx are offering free rents to attract tenants. At the same time the increased demand in Brooklyn, in spite of its huge current construction of flats, is offering a basis for higher rentals. Faw families who move into Brooklyn flats can get so much as a month's rent free, even when they pay a higher rental than has prevailed in the same neighborhood.

INTERESTING AUDIENCES IN THE DIVORCE COURTS



THE annual divorca mill hes begun to grind, and in three parts of the supreme court daily unhappy couples are being freed of their shackles at a rate that would surprise folks not acquainted with the rapidity with which New York judges can do this sort of business. On a day when the calendar is filled with uncontested cases sometimes 60 or 70 will be acted on.

But it is not the uncontested cases that draw the audiences which makes this sort of court so picturesque. It is the cases in which one side fights the other to avoid the granting of a decree. Such a case has been going on recently, and as the lies interested have been prominent socially the room was crowded at every session. This case had all the interesting surroundings—the beautiful wife accused by her husband, the tales of "high jinks" the handsome co-respondent, the angry mother, the savage husband—all have figured. But the characters themselves were of little interest to the student of human nature compared to the audience, which has been typical.

There was the fat and blonde lady, drinking in every word of the testimony, and nudging the nippety little woman who always accompanies her to such feasts. There was the smirking clerk, getting as near to people in high life as he ever can, and the man of 40 and a family, who ought to be at home. Then, too, were the women of all sorts and kinds, who either had just received their "decree" or were waiting for them and wished to see and hear how another woman came through the ordeal.

And the studeots of sociology—which most of them couldn't spell, let alone define—lingered with bated breath and parted lips on every word they shouldn't hear. The supreme court these days presents a scene which rivals every problem that ever haunted its strained relations across the footlights. Always a picturesque scene, always different, but always the same old picture.

ROOSEVELT REFUSES URN CONTAINING CAT'S ASHES

PUBLIC Administrator William M. Hoes has disposed of the entire legacy left by the late Mrs. Lulu B. Glover, excepting the ashes of a cremated cat, which has failed to get rid of this interesting relic. President Roosevelt, to whom Mrs. Glover, who committed suicide in her apartments on Lexington avenue last December, left her estate, has firmly refused to add the funeral urn which contains the ashes to the feline pet to his stock of curiosities.

Although it is not within the province of the public administrator to deal with the estatas of those who have made wills, Mr. Hoes, at the request of the president, took charge of the property left by Mrs. Glover. He said that he had found the estate was valued at more than $6,000, and that President Roosevelt had notified him that he would give the money to a charitable institution.

But the urn which contains the ashes of one of the many cats of which Mrs. Glover was fond is too much like a white elephant to appeal to the president. He notified Mr. Hoes that he expected him as executor of the estate of Mrs. Glover to find a resting place for the ashes of the kitten. Mr. Hoes has offered the relic to several physicians. He has found that there is no general demand for the ashes of kittens, so he has taken charge of the urn himself and is using it as a paper weight.

Mr. Hoes' efforts to discover relatives of Mrs. Glover have extended over a period of several months, but have been fruitless. At this time there is little more known about the women than was known when she was found in her apartment after she had tried to kill herself. She died in the Harlem hospital, leaving a will which gave her estate to President Roosevelt, many photographs of whom were among her belongings.

NEW SOCIETY TO OFFER BONUS FOR EACH BABY

SOMEBODY with a head for figures, who has been trying by statistics to account for "race suicide," has computed that it costs $10,000 to bring up a child. Many people will consider that an over-estimate when the average child is under consideration, but few will deny that children are expensive luxuries.

Now comes the "North American Parents' Benevolent Association," with a plan whereby children are to be less expensive. On the front of the neat little pink circular which the association sends out is the legend: "Join the North American Parents' Benevolent association and reap its benefits, which are as certain as death."

Mrs. Bernard S. Austrian is president of the new society, which purposes to give to every baby born to a member $500 in gold. Twins and triplets are considered as one child. Mrs. Austrian has no children, but she says she has seen enough of the misery of others to help those who have babies under adverse conditions.

Charles S. George, founder and vice president of the association, says that there is an alarming increase in race suicide statistics.

The initiation fee to the society is five dollars, with one dollar per month dues for the first year. This amount increases with time, but is never expected to go beyond three dollars. There is to be annual assessment of two dollars.

Mr. George says his field of work is a promising one, as he has figured out that there are between 12,000,000 and 15,000,000 married couples in the country.

CHARLES T. BARNEY COMMITS SUICIDE

LATE PRESIDENT OF KNICKERBOCKER TRUST COMPANY KILLS HIMSELF.

Puts Bullet in Body—Dead of New York Financier Attributed to Distress of Mind Over Loss of Fortune and Standing.

New York, Nov. 15.—Charles Tracy Barney, the deposed president of the Knickerbocker Trust company, and until recently a power in the financial world, shot and killed himself Thursday in his home. His loans with the bank, it is said, are amply secured, and when he was forced from its presidency he was, to all intents and purposes, eliminated as a factor in banking circles.

What ill effects his unexpected taking off might have had on the financial situation generally had long since been discounted. In distress of mind over the dissipation of his private fortune and the loss of high standing among business associates, intimate acquaintances find the hidden drift that broke his health and reason.

Friends to Rescue Too Late.

Much of his personal wealth might have been saved. At the time that Barney was dying at his home at East Thirty-eighth street and Park avenue, and surgeons probed for a bullet that, misdirected by a nervous hand, had entered the body below the heart, a handful of friends at a downtown office were concluding an arrangement by which the loose ends of the banker's many enterprises were to be gathered up and balanced by a stock company which, if not wholly successful, would at least rescue from the wreckage sufficient to insure the promoter's future financially. The conference broke up at the announcement that Mr. Barney was dead.

Mr. Barney, who was in his fifty-seventh year, shot himself early in the day, while alone in his chamber at the rear of the second floor of his home. The bullet entered below the heart and lodged under the left shoulder blade. He died about 2:30 o'clock after suffering intensely.

Said It Was an Accident.

From the confusing stories told the coroner it was determined that Mr. Barney entered his room at 11 while alone, and soon after rising. As the bullet entered his body he felt unconscious upon the side of the upper of the revolver startled the family. Dr. George A. Dixon was summoned and he called two other physicians. Mr. Barney was revived and to Dr. Dixon, for 10 years his family physician, said:

"Doctor, this is an accident."

In reporting this to the coroner Dr. Dixon added: "With this I coincide."

Mr. Barney's Career.

Mr. Barney was born in Cleveland, O., in 1851. He was the son of A. H. Barney, president of the United States Express company. After graduating from Williams college in 1870 he married Miss Lilly Whitney, sister of William C. Whitney, and settled down to an active career in the banking business in New York city.

As his success in banking became pronounced he determined to increase the scope of his interests and became connected with the stock exchange firm of Rogers & Gould as a special partner. At the same time he began to make personal investments in New York city property, and his keen judgment, coupled with a general upward trend of the market, made him very successful for many years. As an officer or director he was connected with 34 cooccrns, largely financial institutions. From some of these he was forced to retire when it appeared that some of his business ventures were going against him.

CONFESSES HE WAS A SPY.

Ensign Ulmo, of French Navy, Admits Guilt in Court.

Paris, Nov. 18.—Ensign Ulmo, who was arrested last month at Toulon charged with being a spy, confessed his guilt Thursday when confronted in court with the original of a telegram which he had filed at Toulon, addressed to an agent of a foreign power.

Ulmo told the magistrate that the foreign power in question had refused his offers to sell information on the ground that the price he asked was too high.

J. A. Van Orsdal Is Made Judge.

Washington, Nov. 15.—The vacancy on the bench of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, caused by the death of Judge McComas, was filled Thursday by the appointment of Josiah A. Van Orsdel, assistant attorney general in the department of justice in charge of work before the court of claims. Mr. Van Orsdel was appointed to his present position from Wyoming, February 1, 1904.

Omaha Man Arrested for Fraud.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 15.—H. J. Egan of Omaha, one of the organizers of the Interstate Fiscal Agency company, agents for the Kansas City Life Insurance company, was arrested Thursday night upon a warrant sworn out by a post office inspector charging him with using the mails to defraud. The Fiscal Agency is accused of having collected $300,000 by alleged false representations.

HARRIS SUED FOR $20,000

EX-TREASURER OF PENNSYLVANIA ACCUSED OF BRIBERY.

Sensational Proceedings Begun by Receiver of Defunct Enterprise National Bank of Allegheny.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 14.—The most surprising of the many sensations which have developed since the failure of the Enterprise National bank of Allegheny, in 1905, occurred Wednesday when Thomas Rinaker, receiver of the defunct institution, entered a suit in assumpsit in the United States circuit court against ex-State Treasurer of Pennsylvania Frank G. Harris, claiming $20,000 with interest from October 23, 1903.

The petition alleged that Harris as state treasurer selected the Enterprise National bank as a state depository, making aggregate deposits of state money of $30,890,000. It is alleged the Pennsylvania Development company was formed by T. Lee Clark, cashier of the Enterprise bank, who killed himself the morning the government closed the institution; William H. Andrews, territorial delegate to congress from New Mexico; Arthur Kennedy and Francis J. Torrance, two prominent Pittsburgers.

It is stated that Andrews, Clark, Kennedy and Torrance entered into an agreement whereby the Pennsylvania Development company was enabled to borrow large sums from the Enterprise bank. Harris, it is alleged, was given two blocks of $10,000 each by Clark October 21, 1903, drawn upon the Merchants' National bank of Philadelphia, where the Enterprise bank carried a large account, and it is distinctly charged that Harris used the money realized on these checks for his own personal benefit, knowing that the drafts were fraudulently given him and that he was accepting a bribe to aid in committing the promoters of the Pennsylvania Development company to the funds of the Enterprise bank and the state.

INDORSE VIEWS OF THE POPE.

Trustees of Catholic University of America Condemn "Modernism."

Washington, Nov. 14.—The board of trustees of the Catholic University of America at a meeting here Wednesday placed the seal of disapproval on so-called "modernism" as a serious danger to the church. The board expressed its sentiments on this question by instructing Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, chancellor of the university and president of the board of trustees, to write a letter to the holy father declaring the adhesion of the university and its trustees to the important encyclical on modernism recently made public at Rome.

The board adopted resolutions of regret over the death of the late Archbishop John J. Williams of Boston, who was vice president of the university, and elected Archbishop Ryen of Philadelphia to fill the vacancy.

FRANTZ WON'T HELP INSTALL HASKELL

OKLAHOMA'S OUTGOING GOVERNOR REFUSES TO TAKE PART IN CEREMONY.

Result of Campaign—Still Resents Personal Attack Made by Successor —President to Sign Proclamation with Eagle Quill.

Guthrie, Okla., Nov. 16.—Frank Frantz, governor of Oklahoma territory, will not participate in the ceremonies that will be conducted Saturday morning at the inauguration of Gov.-elect Charles N. Haskell and the Democratic state ticket.

His attitude became known when the executive committee in charge of the affair invited him to appear in the first carriage in the parade at the side of his successor. He refused emphatically. Urged to take some part in a feature of the inauguration, he insisted that he did not wish to be connected in any manner with the ceremonies.

Result of Campaign Charges.

The governor's attitude is the result of charges made during the recent campaign for state officers by Haskell. The territorial executive took particular exception to a speech delivered at Shawnee, in which the Democratic gubernatorial candidate made a personal attack on his rival. The strained situation is all the more noticeable because it is unprecedented.

Discussing the matter, Gov. Frantz said: "I am not inclined to talk for publication. I simply do not want to take any part whatever in the inauguration. I want to be counted out of it."

None of the other outgoing territorial officers was invited to take part in the change from a territorial government to a state, by the committee on arrangements.

President to Use Eagle Quill.

Washington, Nov. 16.—With an eagle quill pen President Roosevelt at ten o'clock Saturday will sign the proclamation that will make Indian Territory and Oklahoma a state of the union. No ceremony will attend the signing, the effect of which will put in motion the machinery at the state government at Guthrie, Okla., which, owing to the difference in time, will turn its first wheel at nine o'clock. The pen will be turned over to Gov. Frantz, who will deliver it to the historical society of the new state.

Last Pay Roll of $22,000 is Found.

Trinidad, Col., Nov. 18.—The $22,000 worth of pay checks for the miners and coke men of the Carbon Coal & Coke company, which were lost a few days ago from the stage that runs between Longdale and Cokedale, were found by boys and returned to the company. Charles Macomber, driver of the stage, who was arrested on suspicion of having stolen the package, has been released.

Must Be Seat for Each Passenger.

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 16.—"A common carrier does not fulfill its legal duty until it provides a seat for each passenger," is the decision rendered Friday by the Georgia court of appeals. The decision was rendered in a suit for damages brought against the Georgia Electric & Railway company of Atlanta by Dr. Oscar Linden, who, it is alleged, was injured by the sudden starting of a car in which he was standing.

Ohian Convicted of Boodling.

Columbus, O., Nov. 16.—William Wilson, former superintendent of the municipal lighting plant, was found guilty by a jury Friday night on the charge of defrauding the city out of $1,170 in connection with William A. Ohian convicted of boodling.

HOW TO KEEP THINGS MOVING

THE PRESIDENT INVITES GOVERNORS AND CONGRESSMEN TO CONFERENCE.

The Meeting will be Held in Washington next May to Discuss Means to Prevent Panics and Resulting Financial Stringency.

Washington, Nov. 18.—President Roosevelt has invited the governors of the states and territories to meet him at the White House May 13, 14 and 15 next to discuss the question of means to conserve the natural resources of the country. Invitations are to be extended to the members of both houses of congress and to the inland waterways commission.

The importance and manner in which the subject is to be considered are indicated in the president's letter to the governors which was made public at the White House yesterday. The letter follows:

"That natural resources of the territory of the United States were at the time of settlement richer, more varied and more available than those of any other equal area on the surface of the earth. The development of the resources has given us for more than a century a rate of increase of population and wealth undreamed of by the men who founded our government and without parallel in history.

"It is obvious that the prosperity which we so enjoy rests directly upon these resources. It is equally obvious that the vigor and success which we desire and foresee for this nation in the future must have this as its ultimate material basis."

"In view of these evident facts it seems to me it is time for the country to take account of its natural resources, and to inquire how long they are likely to last.

"In order to go on discussion I will invite a few recognized authorities to present brief descriptions of actual facts and conditions without argument leaving the conference to deal with each topic as it may elect. The members of the inland waterways commission will be present, in order to share with me the benefit of information and suggestion, and if desired to set forth their provisional plans and conclusions.

MYSTERY

An Aged Farmer is Missing—His House Burns—Evidence of Murder.

Mankato, Minn., Nov. 16.—What seems to have been a cold-blooded murder but may have been a suicide is mystifying the residents of the southern part of the county as well as the officials, and has wrought the people of Sterling township up to a high pitch of excitement. Isaac Wheeler, a highly respected veteran of the Civil war, sixty-five years old, has disappeared under strange circumstances and evidences of crime have been found.

Last week's clock yesterday morning George Ackerman, a neighbor, while repairing a fence on his farm, saw that Wheeler's house was on fire and hastened there. A quick search showed that Wheeler was not about, and Ackerman sent his daughter to arouse the neighbors. Several men responded and soon had the fire extinguished.

They found that the fire originated in Wheeler's bedroom on the second floor and seemingly above the stove that a hole had been burned through the floor, allowing burning brands to fall through. It looked as though the fire had started in the bed, as the bed clothing was badly burned.

Mankato, Nov. 18.—Wheeler's body was found Saturday in Maple river about a mile from his home. He had been killed in the head and several times in the body. There is no clue to the perpetrators.

FIREBUGS SEEK LIVES.

Three Deliberate Attempts to Burn Home Are Made.

Deadwood, S. D., Nov. 16.—Secret enemies, who seem determined to destroy him and his family, finally have driven John Wickham, a prospector, from his home and forced him to move into the city for protection.

Three deliberate attempts to burn up the Wickham home at night while the family were sleeping have been made, and for months the family have been living in constant dread of the fiends. Wickham sleeps on his rifle and keeping a watch dog to guard his home.

Each time the family awakened to find the house in flames over their heads, coal oil having been poured over the porch and oiled rags having been fed to the flames.

Wheat to Russia.

New York.—The shipment of a cargo of 185,000 bushels of grain from gulf ports direct to Odessa was an on prodnce exchange.

This is believed to be the first instance in a number of years in which the United States has shipped wheat to points in southern Russia whence is usually shipped the surplus product of the Russian wheat fields to European points.

The shipment is due to the fact that the Russian government sharply advanced freight rates.

AFTER A "GROCERS' TRUST"

COLORADO ATTORNEY GENERAL ATTACKS A COMBINE.

Seeks Injunction Against Retail Merchants' Association, Other Organizations and Jobbers.

Denver, Col., Nov. 15.—Attorney General William H. Dieon began an action under the common law in the Denver district court Thursday, with a view to breaking up the so-called grocers' trust, operating in Colorado.

The Retail Merchants' association of Colorado and its branches in 63 cities and towns of the state, the Denver Jobbers' association, the Denver Retail Grocers' association and about 20 Jobbers are named as defendants and injunctions are sought to restrain them from arbitrarily fixing retail prices and from refusing to sell supplies to rots? grocers unless they purchase from the jobbers in the alleged trust. The complaint alleges that the prices of foodstuffs have been maintained 20 per cent higher than they would have been if there had been no trust.

Acting upon the advice of their attorneys, James C. Craig, secretary of the Rocky Mountain Commen's associations, and Alfred Richards, secretary of the Denver Coal association, refused Thursday to appear before a notary in the attorney general's office for examination regarding the operations of the alleged coal trust, against which suit has been brought in the district court.

BANK CASHIER A SUICIDE.

J. B. Thomas, of Albany, Mo., Puts Bullet in His Brain.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 16.—J. B. Thomas, cashier of the Bank of Albany, of Albany, Mo., a prominent Democratic politician and former grand master of the Masonic order of Missouri, committed suicide at the Midland hotel in this city Friday, having no message to explain his action.

There is no evidence that the affairs of the Bank of Albany are involved in the tragedy, the surviving officers having asserted emphatically that they know of no reason for the suicide of Cashier Thomas.

OUTBURST ON SUN'S SURFACE.

Immense Flame Shoots Up and Breaks into Fragments.

Oxford, Eng., Nov. 16.—A remarkable outburst on the sun was observed by Prof. Ambau, director of the Radcliffe observatory, at 11:45 Friday morning. An immense flame shot up at the rate of over 10,000 miles a minute until it reached a height of 325,000 miles, 13 times the earth's diameter, and disappeared.

Young Civil Engineer Is a Suicide.

Topeka, Kan., Nov. 16.—Louis H. Kreisl, a young man apparently about 24 years of age and a civil engineer on the Rock Island railroad, shot himself in the head Friday. Letters were found on his body from his father, a wholesale leather dealer at Girard, O. No cause for the suicide is known.

Woman Burglar is Sentenced.

Alaska Republicans for Taft.

Juneau, Alaska, Nov. 16.—The endorsement of Wiliam H. Taft for the presidency, and a virgin demand for home rule were the salient features of the platform reported at Friday session of the Alaska Republican convention.

PERUNA A TONIC OF GREAT USEFULNESS.

HON. R. S. THARIN

Hon. R. S. Tharin, Attorney at Law and counsel for Anti-Trust League, writes from Pennsylvania Ave., N. W., Washington, D. C., as follows:

"Having used Peruna for catarrhal disorders, I am able to testify to its great remedial excellence and do not hesitate to give it my emphatic endorsement and earnest recommendation to all persons afflicted by that disorder. It is also a tonic of great usefulness."

Mr. T. Barnecott, West Aylmer, Ontario, Can., writes: "Last winter I was ill with pneumonia after having la grippe. I took Peruna for two months, when I became quite well. I also induced a young lady, who was ill and run down and confined to the house, to take Peruna, and after taking Peruna for three months she is able to follow her trade of tailoring. I can recommend Peruna for all such who are ill and require a tonic."

Peruna Tablets.

Some people prefer to take tablets, rather than to take medicine in a fluid form. Such people can obtain Peruna tablets, which represent the solid medicinal ingredients of Peruna. Each tablet is equivalent to one average dose of Peruna.

FOUND OUT JUST IN TIME.

Or Finger Bowl Would Have Been Put to Novel Use.

The late William Caseldy, one time editor of the Albany Argus, possessed the traditional Irish wit. On one occasion, a number of years ago, he was a guest at a political banquet in Albany. At that time finger bowls were seldom used, and their correct usage (a pessing find) meant to dip a corner of the napkin in the water and therewith disinfect the inside of finger dips. Most of the men present eyed the innovation, when introduced at dessert, narrowly and uncertainly. One after coother ended by plunging the hand into the crystal dish. But Mr. Robert Prime, a well-known Albany gentlemen, correctly moistened a bit of his napkin and laved his fingers. Mr. Caseldy watched him admiringly, and having as yet touched his own glass. "That's good," he whispered to a neighbor, "there's got to be a hell's done that I should have put my foot in it."—Harper's Weekly.

ITCHING RASH 16 YEARS.

Girl's Rash Spread and Grew Worse Under Specialist's Care—Perfect Cure by Cuticura Remedies.

"When my daughter was a baby she had a breaking out on her ears. The doctor said that she would outgrow it, and it did get somewhat better until she was about three years old, and after that she could get nothing that would drive it away. She was always applying something in the way of salves. It troubled her behind the knees, opposite the elbows, back of the neck and ears, under the chin, and then it got on the face. That was about three years ago. She took treatment with a specialist and seemed to get worse all the time. We were then advised to try the Cuticura Remedies, and now I don't see any breaking out. M. Curley, 11-19 Sixteenth St., Bay City, Mich., May 20, 1906."

"Thanksgiving Proclamation.

Governor John A. Johnson has issued the annual proclamation for Thanksgiving day. It is as follows:

"Upon a day set apart for that purpose in the closing of each year, it is the custom of the people of the nation and state to engage in a special festival of praise and thanks to the Giver of all good.

"Therefore I, John A. Johnson, governor of the state of Minnesota, do hereby designate Thursday, the 28th day of November, as a day of Thanksgiving.

"The year now drawing to a close is replete with evidences of divine goodness. The people of Minnesota have enjoyed material prosperity; farm, forest and mine have yielded abundantly. There have been no visitations of fire, famine and pestilence, and the countless benefits showered upon us during the past twelve months call for our fervent gratitude. The prevalence of health and the fullness of the harvest, the stability of peace and order, the growth of fraternal feeling, the spread of education, and all the countless blessings that brighten the path of life's wayfarer—all these are cause for rejoicing and praise.

"Above and beyond the material wealth that has come to our state, we should reflect with grateful hearts upon the moral uplift that is everywhere apparent. In the great civic awakening—in the regeneration of the public conscience, we have reason for belief that a better day is dawning, that there will be less worship of self, less love of power, less lust of gold, less weakening of faith, and that the return to honesty and honor will lead easily and inevitably to the walk of virtue, the way of happiness, the path of glory.

"Out of financial storm, resultant from the stress of an era of fraud and frenzy, will come the sun, rising from the darkness serene and unstilling, marking the muddy pools along the way.

"With the approach of that new and better order, let us hope and believe will come a more abiding faith in free institutions. Liberty less tinged with license, progress more glorious, and unto him who holds in the hollow of His hand the fate of nations, and yet marks the sparrow's fall, let us lift our hearts commending ourselves, our children, our country to His infinite mercy and care.

"—John A. Johnson, Governor."

Profitable Convention.

Crookston—The fifth annual convention of the Red River Valley Dairymen's association closed in this city recently. This has been by far the biggest and most successful convention yet held by the association. The body was organized with five members, and now numbers hundreds, and the convention just closed was attended by farmers from all over the state. Its success has been due largely to the efforts of Joel P. Winkler, inspector for this district of the state dairy and food department, who will leave the first of the year to accept a position in the United States dairy department.

Mr. Winkler was presented with a solid silver water set, including a large silver pitcher, goblet and salver. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Prof. William Robertson, Crookston; first vice president, C. B. Goodale, Perrlie; second vice president, F. S. Whirry, Crookston; secretary, L. Austin; St. Hilaire; treasurer, C. O. Carlson, Erskine.

Copper is Found.

Hinckley—An almost solid vein of copper ore has been struck in shaft No. 2 in the mine owned by the Great Northern Copper company, four miles east of here near the Kettle river bridge.

Ore taken from this shaft has been steadily improving. It has been assayed every day as the work has progressed, and these assays have showed an average of over fifty per cent of copper to the ton. The last assay shows eighty-six pounds of copper to the ton, and the shaft is four sides and the bottom in the vein.

Officials of the company say they have ordered a new eighty horsepower engine, electrical drills and hoisting apparatus and core machine and other necessary machinery. They already have an engine on the ground, a complete blacksmith shop, drills, etc.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Peter—Stricker, while he was at work in a field, Carl Lemons, an aged farmer, was found in a stupor near his home in Oshawa township.

St. Paul Park—Henry Kendall, the 9-year-old son of Milo Kendall, was run over by the Burlington motor car evening near St. Paul Park. Both feet were amputated at Bethesda hospital.

Adrian—The Hubbard & Palmer elevator here has been purchased by the Adrian Co-operative, Grain Company, an organization which consists wholly of farmers. The new company will take charge about the first of December.

St. Paul—Alfred Johnson, thirty-two years old, 910 East Seventh street, a switchman employed by the Omaha road, was thrown between two cars and cut in two.

St. Paul—Gov. Johnson issued a proclamation setting aside Thursday, Nov. 28, as Thanksgiving Day.

St. Paul—Five persons had a narrow escape from asphyxiation by coal gas at the home of Elias Stotesbury.

Austin—William Miller, who on Nov. 1 attempted to kill his wife and then commit suicide, died at the St Olaf hospital.

Morris—August and Fred Schiley, two farmers of Swift county, were arrested in Morris while in possession of a wagon load of fish.

Bomidji—Dr. Blakeslee, acting county physician, stated that there are four cases of smallpox at a logging camp one mile east of Tenstrike.

Minneapolis—The state starts a suit to test the liability of the railways companies to pay a tax on income other than from operation.

St. Paul—Wrapped in blankets and left in a place little visited, a live baby was found in the rear of the foundry of the American Hoist and Derrick company.

Minneapolis—Michael J. Rose, dead end dumb, 357 East Ninth street, was run down at Ninth and John streets by Assistant Fire Chief J. McNally, and probably fatally injured.

St. Peter—This city's high school building, erected this summer at a cost of $43,000, and which is to be ready for use early in December, will be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies.

Duluth—A most encouraging piece of news developed when it was learned that all the line elevators in North Dakota and Minnesota had been given instructions by the Duluth and Minneapolis managers to buy all the grain that is offered and to pay the highest price for it.

A complete change in style of entertainment will be afforded in the Bijou Minneapolis, Thanksgiving week, when Kellar and Thurston, America's two greatest magicians, now appearing jointly, will be the attraction, and will offer some of the most intricate and perplexing experiments in magic yet attempted.

St. Paul—In the heated rules at the Northern Cooperage Company's warehouse at Concord and Arthur streets, St. Paul, are supposed to be the charred bones of two boys, Robert Dieischneider, 161 East Bernard street, 18 years old, and Arthur Glandorn, lower Dayton's bluff, who were in the warehouse when it took fire.

Faribault—Attorney M. H. Boutelle of the "Dan Patch" Air Line, addressed the meeting of the common council in the interest of the low project, and also presented a proposed franchise which he wished to have passed by the council, allowing the railway to enter the city from the north and to use some of the city's streets.

Duluth—The brewers of the state have decided that for economic reasons they will not lend their support to the establishment of more saloons in Minnesota. This does not mean that they will refuse to sell liquor to new dealers, but that they will not lend financial aid to more saloonkeepers or assist them in any way to start in business.

Mankato—A team and buggy belonging to Jacob Hilgers, a local liveryman, was hired by a young man who represented himself as South St. Paul meat dealer. Robbery was not suspected until two or three days later, when the team was being returned, and Hilgers then procured a warrant and the officers are looking for the man.

East Grand Forks—The Sunday "lid" is to stay on in Grand Forks as long as Mayor Joseph O'Learr is mayor of this city. This is the announcement made by Police Chief Franklin, who saw that the law was rigidly enforced. Chief Franklin says that the growing sentiment for law enforcement in Minnesota has reached East Grand Forks, and saloon men must close on the Sabbath day.

Heron Lake—While Fred Platt was riding home a few nights ago, someone who was concealed in the grass by the roadside shot him. The would-be murderer rose up as Pratt passed and fired a revolver point blank at his head, but the bullet struck the iron bow of the buggy top and was deflected, so that Pratt was only injured. The assailant escaped in the darkness.

St. Paul—A reward of $250 has been offered by Gov. Johnson for the arrest and conviction of the man or men implicated in the dynamiting of a house in Coleraine, Itasca county, on Nov. 2, whereby three Italians lost their lives. The request that such an offer be made was received by the governor from Sheriff W. M. Hoolihan and County Attorney Alfred L. Twing of Itasca county.

Virginia—Virginia's new mayor, Andrew Hawkinson, will put on the "lid" and rivet it down. The issues in the campaign were the "lid" and whether the "poor man's cow" should continue to pasture on the lawns and streets of the city as in the past.

Hinckley—Bankers from five counties and representing twelve banks met here and organized the Clover Leaf Bankers' club of Eastern Minnesota.

St. Paul—The bodies of two victims are taken from the ruins of the North-western Cooperage Company's warehouse.

CIRCUS TOUR TO SAVE NATION.

"Gen." Coxey Plans Crusade in interest of Panacea for Economic Ills.

Boston.—"Gen." Jacob S. Coxey, ex-commander-in-chief of the army of the unemployed, is preparing another tour of the country, the ultimate point of attack being Washington.

His purpose is to educate the people of the United States up to his non-interest bond bill as the cure-all for the financial and economic ills and ailments of the country. This is but a revised version of the measure which he proposed when he visited Washington back in '94, but he is confident he will be treated with more dignity and will be given a more respectful hearing than on that memorable occasion.

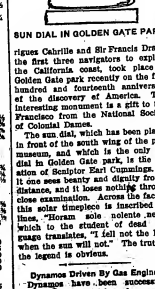
Circus methods will be employed by the Ohioan this time. He will make his crusade in a special train, carrying with him a great white tent and a complete outfit of the sorts of performers, high-priced and capable of entertaining the most select crowd when he is not occupying the limelight's space.

He will make a campaign of enlightenment, the way having been blazed by huge posters, like the "big show," with all the alliterations that the up-to-date circus possesses. His idea is to make "Coxey day" a regular circus day in every community which he visits.

All this, however, is dependent upon the output of his mining properties. "Gen." Coxey owns considerable real estate, below the surface of which he believes there is great wealth. In order to make his tour a success, he figures that he will have to put up at least $1,000 per day, and, while he is well-to-do in worldly goods at present, he cannot sign a check for such an amount just yet.

"I propose," says "Gen." Coxey, "to work out a plan that will do away with all possibility of corporate control of government; that will bring the railroads into public ownership without financial disturbance, that will, in fact, result as a nation in more equitable distribution as we have mastered production."



Added to this he will affiliate himself with no party; he will not ask one cent from the nation, individually or collectively, for which he proposes so many benefits; he will be entirely independent and will pay every dollar of cost of the campaign of education out of his own pocket.

A MEMORIAL TO EXPLORERS.

Sun Dial Erected to Memory of Navigators Who Discovered California.

San Francisco.—The ceremony of the unveiling of a sun dial erected in honor of Fortuno Jiminies, Juan Rodrigues Cahrille and Sir Francis Drake, the first three navigators to explore the California coast, took place in Golden Gate park recently on the four hundred and fourteenth anniversary of the discovery of America. The interesting monument is a gift to San Francisco from the National Society of Colonial Dames.

The dial, which has been placed in front of the south wing of the park museum, and which is the only sun dial in Golden Gate park, is the creation of Sculptor Earl Cummings. In it one sees beauty and dignity from a distance, and it loses nothing through close examination. Across the face of this solar timepiece is inscribed the line, "Horam sole nolente neco," which to the student of dead language translates, "I fell not the hour when the sun will not." The truth of the legend is obvious.

For Celebration of Great Festival

As soon as President Roosevelt announces on just which Thursday Thanksgiving will fall, preparations for this one purely American festival begin. The traditions of this day are not wrapped in mystery, or entangled with myths and legends so as to render the origin almost impossible. On this great day devoted to public worship, and family gatherings, it is well to count up our own individual mercies, and remember how much better off we are than the next fellow. I am often reminded of the young girl, who looked with envy upon a span of fine horses attached to a brougham, in which a girl of about her own age was seated. Just as the carriage stopped the girl who had wished for just such luxury, saw a pair of crutches beside the fair carriage maiden, and she thought, "Give me my own power of walking and she may keep the horses." So it is with all of us, our own cross, whatever it may be, is best.

But I started out to tell about a unique plan for celebrating this great Thanksgiving day. In a family in which there are four school children, each child has been given a date back in the early annals of our country and has been told to provide the amusement and describe a Thanksgiving day of that period. This will insure some historical knowledge and it is certainly a good idea. Space forbids going into all the details of this plan as it is to be worked out, but these are the dates selected: 1621, 1632, 1676 and 1783. Costumes are to be worn to correspond and the whole character of the dinner is to be "colonial." Tin cups will be substituted for the pewter ones of yester in which to serve clam broth, tame turkey will suffice for the wild bird, but there is to be cornbread cake and corn bread. California will supply the grapes, instead of their being "wild," as history says they should be, and they furnished the dessert of the illustrious Pilgrim fathers. Pandowdy will also be preserved, made after a famous old recipe handed down for generations. There are to be four distinct table centers or places, as each child is to furnish one. One boy was seen in the toy department searching for an "inding" doll as I presume good old "Massasoit," is to figure in this really novel way.

MADAMES MERRI.

Smart Little Bolero with Kimono Sleeves

A smart little bolero with kimono sleeves is shown here; it may be made up of the same material as the skirt, in silk, velvet, or lace. The three pieces of pattern consist of the kimono itself, a small piece for fitting in under the sleeve, and a side piece. The diagram shows these pieces placed ready for cutting on material 40 inches wide, folded. In cutting out be very careful to mark all the notches, as they help considerably in fitting the different pieces together with little trouble.

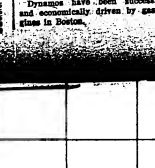
To make up, join first the bust dart, then join in the side piece, then the under part of the sleeve, turn in the edges all round over a strip of muslin about one inch in width, sew hooks on the right front and eyes to correspond under the left, then trim round the edge and up over the shoulders with some pretty galloon, embroidery, or passementerie.

Make up a lining of silk to the same pattern as material, turn in the edges, pin inside bolero, then slip-stitch neatly and securely to the turned-up edge of material. The edge of the lining must be slipped under the hooks so that they stand out for use; the eyes also must be left free. The lower edges of sleeves and bolero are trimmed with silk frill fringe to match the galloon.

Neckwear Novelties.



Charming sets are shown of white lawn, with double frillings on either side of a center band of cambric, plain or studded with small linen buttons. These plastrons are sometimes hemstitched along the edges, or bemmed with colored lawn.

Apart from the trimmings, which often reach to the waist, are the shorter types of neckwear, with collar bands and bibs and little jabots, yoke collars and French bows of plain and embroidered muslins that are such an attractive addition to simple shirts and blouses.

Knitted Purses.

Tiny knitted silk purses, to be tucked into the bodice of the evening robe, are quite a necessity in these pocketless times. They are receiving a great welcome in France, where it is now quite modish to possess a little silken "bourse."

Some are modeled like purses, others like pouches, and others are quite of the old fashion—finger shape, with tassels at each end and mother-of-pearl or gold rings at the ends to keep the money in its place.

Trains on new evening gowns from French dressmakers are pointed rather than round.

Among the standard laces the most fashionable are Irish crochet, valenciennes, cluny and Honiton, and, of course, among the real laces, point de Venice, English and thread princess.

Side frills of net and lace member down the front of the nobby shirt waist.

Brocade with chenille or velvet interwoven in stripes or figures within a shade or two of the material in purple, in mauve and fawn and all gray the wogan of fashion will wear in the afternoon.

A new shade of yellow bronze, which, in rough tweeds and suitings in both plain and striped effects, is being used by first-class tailors for walking costumes.

What about that cold weather that didn't appear?

Our short lived money panic seems to have caught cold and is begining to "cough up."

Captain Richmond P. Hobson, the well known soldier and congressman, predicts war between Japan and the United States within the next three years. He made this statement on his recent visit to Minneapolis. Well let her tare, we can't stop it.

They are begining to call it "Social Democracy" now, which is a pretty sure indication that the socialist party is begining to be big enough to be recognized. That is a nicer name than they gave us, when we were in the reform business, they used to call us "Dem O'Pops."

SEES WARNING IN EAST.

John J. Rhyne, of St. Paul secretary of the Retail Grocers and General Merchants' Association of Minnesota, which includes some sixty local associations having a membership of 5,000 merchants was at the Commercial Club today. Mr. Ryan has been has been active for several years past in the effort his association has been making to oppose the encroachments of the foreign catalog houses. "It has pleased me to find, "he says," that the catalog houses have not cut into the trade in the northwest as they have in some other sections of the country. I have just returned from a visit to the northern part of New York state and I found there that the competition of the Chicago catalog has simply blighted business in the small towns. For instance in the county of Essex I found there wasen't a harnessmaker left. At least I drove with my brother to six different towns to get a harness repaired. I was also informed that there was no shoemaker left. Some of the merchants handled boots and shoes in a small way, but there was not a shoemaker who could cobble left. They had all been driven away by the catalog houses, and other lines of trade in the small towns of from 1,000 to 1,500 have suffered proportionately.

"There had apparently been no organized effort to resist the invasion of the catalog house, and this was the result. It should be a lesson to us here in Minnesota. The catalog houses of Chicago last year did a business of $100,000,000 and the north west contributed a larger share than they should to this tremendous amount of trade drawn away from the local merchants. I should give as a guess that outside of towns of 5,000 population or more that the small order houses are drawing about 25 per cent of the trade.

"I should think this situation should command the attention of the jobber and wholesaler more forcibly than it has. I hope for more united and energetic action in the way of resistance following the awakening of public opinion that has resulted from the attention attracted to the catalog business through the press. Minnesota alone has begun organized and independent in the matter of the Courts."—Minneapolis Journal, October.

TEACHING ELEPHANTS.

The Tall, Fat Legged, Small Eyed King of the Beast Pupils.

On a number of points all elephant trainers agree, says Appleton's Magazine. These are, first, that the tall, fat legged, small eyed elephant of big girth is not only the handsomest, but also the most docile and intelligent of his kind; second, that no elephant is fully aware of his prodigious strength compared with man's and that the reason an elephant obeys his master is not because he is afraid of him, but because he has an affection for him; third, you may beat a lazy elephant to death or kill him by ramming red hot iron down his throat in an effort to prove the "equal of surrender" of him, but the one and only way to train an elephant to perform tricks is through kindness and patience unending; last, but not least, without exception the intelligence of the elephant far exceeds that of any other animal.

Elephant trainers maintain that training an elephant to perform is like teaching a boy circus riding, only less difficult.

A number of the simpler tricks with which an elephant entertains his audience come as natural to him as the lapping of milk comes to a cat—for instance, the blowing of the mouth harmonica.

Twenty feet to the right or to the left of the candidate to be taught is laid down four heavy stakes are driven into the ground, one from each of these runs a block and tackle connecting with each leg and manned by ten or a dozen men. When all is ready the trainer stands in front of the animal, raises his hook and "Down! Down!" he orders. The elephant pays no attention. He attends merely his trunk and swaying his body from side to side. "Down! Down!" shouts the trainer again, and upon a signal some forty men begin to heave and sing, the blocks squeak, the ropes strain, and while the trainer continues shouting his command the pachyderm's legs begin to be drawn from under him. With a wild raising of trumpet, the startled creature begins in struggle, leaning with his trunk from side to side and grasping with his tip against the floor, frantically seeking for a hold to steady himself, but the treacherous robes fouling to draw his legs. The huge beast lights at a forbidding angle, bellowing like a lord of the herd and drowning the "Down! Down!" of the trainer. The great body begins to totter. For an instant it regains balance; then it falls. Crashing with a dull thud on to the bed of straw. Trumpeting like the screech test of a cracked steam calliope, the brute tries vainly to struggle to his feet, until at the end of three or four minutes he begins to realize that nothing so very startling has happened—but that really he ought to feel very tousled indeed.

To teach him to stand on his hind feet and walk uses the block and tackle. To forestall the effects of a fall fall the floor of the training stable is thickly littered with straw. Then the candidate is furnished with chains and the bellyband and block and tackle as he was when learning to rear, the difference being that the chains from under the belly lead between the hind legs instead of between the forelegs, so that the headquarters instead of the forequarters may be raised.

A Wasp Nurse.

A story of how one wasp cared for another that had been injured is told by a Scotchman who, while reading the newspaper, felt bothered by the buzzing of a wasp about his head and knocked it down. It fell through the open window and lay on the sill as if dead.

For a few seconds afterward, to his great surprise, a third wasp flew to the window sill, and, after buzzing around his wounded brother for a few minutes began to feed him all over.

The injured wasp seemed to revive under the treatment, and his friend then dragged him gently to the edge, grasped him around the body and flew away with him. It was said that the stranger, finding a wounded comrade, gave him aid in the way he could and thus have him a way home.—London Answers.

Cup Plates.

"These cup plates assure us that this too-near-old china service is the real thing," said an antiquary. "They stopped making cup plates 100 years ago. Cup plates, you see, were how table manners change. Now, do you know what they were for? They were to hold your dripping cup of tea—that you had poured a part of it into the saucer to drink from—so that the child might be trained. Yes, in the old, everybody drank hot tea from the saucer. Kings and queens, emperors and empresses, would a gurgling from their full saucer with circumspect to the lips. The cup, meanwhile, reposed on the cup plate."—Chicago Tribune.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Grieg as a Beadsboy.

Grieg, the noted composer, was first a pattern schoolboy. In a description of his days at school he wrote: "Knowing that by arriving late I would not be allowed to enter the class until the end of the first lesson, I used, oh wel morings, to stand under a dripping roof until I was soaked to the skin. The master then sent me home to change my clothes, but the distance being long this was equivalent to giving me a dispensation. You may guess that I played the truant pretty often. But when at last I carried it so far as to blend one day my birthday, though it had briefly flashed at all, they became shamefaced and kept it locked. Out the boy I was caught and made an intimate acquaintance with the birch."—St. James' Gazette.

A Rather Odd.

Sims Reeves had been addressed to sing at a small public dinner at which Dickens presided, and, as happened not infrequently, Sims Reeves had something the matter with his throat and was unable to attend. Dickens announced this, and the announcement was received with a general touch of incredulity. This made Dickens very angry, and he rose hastily to the defense of his distinguished friend. "My friend, Sims Reeves," he said quietly, "regrets his inability to fulfill his engagement owing," he added, with caustic severity, "to an unfortunately lamentable and highly facetious cold."

Euphemisms For "Mad."

In order to avoid the blunt word "mad" oddly euphemisms are reported to in the English language. While "bumpy" refers to the supposed influence of the moon, "loose" simply means unhealthy; "listlecile" signifies only weak, and "crazy," meaning dipsomaniac, almost corresponds to the slang "cracked." "A tile off," "not all there," "a bee in his bonnet," are only a few of the efforts slang has made to carry off the sad fact with as cheesy face. "Lunatic asylum," for the old "madhouse," represents not only a great improvement in the institution, but also in the term used to designate it.

A Tidy Well Digger.

The mole is one of the thriftiest of animals. It never burrows at any greater distance from water, and at times of drought when the supply of the useful stomach is diminished or cut off the "little gentleman in the velvet coat" counteracts the scarcity by digging wells until it comes to a depth at which water may be obtained.

Weeds Worth Millions.

New Zealand flax is one of a number of wild weeds that yield their gatherers great wealth. The flax, the strongest known, grows wild in marshes. When it is cultivated it develops and its fibers become better and valuables.

Indian hemp grows wild, and out of it hasheesh, or kief, is made. Kief looks like flakes of chopped straw. It is smoked in a pipe; it is eaten on liver; it is drunk in water; it produces an intense, a delirious happiness, and among societies it takes the place of beer and whisky.

The most valuable weed of all—the one which is the source of the rubber supply—is the Para rubber vine, which grows wild in the forests of Brazil.

WIVES IN KOREA.

A Humorist Who Draws a Moral From Their Silence.

It is said that in Koren after a native woman is wedded she becomes practically speechless, says Newing Newark in the Boston Post. This is in conformity to custom and caste. A Korean wife does not utter marriage becomes absolutely mute, but she does not speak unless necessarily demanded it. And, by the way, if some of us talked less and more than necessarily demanded this world would be full of large chunks of silence. The Korean wife does not chatter like a parrakeet. Not sir is something in which she does not deal. Of course if the house got on fire she would mention it, or if she were to step on a snake she wouldn't try to keep the fact a secret, but she does not talk over the back fence when she is bringing in the wash or converse with her neighbor with her head in the windows. If she did, she would lose her caste and her social rating would slump faster than a copper stock.

Probably many a brutal husband who reads these lines will sigh and say, "Ah, that my wife were a Korean." There has an impression got abroad in this land of the free and the home of the grafter that our women are endless and tiresome talkers. In the eyes of the masses the American wife holds the long distance record as a continuous conversationalist. And upon this impression jests and jokelets are freely built. The eternally talking wife is a prolific source of inspiration for comic weeklies and this, rendered stage. Two comedians come down front and, with their noses touching each other, engage in a rapid fire conversation:

"I got a talking machine down to my house."

"Oh, you got a talking machine down to your house! How much did you pay for it?"

"I didn't pay nothing for it—I married her—married a daughter from the large and select audience.)

Now if the wife's volubility of speech, as her husband a spleen? It's woman to a woman—photograph for you, Fifty. See exactly—so, that you could notice it from the road through the knockers, about the husband's who they so fond about the wagging tongues of their wives are living expressions of the hot air theory. They are the chaps who are nothing to say and devote most of their time to saying it; they are full of gassings, verbosity and prunes. When they open their mouths their tongues run away with them, going one of those firesome expressions of the curious we beside a talking machine, and he will make it sound like a whisper. CENSUS HUMORS.

Returns of Occupations That Are Difficult to Classify.

According to an official of the cellsus bureau at Washington, that department is often puzzled to know how to classify the returns of occupation in cases where the enumerator has given a too literal description of a person's employment. There are two census terms to cover such cases. Occupations not included in the regular list may be entered as "O. T."—meaning "other things," or "N. G." when stands for "not gainful." To choose between the two sometimes suggests amusing complications.

An enumerator in Iowa reported "drunkard" as the occupation of one of his men. The census bureau entered him as "N. G." since the next column asserted this to be his occupation for twelve months in the year.

A New York enumerator who seemed to evince the inclinations of a detective reported several men in his district as "crooks," "pickpockets," and "gamblers." They were entered as "N. G." although their occupations may have been more gainful to them than to their victims.

An Alabama man whose occupation was reported as "odd jobs" goes on the records under "O. T."—"other things."

While some of the occupations which the enumerators give are unusual, they are probably correct. A tramp was described as "loafer, not gainful, unemployed twelve months." An extra thrifty person in one instance was reported as "occupation, miser," and another given on saving as "over-frugal woman." Another husband was described as "idler, does her own occupation as husband and wife work."—Minneapolis Journal.

Danger.

"She will need more attention in years than most girls, no wonder she spoke a plastic animal recumbent under a tree, especially observing its end. She at first refused to go through the picture at all. Her husband calmed her fears to some extent, and then started her. Then the cow slowly commenced to eat the bush near her, as they always do, and this lady nearly shrieked with terror and said:

"Oh, Bob, hurry, hurry. He is getting ready to spring at us."—Brooklyn

His Thanksgiving Dinner

By WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

Copyright 1907, by the Author.

When it comes to eatin'
There's nothin' ever quite so nice
As a good, old-fashioned
Thanksgivin' dinner.
Now there's no use a talkin' to me about
Lobster a la Newberg, toasted on half shells,
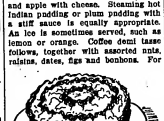
Oysters with scallops and Velancennes sauce,
A squash au maraschino,
Daggo au gratin, and
Diplomatirni puddin' et all Parisianne.
Not for me.
My innards don't hanker after
That kind of fillin'.
What I want is just the good, plain livin'
Of a Thanksgivin' dinner.
Let 'er start off with turkey,
A good, big eighteen pounder or so,
And put 'er right on thn table, close to hand,
With a good, sharp knife for carvin'.
I want 'er stuffed full with a stuffin'
Of bread,
And some oysters,
And a wee bit of sage,
And pepper and salt to the taste.
Now that's the way Mary fixes up a turkey,
And I tell you it's fine.
You don't hanker after much else
When you've disposed of a generous portion
Of that kind of eatin'.
Just then, of course,
You want some other fixin's.
For a Thanksgivin' dinner,

Lat 'ar Start Off with Turkay.

If for nothin' more'n just to say you had 'em.
You want some sweet potatoes,
An' you want 'em browned with gravy.
If you ever got a chance at Mary's sweet potatoes
You'd eat a peck.
They're that good.
And cranberries,
Of course nobody forgets them when turkey's on the bill.
And a hefty chunk of baked squash
Ain't to be sneezed at.
And, as for me,
Though some folks wouldn't care for it,
I'll take an allowance of lye hominy.
And I don't want too small an allowance, either.
And some how Mary always manages
To keep a few ripe tomatoes.
And they're good, I tell you.

You're Feeling Thankful.



Taste better'n they do in summer time,
'Cause they're scarcer, maybe.
Of course there's a lot of other fixin's
That goes with these,
Like jellies,
There's grape, an' currant, an' crab apple,
Ain' a few other kinds.
An' piccalli, an' peach preserves,
ah celery,
And a lot of other things I don't never
Mor'n taste around.
No, sirs'ie' for the big show at the end, though.
For the puddin' that Mary always makes
With nuts, and raisins, and fruits,
And a good, stiff batter beat up and steamed,
And served with a hefty sort of sance.
And then there's pies,
Like pumpkin, and mince, and apple,
And sometimes one or two more.
For a finish, we always have walnuts,
And a glass of cider or two.
Now, I'm tellin' you
When you get outside of that thara kind of a dinner
You're feelin' thankful.
And you've a reason to be.
You've had somethin' to eat
That's worth eatin'.
You ain't had no indigestion breeders.
That's a goin' to keep you
A worryin' with cramps.
No,
You've just had
A good, old-fashioned Thanksgivin' dinner.

THANKSGIVING HOSPITALITY

The waning year grows brown and gray and dull.
And pools sing November bleak and sere;
But from the bounteous garnered harvest store,
With grateful hearts we draw Thanksgiving cheer.
Occasionally, these days, we get a glimpse of real old fashioned hospitality, the kind that creeps right into the marrow of your bones and makes your blood tingle with the true spirit of good fellowship.
Never is this feeling more universally or potently expressed than on Thanksgiving; the occasion for festive home gatherings, reunions, and where strangers are made welcome as one of your own kin.
Lucky and blessed is the woman who can extend hospitality on this day, and lucky, too, is the host who can preside at his own board, among congenial spirits.
It is a very serious mistake to keep your guests at the table for three or four hours, as is frequently the case:

though, to be sure, part of this time is taken up at the conclusion of the dinner, as the men linger over their coffee and cigars, and with the inevitable flow of gossip throughout the meal.
The foundation of the dinner consists of an appetizer, soup with relishes, turkey with vegetables, a salad, a dessert of pies—pumpkin, mince and apple—to which may be added an ice and a steamed pudding if desired, nuts, raisins and coffee.
Three indispensable pies are pumpkin well seasoned with brandy, mince and apple with cheese. Steaming hot Indian pudding or plum pudding with a stiff sauce is equally appropriate. As ice is sometimes served, such as lemon or orange. Coffee demi tasse follows, together with assorted nuts, raisins, dates, figs and bonbons. For a formal dinner Brie cheese and hard toasted crackers accompany the black coffee.

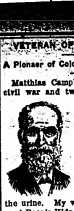
An unique name card is given in this article.
In place of the pumpkin pie, pumpkin fachonettes, pastry shells with pumpkin filling, make a novel substitute. And a chestnut compote is equally pleasing and out of the beaten track. An excellent Thanksgiving cake, which my he served with ice, is made of spices, a cup of strong, black coffee, chopped raisins, nuts and melted marshmallows, covered with icing (vanilla colored with rose water or orange) and halved pecans or pignolia nuts.

KING OF THANKSGIVING.



The King of Thanksgiving!
Behold him in glory!
He tells to beholders
A wonderful story.
He tells how our fathers,
A brave little band,
Bowed down in thanksgiving
On reaching the land;
How from that time to this
We hold one day a year
Apart from its fellows,
A day of good cheer.

Cheap Thanksgiving Dinner.

Yvette Guilbert, the famous French actress prained at a dinner in New York the festival of Thanksgiving. "It is a pleasant festival," she said. "I am sorry that in France we have no such day of gratitude for the years harvest. It is a great day with you. You have novels, tales, anecdotes and poems based upon it.
"An actor this morning told me a Thanksgiving anecdote. He said that a penniless young man entered a cheap restaurant one Thanksgiving day, and said:
"'What do you charge for a plate of turkey?'
"'A quarter, sir,' the waiter answered.
"'Any charge for bread?'
"'No, sir.'
"'Or for gravy?'
"'No.'
"'Then bring me a large plate of bread and gravy.'"

VETERAN OF THREE WARS.

A Pioneer of Colorado and Nabraska.

Matthias Campbell, veteran of the civil war and two Indian wars, and a pioneer of Colorado, now living at 218 East Nebraska Street, Blair, Neb., says: "I had such pains in my back for a long time that I could not turn in bed, and at times there was an almost total stoppage of the urine. My wife and I have both used Doan's Kidney Pills for what doctors diagnosed as advanced kidney troubles, and both of us have been completely cured."
Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

True to His Promise.

A teacher in a tenement district hurried from the school to find the mother of a pupil who had been taken quite ill.
"Can you show me where Mrs. Angelo Scandale lives?" she inquired of a group of emaciated from the sunny south to a dark, sunless alley.
"Yes, teach,' I show you," and a willing, sticky hand dragged her on with such speed as to make her stumble over an Italian dame seated on the sidewalk.
After the teacher's breathless flight toward the clouds, the little hand stopped tugging.
"There where Mees Scandale live," indicated the horizontal arm and finger, "but she downstair sitting on the step," finished the smiling lipe.—Harper's Magazine.

Couldn't Discharge Him.

When the jury had died in for at least the fourth time, with no sign of coming to an agreement in the bribery case, the disgusted judge rose and said: "I discharge this jury."
At this, one sensitive talesman, stung to the quick by his abrupt and ill-sounding decision, obstinately faced the judge.
"You can't discharge me, judge!" he retorted.
"Why not?" asked the astonished judge.
"Because," announced the talesman, pointing to the defendant's lawyer, "I'm being paid by that man there!"—Lippincott's.

Distinction and Difference.

In Dean Ramsay's book of anecdotes there is one which refers to a conversation between a Scotch minister and a sexton. The minister was a stranger to the gravemaker, and discussed with him the doctrines of the neighboring clergy. As one after another was mentioned the sexton wagged his head gloomily, and said: "He's no sound." At last the minister—who was a long-winded and rather empty preacher—mentioned his own name, and inquired: "Mr. — now, isn't he sound?" "Oo, aye," said the sexton, with a twinkle in his eye. "He's a' sound."

No Nature Fake.

The alleged case of a bird making a splint for its broken leg is no more wonderful than this:
A Welsh rabbit, about to be devoured by an enemy, made itself stringy and tied the strings to a plate, fork and toast in a brave effort to keep from being dragged to its doom.
I saw this with my own eyes but refrain from giving my right name for fear of drawing upon me displeasure. —Herald and Presbyter.

"Society of One-Legged Men."

The president of the "Society of One-Legged Men" has arrived in Paris accompanied by another "unfortunate." They had walked, from Marseilles, a distance of nearly 600 miles, and, in spite of their infirmity, they averaged over 11 miles a day.

From the viewpoint of an old bachelor the vocalizing at a wedding is more depressing than the singing at a funeral.

SCHOOL TEACHERS

Also Have Things to Learn.

"For many years I have used coffee and refused to be convinced of its bad effect upon the human system," writes a veteran school teacher.
"Ten years ago I was obliged to give up my much loved work in the public schools after years of continuous labor. I had developed a well defined case of chronic coffee poisoning.
"The troubles were constipation, fluttering of the heart, a thumping in the top of my head and various parts of my body, twitching of my limbs, shaking of my head, and, at times after exertion, a great "gone" feeling with a keener desire for very strong coffee. I was a nervous wreck for years.
"A short time ago friends came to visit us and they brought a package of Postum with them, and urged me to try it. I was prejudiced because some years ago I had drunk a cup of weak, tasteless stuff called Postum which I did not like at all.
"This time, however, my friend made the Postum according to directions on the package, and it won me. Suddenly I found myself improving in a most decided fashion.
"The odor of boiling coffee no longer tempts me. I am so greatly benefited by Postum that if I continue to improve as I am now, I'll begin to think I have found the Fountain of Perpetual Youth. This is no fancy letter but sixteen facts which I am glad to make known."

DOCTORS ORGANIZE UNION.

Toronto Physicians Fix Higher Scale of Prices.

Toronto, Ont.—The doctors of this city west of Yonge street have formed a union under the name "No. 11 Territorial Division of the College of Physicians and Surgeons." The object of the organization are to improve the condition of the profession against quacks, establish minimum fees and amend lodge terms. The lowest fee for medical examination for fraternal societies has been fixed at $2, while the minimum fee for minor operations has been fixed at $10, and that for major operations at $50. For a first visit to a patient $2 hereafter will be charged, and $1 for each subsequent visit, while the fee for night visits will be doubled, being fixed at $3. The charge for an office visit has been made $1, including prescription, while to give anesthetics $5 will be charged.

HOW HE FOUND THE KEY.

Brother's Method Was Simple, but Also Somewhat Costly.

Miss Dresswell had just returned, after spending a week with a country friend. Imagine her consternation when she discovered her previously well-stocked wardrobe empty!
"Gracious, George!" she said to her brother. "Where are all my clothes? And what in the world is that great black patch on the town?"
The face of George exhibited all the well-known signs of conscious rightcousness, and he met her gaze unflinchingly.
"Marie," he replied consolingly, "you wrote to me that if I wanted the key of the winter room I should find it in the pocket of your botero."
"Yes, yes!"
"Well, I don't know a botero from a fichu or a box pleet, so I took all the things to the lawn and burnt them. Then I recovered the key from the ashes."
She froze him with a stare, and he is now thawing slowly on the kitchen stove.—Stray Stories.

His Word Not Good.

John and Jim agreed to settle a difference by fighting it out. It was understood that whoever wanted to quit should cry "nough!" John got down and was hammering him soundly, when Jim cried "nough!" But John paid no attention to his cry and kept on pounding him. Again and again Jim called out "nough! But John paid no heed and kept busy with his fists. A boy standing near asked: "Why don't you let the feller up? He's yelled "nough!"
"But he's such a liar you can't believe him."

Troublesome Growth.

"Does the child ever keep still a minute?" asked the woman as the youngster sprawled noisily over the floor in a dozen squirming positions at once, it seemed to her.
"No," answered his mother. "They are growing when they do that, they say."
"Will you please ask him to stop growing," implored the woman, "just for this week while he is visiting me?"

Where Legislature Meets Every Year.

There are now only six states in the United States whose legislatures meet every year. In the others the legislatures meet only once in two years, and this is true of the great states of Pennsylvania and Illinois. Only the legislatures of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Georgia, South Carolina and Rhode Island meet once a year.

The Sequel.

"Funny thing about Dubley. He said he needed a little whisky because he was run down."
"Well, wasn't he run down?"
"I don't know about that, but I do know he was run in."—The Catholic Standard and Times.

The Southwestern Farmer Has Got the Best of You

He's got you beat on the price of land — he only paid about a quarter as much for his farm as you paid for yours. He's got you beat on crops. He gets more from an acre than you get and he gets better prices for his crop.
He's got you beat on climate. He doesn't have to loaf all winter and be uncomfortable, if not half frozen to boot. He works out doors all the year round and he's making money while you're idle. He's got you beat on live stock. He doesn't have long feeding periods, and he doesn't have to build expensive barns and sheds to protect his stock from the cold. He's got you beat in many other ways. Why let him do it? Why don't you go to the Southwest, get a good farm and start yourself on the road to prosperity?
It will pay you to take a trip down the M., K. & T. Ry.—it will pay you lots of chances to better your condition. You can travel all sorts of routes to better your location. Territory go down the M., K. & T. line through Kansas, Oklahoma and return over their line in Oklahoma. The cost of a round-trip ticket is very little—the results of your trip will be out of all proportion to the cost. Make up your mind to go on the next excursion—two each month—and write me for information.

LIVE STOCK

TO HANG UP HOGS.

A Contrivance Which Will Prove Handy at Hog Killing Time.

Erect a strong post about eight or nine feet high, and attach to it four stationary arms, as shown in cut. One post should extend about two feet above the arms, and at the top an iron pin one and a half inches in diameter should be driven in. The tackle consists of a 2x4-inch white oak scantling with a pulley wheel in one end long enough so that, when placed on the top of the post, the end with the pulley wheel will extend out three or five inches farther than the arms.

The rope is first fastened in the scantling back from the pulley wheel, then through the pulley wheel in the scantling and drops to the ground to lift, with, explains the Prairie Farmer. The back end of the scantling is fastened to the arm below by means of a rope tied just the right length, which can be shifted from one to the other as needed. The hook on the movable pulley is hooped under the gambrel when the hog is elevated to the arm.

BY BREEDING NOT FEEDING.

High Feeding Will Not Produce Fineness of Wool.

According to the data now on hand the fineness of wool is not increased by high feeding. The fineness of wool is told by the diameter of each individual thread of wool on the skin of the sheep. By high feeding it has been found that each of these is lengthened, and that the bulk of the wool is increased, but the diameter of the woolly hair remains the same. Each hair (if we may call it that) comes out of the hair bulb, and the number of these bulbs on a square inch of the skin remains the same under any kind of feeding. But with different breeds there is a difference as to how many of these hair bulbs exist per square inch. The larger the number, the finer the wool, and the fewer the number, the coarser the wool. This is naturally the case. The fine wool sheep who have are the product of selecting and breeding. It is not to be supposed that we can produce fine wool sheep out of coarse wool sheep by any kind of feeding we may adopt. We can do much by feeding, but there is one thing that we cannot do, and that is to increase the fineness of the wool.

STOCK ITEMS.

The early lambs command the top notch in the market.

As winter comes on, look after the comfort of your milk cows. The best time is a little ahead of time.

Let the animal take the stables. It is a great deodoriser and purifier, and the deadly foe of tuberculosis.

It doesn't pay to compel stock to stand in drafts. Lumber is high, but not so expensive as ailing horses and cows.

The dairyman who carries a herd of dry cows or strippers through the winter is not likely to find his occupation remunerative.

If there are any low places about the barn and yards where puddles collect and freeze, fill them up at once and thereby possibly avoid a broken leg and the loss of a favorite animal.

In New England the institution to which are sent the paupers of the towns is known as the "poor farm." Now, don't allow the unprofitable cow to make a poor farm of your property. Spot her and get rid of her at once.

If your Pogs have not done so well as you expected, find out the cause. It may have been in the breeding, but more likely it was because of early mistakes in feeding. A judiciously selected pig, given the proper treatment, seldom disappoints his owner.—Farm Journal.

Keep Colts Growing.

Keep the young colts growing if they are expected to become as large or larger than their parents. A colt once stunted may afterwards be made fat, but it can never be made to grow as large as it otherwise would.

ENCOURAGING FACTS

THOSE CONTEMPLATING CHANGE OF RESIDENCE SHOULD READ THEM.

The other day the writer was in the Office of the Canadian Government at St. Paul, Minnesota. On the windows of the building were signs to the effect that homesteads of 160 acres were given free to actual settlers, and in the windows were displays of wheat, oats, barley, other grains and vegetables, which he was told were grown in Western Canada. This could be readily believed for in no other country on the Continent would it be possible to grow such splendid specimens. The world is now pretty well advised that in the growing of such cereals as have been named and vegetables as well the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have no competitor. For several years past specimens have been exhibited at State and County Fairs throughout the State, and these exhibits are looked upon as one of the chief attractions. They have demonstrated what can be done in the climate of a country possessing a soil that will grow things. But that it was possible to grow vegetables such as were seen there seemed to create some doubt. But it was the case. And apples too. Not of course the splendid fruit grown in countries more congenial to such culture, but they were in evidence. Throughout Indiana, the booster farmers were forced to stop and think. When a similar exhibit was placed before them during the past few weeks, many of them were forced to stop and remark: "That is much ahead of anything we can do. The quality of the grain we have conceded, for has not so-and-so sent us samples grown on his own farm the like of which we had never seen before. But to think of the vegetables—and such vegetables. Why, we thought everything was frozen up there, and these turnips, cabbages, cauliflowers, beets, mangolds, pumpkins, and squashes are away ahead of anything we ever saw grow." That is the story everywhere. Thousands of Western Canada homesteaders formerly United States citizens, are growing just such grain, just such vegetables, which yield them a splendid profit with little outlay on the farms that they have secured from the Government of the Dominion of Canada at the nominal cost of $10 for 160 acres. If adjoining land is wanted it can be secured from the railway companies or from private individuals at moderate prices and reasonable terms. Write for literature and information as per coupon, or a postal card and addressing it to the Canadian Government Agent, whose name appears elsewhere, a copy of "Last Best West" telling you all about it will be sent you free.

Missed His Vocation.

Reginald de Koven, the composer, tells of a grocer and a druggist who attended a Wagner concert. As the program did not please them they began talking on music in general and on Wagner in particular.

"Another example of the fact that every man wants to do something out of his line," said the druggist.

"That's all right," assented the grocer. "Now, I'm a grocer, but I've always wanted to be a banker."

"You'd probably fail," added the druggist. "Look at me. I'm a success as a druggist, yet I've always wanted to write a book. This man Wagner tries his hand at music. Just listen to it. And we all know he builds good parlor cars!"—Success.

DOCTORS IN GRAND JURY NET.

Two Indicted in Iowa for Conspiracy to Force an Independent Physician from a Surgical Case.

Waverly, Ia.—The Bremmer county grand jury, which a few weeks ago indicted fourteen members of the county medical association, alleging violation of the anti-trust law, recently reported additional indictments against Dr. W. A. Robif and Dr. O. L. Chaffee on the general ground of conspiracy. Their alleged offense was of forcing an independent doctor from a surgical case, in which he as well as one of the accused doctors had been employed, after he had refused to sign the union scale.

Split the Difference.

In a dog case at Turnbury, England, one witness testified that the dog whose loss was being sued for was worth $125, while another swore it was worthless. So the judge awarded $62.50 damages as a fair average.

NATURE PROVIDES FOR SICK WOMEN

a more potent remedy in the roots and herbs of the field than was ever produced from drugs.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers few drugs were used in medicines and Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., in her study of roots and herbs and their power over disease discovered and gave to the women of the world a remedy for their peculiar ills more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

is an honest, tried and true remedy of unquestionable therapeutic value. In fact a record of more than thirty years, the best proof of actual cures of those serious ills peculiar to women, entitles Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to the respect and confidence of every fair minded person and every thinking woman.

When women are troubled with irregular or painful functions, weakness, displacements, inversion or inflammation, backache, flatulency, general debility, indigestion or nervous prostration, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

New and Liberal Homestead Regulations in

WESTERN CANADA

New Districts Now Opened for Settlement

IN SCARLET FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Some of the choicest lands in the grain growing belts of Saskatchewan and Alberta have recently been opened for settlement under the homestead regulations. Many of these are still obtainable, and thousands of homesteads are now available. The new regulations make it possible for entry to be made by proxy, the express condition that the settler resides for three years within the vicinity of the land entered for. Many settlers are now taking up land entries in the Peace River district, which is attracting much attention at present. Entry may now be made before the Agent or Sub-Agent at Prince Albert by proxy, for certain conditional by the father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

Many cash homestead entries at Dominion Lands Offices in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have been cancelled for non-fulfilment of conditions, and the lands are again open for entry, subject to a cash payment of $3.00 per acre.

The fee in each case will be $10.00. Churches, schools and stores are convenient. Healthy climate, splendid crops and good laws. Grain growing and stock raising are alike profitable.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

A Craze for the Western Learning Sweeping China

Shooghai, China.—The man with a pigtail, representing China's modern army of 16,000 men, is not the most significant figure in the empire to-day; that place must be accorded to another man in uniform, the student of the western learning. How great and portentous is the change which has come over this hoary kingdom may be seen in this new educational ferment. China is now committed, irrevocably, to the occidental type of education.

After milleniums of proud self-sufficiency, and an appalling ignorance of what the west considers learning, the old system of education, consisting of the memorization of the Confucian classics, has fallen with a crash. Knowledge of these classics was until recently the only road to political places and social power; men devoted their lives to as endeavor to pass these examinations, year after year, until the number of candidates beyond eighty years of age was very large. All this has now become one with China's past; the classical examination system has been abolished and the famous old examination halls have been razed. To-day all who rise in China must pass through the gate of the western learning.

China's Craze for the New Education.

The ancient contempt for foreigners and things foreign gave way in a day, to-day China is almost as zealous for western ways as ever was Japan. There is now existent in this great empire a craze for education more intense than that of any other country in the world. Everybody realizes that the new schools, which have everywhere sprung up like mushrooms, are lunatic asylums manned, with few exceptions, by students, supplemented by a few professors. Nor is the new education carried on only by schools; public readley rooms and lecture halls have been opened, by the government, by private citizens, and by missions, and here the people gather to hear the news of the day—the police news—news-read and explained. The number of newspapers has increased immensely, and in Peking there is one devoted exclusively to courageous cartoons on current events, which has a high education value, even though it at times manifests a somewhat revolutionary tendency. One of the difficulties which the government has had to meet in educational movement is the use which revolutionists make of it; large percentage of the students are revolutionists; the number of anti-dynastic societies is greatly on the increase, as is the revolutionary and reform spirit generally.

One of the standout changes of education and progress is the "Woman's Daily," of Peking, which wields a tremendous influence. It is edited by a woman, herself not a college bred, who has thrown her entire influence on the side of the modern education of women.

As everybody knows, it was the missionaries who first introduced into China what civilization calls education. The missionaries are the translators of the books of western learning into Chinese. They made possible the systematic study of Chinese by foreigners and of English by Chinese. Realizing that education must underlie or accompany Christianity, they have from the first steadily engaged in teaching.

China's Debt to America.

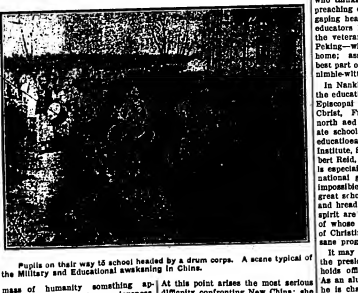
As the reader of these articles may have noticed, I long ago abandoned my intention of describing the work of individual missions, for the simple reason that it would require a full newspaper page a week to do so. Travelers to the east may say that they see an evidences of mission work; my trouble is that I have seen too many. The very magnitude of the missionary enterprise has made it necessary for me merely to summarize and give conclusions. Thus I must now dismiss in a few sentences great educational institutions in China, any one of which is worthy of an article in itself, as illustrative of the immense service rendered to this nation by American altruism, American capital and American brains.

Take, as the most conspicuous example, St. John's college, Shanghai, of the American Protestant Episcopal mission. This is the greatest educational institution in the empire. Its students, numbering between 300 and 300, come from all parts of China, and from families of wealth and official life. St. John's certificates alone among mission colleges, I believe, are accepted by the government for official positions. Its buildings, on the outskirts of Shanghai, and its corps of instructors, headed by Dr. Pott, Dr. Pott, would do honor to any American college. The work of this one institution is alone sufficient answer to the criticism that mission work in China is futile. What I have said of St. John's college may be said, substantially, of Boone college and Boone Medical school, Wuchang, likewise of the Protestant Episcopal mission.

The Soochow university of the Southern Methodist church, Rev. Dr. D. L. Anderson, president, is another institution which would elicit praise of discriminating educational experts, the enthusiastic pride of Americans and admiration of everybody. From the college annual, full of the same sort of thing that goes into such volumes at home, to the splendidly equipped building, it is a thoroughgoing, progressive, effective institution of learning. Elsewhere I have spoken of the imposing North China Union college, built by the American board, at Tung Chow, and the Union college for women, at Peking, and the big Peking university of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, and the Union Medical college, Pekieg. All of these are enterprises great beyond the imagination of the average American, who thinks of missions as a man preaching on the corner to a lot of gaping heathen. There are American educators in China—I need cite only the veteran, Dr. W. A. P. Martin, of Peking—who would be famous men at home; association with them is the best part of the education which these dual-trained Chinese youth receive.

In Nanking, a union is projected of the educational work of the Methodist Episcopal church, north, Disciples of Christ, Friends and Presbyterians, north and south. Already the separate schools make Nanking a great educational center. The international Institute, Shanghai, headed by Dr. Gilbert Reid, has nearly 100 students and is especially ambitious to foster international good fellowship. But it is impossible even to mention scores of great schools up and down the length and breadth of China, whose aim and spirit are Christian, and the majority of whose graduates become members of Christian churches and a leaven of sane progress in the Chinese life.

It may not be generally known that the president of the United States holds office in a missionary society. As an alumnus of Harvard university he is chairman of the advisory committee of the Harvard mission, which is one of the remarkable developments of the missionary spirit in American institutions of higher learning. This Harvard mission aims to unite all Harvard men (of whom there are now no less than 25) who are in foreign mission work anywhere, the sending out of men who will bear the spirit of their university into the foreign field, and, more definitely, the support of E. E. Carter, Harvard '95, Young Men's Christian association secretary for India. Harvard, by the way, maintains a weekly study class in foreign missions.



Yale is even more ambitious, projecting nothing less than "a new Yale in the far east." China has been chosen as the most strategic point. In the center of the progressive, though land-locked, province of Hunan, Yale at Changsha, a beginning has been made in the creation of a Christian university. One man, John Laurence Thruston, '98, a member of the famous "Yale band," died before the work was fully started, but his widow, a college graduate, is on the teaching staff. Rev. Brownell Gage, '97, another member of the "Yale band" is one of the professors, and the others are Dr. Edward Hicks Hume, '97, Rev. Warren B. Seabury, 1900, and Dr. Orville H. Schell, 1900. This enterprise is maintained entirely by Yale men and undergraduates, President Hadley being a member of the council of control.

Princeton university has undertaken to man and maintain a new Young Men's Christian association building, and John Wanamaker having given the money for the building. The famous big football center, "Bob" Galley, is in charge of this.

The University of Pennsylvania has sent one of its football stars, "Joe" McCracken, to China, to found a hospital and medical work, at Canton; other graduates will be associated with him later.

Graduates of several American colleges comprise the teaching force of an enterprise more ambitious than any of the foregoing. "Canton Christian college," which has extensive grounds, and buildings in course of erection, on the outskirts of Canton. It has an endowment of $100,000 with an energetic committee in New York raising more. It teaches western subjects in English, and Chinese subjects in Chinese.

Pupils on their way to school headed by a drum corps. A scene typical of the Military and Educational awakening in China.

mass of humanity something approaching a national consciousness, which perceives that if the nation is to be preserved from extinction it must be by the adoption and adaptation of occidental education. In a word, New China must start on the foundation of the new education.

Therefore, with the passing of the old examination system, there has come into existence a national board of education. Provincial governors are required to foster education and all grades in their territory. An imperial decree has ordered that temples may be taken and used for schools; and this is many places the venerable buildings which for centuries reeched with the chants of the priests now are almost over night, in all parts of the nation. The best informed observers of Chinese affairs can scarcely keep track of the rise and progress of the schools. A Young Men's Christian association secretary may have in frequently receiving invitations to attend opening exercises from schools which he did not know existed. Likewise, one goes in China, he finds the military uniform of the students of the higher schools.

Japan as China's Teacher.

Japan thought to dominate the education of the new China, and certainly she was in just the position to do so. She had recently created for herself the educational appliances needed by a nation trying to encompass western learning in bulk; her books and charts were the best extant. She had a valuable store of experience. Thus the educational museum in Tokio, which has been placed an old temple, contains chiefly Japanese charts, pictures and models to show physical science, biography, botany, zoology, history, geography, manufacture and the manner of life, work and recreation of the west. For it must be remembered that China knew as little of universal history as she knew of electricity; much that an occidental child absorbs unconsciously has to be taught to the adult Chinese student.

China has few foreign teachers in her government schools, but most of those are Japanese. (And the west sorrow should remember that, far from being one race, the Japanese is as truly a "foreigner" in China as is the Britisher or the American). Now, however, the complaint is going up that the Japanese teachers, while cheaper and more accessible than men from the west, are themselves but pupils, with only superficial learning. Thirteen thousand Chinese students have been studying in Tokio during the past year; but in addition to being a hotbed of revolutionary sentiment and of gross immorality, this Chinese student body in Japan is not receiving a thorough education. Only the government examinations last fall, out of nearly 100 men examined, most of whom had been educated in Japan, not one of the latter passed, while the five who stood at the head had been educated in America. It is now the government's intention, high officials have informed me, to send no more students to Japan.

Shall America Educate China?

There is a strong feeling on the part of most Americans here and of many Chinese, that special effort should be put forth to secure those young men for American colleges. There is a well-defined movement, being pushed both in China and in America, looking toward this end. Many persons favor setting aside the $20,000,000 Boxer indemnity for the education of Chinese students. Certainly the native which trains these young men will be the dominant influence in China a few years hence.

As rapidly as possible, China's Japanese teachers are being dispensed with, and the nation is in no mood to pet other foreigners in their places. At this point arises the most serious difficulty confronting New China; she has not men competent to manage the schools. Everybody realizes that the new schools, which have everywhere sprung up like mushrooms, are lunatic asylums manned, with few exceptions, by students, supplemented by a few professors. Nor is the new education carried on only by schools; public readley rooms and lecture halls have been opened, by the government, by private citizens, and by missions, and here the people gather to hear the news of the day—the police news—news-read and explained. The number of newspapers has increased immensely, and in Peking there is one devoted exclusively to courageous cartoons on current events, which has a high education value, even though it at times manifests a somewhat revolutionary tendency. One of the difficulties which the government has had to meet in educational movement is the use which revolutionists make of it; large percentage of the students are revolutionists; the number of anti-dynastic societies is greatly on the increase, as is the revolutionary and reform spirit generally.

One of the standout changes of education and progress is the "Woman's Daily," of Peking, which wields a tremendous influence. It is edited by a woman, herself not a college bred, who has thrown her entire influence on the side of the modern education of women.

ALL ARE INJURED

BY SENDING MONEY TO ENRICH MAIL ORDER HOUSES.

VALUE OF FARM LAND HURT

Prosperity of Town and Prosperity of Country Surrounding It Are Identical Local Merchant Is Friend of Farmer.

A writer in the Fullerton (Neb.) News-Journal gives some pointed reasons why the farming community surrounding every town should go behind the town and push its business interests, urging consideration of what that would mean compared to patronizing mail order houses. If the town grows, land values grow all around it. If business men are compelled to reduce their stocks or go to other fields in order to get business, it is not the merchant but the entire community that suffers. The question is asked, what personal interest is it to the man in the country to enrich the mail order houses? The money spent away from home is taken from the prosperity of the town, and just as directly from the prosperity of the country surrounding it. The writer declares that it is as much to the interest of every man who owns a farm in Nance county to keep Fullerton flourishing and to be loyal to the home city to keep it flourishing. The continued growth of a good town always gives added value to all farm lands adjoining. The local merchant in a town is the friend and neighbor of the farmer. The mail order house is nothing of the kind, and it cares nothing for the individual interests of the farmer except to get the money. The local merchant, besides bearing his share of taxes, is always assisting the churches and charities of his town. He knows that to keep the larger stock and to sell at a smaller margin. To sacrifice your home town is to sacrifice your real estate values and retard the growth of values of both town and farm property. The town that seems prosperous and looks prosperous invites investment not only in the town, but in the locality, so that a growing town is a real attraction, becomes interested and a purchaser, while he would ordinarily leave the dead town and its surrounding territory out of consideration.

Deal in Shoddy Clothing.

Many of the old-timere these days wonder why the clothing they used to wear years ago was so much better than is now accurable unless extremely high prices be paid. A little thought explains the phenomenon, as owing to an age of advancement in every way, and frauds increase along with improved mechanical, scientific methods, etc. In fact the whole system of improvement seems to involve means of lessening cost of production.

Thirty years ago such a thing as shoddy was not known. Woolen cloth purchased a suit of clothes, it was "all wool," but at present it is an exceptional thing to find a garment of the kind the case. The reports of the government show that each year hundreds of pounds of shoddy, woolen rags ground up, are imported into the United States, and a heavy duty paid on the same. The shoddy is then converted into cloth by various processes. It is most often woven around a cotton thread, and the finished is forced into the texture after the cloth is woven. In samples sent out by the mail order houses and stores this shoddy can be picked out. Often it is so loosely woven that if a bit of the cloth be torn off and rubbed between the palms it will fall out in the form of dust. Great quantities of this cheap shoddy are used by the ready to wear clothing who do business through the mails direct with the wearer. A suit of this kind can be purchased from eight to $20—and dear at that. The goods generally look well, but last shape, and in a few weeks show all their defects. Seldom are such goods sold by regular clothing merchants, for the latter have a reputation to maintain, and if they are, they are sold without misrepresentation.

Objected to Outside Supplies.

Master plumbers in Newburgh, N. J., have declared war against the mail order houses which supplies their line, and have refused to handle stock bought of mail order concerns. The matter was first settled in the case of a man who is building on Washington Heights. The contract called for a mail order house to do the work if he would furnish the materials. The plumbers refused to consider this at all.

They said they are content with a reasonable profit on their supplies, but if these are not purchased from them they may as well go out of business, for all the profit they make on the wages of the men alone.

The man had sent to Chicago for his materials, and this he refused to buy, but one after another of the plumbers refused to touch them. One of them explained that the mail order connections were such the local men were not familiar with the work.

The man was in quite a quandary for a time, because to have sent to Chicago to bring a man here, or for fear to bring anyone here from out of town would mean an expense of at least $25, this being the sum demanded for a journeyman plumbing work in Newburgh. Under a state law, master plumbers must have a license.

GOODS MADE IN SWEATSHOPS.

Workers in Large Cities Compelled to Labor for Little Compensation.

The average resident of the small town or of the farming district has no conception of conditions which prevail among the working classes of the large cities. Now and then there is made public a fact in a magazine or newspaper relating to the "sweatshop" system, but few understand what this means. It is simply this: In the garment-making line and kindred industries different articles of goods are made by contract for so-called manufacterers. The sweatshops are found in the closely crowded tenement districts, and generally are small rooms into which the workers are crowded. The different garments are cut out at another place, and are sent to be sewn together to the "sweatshops" which serve as a living place as well as a work shop. Each worker receives so much per dozen for garments sewed, and the price is barely sufficient to pay living expenses. A woman will work all day sewing shirts together, and will receive from 40 to 50 cents for her labor. Those who work on shirts confine themselves to this particular line; the ones who sew trousers, the seme, and the coatmekere and vestmakere are all confined to their particular classes of work. What they receive is so scaled down as to allow the poorest kind of an existence. These shops are controlled by men who dispose of their goods to houses which compete with the regular dealers throughout the country. "Keep the price of production at the lowest," is the motto of these manufacturers, and the result is worn out and miserable women and children whose unfortunate circumstances compel them to this labor in order to buy food.

Benevolent associations and societies for the prevention of crime have repeatedly tried to break up these horrible places, but they manage to exist in every city of any size, particularly in eastern cities. People who live in the country can assist in preventing the operations of these terms which make extraordinary offers in the lies of clothing for men and women in catalogues and circulars sent through the mails. It is such concerns that support the sweatshop system. No reputable clothing dealer handles sweatshop goods. So therefore the spitze output of the factories go to the concerns that do a miscellaneous class of business by mail throughout the country. It is only the very cheapest kinds of clothing that come from the sweatshops. The better classes are manufactured in large and roomy factories, where there is plenty of fresh air and light, and where men and women are paid good wages, and these are the goods sold by the regular trade.

There is danger in wearing clothing made in the sweatshops, as owing to the closely crowded rooms and general squalid conditions, germs of disease are engendered, and it has been known that smallpox, measles, scarlet fever and other infectious diseases have been contracted and spread throughout the country by clothing from these infected places.

Sales to Mail Order Houses.

Proprietors who sell mail order houses directly should, by every lawful means, be induced to discontinue their handling their goods through these marketing their goods through these houses. If desired results can be accomplished in no other way, the proprietors should be given the alternative of choosing between the retail druggists, the logical distributero of their goods, and the demoralizing mail order house. A committee that committee that druggists would receive far better treatment from all the proprietary interests if efforts were made by each druggist individually to discourage the sale of products that are overpriced, those that are not protected in any way against price demoralization, and those that are unwholesome by reason of price.

As for the denials that are promptly made by the proprietors that they are supplying mail order houses, the free use of electrotypes (stereotype cards) and other goods) as are constantly appearing in the catalogues of these houses, electrotypes are not identical with those the proprietoro themselves are constantly using, certainly demands explanation.—Detroit Retail Druggist.

Mail Order House Competition.

The competition of the mail order houses, one of the most threatening perils of the country druggist's particularity, continues to grow. The providing of successful means for combating this unfair competition has at present not exceedingly difficult to attain. Conferences with commercial organizations in cities of business concerning this matter are advisable, providing no legal entanglement would result therefrom.—Detroit Retail Druggist.

Benefit for Boston Strangers.

The Rev. Eugene C. Webster, of Boston, has begun work to establish a "Lillian Church Around the Corner" for the benefit of the theatrical persons and other strangers in Boston, who believes need such an institution.

Tha Up-to-Date.

"I suppose you go to the city at least once a year," said the summer boarder.

"I used tew," replied the old farmer, "but I ain't been thar fer nigh onto three years now. Sense we got rural free delivery I kin git hunksed jist as well by mail, myself."

SPORTING FACTS AND FANCIES

Intercsecee strife has broken out among the prize-fight impresarios of Frisco, and they are slamming verbal dynamite at one another's efforts to gain permits from the supervisors for the holding of contests. The clash has taken an added interest as a result of the announcement of the Pelm Athletic club that it intends to build an arena just outside the city limits, which would be run in opposition to Coffroth's big amphitheater. Thiege are quite uneasy for the bunch of wurring promoters and signs point to the conclusion that it they do not get together and effect some sort of a Hague pence armistice, the public and the city officials will become tired of the bickerings and put the skidoo sign on the whole outfit. Al Young, formerly matchmeker of the Hawthorece club, Frisco, is the leading man of the new Palm club. He eeys that hie organization will erect one of the largest amphitheaters ever known to the world, and thet it will be built se eoon as possible. Politics has coesiderable to do with the granting of the permits for fights inside the city lines, and there are reports current that if the Tyrian-Langdon-Tenney candidates are defeated at the election next month the lid will be taken off the town and thereys into the bay, so that the prize fight people could hold contests as often ee they liked.

Frank Gotch.

Frank Gotch, champion catch-ee-catch-can wrestler, once more announces that he has made up his mind to take up pugilism. Gotch thinke the present crop of heavy-weighte, barring a few exceptions, not ee formidable, end thet a good man could simply wade through the bunch. The heavy-weights of to-day do not compere with Jeffries, Fitzsimmone, Corbett, or Sherkey," says Gotch. "If they did I would steer clear of the game. But who is there to beat? Burns is a little sawed-off, though a good fair one, and I presume quite clever and a strong hitter.

Schreck wee recently beeten by Kaufman, and the other heavies, berring Jack Johneon, ere not worth talking about. I don't know whether Ketchel pretty well fixed and have just signed a ten weeks' wrestling contract, but I take he is much longer than it will without mukieg an effort to get somo of it." Gotch was naked if the wrestling game as it exists at present is without mukieg an effort to get some of it." "There still is some change in it, but no big money, unless I can get a match with George Hackenschmidt. The Kanees City promotere will guarantee a $10,000 purse for the match, which I am willing to split, 60 and 40, and give him the long end, win or lose; or will go with him, winner take all, if he thinks he can beat me."

The annual argument as to who is the best ball player, Wagner or Lejoe shoot subsided for once and all and the palm awarded the "Dutch Pirate." Pond Lejoe in the past few years has the Pittsburg shortstop topped the batting averages in the National league, while he was going some. This year it was a 350 count. In 1903 he led with an average of .355 in 1904 with .349. Two years ago he let Cy Seymour, who reached the phenomenal mark of .377, best him by a first point. Last year he won back the battleg championship with a .339 figure, and this year he has gone at it with a still better mark. For consistency Wagner is the best in the land, while Lajoie has his off years as was shown during the past two seasoee. Wagner's average for the present season is .320. No the past five years in history can show a record thet can compure alongside of this.

Cornell has developed a whirlwind plunger in big Barney O'Rourke, who made his appearance for the first time the other afternoon. The big right tackle came into the limelight in the line and swept the entire left wing of the scrub eleven off its feet by the fierceness and force of his attack. Keeping his feet in the cleverest manner he bored through the scrubs with half of the opposing team on his back and often gained ten or a dozen yards before being downed.

Washington Gossip

Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

WASHINGTON.—The tide of trunks is still coming in and the city is waking up in consequence. The influx of residents has brought a show of white curtains in the windows that is most encouraging. A week ago even the houses that were occupied presented a disheveled appearance, with withered flower boxes, curtainless windows and only clean shades to protect the privacy of home. Now lace, muslin and ribbons predominate and indicate that many have returned.

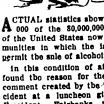
Many streets are gay with carriages, although there is little doing in a social way. The dropping in at five o'clock, with gossip over the tea table, has already begun and every day brings an addition to the circle of those who have come to stay, for, unlike New York and Boston, there are no nearby suburbs to Washington, so that visits over Sunday to the country are almost unknown.

Sunday amusements are almost entirely confined to the country clubs, which are always gay at luncheon time, and the house of Mrs. John R. McLean, who continues her midday meal for 50 or thereabouts, and is only happy when she has large numbers to enjoy her waffles and hot sausages. These the races in the autumn bring representative persons from all over the country to unite at Benning, to witness the steeplechases and hurdle races. The hotels are overflowing with the racing crowd, especially from New York, and dinners and suppers follow fast.

Many members of the official family are back—Mr. Root, Mrs. Metcalf, Mrs. Straus and Mrs. Cortelyou. Mrs. Bonaparte runs over when necessary from her country place near Baltimore to be present at the meetings that Mrs. Roosevelt holds to discuss the arrangements and dates of the winter's official entertainments, as these are made long in advance.

Several more debutantes have been added to the list—Miss Eleanor Ridgely, daughter of the controller of the currency, who appeared first as maid of honor at her sister's wedding recently; Miss Constance Hoyt, daughter of the solicitor general; Miss Jane Sands and Miss Tulee Noble.

BIG CHECK FOR CANNON WHEN CONGRESS CONVENES



ALTHOUGH Speaker Cannon may not realize his ambition to succeed Mr. Roosevelt in the White House, he will soon have an opportunity to appreciate how it feels to walk up to the desk of the paying teller at the end of the month and receive a salary nearly as large as that paid the president. Mr. Roosevelt's compensation for another month will be $4,166.66 a month. In December Mr. Cannon's check "for services" will be only $166.66 less than that of Mr. Roosevelt.

It comes about in this way: For several months it has not been entirely accurate to refer to Mr. Cannon as "speaker" of the house of representatives. As a matter of cold statute law he has been plain Representative Cannon of the Eighteenth Illinois district since March 4, and the house has been without a speaker since that date. Alexander McDowell of Pennsylvania, clerk of the house, will be the acting speaker when the Sixtieth congress meets, and will wield the gavel until a do facto speaker has been chosen.

The salary-increase law enacted last winter raised the compensation of the speaker to $12,000 a year. Since the adjournment of congress Mr. Cannon has been receiving the salary paid every other member of the house—$625 a month. The difference between this and $1,000 a month—the speaker's stipend—has gone into an account which is placed to the credit of the speaker-to-be.

When congress meets there will be approximately $2,000 in this fund. For the month of December Mr. Cannon's compensation will be $1,000, so that, in round figures, with the $2,000 added, he will receive $4,000 as salary at a season when most men's expenditures exceed their incomes.

"DRYS" TO DEMAND PLANK IN OLD PARTY PLATFORMS

ACTUAL statistics show that 33,500, a 500 of the 59,000,000 inhabitants of the United States now live in communities in which the law does not permit the sale of alcoholic beverages.

In this condition of affairs can be found the reason for the widespread comment created by the "cocktail" incident at a luncheon given by Vice President Fairbanks to President Roosevelt in Indianapolis.

The liquor question cut a figure in nearly every state campaign closed by the recent elections. In Kentucky, New Jersey and Delaware it was the decisive issue. It swept from power the democratic party in Kentucky and came near uniting the republicans from intrenched power in New Jersey. And, singularly enough, the highest vote ever polled by the prohibition party in a national election is only a little more than 250,000 out of a total vote of about 13,000,000. That was in 1904.

It is proclaimed to be the intention of the temperance men to demand of the two great parties the insertion of a plank in their respective platforms favoring the enactment of laws that will prevent the shipment of liquor into states that have adopted prohibition. In the coming session of congress a bill carrying this provision will probably be passed.

It is predicted by persons who have watched the trend of affairs here that should a long debate on the proposed bill be brought on, the prohibitionists will take advantage of the opportunity to raise the question of prohibition in the case of liquor sent into the District of Columbia, and that a law to this effect may be adopted.

PATHOS IN DISCHARGE OF THE AGED IN DEPARTMENTS

ONE of the sad features of departmental life here is the number of old people who are dismissed because of inefficiency due to old age. On the other day it was necessary to drop from the government pay roll a clerk who had attained the respectable age of 77 years. As long as possible the secretaries take care of those who have had long government service, shifting them to easier work, but of course, reducing their salaries.

An old woman came out of one of the departments one day not long ago. There was despair printed upon her countenance. "I went in and asked that my husband be restored to his position," she said. "He is only 77 and he is just as efficient as any of these young men around here. Why, think of his experience. He has been 43 years taking care of the interests of the government. Clever—there is no one like him. There's nothing he doesn't know. The government cannot do as well without him. I wish you'd see him. He is as hale and hearty as he ever was. He's a fine man, a fine old man. I tell you, and the government is greatly indebted to him. If he had been an officer of the army or the navy they would have pensioned him fifteen years ago. Many of the army and navy officers he taught their business. And now he is dropped because they say he's too old."

Cases like this wring the hearts of departmental heads. There is, however, nothing to do but to order dismissals when clerks become too old. The work must be done. It is piling up more and more every year and congress is niggardly about making appropriations for clerical help.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

HAS LANDED THIRD TERM

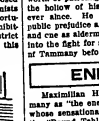
Curtis Guild, Jr., who has been elected for the third time governor of Massachusetts by the phenomenal majority of 108,000, and that, too, in spite of the spread of free trade ideas in his state, is one of the very few men in public life who scorn to yield to public opinion when they think it is misdirected. Guild is a bulldog in some respects. That was shown when he refused to commute the sentence of Charles L. Tucker, who was convicted on circumstantial evidence of murdering Mabel Page. Many of the best people in the state petitioned the governor for clemency, but he couldn't be convinced and Tucker, guilty or innocent, was hanged.

Guild refused to mitigate the punishment of a man who had been in solitary confinement for 24 years, and in that time had educated himself in the languages and sciences. Guild, the man without sentiment, could not see any call for clemency and the man is in solitary imprisonment yet.

Gov. Guild comes of one of the oldest families in the east and his tastes are all aristocratic. He is a member of the Society of Colonial Wars, the Society of Foreign Wars, Spanish War societies and Sons of the American Revolution, and some of the most exclusive clubs of Boston. He is a man of wealth and culture. He is sole owner of the Boston Commercial Bulletin, on which he has served in every capacity, from bill collector to editor, as his father had done before him. He is a warm friend and admirer of President Roosevelt, with whom he has many tastes in common, and went with him on his stump tour of the west in 1900.

Gov. Curtis was born in Boston in 1860 and was graduated from Harvard in 1881, when he was class orator.

AVERTED GREAT STRIKE



David Lloyd-George, M. P., president of the British board of trade, is the hero of the hour in England, having prevented a strike that would have "tied up" all the railroads in Great Britain. Lloyd-George and Richard Bell, also an M. P., head of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, got together and convinced capital and labor that arbitration was better than a fight.

Lloyd-George is 44, the son of a school teacher, educated at a national school in a Welsh town. From the obscurity of a provincial law office Lloyd-George has fought his way, unaided by wealth or social prestige, to the front rank in parliament.

Lloyd-George is short of stature, has sharp features, a fresh-colored complexion, small, stubby, bristling mustache, keen, vigilant eyes and somewhat rebellious dark brown hair brushed back, which makes his forehead look bigger than it is.

Lloyd-George, as president of the board of trade, is not a member of the cabinet, but he is next thing to it. He has charge of all matters relating to industries and navigation, except such as come under the jurisdiction of the admiralty board; he makes regulations for the welfare and protection of emigrants, for the prevention of accidents on railways and in factories; for the protection of women and children; investigates the cause of wrecks and punishes the responsible persons, and has general jurisdiction over all matters relating to trade and commerce. Where the board of trade has not the right to make regulations itself it is the adviser of the government, and its advice is seldom ignored.

MAY SOON LEAD TAMMANY

Thomas F. Foley, Tammany leader of the second district, who was recently elected sheriff, is a typical specimen of the born and bred New Yorker. He has been a politician ever since he was 12 years old, when he went out to support his widowed mother and two younger children. An unerring memory for faces and names and a sunny smile were his whole stock in trade, but he soon proved himself a man to be reckoned with. He made money in the saloon business. He was never slow about dipping into his roll to help a family in distress, and he never lost position, to a Turkish bath rather than other day while undergoing electrical massage treatment at a bath establishment.

The stel maguate's amazing gain in weight since his second marriage has alarmed his actress bride, formerly Mabelle Gilman, and it is at her urgent behest that Corey is undergoing the severe strain. Corey weighs 210 pounds, or 35 pounds more than when he married the former comic opera singer. The head of the steel corpor-the women and children in his district for the rest of his life, and the little ones would talk about it for months. He would address every man he met by his Christian name and ask after his wife. Every woman he would ask about her children. Ha had no children of his own, so he adopted all the children of his district.

He has all the geniality and all the shrewdness of his Irish forefathers. He had a dispute with Paddy Divver, his district leader, over some $30 worth of patronage, and although Paddy was supposed to hold the district in the hollow of his hand, Foley beat him handsomely and has been leader ever since. He has always avoided office-seeking, but he recognized the public prejudice against saloon-keepers in politics, and one term as councilor and one as alderman made up his public career. Ha was forced by his friends to run for sheriff, and with his recent success ha is likely to be leader of Tammany before many years.

ENEMY OF THE KAISER

Maximilian Harden, known throughout Germany as "the enemy of the kaiser," is the editor whose sensational charges of immorality against the "Round Table" crowd in Emperor William's court brought public disgrace to Gen. Count von Moltke.

Harden turns from immorality in court to criticism of the monarch without the slightest hesitation. Every week his paper, Die Zukunft, ridicules the emperor. He has done it for years and his attacks have earned him three terms in a prison fortress.

Harden served the sentences cheerfully. From his cell he continued each time to edit his paper and to present without interruption the idiosyncrasies of his majesty in a dashing sarcastic style peculiarly his own.

But from the emperor down to the smallest official clothed with a little brief authority, none are immune from his merciless onslaughts.

In 20 years Harden, the firebrand, has become a power for the better in most of political and social conditions in Germany. He began as a casual contributor to the local press. His vitriolic articles were often rejected and he determined to start a paper of his own. Die Zukunft (The Future) was the result.

Die Zukunft became a weekly review of radical tendencies. It was a success from the start. Harden's frankness in telling the truth about the kaiser regardless of all the public prosecutions in Germany was a revelation. The sarcastic Berliners laughed immoderately and subscribed by the thousands.

Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

NEW YORK.—That farming in this city is more profitable than it has been in a half century is shown by the rise in the value of agricultural lands on Staten island, where in the last two years there has been a great demand for farms of almost any description. Records in the county clerk's office in Richmond show that in the last year no fewer than 90 farms have changed hands, the majority having gone into the possession of men who practice the "intensive farming" that is taught at the agricultural colleges.

For many years the old-style farming on Staten island was supreme, and as a result the farms gave their owners no profits and many of them were practically abandoned. Several of these were purchased by New Jersey farmers, who saw in the farms' proximity to the city markets an opportunity of bettering their conditions.

These men in a few years brought their lands to a state of high cultivation, installed all the modern agricultural devices and raised crops according to the newest scientific methods. As a result of this expenditure of energy and this application of gray matter their bank accounts grew to such an extent that scores of their former neighbors in New Jersey were attracted to the island.

This influx of New Jersey farmers has already changed the physical appearance of the western and southern parts of the borough. Farms that had not been cultivated for years are now in splendid condition, waste lands and woodland have been turned into good arable fields and the old barnyards that five or six years ago had an appearance of desolation are filled with neatly painted market wagons, well-kept buildings and sleek horses and cattle.

With the farmers there came from New Jersey some of the customs of that state, chief of which is the annual "farmers' picnic." It was held the first time on Staten island recently and more than 1,000 persons participated. There was a parade, led by nearly 300 horsemen, and in the procession were scores of carriages and wagons, magnificently trimmed with flowers and filled with the wives and children of those who are making farming pay almost within sight of the New York city hall.

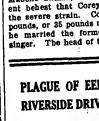
EVELYN THAW NOT TO BE WITNESS AT NEXT TRIAL

EVELYN NESBIT THAW will not be a witness in behalf of her husband at the second trial of Harry Kendall Thaw for the murder of Stanford White. This information comes from a positive source, and it is not denied by Martin W. Littleton, chief counsel for Thaw.

Lawyers who followed the original trial closely now agree that a mistake was made in placing Evelyn Thaw on the stand and they have let tell the story that unveiled around the world and excited interest everywhere.

The more serious reasons advanced for the change of plans on the part of the defense do with the little trip abroad taken by Assistant District Attorney Garvan last summer. Mr. Garvan was District Attorney Jerome's right bower in the Thaw case. Mr. Garvan prepared the case for trial, getting all the facts together and the depositions and all necessary documents to sustain them before the jury.

When the first trial ended Mr. Garvan was in need of rest, and he was told he might have time enough to take a trip to Europe if he wished it.



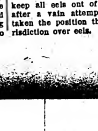
Nothing would have been thought of that if it hadn't happened that Mr. Garvan was forever bobbing up where Harry K. Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit had been together prior to their marriage in the countries of Paris, in Switzerland and other places.

By a still stranger coincidence it happened that Mr. Garvan stopped at the same places that had been frequented by Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit. Not even the picturesque old chateau in Switzerland, described in detail by Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, was overlooked. Mr. Garvan asked questions, many questions.

What Mr. Garvan learned while he was on the other side is not known, but when he returned he had a satchel full of memoranda.

Up to the time of Mr. Garvan's return nothing was heard of any great change in the plans of counsel for the defense.

COREY TAKING TREATMENT TO REDUCE AVOIRDUPOIS



"I WOULD willingly give a year's salary to get rid of 35 pounds of adipose tissue," remarked William Ellis Corey, the $100,000-a-year president of the United States Steel corporation, to a Turkish bath rubber the massage treatment at a bath establishment.

Weight since his second marriage has alarmed his actress bride, formerly Mabelle Gilman, and it is at her urgent behest that Corey is undergoing the severe strain. Corey weighs 210 pounds, or 35 pounds more than when he married the former comic opera singer. The head of the steel corporation is five feet eight inches in height and of stocky build.

Corey appears promptly at five o'clock every Tuesday and Friday afternoon at the bath.

First, he is placed inside a box which is heated from within by 50 electric lights, in color of red, white and blue. His head alone is exposed, and around his neck is placed a huge bath towel to prevent the cold air from entering the box. Twenty minutes in the electric light compartment and Mr. Corey emerges, sweating and puffing like a porpoise.

The millionaire patient is then placed on a leather couch and given an electrical massage.

PLAGUE OF EELS IN THE RIVERSIDE DRIVE SECTION

IN NEW YORK'S exclusive Riverside drive section eels are now costing about $40 apiece, in spite of the scarcity of money. This price, however, is not to get them, but to get rid of them, for this locality is literally suffering from a plague of eels. Insignificant little eight-inch specimens have been coming from the river into the water pipes of many apartments, causing stoppages, while the big fellows, six feet long, unable to get this far, pick out the main inlet for a whole building as a desirable resting place, cutting off the supply.

One of the most exclusive apartments was without a drop of water for two days and nights owing to the eel blockade, bell-boys being pressed into the humiliating service of going around the corner with a tin pail to be filled with water. Plumbers can be seen excavating to get at the blocked water pipes, and Riverside drive presents somewhat the appearance of a mining camp. To go down 20 or 30 feet into the ground and then to begin hunting for Mr. Eel, who, add to the trouble, is generally dead, is an expensive process, which up to date has averaged about $40 an eel. Apartment dwellers living in sight of a whole river full of water, do not relish not being able to get a drop, and when obstructions are cleared away are not enthusiastic over the eel-tainted supply.

The city has been called upon to keep all eels out of the mains, but after a vain attempt to do so has taken the position that it has no jurisdiction over eels.

HAD NO INTENTION OF KILLING BROWN

MRS. BRADLEY SAYS THAT SHE DID NOT EVEN REMEMBER SHOOTING HIM.

Tells Jury of Tragedy—District Attorney Tries to Show She Planned to Break Up Senator's Home—Annie Adams' Letter Read.

Washington, Nov. 21.—That Mrs. Bradley did not come to Washington with any intention of killing former Senator Arthur M. Brown of Utah, and that she did not even remember shooting him, she told the jury in her trial Wednesday.

The statement was not reached until the afternoon session of the court, the first half of the day being given largely to the identification of letters from Mr. Brown to Mrs. Bradley and from her to him, very few of which were read.

The real tragedy formed the subject of the afternoon sitting. At that time Judge Powers brought out the full statement in his examination-in-chief. This consumed only a few minutes of time, and as soon as he concluded District Attorney Baker entered upon his cross-examination.

Trend of Cross-Examination.

He devoted comparatively little attention to the shooting itself, but, going back to the early days of the relationship between Senator Brown and Mrs. Bradley, sought to show, by reading letters and questioning witnesses, that she had deliberately undertaken to break up Senator Brown's home and that she was at enmity with Mrs. Brown as early as 1901. He also brought out the fact that Mrs. Bradley and Mrs. Brown had originally been strong friends and that this friendship even extended beyond the time of the birth of Mrs. Bradley's first child by Brown.

The fact that upon first going to Senator Brown's room at the Raleigh hotel Mrs. Bradley found there a letter from Mrs. Annie Adams, the actress, to the senator, was drawn out at some length by Judge Powers, making it evident that it is his intention to attempt to show that the discovery of this letter supplied the immediate motive for the killing of Mr. Brown. That letter was read at length by Mr. Wells.

The only other letters read during the day were three from Mrs. Bradley to Brown, which were introduced by Mr. Baker as a part of his cross-examination.

Brown Acknowledged the Children.

Washington, Nov. 22—The story of former United States Senator Brown's acknowledgment of the paternity of the two youngest of Mrs. Bradley's children was told Thursday in Judge Stafford's court by other lips than hers.

"I acknowledge Arthur Brown and Martha Montgomery as my children by Annie M. Bradley." Such was Mr. Brown's own method of expressing himself on the subject, and the legend was inscribed on a soiled and blotted piece of writing paper. It was dated February 10, 1905, and was brought to light by Col. Maurice M. Kaighn, an attorney of Salt Lake City, but the present receiver in the United States land office in that city and a friend of Senator Brown of 40 years' standing.

Good Witness for Defendant.

Col. Kaighn was on the witness stand for about an hour during the afternoon session of the Bradley trial and testified that Mrs. Bradley brought the tell-tale slip of paper to his office just after she received it from Mr. Brown with the ink not yet dry, how she left it there in the law room and how she beamed with joy as she held the paper aloft and told Mamie Brown and Mrs. Bradley, all upon the whole made by far the best witness for the little woman that has yet taken the stand, herself excepted.

FIGHT DESPITE GOV. CUMMINS.

Militia Captain May Be Punished for Not Stopping Mill.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 22.—Adjt. Gen. Thrift of the Iowa National guards will order an immediate investigation of the conduct of Capt. Kulp of Davenport, who was ordered late Thursday afternoon by Gov. Cummins to assemble his men of company B, Fifty-fourth regiment, under arms and stop the prize fight scheduled for that night.

It is the impression of Adjt. Gen. Thrift that the fight at Davenport was a prize fight and in clear violation of the law, and that under the strict orders issued by the governor to Capt. Kulp, the militia should have stopped it.

The fight took place but no decision was made, though McFarland easily defeated Herman.

Crushed to Death in Elevator.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 22.—C. McCutcheon, 50 years old, a wealthy merchant of Turtle Creek, near here, while getting out of an elevator in a downtown skyscraper Friday, was caught between the door and shaft and crushed to death.

Gelatine Explosion Kills Two.

Pinole, Cal., Nov. 22.—Two workmen were killed and a building was blown to atoms Thursday by an explosion of 500 pounds of gelatine at the Dupont De Nemour Powder company's plant near this place.

TELLS OF BRIBE ATTEMPT

GOMPERS MAKES SENSATION IN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Declares Purported Agent of Manufacturers Offered Him Money to Betray His Associates.

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 21.—A great sensation was created in the American Federation of Labor Wednesday afternoon by President Gompers in his speech replying to the attacks upon him and other officers of the federation by the Manufacturers' association, when he told of an alleged attempt to bribe him at the Victoria hotel, New York, in which he and a young newspaper man giving he name as Charles Brandenburg.

President Gompers said the man declared that he represented the National Manufacturers' association, and was prepared to offer him immunity from all exposure and make him financially secure for the remainder of his life if he would sign a certain paper and otherwise aid in the "exposure of the other leaders in the American Federation of Labor with a view to virtually destroying the influence of organized labor."

The paper, President Gompers said, was to purport to have been signed when he (Gompers) was ill in 1895. This paper, Mr. Gompers said, he had preserved, and while deathlike stillness prevailed in the convention President Gompers drew forth the original document and read it. Mr. Gompers during his recital of the alleged attempt at bribery called upon different delegates present, who were with him at times at interviews with Brandenburg, to verify his statements. This the delegates, rising in their seats, did.

New York, Nov. 21.—Broegbton Brandenburg, president of the National Institute of Immigration, and a magazine writer, said Wednesday night that he was the man referred to by Samuel Gompers. He emphatically denied that he had attempted to bribe Gompers. He also stated that he had no connection with the National Manufacturers' association, and that his dealings with Gompers were solely in the interests of a publication which he represented. He, himself, he said, had been the intended victim of a plot that failed. He declared that Gompers' statement was an effort to forestall the effect of what he knew was about to be published.

MISSING MAN RETURNS.

Seward Heidelbach of Cincinnati Comes Back from Europe.

Cincinnati, Nov. 21.—Seward Heidelbach, whose disappearance from this city about four months ago caused a sensation in local business circles, returned here Wednesday with his wife. The story leaving this city Heidelbach went to New York and from there to Europe. There he was taken ill and remained for some time in a hospital. On his return to New York his wife and other relatives met him. In the meantime his business affairs by this city were taken into court by the associates and receivers were appointed for the Queen Manufacturing company, and the Ladies' Tailoring company, in both of which he was largely interested.

His return, it is said, will not in any way affect the settlement which he was associated before his disappearance. His affairs are said to be in good shape and after a brief rest he will again engage in business.

TRIBUTE TO HELEN GOULD.

Enlisted Man of the Navy Gives Her Silver Loving Cup.

New York, Nov. 21.—First, because she is a friend of their senior, but also because she gave nearly half a million dollars towards the Waterman's Young Men's Christian Association home in Brooklyn, 5,000 enlisted men of the navy presented Miss Helen Gould with a silver loving cup Wednesday.

The new Young Men's Christian association building and furnishings cost $900,000 and the funds were furnished equally by Miss Gould and Mrs. Russell Sage.

BOROUGH BANK MEN INDICTED.

President, Cashier and Controlling Stockholder in the Toils.

New York, Nov. 22.—The Kings county grand jury, which is investigating the recent management of the suspended Borough bank of Brooklyn, returned indictments Thursday charging larceny and other offenses against Howard Maxwell, who was president of the institution when its doors were closed; Arthur D. Campbell, the deposed cashier, and William Gow, a contractor who holds a controlling share of the bank's stock.

Five Children Perish in Fire.

Titusville, Pa., Nov. 22.—Awakened by the barking of his dog early Thursday, Thomas Ryan, an oil producer living east of here, found his house in flames. With difficulty he saved his wife and their baby. Two sons escaped from the second story, but were badly injured. Five children were burned to death.

Dishonest Banker Sentenced.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 22.—Louis M. Dyke, president of the former Attalla National bank, charged with misappropriation of funds of the national bank, entered a plea of guilty before the federal court at Anniston Friday. The court sentenced Dyke to five years in the Atlanta penitentiary.

TOM JOHNSON SOLD WATERED STOCK?

CLEVELAND MAYOR IS ACCUSED BY WILLIAM M. IVINS IN NEW YORK.

Nassau Company Deal—Reorganization, Before Sale to Brooklyn Rapid Transit, Said to Have Provided $6,250,000 of Water.

New York, Nov. 22.—William M. Ivins, while investigating the affairs of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company for the public service commission Friday, declared that Mayor Tom L. Johnson of Cleveland and his friends, who formerly owned the Nassau Electric Railway company of Brooklyn, had watered its stock to the extent of $6,250,000 and then sold it to the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company.

This was alleged to have taken place in a reorganization of the Nassau company in January, 1899.

Accusation by Ivine.

Questioning Timothy S. Williams, vice president of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company, about the reorganization of the Nassau company, Mr. Ivins said: "On that reorganization I find that they increased their bond issue, which had theretofore been $5,000,000, by an additional $2,540,000. They made an entirely new issue of preferred stock of $6,000,000, of which $3,000,000 was preferred stock, and to the theretofore existing $6,000,000 of common stock they added $3,000,000, making a total of new issues of $17,946,960, and your acquisition was after this increase of capitalization. Can you tell me what these new securities were issued for?"

Williams Tries to Explain.

Mr. Williams said an explanation of the transaction was given in an agreement which Mr. Ivins had, but this was not read. Mr. Williams also contended that the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company, if it had bought $6,000,000 of water, had subsequently squeezed it out.

"I cannot agree with you," said Mr. Ivins. "It looks to me like a plain case of stock watering, and the company had no right to charge that $6,000,000 on its books as the cost and equipment of the road. It was wrong in principle, and if it wasn't then against the law, the law ought to be amended so as to make such a transaction impossible."

LIEUT. CRAWFORD MISSING.

Admiral Dewey's Secretary Thought to Have Drowned Himself.

Washington, Nov. 23.—Lieut. John W. Crawford, secretary of Admiral Dewey, has disappeared and it is believed he has committed suicide. Friday Bennett A. Allen, 1901 Fourth street, a friend of the missing man, received a special delivery letter from Lieut. Crawford in which it was stated that he had determined on suicide and requesting Mr. Allen to break the news to Mrs. Crawford as gently as possible. Late in the evening Lieut. Crawford's hat and coat were found on the deck of a ferry boat plying between Washington and Alexandria. To financial difficulties Lieut. Crawford's resolve to end his life is attributable, his friends say.

Jury in Lewis Trial Disagrees.

St. Louis, Nov. 23.—After having deliberated more than two hours, the jury in the case of Edward G. Lewis, mayor of University City, who was charged with having sent mails fraudulently in organizing and establishing the Peoples United States bank, reported to Judge Garland of the United States district court Friday afternoon its inability to agree upon a verdict and the court dismissed the body. Seven jurors voted to convict Lewis and five stood out for acquittal.

Iowa Village Is Burned.

St. Joseph, Mo., Nov. 22.—The village of Chain, Ia., was wiped out by fire Wednesday night, but one building being saved. Loss, $60,000.

WILLIAM R. HEARST HELD

NEW YORK EDITOR BOUND OVER TO GRAND JURY..

Justice Wyatt Takes Action—Criminal Libel Charge Made by Chanler.

New York, Nov. 22.—Justice Wyatt in the court of special sessions Thursday held W. R. Hearst for the grand jury on a charge of criminal libel preferred by William Astor Chanler. S. S. Carvalho gave bail for Mr. Hearst.

The amount of the bond was fixed at $500, the usual sum required—in misdemeanor cases. Mr. Carvalho is the general manager of Mr. Hearst's New York newspapers.

Both Mr. Hearst and his boudeman were in court when Judge Wyatt handed down his decision. They repaired to the office of District Attorney Jerome while the bail bond was being prepared. It was later approved by Justice Wyatt and Mr. Hersst and his attorneys drove away in the big red automobile which had brought them to the criminal courts building.

The charge against Mr. Hearst grew out of a publication in the New York Evening Journal concerning the case of Raymond Hitchcock, the actor. Mr. Chanler's name was mentioned in connection with the article. Several hearings were had before Justice Wyatt, during which Mr. Chanler positively denied that he had ever been at Hitchcock's house when little girls were there. His counsel claimed that the publication had been made for the purpose of injuring publicly Lieut. Gov. Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, a brother of the complainant against Mr. Hearst.

This was denied by Mr. Hearst's attorneys, who made the counter claim in court that Mr. Chanler's proceedings against Mr. Hearst were a score or more of witnesses have been summoned.

NEW TRIAL FOR KEMP BIGELOW.

Youth Who Sent Dynamite Bombs May Go to Penitentiary.

Denver, Col., Nov. 21.—Another trial for Kemp Y. Bigelow, the Ohio youth who sent dynamite bombs to a number of prominent Denver citizens, was ordered by Judge Bliss in the criminal court yesterday.

A motion made by the district attorney, asking to have set aside the verdict finding the accused guilty of simple assault, which carried with it a jail sentence of six months, was granted, and Bigelow will now be tried on three informations, charging assault to murder and a fourth information charging the operation of a confidence game. These offenses carry a penitentiary sentence of from one to ten years.

WANT FORAKER FOR PRESIDENT.

Committees of Ohio League of Republican Clubs Indorse Him.

Columbus, O., Nov. 21.—United States Senator Joseph Benson Foraker, of Ohio, was indorsed Wednesday for both reelection to the senate and the Republican nomination for president, at a joint meeting of the executive and advisory committees of the Ohio League of Republican clubs.

The action of the joint committees at once brought out a criticism from A. I. Vorys, manager of the Taft presidential canvass, for a popular primary to determine the choice of the Ohio Republicans of a candidate for president.

BOY KILLED BY LYNX

Beset, When Shot Failed to Kill, Attacked Lad and Devoured Head.

Kenmare, N. D., Nov. 23.—Walter, the 16-year-old son of Peter Jobuson of McKinney island, twenty miles east of here, discovered a lynx and procured a 22-rifle and started in pursuit. Upon getting sight of the lynx the lad make every effort to work within close range before shooting and evidently the animal was not alarmed.

The boy missed his aim, whereupon the lynx, becoming upon him with great ferocity. Terrible cries attracted men at a distance, but when they arrived the lynx was rapidly devouring the body.

The presence of several persons caused the beast from devouring his prey, and it was necessary to procure firearms with which to shoot it. The face and head of the boy were almost completely destroyed.

McFadden, the Dakota member of the Wisconsin grain commission, two Superior members and others from the local board of trade and representatives of the Great Northern, Globe, Cargill, A. D. Thompson and other varied elevator interests.

WOMAN KNEW HUMAN NATURE.

Personal Experience Counted in Her Indorsement of New Pastor.

A Philadelphia congregation was called upon not long ago to choose a pastor. The last three ministers had been persons son grata with most of the parishioners; and before selecting another the congregation did some pretty hard thinking. There was one woman of experience whose voice carried particular weight. Preacher after preacher was invited to the pulpit for a trial sermon, and all, in the final analysis, were rejected by the female arbiter. At last there came along a possible incumbent who met with her approval.

"The reason I am sure he will give satisfaction," she said, "is because he has the right kind of a wife for a minister. She allows him to read around all he wants at home and doesn't nass heck. I found out a long while ago—shortly after I was married myself, in fact—that a man who hasn't that privilege at home works off his spleen elsewhere. A minister wants it on his congregation. That wes why we couldn't stand the last preacher. The one will he nit right. We won't hear a peep out of him."

And upon that unique recommendation the congregation really did give the man a call. According to last accounts both he and the congregation were doing well. The wife has not been heard from.

BABY ITCHED TERRIBLY.

Face and Neck Covered with Inflamed Skin—Doctors No Avail—Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

"My baby's face and neck were covered with itching skin similar to eczema, and she suffered terribly for over a year. I took her to a number of doctors, and also different remedies, to no avail. Then Cuticura Remedies were recommended to me by Miss Gould not see it in first days, and tried so many other remedies without any favorable results. At last I tried Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Resolvent Pills, and to my surprise noticed an improvement. After using three cakes of Soap, two Cuticura Ointment, together with the Soap and Pills, I am pleased to say she is entirely cured, a different kind and the picture of health. Mrs. A. C. Brattin, 171 N. Lincoln St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 20 and 30, 1906."

Nut Growing Industry of the South.

"Nut growing is a comparatively new industry in the south Atlantic and Gulf states, but it promises to develop into one of the most important in that section," said J. Z. Reid, a prosperous planter of Florida. "The proper planting of nuts in the pecan, and its popularity is probably due to the developments in the methods of gathering it and cracking it with machinery operated by steam or electric power. This makes possible the marketing of the meats of the nut ready for use.

"The demand is always much greater than the supply and many planters are now turning their attention to the nut raising industry. It is not uncommon for a tree to hear as high as 200 pounds of nuts in one season and most of these will bring from 40 to 50 cents a pound. It does not require much figuring to show that the pecan tree which planted in some sections are paying investments."

Not to Be Fooled.

A city lad spent a part of last summer on a farm owned by his father. It was the boy's first visit to the country, and everything on the farm was delightfully unfamiliar to him.

One afternoon the youngster, who had been prowling about the chicken house, seized the product of one cackling hen and marched excitedly into the house with his prize.

"Let me have a match," said the farmer's wife, "and I'll cook it for your luncheon."

"You must think I'm a greenhorn, auntie!" exclaimed the boy. "I guess the hen cooked it all right. It's warm."—Harper's Weekly.

WHAT WAS IT

The Woman Feared?

What a comfort to find it is not "the awful thing" feared, but only chronic indigestion, which proper food can relieve.

A woman in Ohio says:

"I was troubled for years with indigestion and chronic constipation. At times I would have such a gnawing in my stomach that I actually feared I had cancer. Doctor's bills I paid, but I was satisfied the trouble was not the awful thing I feared but was still bad enough. However, I was relieved of a bad case of dyspepsia by changing from improper food to Grape-Nuts. Since that time my bowels have been as regular as a clock. I had also noticed before I began to eat Grape-Nuts that I was becoming forgetful of where I put little things about the house, which was very annoying.

"But since the digestive organs have become strong from eating Grape-Nuts, my memory is good and my mind as clear as when I was young, and I am thankful." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little booklet, "The Road to Well-ville," in packages. "There's a reason."

High Buttar Scores.

St. Peter—E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, announced the winners of the prizes in the butter and cheese making contests which were conducted by the commissioner during the summer. Six contests were held and the prizes went to those having three highest average scores for the series in each of the classes.

The winner of the first prize in the whole milk butter class is Edwin Ried of Nicollet, who received an average score of 96.29. The prize is a round trip ticket to New York city, with stop-over privileges at Chicago. He will go as Minnesota's champion buttermaker.

The second prize, a round trip ticket to Chicago, goes to A. T. Radtke, of Hamburg, who had an average score of 94.79. The third prize goes to Alex Johnson, of New Ulm, whose score was 94.75. The prize is free tuition at the Minnesota dairy school for the present term, the prize being donated by Prof. T. L. Haecker.

There were 82 buttermakers entered, all but seven of whom made an average score of 90 or better. In addition to these there were 144 contestants who participated only in one to five contests, and hence were ineligible for the prizes.

Sig Robbery.

Minneapolis — Robbers secured $1,500 in cash and checks from the safe of the main office of the Minneapolis General Electric company some time in the night. It was reported by the company officials that the cash amounted in $1,500 and the checks to $3,000.

How the robbers secured entrance to the safe is a mystery, as it was found locked and in good repair when the office force arrived the next morning. The main building of the General Electric company on Fifth street south is open day and night, and it is believed that some one slipped into the office and either opened the safe or found the outer doors open.

The safe is a large one with inner and outer compartments. The outer doors bevo a combination lock which was in place the next morning, but which must have been forced in some manner. The inner safe has no combination, and once the robbers had opened the big doors their work was easy.

Mail Sack Found.

Glyndon—The loss of a mail sack containing nearly 1,000 letters which have been buried in the Buffalo river mork than a year has no doubt been the cause of many disappointments and heartaches during that period, and the recent finding of the sack by a former near here has no doubt brought some degree of relief and hapiness to the sufferers. In many cases, however, the mystery of the long delayed letter has been solved too late.

When robbers on the night of Oct. 8, 1906, took a mail sack containing nearly 1,000 letters from a truck at the railroad station at Moorhead and after taking what they wanted threw the rest into the river, they performed an act which has, no doubt, in a great or less degree, influenced the destinies of many.

Found Dead.

Lakefield—The dead body of George Ufferts, a prominent farmer who lives six miles west of Lakeville, was found in a pasture. A top buggy, badly damaged, was near by and made it evident that the man had met death in a runaway accident. The body was discovered by C. W. Gore and his surveying party. Ufferts left the city the previous evening on his way home. His horses reached his farm at about midnight and the family began inquiry regarding his whereabouts. A widow and a number of children survive.

Want School Exhibit.

Rochester—Supt. George F. Howard, of the Olmsted county schools, has received a letter from Ernesto Nelson, commissioner of education of Argentine, South America, asking him if it would be possible to send a part of the exhibits of the Olmsted Boys' and Girls' clubs to him, to be placed on exhibition in his country. Supt. Howard plans on sending a part of the exhibit to Buenos Ayres, which it will be sent to Argentina. There the exhibits will be placed in a new museum now being built at Buenos Ayres.

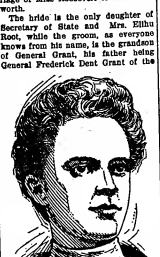
ROOT-GRANT WEDDING

YOUNG SOLDIER WEDS DAUGHTER OF SECRETARY OF STATE.



IS A BRILLIANT AFFAIR

President, Vice President and Other Distinguished Guests Present—Union is Purely a Love Match.

Washington.—In the presence of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, the Vice-President and Mrs. Fairbanks, the justices of the supreme court and their wives, several senators, representatives and other distinguished guests, Miss Edith Root on Wednesday became the wife of Ulysses Simpson Grant 3d, Lieutenant United States Engineer corps.

The wedding was generally recognized at the capital as being the second in social and official importance that has taken place during the Roosevelt administration, there being only less interest in the marriage than in that which centered about the marriage of Miss Roosevelt to Mr. Longworth.

The bride is the only daughter of Secretary of State and Mrs. Elihu Root, while the groom, as everyone knows from his name, is the grandson of General Grant, his father being General Frederick Dent Grant of the army. Lieutenant Grant is a nephew of Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Stryker of Hamilton college, who was for several years the pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church on Rush and Superior streets, Chicago, and who was a college friend of Secretary of State Root, a friendship that is to be made the closer by the marriage of the secretary's son to the college president's daughter.

The tying of the bonds united two young people who are very much in love with each other. There is not a whisper in any quarter that position or name had the least thing in the world to do with the engagement. It has never been say too fond of it. He is studious, and so is his bride and both are of domestic inclinations. It was a good old-fashioned American wedding, with Cupid's heart engaged in every detail.

The list of invitation to the wedding read as follows:

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Root request the pleasure of the company of

at the marriage of their daughter EDITH to

LIEUT. ULYSSES S. GRANT, 3d, United States Corps of Engineers, on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 27th of November, at four o'clock at 1801 Rhode Island avenue, in the City of Washington.

Present at the wedding were Edith Root, Mr. and Mrs. Valda Stryker, daughter of Dr. M. Woolsey Stryker, president of Hamilton college. Mr. Root, who is the oldest son of the secretary of state, will marry Miss Stryker just ten days from the day that saw his sister married to Lieutenant Grant.

The invitations to the wedding were restricted as far as Miss Edith was concerned to the persons who "must be invited." The local invitations were about 100 in number and they included only the closest family friends and those persons who hold anch official positions that they had to of necessity be invited to be present.

The out-of-town invitations greatly outnumbered those given in Washington, but there were comparatively few of the out-of-town guests present. The finally, for that matter, was to have the wedding company as small as possible, and the ceremony marked by standing simplicity.

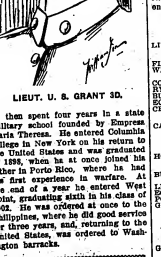
Of the groom's family there were present his father and mother, General and Mrs. Grant; his aunts, Mrs. Nellie Grant Cheever and Mrs. Potter Palmer, and several of his first cousins, one of whom, Mrs. Sharp, daughter of Virginia Grant, has married Frederick Roosevelt Scoven, a cousin of President Roosevelt and a son, although rather indirectly, a connection is established between the Root and the Roosevelt families by the Root-Grant marriage.

The Root residence, where the ceremony took place, belongs to former Vice-President Levi P. Morton, who occupies it for months between the times of the leaving of Count Cassini with his staff for the Russian embassy quarters, and its renting for residence purposes by Secretary Root. While the wedding party was comparatively small, the house is big enough to hold a multitude. It stands on a commanding piece of ground with Scott Circle at one end, Fifteenth street at the other end and a street on each side.

Lieutenant Grant and Miss Root were married in the great south room on the first floor of the residence, a room which is as long as the house itself. It is a huge drawing-room known in the days when the Countess Cassini presided over social affairs in the residence as the "yellow room."

Miss Root had no bridesmaids. Several of Lieutenant Grant's classmates and another army officer friends were present at the wedding, and his cousin, Potter Palmer, jr., of Chicago, was his best man.

After the wedding Lieutenant Grant and his bride left for a short honeymoon trip. They will go to Clinton, N. Y., to be present, December 7, at the wedding of the bride's brother and Miss Stryker. From there Lieutenant Grant will take his bride directly to Boston, where in the suburb of Brookline there is a "pretty little house awaiting their occupancy.



The house was selected by the bride whose mother recently has interested herself in furnishing it completely for housekeeping. Lieutenant Grant was ordered a short time ago from Washington to Boston to report for his engineering duties under the direction of Major Edward Burr, who has charge of the river and harbor work along the Massachusetts coast.

Miss Root made her debut in New York several seasons ago and has twice been a cabinet girl, although she was extremely young when her father was secretary of war in President McKinley's second administration. She is a gifted linguist, an accomplished musician, and is devoted to outdoor sports. She is an expert horse woman, and her smart trap is familiar to all the uptown sections of the capital.

Lieut. Grant has served as military aid at the white house during the Roosevelt term, acting with Capt. Fitzhugh Lee, jr., and Lieut. Philip Sheridan.

He is a nephew of Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago, his mother being Miss Louise Honore, sister of Mrs. Palmer. He is brother of Princess Cantacuzene of Russia, who was Miss Julia Dent Grant, and is a first cousin once removed of the present head of the family born in the white house.

Lieut. Grant's early education was obtained in Europe while his father was minister to Austria-Hungary and he then spent four years in a state military school founded by Empress Maria Theresa. He entered Columbia college in New York on his return to the United States and was graduated in 1903. He is now joined his father in Porto Rico, where he had his first experience in warfare. At West Point, graduating sixth in his class of 1902. He was ordered at once to the Philippines, where he did good service for three years, and, returning to the United States, was ordered to Washington barracks.

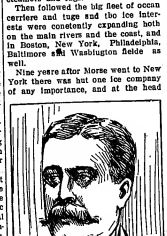
Plagues of Nurse Sufferers.

There is a class of well-defined "phobias," as they are called, which nurse sufferers are plagued, with. "Monophobia," or fear of being alone; "castrophobia," or fear of closed in places; "agoraphobia," or fear of crowds or of broad open spaces; "insanophobia," or fear of not getting to meals, and many others. The one great remedy for all these and similar mental disorders, writes Dr. Samuel McComb in Good Housekeeping, is "auto-suggestion."

MORSE DOWN AND OUT

RISE AND FALL OF PROMINENT WALL STREET FIGURE.



Wrecked by Recent Financial Flurry —Organizer of Gigantic Ice Trust— Which Made Its Stockholders Wealthy.

New York—Charles W. Morse, who a few years ago went from Maine to New York with but little capital and in a short time humiliated the great captains of industry of the metropolis by gaining control of a dozen or more banks, and becoming the owner of acres of real estate and holes of rich stock, not to mention his connection with the ice trust and his great consolidated steamship lines, is completely down and out. He was eliminated from the banking field of New York recently by the clearing house committee, and the great chain of lines of which he was the brain and push are to be reorganized with Morse left out of some of them at least.

Morse was born at Bath, Me., in 1856, the son of a tow-boatman on the Kennebec. After graduating from college, he returned home to find his father's business grown to considerable proportions, Morse, Sr., having a big fleet of up-to-date tugs, and "on the side" were excursion barges, natural ice plants all up and down the river. Young Morse was installed as bookkeeper, but the field was not large enough for him, and he left home for New York, where he began by speculating in ice by the cargo, and in hard pine lumber, in hard pine cargoes, in "pieces" of schooners and steamers and tugs.

Then followed the big fleet of ocean carriers and tugs and the ice interests were constantly expanding both on the main rivers and the coast, and in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington fields as well.

Nine years after Morse went to New York there was but one ice company of any importance, and at the head of that company was Charles W. Morse. Then began the era of several other politicians were interested in the company, and it made vast wealth for its stockholders, a new year clearing more than $1,000,000.

Then Morse took over a banker. The Gotham national bank was his parent institution. In time he dominated a chain of banks all up and down Broadway.

In the banking business he became associated with F. Augustus Heinze, of the Heinze-Morse syndicate, and when the United Copper syndicate hit gold $7,000 a share was said to have Heinze, Morse, who is said to have sold $1,000 worth of United Copper, thus showed the weakness of the syndicate and, it is believed, caused the panic that reverberated around the world and for a time threatened to cause a financial panic.

Then followed the action of the clearing house committee. Morse was promptly eliminated from the following institutions, his resignation being demanded by the committee:

Resigned as vice president and director of National Bank of North America, Garfield National bank, New Amsterdam National bank, and as director Manhattan National bank, Fourteenth Street bank, New York Mortgage & Security company, New Haven Trust company, Mercantile bank, Van Norden Safe Deposit company and Van Norden Trust company.

Immediately came the sections which forced Morse out of two more of his strongholds, the Consolidated Steamship lines and the American Ice company. A plan for the reorganization of the ice company has been made by which Morse will have no further control in its management.

Morse is therefore eliminated, and out. Associates like former associates, the Heinzes and Thomases, blame him for the collapse of their copper corner.

There are reports that J. P. Morgan & Co. and the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad have entered the affairs of the shipping combine with powerful influence. Thus the foreshadowed new possibility of a greater combine, including the Morse companies and the New Haven roads's steamship lines, to control the entire American coastwise shipping trade of the Atlantic and the gulf.

The house was selected by the bride whose mother recently has interested herself in furnishing it completely for housekeeping. Lieutenant Grant was ordered a short time ago from Washington to Boston to report for his engineering duties under the direction of Major Edward Burr, who has charge of the river and harbor work along the Massachusetts coast.

Miss Root made her debut in New York several seasons ago and has twice been a cabinet girl, although she was extremely young when her father was secretary of war in President McKinley's second administration. She is a gifted linguist, an accomplished musician, and is devoted to outdoor sports. She is an expert horse woman, and her smart trap is familiar to all the uptown sections of the capital.

Lieut. Grant has served as military aid at the white house during the Roosevelt term, acting with Capt. Fitzhugh Lee, jr., and Lieut. Philip Sheridan.

He is a nephew of Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago, his mother being Miss Louise Honore, sister of Mrs. Palmer. He is brother of Princess Cantacuzene of Russia, who was Miss Julia Dent Grant, and is a first cousin once removed of the present head of the family born in the white house.

Lieut. Grant's early education was obtained in Europe while his father was minister to Austria-Hungary and he then spent four years in a state military school founded by Empress Maria Theresa. He entered Columbia college in New York on his return to the United States and was graduated in 1903. He is now joined his father in Porto Rico, where he had his first experience in warfare. At West Point, graduating sixth in his class of 1902. He was ordered at once to the Philippines, where he did good service for three years, and, returning to the United States, was ordered to Washington barracks.

Plagues of Nurse Sufferers.

There is a class of well-defined "phobias," as they are called, with which nurse sufferers are plagued. "Monophobia," or fear of being alone; "castrophobia," or fear of closed in places; "agoraphobia," or fear of crowds or of broad open spaces; "insanophobia," or fear of not getting to meals, and many others. The one great remedy for all these and similar mental disorders, writes Dr. Samuel McComb in Good Housekeeping, is "auto-suggestion."

Democratic Committee Meets.

French Lick, Ind., Nov. 23.—At a conference of the members of the Democratic national committee here Friday it was decided to hold a meeting of the committee at Washington December 16, for the purpose of selecting a time and place for the national Democratic convention next year. Chairman Thomas Taggart of the committee presided at the conference. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Louisville, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Atlantic City, Denver and Long Branch, N. J., are applicants for the honor of entertaining the next convention.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. C. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, '06, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Oklahoma star will be placed on the flag next 4th of July.

The county seat removal petition had a hearing before judge Watts on Saturday last, but we have not learned what his decision was, but it don't matter, as will go to supreme court, and no man on this earth could guess how they will decide it.

Hon. F. M. Eddy, who represents this District for three terms in congress has drank his share of "booze" and is now lecturing on temperance. He will certainly be a power in the temperance cause, and may again enter the political arena, and if he does he will keep some of them guessing.

Well Thief River Falls got the automobile away from Red Lake Falls at last, but they owned the machine, and think they own the county seat, They should try Replevin that, so IT could have in 20 more deputies to do political duties, for there is nothing like giving a man a office to square things with fellows who put him there, on the tax payers foot the bill.

The socialist speakers that have been roasting Rockefeller have a graft that is going to beat the Standard Oil company for income. They organize clubs and have each member pay 10 cents per month. Did ever stop to figure up how much income this would make? Those fellows will started to print, but built for we came prepared giving up publishing a dirty newspaper and starting in to lecture for the socialist party, and organizing clubs. A good scheme that; that would beat the Internal revenue, that the Spanish war debt out right;

Second Post Master General Bonaparte is cutting down expenses of the post office department by discontinuing Star Route service, in some instances having them off with only one trip a week. It has looked to us for the past three months as if instead of that department was in progression and a few "swell kids was ruining the business that have not got brains enough to run a buckboard. Clearwater county is the latest Star route country that he has been trying to cut off the mail service to,

Mail routes are to be cut down ten per cent per month in the future, this winter and the lumber jacks are well satisfied to get their old jobs and stay right at them until spring. There is nothing that beats Democratic economy and retrenchment and reform, that agitation to make a living wage and good job and keep it. There is some talk of running Grover Cleveland next year, and there had ought to be some laboring men thrown into the race and contribute the votes necessary to defeat him by getting from two to three per day to help elect him. Such theories are some what new, but they look like the idea of getting a $1.00 a bushel for wheat, 50 cents that might be thought to pass gold and silver, and a full republican ticket of honor.

WANTED—1,000 young men to study telegraphy at the Crookston College. There is a great call for operators and beginning with next spring the railroads will put on nearly twice as many men as they have at the present time. Our last year's graduates are now receiving from $65 to $90 per month. Our teacher in this department is one of the chief operators of the Great Northern Railway. Send for catalog to J. O. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Dog Pets in Hotels.

"The one thing we have more trouble with than anything else," said the manager of one of the large hotels in upper Broadway, "is the fact that women insist on smuggling their pet dogs to their rooms. We have no objections to dogs as dogs. If the animal is not too large or too fierce our guests may take them to their rooms during the day and may even feed them there. But we draw the line at having dogs in the bedrooms at night. Any woman with a pet dog can have the best room set apart for her at night, and we have specially constructed kennels for all kinds of dogs, and we give them the best of care. But owners of pets seem to think that no one save themselves understands a dog or dogs. The women seem to think that if dogs are not the comforting assurance of the owner's presence then dogs will not sleep well. So women try to smuggle their pets to their rooms under their cloaks or by back ways or even bribe one of the porters to take it to their room, believing that we will not hear anything about it.

"As a matter of fact, the first thing the porter does after getting his tip is to tip out, and a couple of hours later the woman is called upon by a clerk who tells her dogs cannot stay in the bedrooms all night."—New York Press.

His Neighbor's Cat.

A Cleveland lawyer lets out a little house in a suburb of that city whose sleep has been disturbed nightly by the howling of his two back fences by his neighbor's cat. At last, to despair, he consulted his lawyer,

"Throw the cat every night in our fence," explained the unhappy man, "and he yowls and yowls and yowls. I don't want to have any trouble with this neighbor, but the thing has gone far enough, and I want you to suggest a remedy."

The lawyer looked solemn and said but a word:

"I can't well withhold my rights if I shoot the cat, am I not?" asked the sufferer.

"I could hardly say that," replied the legal light. "The cat does not belong to you, as I understand it."

"No."

"And the fence does?"

"Yes."

"Then," concluded the lawyer, "I think it safe to say that you have a perfect right to tear down the fence."—Lippincott's.

One Kind of Fared.

Authorities who have in charge some of England's ancient treasures try to discourage the habit of carving initials on these relics. A fine of $10 was recently imposed on a man who had chipped his name in letters six inches high on one of the stones in the "Druids' Circle" near Keswick. Close to the giant stone globe at Swinside a printed sign is provided for the facilitation recognition of the names of all who are subjected to this self advertisement. Oh popular Alpha Omicron it is customary for fairies to be left on plots to compiled wine bottles.—Chicago News.

A Story by Nash.

Ogden Nash was not entirely a humorist, as is proved by the following story. One time when a printer by the name of Jones undertook to borrow a dollar from little known, and the Duchess of Marlborough once turned him with the information that he was a descendant of the Jones family. "I seldom mention my father to strangers," explained Nash, "but I have to now to be ashamed of him, for he appears to be ashamed of me."—Exchange.

Brevity.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

"Gracious powers," whispered the tenderfoot, excitedly clutching the sleeve of the man next him. "did you notice that?"

CHICKEN HEARTED MEN.

Every One of Group Dreaded to Hear of Some Injury.

"I could hear the bone in his wrist snap," said a man who was describing an accident to a group of men.

"Oh, cut it out, for heaven's sake!" called out one of the group. He was a big fellow, but he was as white as a sheet.

The speaker laughed heartily. "I didn't know you were so chicken hearted sir," he said.

The big man began to explain. "I'm not what you would call a timid sort of person, but the mention of any injury to the wrist always nurses me faint. I can stand seeing blood flow or hear thrilling tales of broken limbs and smashed heads, but I can't stand any wrist stories. I don't know the reason. It seems to be merely a matter of temperament."

A quiet little man came to the rescue. "I have just what you mean," he said. "You're not the only one who has a peculiar aversion to a certain sort of injury. Now, my particular aversion is on account of trouble with the eyes. Immediately I begin to blink and wink and my eyes smart until I can't stand it. I'd rather hear an account of a brutal murder than any description of an eye disease."

The man who had jeered at the big man had been thinking. "I have one of those aversions, too, now I come to think of it," he said. "It is accounts of paralytic shocks, to which I particularly object. I feel myself growing numb all over when I hear such tales, and I always make an excuse to get away as soon as possible."

His remark was a signal for a universal confession. One acknowledged that the sight of blood gave him a sensation of extreme nausea; another said that reading or hearing of a fracture affected him "in a queer feeling at his stomach," and another said he shivered so his teeth chattered every time he heard an account of an operation for appendicitis.

The big man was triumphant. "Well, I'm not such a big baby after all," he said.—New York Tribune.

The Truth Anyway.

A teacher in a tenement district horried from the school to find the mother of a pupil who had been taken quite ill.

"Can you show me where Mrs. Angelo Scandale lives?" she inquired of a cherub transplanted from the sunny south to a dark, sunless alley.

"Yes, teech' I show you," and a willing, sticky hand dragged her on with such speed as to make the slum she over an Italian dame seated on the threshold.

After the teacher's breathless flight toward the ecstatic little hand stopped panting.

"There where Mees Scandale live," indicated the horizontal arm and finger, "but she downstair sitting on the step," finished the smiling tyke.—Harper's Magazine.

Firethorne Will Agree.

They were discussing the law of entail—the English law beginning the bulk of the family property to the eldest son.

"There is no per cent of logic in that law," said a physician, "and if the family property went to the firstborn, whether son or daughter, the law would contain 100 per cent of logic. For the firstborn child is practically always the best—best in brain, best in health, best in everything."—Atlanta Constitution.

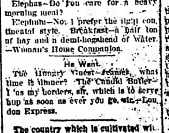
FEAR IN BATTLE.

Frederick the Great Ran Away, and Grant Was Afraid.

Some of the greatest soldiers who's names adorn history's pages entered their first battles with a feeling of fear in their hearts.



Frederick the Great simply lost his head at the battle of Molwitz. Had he not been a king it is safe to say that he would have been shot at the next sunrise. In the heat of the carnage he got an idea that the army under his command was being overwhelmed, so he put the spurs to his horse and dashed headlong among his soldiers. He rode many miles before he stopped to his wild flight. Late at night he was discovered hiding in an old mill, awaiting, as he thought, capture by the enemy. Then he discovered that the army he deserted had won the battle.

As Frederick was a prince, every body tried to forget the incident just as quickly as possible. And after that when the king went to war he was just as brave as any other soldier.

General Grant in his memoirs tells us that, despite the fact that he was not new to the ways of war, he had a strange fear in his heart when as commander of the Union forces he found himself on the eve of his first battle of the civil war. He said: "Look as I may, I can see no reason why I should feel apprehensive of defeat."

In America, history there is no more reckless warrior than the dashing Light Horse Harry Lee. It seems strange therefore, to find that at the outset of the Continental struggle Washington had to appoint him for his "prudence" to battle. Lee, though, up and told Washington that he was just as brave as the general in chief, and he made good his word.—Cleveland Plain Dealer

CENSUS HUMORS.

Returns of Occupations That Are Difficult to Classify.

According to an official of the census bureau at Washington, that regarding which is often puzzled to know how to classify the returns of occupation is cases where the enumerators have given a too literal description of a person's employment. There are two famous terms to cover such cases. Occupations not included in the regular list may be entered as "O. T." meaning "other things," or "N. O." which stands for "not gainful." To choose between the two sometimes suggests amusing complications.

An enumerator in Iowa reported "drunkard" as the occupation of one of his men. The census bureau entered him as "N. O." since the next column inserted this to be his occupation for twelve months in the year.

A New York enumerator who seemed to relish the intricacies of a detective reported several men in his district, as "crooks," "plucky chaps" and "gunmen," but they were entered as "N. G.," although their occupations may have been more gainful in the main to their victims.

An Alabama man whose occupation was reported as "sold jobs" goes on the records under "O. T." "other things."

While some of the occupations which the enumerators give are unusual, they are probably correct. A tramp was described as "tenfoot, and painful, unemployed twelve months." An extra thrifty person in one instance was reported as "occupation, miser," and another "lives on air things." A New England woman whose husband was described as an "idler" gave her own occupation as "washing and wishing."—Minneapolis Journal.

Danger.

"She was even more afraid of cows than most girls, an when she spied a placid animal recumbent under a tree, peacefully chewing its cud, she at first refused to go through the pasture at all. Her husband calmed her fears to some extent, and they started by. When the cow slowly commenced to get up her head first, as they always do. At this the little lady shrieked with terror and said:

"Oh, hush, hurry, hurry. He is getting ready to spring at us."—Exchange.

ONLY THROUGH LOVE

By ANNE HIBBARD

Katherein had been spending the afternoon at the art exhibition. When she was leaving she pushed her way through the hall, and near the door passed the same gay group who had caught her attention once before. They did not see her this time, she was sure; Louisa was eagerly criticising a picture with a tall young lady, and her brother was leaning over his pretty blonde companion with some laughing remark. No, they did not see her; she ran down the stairs, and walked quickly along the crowded thoroughfare, trying not to think. Why did she feel so hurt and sad, and so inclined to cry? Why should they have cared to recognize her—a girl in a shabby gown? It was more than a year since they had seen her, and then only for a few weeks—but they had been such good friends during that short time. True, it was in a country village, where there was no fashionable society, and bonding at the same farm house, they were thrown much together; and she was a very pleasant companion and had the knack of finding the smallest rides, and the nooks where the blackberries grew thickest.

If it had been anyone but Louisa and—and Dr. Leigh! She checked a rising sob, and turned into a side street. It was almost deserted, and hardly half a square away was a tall young man, coming toward her. She recognized him instantly, and her first impulse was to turn back. But no, he might have seen her—she would not run away. She threw her head proudly up, and looked straight before her. He might recognize her now—he was near; but she would not see him. He was quite near now, and her heart was beating fast. Would he pass her by?

"Miss Graydon!" The joyful surprise in his tone sounded very genuine, but she would not notice it.

"How do you do, Dr. Leigh?" she said coldly, ignoring his outstretched hand. After expression changed.

"You are not going to shake hands with me, Miss Katherine?"

She put her hand unwillingly into his.

"How long have you been in town? Where are you stopping?" he questioned.

"I have been in town eight months," she said distinctly, "and I am boarding in South Benton street." She took especial satisfaction in naming the unfashionable quarter.

Katherine was an orphan and was trying hard to cultivate her voice. She managed to make ends meet by taking pupils of her own.

They walked on in silence a few minutes. They had turned into a street where the houses were tall and shabby and built close together.

"And you are living down here?" he said, indicating the seemingly endless row of houses. "Alone, Miss Katherine?"

"Yes, alone. My landlady and her family are very respectable and good-hearted, but hardly congenial, and I'm practically alone. This is the place. I can't ask you in, Dr. Leigh [illegible] the considerations of your feelings. Mrs. Hawkins' front parlor is something to weep over."

Now and then Katherine met Dr. Leigh walking in Benton street, and he always joined her, looking surprised and pleased.

She knew he worked hard at his profession, and also that the large fortune in his father rendered it quite unnecessary. She ventured to question him once when the subject was touched upon.

"I love my work," he said. "And I should not be happy idle."

"But you need not be idle. There are a hundred things to interest one and fill one's time."

Katherine began to look forward to these walks and talks, and to the great bunches of violets and hothouse roses she often found in her room, with Murray Leigh's card attached.

One day she found her washerwoman waiting for her with the plea that she would come to see her sick daughter.

"I hate to bother you, miss, but she's be'n cryin' fur you, an' it seems like she would git better if you would come an' sing fur her. She's like to be upsetted she can't git well. It's that terrible is grippy, miss."

So Katherine went, taking with her Leigh's lavish gift of flowers.

"I can at least add a little brightness to some one else's life," she thought, and herself, felt brighter for the good it did the child.

She went often after that, not knowing how often she barely missed meeting Dr. Leigh on the narrow staircase. One evening Murray Leigh stepped quietly to listen a moment at the half-open door. When the song was finished he entered without knocking, and Katherine rose, flushed and agitated, and bade the invalid a hurried "Good night."

"Wait five minutes, Miss Graydon, and I will go home with you," Leigh said.

"Oh, I am not in the least timid. I will not trouble you, Dr. Leigh. Good night, Mamie."

She hurried through the doorway, but Leigh followed her.

"If you won't wait for me, Miss Graydon," he said, blocking the passage, "I will leave my patient and go with you now."

He looked [illegible] Katherine thought he looked very determined. For a moment she hesitated, half inclined to resent his tone. Then she said:

"Very well, I will wait at the street door."

In a few minutes he joined her there. It was quite dark now, except for the stars that were out in force, and as they stepped out into the empty street, Katherine felt glad that she was not alone.

"So you are the Dr. Leeg they regard with such reverence," she said. "My landlady said they employed some sort of quack, she thought."

Leigh laughed.

"And you are their Lady Bountiful. I did not dream of meeting you there, Miss Graydon."

"I dare say not," she answered, "You thought such a butterfly as I would seek gayer haunts."

He looked down at her in quick surprise, for it was the first touch of bitterness he had heard from her.

"You have done my patient no end of good," he said, cheerfully, ignoring her tone. "She will be up in a day or two. But I'm afraid you've given away my flowers."

"Not all of them," said Katherine, glancing down at a tiny bunch of violets.

"Say You Will Marry Me, Kitty?"

lets pinned on his jacket. "I am glad you've had a successful fight with that terrible [illegible]."

"They have been doing very well since Mallory died," Dr. Leigh said. "The son is a great help to his mother, and the daughter, too, is a good little thing. They seem quite contented in their hard, narrow life. Poor things!"

"I don't pity them," Katherine exclaimed; "I envy them."

"Oh, no!" said Dr. Leigh; "it surely might be worse, but I don't understand your envying them."

"If you had ever been alone, you would."

"Poor little girl!" muttered Leigh, His own heart was beating rapidly. At last he said in a low tone:

"You need not be alone a day longer. You know that, don't you, Katherine?"

Katherine almost stopped, as she turned to look at him, startled.

"I know you don't care for me," he went on; "though you like me well enough in a friendly way; your manner has always made that clear. But, Katherine, I could make you care if you were my wife, and at least you would not have to endure that horrible drudgery of teaching. Is not that reason enough for marrying me?"

"I should have to be far worse off than I am," she answered, slowly, "before I could do that.

Leigh flushed.

"Don't you think that is a little harsh?" he said, somewhat bitterly.

Then Katherine broke down and hurled her face in her handkerchief. "How misunderstood me—I am very sorry."

"Then prove that you are sorry my saying you will marry me."

He waited a minute and then took the hand which lay on his arm.

"If you know how I love you, dear," he said, persuasively. "Kitty—I have always longed to call you that— say you will marry me, Kitty—"

"I will marry you—"

"Kitty!"

"Because—" She hesitated.

"My darling, I don't care why! So long as you marry me, it makes no difference."

"It makes a difference to me. I would never marry for the reasons you gave. I will marry you because—I love you."

And though they were in the full glare of the electric light, he put his arms about her, and bent and kissed her lips.

"I am the happiest fellow in the world!" he said.

"It is hard to believe that I am the same miserable girl who left here two hours ago," Katherine said, when she bade him "Good night." "What a wonderful difference love can make in one's life."

HOPE ON.

When clouds are low and nights are black,
And starless grows the weary track,
Hope on! for some day shine of bliss
Will bend and light the way for you.

When old the world and gray the day,
And weary grows the toilsome way,
Hope on, hold fast, in your despair,
For skies will some day blossom fair.

Hope on, and build your castles strong—
Have faith, although the road be long.
The sun will soon come drifting through,
And blue skies light the way for you!

Dressing on Dimes

Holiday Frocks for Little Girls

(Copyright, 1907, by the Dellnestor, N. Y.)

Illustration Copyright, 1907, by The Dellnestor, New York.

When one does one's own dressmaking correct cut costs only the price of a pattern, and careful finish nothing at all in money. Yet they are of far more importance in the smart gowning of the younger girls than is either quality of material or expensive trimmings. Possibly the fact that children rapidly outgrow their frocks has influenced the fashions. Be this as it may, certain it is that even in circles where money-saving need not be considered, simplicity and daintiness rather than rich and elaborate effects distinguish the attire of the children.

Lingerie frocks are de rigueur for four-and six-year-olds, for dress, even in mid-winter. They cannot be too dainty, either in material, trimming, or finish. Lawns and cotton batistes can be tooled fine and sheer, even when low-priced; and as the fashion-ation of a lingerie dress, they answer quite as well as India linen. After all, the daintiness lies in the quality of the material than in its freshness, its lines, and its finish.

Skirts must be short and full. The hem and tucks must be set with geometric precision, and sewed with almost microscopic stitches. The raw edges of seams must be invisible, both on the right and wrong sides. Whipping them to hemstitching tape adds somewhat to the total expense, or seam-heading is the newest way, but the next best method turns the seams to the right side, trims them close, and hides them under a narrow band of bias material with its edges turned in. This is first basted into position, and then ornamented with closely set herring-bone stitches done in crochet cotton or in the new mercerized embroidery thread. The long seams in the frocks are finished in "French" style.

When inserting lace, bands of drawn work, strips of darned, tucked or embroidered net, etc., baste the trimming into position, sew it down just within its own edges, and finish to the lower edge of the lace insertion above it, and the lace edging at the sleeves and throat was whipped with the brier-stitched collar and elbow bands. Clever fingers can improve upon these by substituting coral-stitching for the simpler brier-stitching, and setting French knots between the branches.

The following items entered into the construction of the frock:

4 yards of lawn, at 25 cents	$ .90
7 yards of insertion at 5 cents	.35
7 yards of edging at 5 cents	.35
Buttons	.10
Cotton (half a spool)	.05
Cotton for herring bone stitches	.10
Pattern (10d)	.10
Total	$1.95

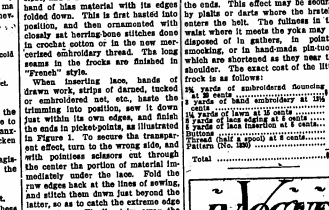

Figure 2 illustrates a charming dress for little Miss Eight-Year-Old. The skirt was made of embroidered flouncing, and the bretelles of band embroidery to match. The open neck and sleeves were finished with valenciennes lace. This model, specially adapted for dressy wear, as the illustration shows, is so cut that it may be simplified for ordinary purposes, by omitting the bretelles, and making it high in the neck and long sleeved. The pattern is suitable also for little every-day frocks in challis or alpathross, and may be utilized, thus reducing the actual cost, for two or three different costumes.

When selecting the embroidery for the model shown here, an open pattern of eyelet work was chosen, for two good reasons. First, its airy effect is smarter and prettier; and second, because dime for dime this style of embroidery makes a better; appearance than the best so-called "solid" embroidery, obtainable for the same price. It is only by using the best judgment in matters of this sort, by observing when cutting, and by managing to make the most of everything, that dressing on dimes becomes feasible. The better the management the fewer the number of dimes required.

Study the illustration closely and you will find the bretelles are finished with valenciennes lace. This touch of lingerie is very pretty and it softens the bretelles in a smart and becoming fashion. Two rows of edging are used. The first row is whipped almost flat to the headed edge of the hand. The second, slightly fulled, is sewed to the first so that it projects from beneath its scalloped edge.

The bretelles slope off narrower at the ends. This effect may be secured by plaits or darts where the bretelle enters the belt. The fullness in the waist where it meets the yoke may be disposed of in gathers, in pointed smocking, or in hand-made pin-tucks which are shortened as they near the shoulder. The exact cost of the little frock is as follows:

2½ yards of embroidered flouncing, at 36 cents	$ .90
2 yards of lace valenciennes, at 10 cents	.20
2¼ yards of lawn, at 12 cents	.27
2 yards of lace edging at 5 cents	.10
2 yards of lace insertion at 5 cents	.10
Buttons	.05
Thread (for sewing)	.03
Pattern (No. 1888)	.10
Total	$1.75

IN VOGUE

Handkerchiefs show some strikingly new notes, especially in the introduction of color. Among the favorite colors is pale lavender, crossed off with hair-lines of deep blue purple.

Another model had a broad band of color above a narrow hem with embroidered dots and other dainty designs in colors above their scalloped edges.

Pale tan can be found barred by every color obtainable, so that a handkerchief can always be selected that will harmonize with one's gown, the unobtrusive, neutral shade of tan counting for nothing at all.

The mauve handkerchief's come in especially pretty shades, and as a rule show this shade as a background, barred with white or tan.

Delicate shades of pink and pale green and blue are shown in handkerchiefs barred with black and white or darker tones of the same shade of which they are made.

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a book of Swamp-Root, pamphlet telling all about Swamp-Root, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

THE DAIRY

HANDLING MANURE.

Study the Easiest and Most Effective Methods.

Progressive farmers find that manure gives best returns when applied to the land as quickly as possible. There is little loss from leaching or drying even when the ground is covered with snow or frozen solid. The practice of many farmers is to haul manure to the fields daily. Where this is followed a device such as shown in the cut will save time and labor, says the Farm and Home.

Up-to-Date Manure Shed.

A little carrier suspended from an overhead track runs behind the cows and to a small shed just outside the barn under which is the manure spreader. The carrier takes the manure from the stable and dumps it in the spreader which stands on a cement foundation that catches and holds the liquid. By having a watertight gutter behind the cows and using plenty of straw for bedding all of the liquids are saved and returned to the land.

A shed to hold the spreader can be put up for $60 or less. It merely consists of a roof supported by seven-foot posts to keep off the rain and snow. A concrete foundation is made diabing so that the liquids will not escape.

POOR MAN AND POOR COW.

The Poorer the Man Is the Less He Can Afford to Keep a Poor Cow.

No man who keeps cows for the money there is in it is so rich that he can afford to keep poor ones. The rich fellow who goes into the dairy business for the satisfaction he can get out of it usually keeps the best cows that money can buy. The poor man who must depend upon his dairy for his living and profit too often keeps poor cows because the best ones cost more money. The rich fellow could well afford to keep this kind, but it is the most foolish kind of foolishness for the poor man to own such cows. He is just the man who should own the good cows. It is impossible, of course, for him to buy the kind of cows the rich fellow does, but this is no necessary or advisable. He can build up a herd of good cows from a very few good milkers by using a good dairy sire, and by studying the individuality of his herd. Just a little improvement each year will do the business.

SKIMMINGS.

A farmer that has a well-kept dairy of good cows is in a position to make a certain living.

It takes capital to run any business, but the best capital a creamery can have is plenty of raw material.

Do not fill the churn too full, and see that the temperature is right, if you expect the butter to come readily.

All flesh that the cow puts on when dry becomes a deposit which will be drawn out in an increased yield of milk.

The Texas Farmer says: Those who expect to lead in the dairy business often find someone crowding them for the same honors.

Are you taking good care of the straw piles that the cows may have a comfortable place to sleep in during the coming winter?

Dairying is a science that is being more thoroughly studied to-day than ever before. It has in it a great deal more than most people dream of.

Milk will command high prices this winter; perhaps higher than it has been for many years. Hence while putting away a supply of feed don't fail to get plenty.

Fall Planting of Spinach.

Spinach can be produced almost any time during the year and finds ready sale. It should be sown in September for the early spring crops. Fall sown spinach is available during the winter months. The soil should be made very rich, using the best of compost quite freely. The yield is largely increased by a top-dressing of poultry manure. Plant in drills one foot apart, using seed very freely, 12 to 15 pounds per acre and firming it thoroughly. Keep the weeds out and the soil well cultivated. This is best October if to be used or sold. The main crop usually winters over without loss, but is exposed locations should be lightly covered with coarse litter or leaves.

The Vegetable Pit.

The vegetable pit is a good place to keep root crops over winter. Drainage is the main thing. No water must run under or into the pit. Then, cover gradually—just enough to keep the vegetables from freezing.

WESTERN CANADA A WINNER

THE CROP OF 1907 IS AN EXCELLENT ONE.

Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta Farmers Doing Well.

The interest that Western Canada has aroused for some years past is growing in intensity. The conditions of the crop of 1907 are such that results can be spoken of with some degree of certainty. The yield of grain will be about 80,000,000 bushels and the price the farmers will realize for it will be upwards of seventy million dollars. The oat crop was good in most places, and the crop of barley will be very remunerative. Those who know of the generally unsatisfactory conditions during the seeding, growing and ripening period in the United States during the past season, will look with righteous distrust on any statement intended to give the impression that Western Canada conditions were so much different. Generally, they were not, but the conditions of a highly recuperative soil, long and continuous sunshine, are conditions possessed by Western Canada and not possessed by any other country on the Continent. This is why it is possible to record today a fairly successful crop, when in most other places the opposite is the case. The yield in all grains is less than last year, but the higher prices obtained more than offset any falling off in the yield. The Saskatchewan the wheat crop will be worth $21,135,000. Last year the same crop was 35 per cent larger and the quality better. The yield was worth $24,000,000. Oats and barley are very important factors in all three provinces. At Gladstone, Manitoba, returns from one farm were $27 per acre from the wheat land, $35 per acre from oats, and $30 per acre from barley. The yield of wheat at Dauphin, Manitoba, was 20 to 24 bushels to the acre but not of a very good grade, but the yield of barley in that section was good and so was the quality and price. At Rowan Lea, Manitoba, 16 to 20 bushels to the acre were thrashed, bringing a round dollar on the market. At Oak Lake, Manitoba, on some fields where 21 bushels were expected, twelve and fifteen was the result; others again where twenty was looked for gave twenty-two to twenty-five. One special patch south of town on J. M. McKenzie's farm went as high as thirty bushels to the acre. At Sheho, Saskatchewan, oats yielded from 60 to 65 bushels to the acre. Sam Wunder threshed 2,500 bushels from forty acres. The sample is good and weighs well. At Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, W. Hibby threshed 97 bushels of oats to the acre, and two others ran but little behind. Wheat here reached 35 bushels. At Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, from a quarter section all in crop, Alex. McKinnon of Ingleside threshed an average of 33 bushels No. 1 Northern. I. J. Grant had 190 acres, yielding 6,000 bushels of the same grade. These illustrations taken from widely distant districts (and thousands of others could be produced) show that the year 1907 has not felt the serious effects from severe winter, late spring, or unfavorable conditions during the growing season that might have been anticipated. In order to learn more about this country write to the Canadian Government Agent whose address appears elsewhere, and get a copy of the new Last Best West, which he will be pleased to mail you free.

"Yes," said he, frowning slightly.

"And that you shall" he asked, his face all smiles again.

"You did," she said.

Will Break Up a Cold in 24 Hours or Cure Any Cough That is Curable.

Mix one-half ounce of Concentrated oil of pine with two ounces of glycerine and a half pint of good whisky. Shake thoroughly each time and take a dose of a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours.

The renowned throat and lung specialist who established a camp for consumptives in the pine woods of Maine, and whose remarkable cures there attracted international attention, declares that the above formula is one of the very best remedies obtainable for a severe cold and that it will strengthen the lungs, relieve coughs and heal the bronchial tubes. Also, that it will cure any case of lung trouble not too far advanced if the patient will assist by plenty of outdoor exercise, inhaling deep, long breaths every few minutes.

The ingredients are procurable of any good prescription druggist and easily mixed at home and should take its place as one of the most useful remedies in the family medicine chest.

Inquiry at one of the leading druggists elicited the information that Concentrated oil of pine is put up for dispensing only in half-ounce vials securely sealed in round air tight cases intended to protect it from heat and light. The oils sold in bulk and the patent medicines put up and labeled "Oil of Pine," are to be avoided because owing to their impurities they produce nausea and are useless as a medicine, besides they sometimes leave permanent kidney trouble.

REAL CAUSE FOR GLADNESS.

How Young Lawyer Carried Comfort to Convicted Client.

An amusing story is told by Harper's Weekly at the expense of a prominent Baltimore lawyer, who, like many another attorney, got his first case by assignment from the bench. His client had been indicted for murder, and the conviction was a foregone conclusion, as his guilt was unquestionable.

The agent of the trial was a sentence to be hanged; but the man made an appeal to the governor for a pardon and was anxiously awaiting a reply thereto when his lawyer visited him in his cell.

"I got good news for you," very good news!" the young lawyer said, grasping the man's hand.

"Did the governor—let a pardon?" the man exclaimed joyously.

"Well, no. The fact is the governor refuses to interfere. But an uncle of yours has died and left you $200, and you will have the satisfaction of knowing that your lawyer got paid, you know," was the comforting explanation.

Ingenious, But Unavailing.

Witton, the 5-year-old son of Lackaye, the actor, has inherited the brilliant mind for which his father is distinguished.

Not long ago Mr. and Mrs. Lackaye, who spent the summer at Shelter Island Heights, were invited to attend a card party and the young son was anxious to accompany them.

His mother insisted that he should remain at home with Mary, his governess, but Witton persisted and as a final argument he said:

"Mamma, I think Mary is a Christian Scientist, and I might be taken sick in the night."

The argument was not effective.

French Police a Surprise.

"Well, how did you enjoy yourself in Paris?" they asked of Mrs. Mason after she got home.

"Very well," she replied. "Very well, indade; but there was one thing that surprised me more than enythin' else."

"And what was that?" they queried.

"There were a lot of policemen there and all av thim was French."

Paradoxical though it may seem, the light bills rendered by an illuminating company are usually heavy.

TUMORS CONQUERED

Overwhelming Proof that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Succeeds.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy Tumor.

The growth of a tumor is so insidious that frequently its presence is wholly unsuspected until it is well advanced.

So called "wandering pains" may come from its early stages or the presence of danger may be made manifest by excessive monthly periods accompanied by unusual pain, from the abdomen through the groin and thigh.

If you have mysterious pains, if there are indications of inflammation or displacements, secure a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, right away and begin its use.

The following letters should convince every suffering woman of its virtue, and that it actually does conquer tumors.

Mrs. Mar Fry, of 856 W. Coltax Ave., South Bend, Ind., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I take great pleasure in writing to thank you for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I also took the Blood Purifier in alternate doses with the Compound. Your medicine removed a cyst tumor of four years' growth, which three of the best physicians declared I had. They had said that only an operation could help me, I am very thankful that I followed a friend's advice and took your medicine. It has made me a strong and well woman and I shall recommend it as long as I live."

Mrs. E. F. Hayes, of 28 Ruggles St., Boston, Mass., writes:

"I have been under different doctors' treatment for a long time without relief. They told me I had a fibroid tumor, my abdomen was swollen and I suffered with great pain. I wrote to you for advice, you replied and I followed your directions carefully and began to take the Compound. I now know that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound expelled the tumor and strengthened my whole system."

Mrs. S. J. Barber, of Scott, N. Y., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Sometime ago I wrote you for advice about a tumor which the doctors thought would have to be removed. Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to-day am a well woman."

Mrs. M. M. Funk, Vandergrift, Pa., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I had a tumor and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removed it for me after two doctors had given me up. I was sick four years before I began to take the Compound. I now recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and can stand without a peer as a remedy for Tumor Growths as well as other distressing ills of women, and such symptoms as Bearing-down Sensations, Displacements, Irregularities and Backaches etc. Women should remember that it is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that is curing so many women. Don't forget to insist upon it when some druggist asks you to accept something else which he calls "just as good."

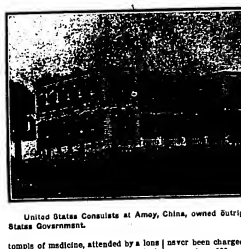
ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

The Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the Missionary Problem from a Purely Unprejudiced, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.



China Awake, Is Showing to the World Her Power

Shanghai, China.—Whoever gets a square look at the real China knows that he has seen the theater and actors of great events that are imminent and impending. The importance, the far-reaching influence and the amazing rapidity of the transformation now taking place in this country will be learned with surprise one day by the big, uncaring world outside. In the meantime, it is the office of the present investigator to show just how Christian missions have become interwrought into every phase of Chinese life, as a shaping influence.

Next to the relation between education and missions must be mentioned medical missions, that supreme proof of the altruism of the best with respect to the east. Here again the magnitude of the material altogether precludes anything like a systematic presentation of the subject, for medical missions are found in every part of China, from port cities to remote interior towns, placing the healing arts of the west at the service of the suffering east, and thus winning the confidence, respect and admiration of the natives.

The Priestess' Severed Hand.

An interesting story of contrasts is told in connection with the new American Baptist hospital at Hanyang. Where the imposing modern structure of gray stone now rises, outside the city wall, there was formerly a little temple of medicine, attended by a long priestess. But the temple has gone, and to win the favor of the idol and the people the priestess with the own right hand severed her left hand at the wrist. Now she wears the withered hand as an amulet around her neck. Nevertheless her little temple of superstition has given way to a great temple of healing, where a skilled missionary doctor ministers to the sick of that teeming ancient city.

The magnitude of some of these mission hospitals is beyond the grasp of the westerner who thinks that all big things are near at house. Not one tourist in 10,000 who touches Shanghai knows that out by the west gate of the city is the Woman's Union hospital, in charge of Dr. Elizabeth Reifsnyder, of Pennsylvania, which last year treated more than 60,000 patients, preaching to them all, as well as to mission, in the same city, is in quite the same class with it, and both are institutions of which any progressive city in Christendom would be proud. Canton, the Chicago or New York of China, has two notable medical institutions in the Canton Medical college and the E. A. Hackett Medical College for Women. Both have hospitals attached, and the latter, in care of Dr. Mary H. Fulton, the only one of its sort in the empire, has received the highest official and public honors. Everywhere I went in China I found the missionary doctor, engaged in manifestly noble work, and earning the praise of all classes.

A Christian Newspaper for China.

Before I had got as far south as Shanghai the conviction had forced itself upon me that one of the most potent agencies that could be employed by the missionaries, in the present state of this nation's development, would be a liberal daily newspaper, actually presenting the whole world's news, and at the same time maintaining a broadly progressive and Christian attitude. There are men already on the field, with a mastery of the language, who are equal to this task. When I reached Shanghai, I found the great Dr. Timothy Richards, general secretary of the Christian Literature society; hobbling over with the same project. The scheme is rather outside the scope of any one board, yet it should not be difficult of realization.

Whatever may be the future of the old-fashioned tract, the place of literature in the modernization and Christianization of China is obviously of tremendous importance. The whole nation is giving attention to reading. The work of the Christian Literature society has been vastly successful. The various mission presses, notably the famous Presbyterian Mission Press, Shanghai, have been calculably influential.

An instance of the way Christian literature is being read by all classes is shown by the wide circulation of Hallock's Almanac, of which more than 100,000 copies were purchased by individual Chinese. It is an almanac somewhat after the fashion of Franklin's "Poor Richard's Almanac," although avowedly used for purposes of Christian propaganda. I watched a missionary selling these in an inland city, and his supply—so large that it took both himself and an assistant to carry it—was soon exhausted. In his sudden thirst for new knowledge, China finds herself purchasing by the myriad the books prepared by missionaries.

Making Shoes Out of Bibles.

In the levies for the distribution of all this literature, it is inevitable that abuses arise; from several widely-separated missionaries I have heard the complaint that portions of the Bible are being used to make shoes. Such are new shoes, since they can be purchased more cheaply than common paper. The donors to the Bible societies never intended to help Chinese soles after this fashion. I am assured by the head of the American Bible society for China that, speaking only in the large cities, this abuse has never been charged against any of his 100 colporteurs, who are not paid by commission, which is the root of the evil. Less than one per cent. of the total annual circulation of more than half a million copies is given away; the cheapest New Testaments and gospel portions, on native paper, are sold at one-third the cost of manufacture. Whatever new facts come to light with the distribution of the Bible in China will probably be corrected and explained when the forthcoming Robert Morrison centennial in Shanghai.

The great gathering, convening April 25-May 5, which is the event to which all missionary eyes are turned, promises to be a memorable milestone in Missionary history. Committees of experts have been at work for 12 months preparing deliverances upon all the big problems of Chinese missions. At this time the three committees will report, and these reports will be High Wenli, Easy Wenli and Mandarin, and they should bring to a consummation a hundred years of Bible translation in China.

The Biggest Blunder of Missions.

This Shanghai conference will give a decided impetus to the union of all missionary work. The biggest blunder of the missionary movement has been the perpetuation of foreign denominational lines on the mission field. As the "Shanghai Mercury" recently said, in an editorial upon "Chinese Christianity:" "If it depended upon the Chinese vote, the Christians would all unite together in one National Chinese church, without any of the 'isms' of the west, which ought not to be imposed on them and which mayhap they will one day cast off."

A rather careful inquiry among leading native Christians reveals a definite tendency toward the assertion of Chinese nationalism in the native Christian church. This nowhere assumes proportions or the animus so marked in Japan, but the "independence movement" is a real factor in the Chinese missionary situation. The foreign worker soon will aware of it and hospitable toward it, since the missionary is not wholly successful until he has made himself unnecessary. In a number of self-supporting Chinese churches is quite considerable, and a few are self-governing. They are undoubtedly more in favor with the people generally than foreign-manned and foreign-maintained churches. So earnest are many native Christians in this direction that they have organized a missionary society of their own, to open Christian work in hitherto untouched Chinese villages.

While on the subject of union and comity, frank criticism must be made of some of the smaller and rather "peculiar" American sects, which, like many independent missionaries, plant their enterprises under the shadow of long established missions and steal away the converts of the latter. This sort of proselyting is not uncommon on the mission field nn the part of these smaller bodies, although by all standards it is reprehensible. Givers to foreign missions should assure themselves that the work they support is not of this sort. There is small excuse for these new undertakings going to port cities, when there are thousands of inland cities and towns where not a single missionary has ever gone.

Big Fat Becoming Fashionable.

The disproportion in which many matters Chinese have been viewed in the occident is illustrated in the foot-binding practice. Westerners have been led to believe that this has meant constant agony and hardship for the chinese women and girls, and the subject has been a stock argument in the unending synagogue for the poor Chinese. One is therefore unprepared to find these "lily-footed" women such a merry, lively lot, as they toddle about on the points of their distorted feet. In answer to a remark upon this, an experienced missionary said, "There is no doubt that the suffering incident to foot-binding has been greatly exaggerated. If China had no worse evil than this one she would have small need for missionaries."

Not that the foot-binding is other than a bad practice; it is needless, stupid, hurtful and probably worse than the tight lacing of the white woman. Progressive Chinese and missionaries have all united to break up the custom. The girls of mission schools are always required to unbind their feet; the chief reason why older Christian women do not always do so is because the pain suffered from unbinding would be greater than the inconvenience of the small feet. Peasant women are usually forbidden; so also is the empress dowager and all other Manchu women. The Manchus never followed the practice of binding feet.

So substantial has been the progress made in this reform that this Anti-foot Binding Society, vigorously led by Mrs. A. Little, and served by many European ladies, recently closed out its affairs, after ten years of active campaigning. The fight for big feet is now so far won that its further prosecution is left to the Chinese themselves.

Waging War on Opium.

Everybody knows that Chinese smoke opium; strangers to this land do not realize to what an extent it has permeated the national fabric, so that it has debilitated the physical strength of China and sapped the moral fiber of its countless victims. To an even greater extent than strong drink, opium unfits its user for usefulness. For years the missionaries have hammered away at this seeming-ly hopeless subject, Rev. Dr. H. C. DuBose, of Soochow, being the most tireless and dauntless opponent of opium in the empire.

At last the lethargic nation has been stirred. The Chinese themselves have become conscious of the spectacle of their public men made inefficient by opium, and many leading men of China are 21,000 in that city alone) I was impressed by the fact that it was young, the progressive and the educated who furnished the patronage; the old, the poor, the wrecked were smoking in miserable hovels in obscure streets where a few cash would suffice to satisfy their cravings.

Now China is treating with England to secure a cessation of the importation of the drug into India and England, moved by a militant sentiment at home against this disgraceful situation, is lending a listening ear to China's pleas. For its own people the Chinese government has issued an astonishing anti-opium edict, which is already being put into effect. The edict declares "it rouses our deep indignation even to speak of the matter. The control is now ardently determined to make China powerful, and it is incumbent on us to urge the people on to reformation in this respect, that they may abandon forever evil, this deep-seated cancer, and follow the ways of health and harmony.

"We therefore decree that within the limit of ten years, this harmful 'foreign muck' be fully and entirely cleansed away, and we command the council of state affairs to consider means for the strict prohibition of opium smoking and of poppy-growing in China itself and report their deliberations to us for our decision."

In all this progress the missionaries have borne a foremost, though often unrecognized part. So, too, the early mercenary institutions of the missions have pioneered the way for the new China to care for its own. Asylums for lepers, an orphan asylum and school for children of various ages and conditions.

It is fair to say that the missionary is a school-master of civilization to the Chinese.

HELPS THE TRUSTS

ERROR TOO FREQUENTLY MADE BY THE FARMER.

BUYS THROUGH MAIL ORDER

And in Doing So Contributes Toward Capital Concentration in the Big Financial Centers, to His Great Injury.

Lord bless the American farmer. He is one of the nabobs of creation and he hardly knows it. In a single year his work adds to the wealth of the nation more by a hundredfold than all the mines of the country. He gives to the world twice the value in crops and produce than the output all the factories and mills of the nation produce. He supplies the lubricant to keep the wheels of progress in motion, and if his only knew it could buy and sell a few hundred Rockefellers, and still have enough left to purchase a few kingdoms as large as Spain. Yet he must be admitted that this great American farmer needs some enlightenment as to common economics. While he is the king of wealth producers, and a lot of it sticks to his fingers; he is also a philanthropist and doesn't know it. He works hard to produce his wealth and then patronizes the machinery that lands a goodly portion of it in the coffers of the Captains of Finance who dictate things in Wall street and elsewhere; in fact he gives the great mass of wealth to the money required to build up combinations that the good philanthropic farmer is compelled to support. He does it and he knows not that he doeth so. Every time the good tiller of the soil sends away for the big mail order house for his supplies, he does his mite toward capital concentration in the great financial centers, and his little mite seeks a resting place among the money that is in reserve to feed the maw of the trusts. It is about time western farmers take a tumble to cold facts, and come to a realization that their interests are best subserved by keeping their earnings as close to their homes as possible.

Trade at Home.

Patronage of the big mail order houses is founded largely on short-sightedness. In one way it is akin to patronage of the get-rich-quick schemes. The buyer believes he is getting something for his money that is really not given, and fails to realize that where his money goes or what he gets for it.

No one would think of telephoning to a furniture store and asking the dealer to send up a dozen dining room chairs, without having previously examined the chairs, or of ordering a dress or pair of shoes, or a stove in a like way. Yet that is practically what the patron of the mail order house does. He orders by mail without having seen the goods or having any idea of their appearence or character. He is taking a long chance. Two things are within he has to base his assumption of the articles ordered is a description in the catalogue and the cut given there. In other words, the attractiveness of the offer made depends on the promises of the firm and on the engraver's art. The chances of make a very credtible out from a flimsy and worthless model. The engraver's art is so exactly fin e way that makes it appear most desirable. Incidentally it seems to be very possible to find one who will accept the promise and cut at their face value, without property discounting them, as he is in the habit of these people the mail order business thrives. A little investigation would convince the average person that his money will go further and yield greater returns if expended with the local dealer, despite the fictitious values offered by the outside houses. But the articles sold by the mail order houses must be compared as they really are, and not as they are represented in the catalogues.—Beverly (Mass.) Times.

Patronizing Home People.

An exchange says that war has been declared on the great catalogue houses of Chicago and other cities by the 500 retail merchants of the west. In one of the most striking economic movements this country has ever known the small dealers are fighting, they say, for their lives. The mammoth institutions, supported by thousands of workers, dole their business entirely through the medium of their bulky catalogues, and scatter their goods in the communities whence they derive annually millions of dollars of patronage, are forcing the closing of scores of home stores right to the wall and so their opponents claim, are "making commercial serfs and vassals of once prosperous towns." People living in country towns ought to get wise and trade at home.—Philadelphia Episcopal Recorder.

Advertise What You Have to Sell.

Any one can buy what has been sold or can be sold about the big mail order houses, the simple fact remains that they get the business by thoroughly persistent advertising, showing cuts of goods and giving prices. If home merchants would take the same methods, much of the trade now going to the mail order houses in cities would come to them. A man we know recently made up a list of tools and hardware from one of the mail order catalogues and took it to a home dealer to get prices. He was surprised to find that he could get the same articles at home for less money, and save the express charges, and also see the goods he was buying.—Cleveland (Pa.) Press.

USE MORE PRINTERS' INK.

Good Advice to the Small Merchant Who Would Succeed.

The mail order question is one that is of perennial importance to nearly every one of the smaller cities and villages in the land, although the danger that these institutions were started to annihilate the smaller stores does not seem as imminent now as it did a few years ago. For instance, since the passage of the pure food law by congress many, if not all of the mail order people, have discontinued the selling of groceries. It was plain in this case that there was a considerable amount of adulteration in the goods sold or the mail order houses would not have taken this step.

There are aspects of the mail order question which may well give hope to the local dealer. The facts in the case are that the catalogue houses are not enjoying an unmitigated cinch, for they are handicapped in many ways in which the country merchant is not. ..For example, the entire country press almost without exception is closed to mail order advertising. Here is a distinct advantage for the home merchant, although sometimes he is somewhat slow in taking advantage of it. If he is fossilized and walking around to pay funeral expenses in a business way, figuratively speaking, he will spring that ancient chestnut that "it doesn't pay" to advertise. But the newspaper man knows as well as from a mail order house and place it in the remotest corner of his paper, and this same business man will be apt to object very strongly.

The mail order houses have advanced their business by advertising, and have been badly handicapped by having virtually only the magazines and the catalogues to tell their story. If the merchants of to-day expect to cope with the mail order houses and hold a fair share of the trade that they ought to get, it means that they will have to use printers' ink and advertising space. Furthermore, they will have to advertise intelligently and in accordance with the best standards. Don't spring the ancient gag about having been in business so many years. The people don't care a rap how long you have been in business. They are interested mainly in two things: First, what have you got? Second, what do they cost? Unless your advertising deals with these questions, it will be a sounding brass or tinkling cymbal. The mail order houses have built up trade by doing just these things, and their glowing descriptions and price tables are the business.—San Antonio (Tex.) Light.

Individual Vs. Corporation.

A well-known eastern financier, for some time the president of a large trust company, recently resigned, giving as his reason that a man, according to his belief, can do better work for himself, and that no man can really succeed to a great extent he can make in business for himself. In these days when all kinds of business are being converged into corporations, the number of trades in which a man may engage in business for himself seems to become so few that for a great bulk of men, even those having the mental equipment which in other years would have led them naturally to make them their own masters, there is now no other opening than that of a place for some corporation. For the bulk of the people, outside of those in agricultural pursuits, it is here a feeling the grasp of corporate methods. It is true that millions must have the products of the land to feed and clothe them, and in lands and mines the corporations are the medisme he must work through, and from him they exact their tribute. It is the interest of the farmer as well as the laborer in every walk and sphere, to prevent as far as possible the encroachment of organized capital, and this can be done by as far as possible keeping the dollars that you earn in circulation in the community where earned, and thus prevent the further concentration of money and of business in the great cities.

Put in a Good Word.

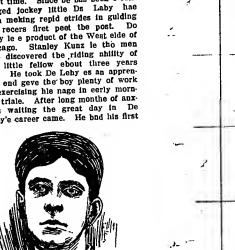
Lord Arlington was arrested the other day in Belgium for speeding by auto. Said the arresting policeman in court the next day: "His lordship was most civil; in fact, it was a pleasure to meet him, and that is more than can be said of some motorists." Said his lordship had to pay a fine of $15 and costs.

Raised in Rank.

Sir Chentung Liang-cheng, until recently Chinese minister at Washington, has been received by the emperor of China on three successive days. He has been raised from the second to the first rank and appointed president of the board of punishments, with headquarters at Shanghai. He will also act as traffic anperintendent.

Large Number of Nets Used.

According to Consul-General Soren Listoe, of Rotterdam, "about 100,000 nets are' in use during the herring season' by, the 800 fishing smacks of the Netherlands. In the last short three seasons, but owing to losses from storms and other causes, between 40,000 and 50,000 new nets are purchased annually.



Dogs in Paris.

In Paris dogs are treated as well as human beings are. They wear automobile togs when they go motoring, they have a hospital, and they even have a good-sized cemetery, with monuments and headstones and inscriptions and mortuary wreaths.

SPORTING GOSSIP

Although matters looked very bad for the Yale 'varsity crew's chances a while ago, when Capt. Ids was reported as having decided he was colged and it was known that three other 'varsity men would not be back, recent developments are operated for a considerable change. The return of Ide gave the coach five men out of eight to work with, and now it is understood that Bigelow, the football captain, is likely to row when the spring comes around. With Bigelow last year it was a case of giving up rowing solely because he knew that he had a bad football season before him in the fall. Bigelow was and will be a powerful and useful oar. Stanley Koren, captain last year, who resigned because of bad health, is out again, and he will take a seat in the boat surely if his condition is good. Practically all the fall the weather in the harbor has been good enough to permit the carmen to work, and there have been more than a hundred rowing. Seventy-five freshmen have been working under C. T. Schunemann, '08 S., who incidentally is another good men who did not row last season. Schunemann stroked the four in 1906. It is planned to keep five freshmen eights going as long as possible out of doors. Of the 'varsity men who rowed against Harvard last spring Stopnik, Tell, and Bonner of the eight have been graduated, as has Rockwell of the four. Meyer has left college. The 'varsity eight is rowing at present: Auchincloss, bow; Robbins, 2; Rice, 3; Dunn, 4; Miller, 5; Howe, 6; Ide, 7, and Griswold, stroke.

Little Arthur De Lady, a Chicago boy, promises to develop into the star jockey of the country inside of a short time. Since he has been a full-fledged jockey little De Lahy has been making rapid strides in gaining the confidence of the public. Do Lehy is e product of the West side of Chicago. Stanley Kunz is the man who discovered the riding ability of the little fellow about three years ago. He took De Lehy as an apprentice and gave the boy plenty of work in exercising his nage in early morning trials. After long months of arduous waiting the great day in De Lehy's career came. He bnd his first mount in a real horse race, sporting silk for the first time. He learned rapidly. Never knowing what the word "fear" meant, Do Lahy took his mounts to the front no matter how bunched up the field was. Last winter at New Orleans De Lehy showed very good form for a new jockey. Last summer he rode with him training regularly on the Canndien tracks. Anything which De Lahy rode generally won over. He is now at rest and is making a very creditable showing. De Lahy's parents are dead, and his uncle, a building inspector, is the boy's guerdien. He predicts the greatest kind of success for the little boy, and with all of the country's greatest horse rider in another year.

"The first game of football I witnessed upon my arrival in China," said one of the consular representatives of the United States, "I mistook for a very serious riot, and you wouldn't have blamed me, either. In the first place I was not aware that the Chinese had any such game, but later found that it is very popular in this country. It is not played as is the American game, and instead of 11 players to the side there are 50. Each team is composed of almost giants, and every men on the team will be six feet or over in height and weigh on the average 200 pounds. There are no goals, side lines or halves. The game lasts until one side is the winner, and frequently this is accomplished before two or three days. The idea of the game is to get possession of the enemy's country, and I know of one clever player who did so by passing over the roofs of the houses. As you may imagine, 100 giants yelling and fighting in the streets create some excitement."

Gossip of People and Events Gathered in Washington

WASHINGTON.—They can't keep away, for the Washington habit is strong upon them. The line of the capital draws former senators and former representatives here just as surely as the call of duty calls the present office-holders. They drift down in November, and scores of them stay until the adjournment. Of course this takes notice only of those of the former members to whom business or professional work is not a money-making necessity. Former Representative Joseph W. Babcock owns a home in Washington, and he is here already and is apparently as busy as when to all intents and purposes as chairman of the committee on the District of Columbia he was the mayor of Washington. Men who at one time have been senators are allowed the privilege of the floor of the senate, but no such right of admission is granted by the house, and the house prohibition is a wise one, for otherwise there would be double reason for the present cry for more room.

Former Senator Peffer of Kansas, who at one time, largely perhaps because of his picturesque views on people's rights and because of his equally picturesque whiskers, was much in the public mind and eye, practically lives in Washington. He is engaged, it is understood, in the nothing-less than herculean task of making an index for the Congressional Record. It is said that Mr. Peffer's patience is equal to his soul-tying employment. Former Senator Stewart, "Silver" Stewart of Nevada, is in Washington. He is as white as the snow on the top of the Nevada mountains, but despite his 80-odd years he is as stirpg apparently as any tree that grows below the mountain timber line. Former Senators Blair of New Hampshire and Thurston of Nebraska are practicing law in Washington. The list is too long for the present writing.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY GUARDS ARE NONPLUSSED

THE library of congress, with its manifold attractions, is of interest to the average sightseer, and accordingly the main stream of the touring public flows toward the great structure adjoining the capitol. All classes of all nationalities pass through its doors, and to be successful in their calling and to afford the universally polite service their position demands the attendants must possess a reserve fund of tact which might well bring them into notice in more ambitious fields.

Recently a modishly gowned woman, apparently in her early thirties, after wandering about the several departments during its forenoon, asked to be directed to the cafe, which is a part of the equipment of the building.

Having satisfied her hunger, the visitor, again accosting one of the guards, inquired the way to the smoking room.

Setting herself comfortably she drew from her handbag a daintily monogramed case and, taking therefrom a cigarette, struck a match and nonchalantly proceeded to enjoy a smoke. In an instant the guard was upon the scene.

"Madam," he began deprecatingly, "you are infringing the rules, and I shall have to ask you to stop smoking and withdraw."

"You told me this was the smoking room, did you not?" sweetly inquired the visitor.

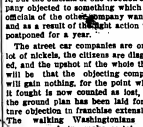
"It is the smoking room, but—but"—waved the attendant, "it's for men."

"Well, sir, the sign says 'smoking room,' and if you show me where I'm infringing any rule by smoking in the smoking room I'll withdraw, but not until then," returned the lady with an air of being well within her rights.

The guard, finding his authority ineffective, called up the captain of the watch, who joined his expostulations to those of his subordinate, but all to no avail. The woman turned on them a serene and unruffled countenance, and, looking at them as though they "were not," proceeded to finish her cigarette.

What the last little whiff had been expelled medam arose and, strolling leisurely through the corridors, was soon lost to sight, and now the thunderstruck guardians of the noble pile are considering the advisability of changing the phraseology of the sign and having the legend read:

"Smoking room. Sacred to the uses of men."



IF ANYBODY in New York runs across a congressional commission, consisting of Senator Nathan Bay Scott of West Virginia and Representative Richard Hartholdt of Missouri, nosing around their premises or even loitering around the back alleys, they need not be alarmed. These statesmen are looking for a place to build the new mail post office of New York.

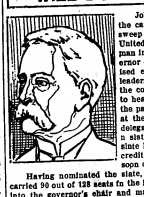
The post office department has already chosen the site at the new Pennsylvania terminal; it has been paid for, and the plans are being drawn for the building. But prior to the final passage of the bill authorizing the building a resolution was passed by congress appointing a commission, to consist of the postmaster general and the chairmen of the two building commissions, to go to New York and report on a suitable location.

CONGRESSMEN TARDY IN HUNT FOR BUILDING SITE

Postmaster General Cortelyou, in his annual report, stated that since the site had been chosen he had not called the commission together and it was thought at the post office department that it was all over. But a congressional commission must perform its function. A new postmaster general has succeeded Mr. Cortelyou. When Messrs. Scott and Hartholdt called upon him, he said he could not go, but he would send a man in his place. The hope is expressed that some one will plan the commission ground plan at Seventh avenue and Thirty-third street before they return.

QUARREL OF TRACTION MEN MAKES PEOPLE WALK

CONGRESS is Washington's city council and the people of the capital are now experiencing difficulties which arise from the fact that its aldermen meet only once a year.



The great new railroad station has been completed and one of the two railroads which enter the city has taken possession. Incoming and outgoing travelers are obliged to walk a long distance to the depot from and to the nearest street car line. There are many people who in this time of financial stringency do not care to pay for cabs, and so a long line of luggage bearers foot it along daily through the sticky district and to the paved doorway of the station.

The house of representatives "committee on District of Columbia" practically runs the town, for whatever it recommends congress as a rule accepts. Last year, knowing that the station was soon to be completed, the street railroad officials asked for a right of way to the new station. The committee was ready enough to grant it, but the officials of one traction company objected to something which the officials of the other company wanted, and as a result of the fight action was postponed for a year.

The street car companies are out a lot of nickels, the citizens are disgusted, and the upshot of the whole thing will be that the objecting company will gain nothing, for the point which it fought is now counted as lost, and the ground plan has been laid for future objection to franchise extensions. The walking Washingtonians are angry enough to make certain that their memories will hold on to the present grievance for years to come.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

WILL DON GORMAN'S TOGA

John Walter Smith, the man who engineered the campaign that brought about the Democratic sweep in Maryland and put himself in line for United States senator, was an almost unknown man in politics six months ago. He had been governor of his state and on retiring had been promised election as United States senator, but the leaders of the party turned him down and gave the coveted seat to Isidor Rayner. Smith took it to heart, but made no complaint and remained in the party. He quietly made his arrangements and at the Democratic state convention when all the delegates were at sea as to the best material for a state, he stepped in and nominated the whole slate himself, from governor down. He had been credited with ten votes in the convention, but he soon developed a strength of 114.

He then moved east to Isidor Rayner. Smith took it to heart, but made no complaint and remained in the party. He quietly made his arrangements and carried 90 out of 138 seats in the legislative assembly. He put Judge Crothers into the governor's chair and made himself safe for United States senator, the height of his ambition. One of his lieutenants will contest the other seat with Senator Rayner when his term expires and Smith will be the dictator of Maryland with none to say him nay. Never before has a man emerged from comparative obscurity and reached a commanding position in so short a time. And he has all his own work, moreover. He had determined to get both his revenge and the seat he was after, and he gets them both as a result of quiet working and scheming.

Smith is a self-made man in every respect, in business as in politics. He has made millions in lumber and other large commercial interests, and is prominent in financial circles, being director in several banks. Politics is prominent in financial circles, being director in several banks. Politics is a hobby, for he has no material ends to serve. On the other hand, it costs him immense sums, for as one has contributed to the Democratic funds more liberally than he. He is a bachelor and his father died in 1890, leaving his estate so involved that it scarcely served to pay the debts, and Smith and his mother were plunged from affluence to poverty in an instant. He has risen from a penniless orphan to one of the greatest capitalists of his native state and one of its greatest politicians.

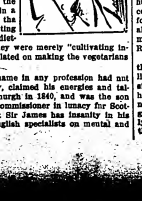
NEW CINCINNATI MAYOR

Leopold Markbreit, who has just been elected mayor of Cincinnati, is a soldier, a lawyer and a newspaper editor, besides being one of the most popular men in his town. He was a partner of Rutherford B. Hayes when the civil war broke out, and it was agreed between them that Hayes was to go to the war and Markbreit was to stay behind to attend to the office. Hayes was in command of a regiment at the battle of Carnifex Ferry, and was in a very tight position when he saw a new force debouching from the woods on his flank. He was about to order his men to turn their guns on this new enemy when he recognized Markbreit, whom he believed to be practicing law in Cincinnati. Markbreit was coming up to reinforce him, but the greeting he received was gruff: "What are you doing here? Why aren't you attending to the office?" But in the heat of the battle Hayes forgot his wrath and made no further objection to Markbreit remaining with the army.

Markbreit was wounded and had to return home, for his legs had become paralyzed and he was forced to depend on crutches. This did not incapacitate him, however, and his grit and courage served only to endear him with the people. Although crippled he is still an active man and has been for years editor and principal owner of the Cincinnati Volksblatt, one of the leading German papers in the country.

Markbreit is about 65, was born in Germany and came here as a boy. He has a sunny, genial disposition, with a kind word for everybody.

HAS FOUND 15 ASTEROIDS



One of the most successful discoveries of asteroids in America is a young astronomer who has graduated but eight years ago from Amherst college, and is now instructor and serving astronomer of Princeton university. He is Raymond Smith Dugan, of Montague, Mass., who has the fame of finding no less than 15 asteroids.

Most people would imagine that this infers principally good eyesight and ability to sit out in cold observatories on dark nights, in ambush for any hapless asteroids that might be incautiously looking about.

But as such work is so largely done by photographic, the successful asteroid pursuer wins through patience and a good head for mathematics. It is a matter of patient setting of photographic traps to catch unwonted visitors among the heavenly company, and a long search for overnight pictures after any intruders that may have wandered in.

Mr. Dugan took a B. A. at Amherst college in 1899, an M. A. at the same institution in 1902, and from 1899 to 1902 he was acting director of the observatory at the Syrian Protestant college at Beirut, Syria. He then became first assistant astronomer at the grand ducal astro-physical observatory at Konigstuhl, Heidelberg. Taking the degree of Ph. D. at Heidelberg university in 1905. Mr. Dugan was also in charge of the photograph work for the Lick eclipse expedition to Spain in 1905.

FRIEND OF THE SIRLOIN

Sir James Crichton Browne, whose recent vigorous onslaught on vegetarianism and sturdy defense of the mutton chop and kindred of beef has aroused the ire of the London food faddists, is the "Teddy Roosevelt" of the British medical profession. He is always going for something and he goes for it as hard as he knows how. In consequence he gets an amount of free advertising which the old fogey doctors regard as downright scandalous and opposed to the most sacred ethics of the medical profession.

But Sir James does not care for their criticism any more than the president does for the threats of the trust magnates. He delights in a controversial shindy. He says things with the deliberate purpose of provoking folk into hitting back. Thus, for instance, when he told the dietists that instead of being stealth reformers they were merely "cultivating inanities on lentils and distilled water," he calculated on making the vegetarians angry.

He is a man who would have made a name in any profession had not medicine, and especially the study of lunacy, claimed his energies and talents at an early age. He was born in Edinburgh in 1840, and was the son of Dr. W. A. F. Browne, who was the royal commissioner in lunacy for Scotland, so that it has been said jestingly that Sir James has insanity in his family. He to-day is one of the greatest English specialists on mental and nervous diseases.

Around the Metropolis

What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

NEW YORK.—While 75 women's clubs in their federated se well as their individual capacity have been talking about the crying need for a working girls' hotel, and racking their composite brains for feasible schemes to get the necessary money, the poetor of a little church in Harlem is busy building one.

About two years and a half ago it occurred to Rev. H. M. Tyndall that the broken stone and sand which were the by-products of building excavations in the city might be put to better use than that of increasing the size of various dump heaps. Why shouldn't they be purchased, he reasoned, for a nominal sum by contractors who are putting up concrete buildings and be used for his new plan? He determined to become the first of these contractors. His congregation had already decided that the pastor's project of a hotel for working girls under the auspices of the People's tabernacle at 52 East One Hundred and Second street was worthy and practicable and were ready to pledge their support.

So Mr. Tyndall bought the stone and sand, and collected a force of Italian laborers to turn it into concrete. In the intervals when he wasn't boosting the mixing he was drawing pictures of a five-story and basement building with 75 rooms and a complete assortment of comforts and some luxuries.

As fast as contributions came in the work progressed and the building at 58 East One Hundred and Second street is now completed. Moreover, although there has been no source of revenue but voluntary contributions, there isn't the sign of a lien or mortgage anywhere in sight.

The 75 rooms are bare of furniture and the 16 front windows present a blank and curtainless glare to passersby, and Mr. Tyndall is now trying to raise the $2,000 necessary to furnish the rooms.

While the hotel is designed primarily for wage earning girls, young women who are strangers in the city will get temporary accommodations provided they can show credentials of respectability. Room and board will be furnished at from three to five dollars a week. Women over 35 are reckoned as undesirable inmates.

Questions in regard to dancing, card playing and the entertainment of men visitors have not yet been settled. They will be taken up as soon as some philanthropic person or persons donate the furniture.

MUSIC FROM MAN-HOLES IS DUE TO LEAK IN WIRES

MUSICAL manholes on Broadway, from which issued sweet strains of well-known selections, proved quite a sensation the other day. New York streets never have been noted for their cleanliness, but as purveyors of free music for the masses for the masses hole rivals their success. Judged from their first accomplishment, is undoubted.

The discovery of this subterranean melody was made by two negroes who, while strolling along Broadway, were surprised to hear music from a manhole near Twenty-sixth street. It was a ringing cornet solo rendered with great spirit. The two immediately fell into a violent discussion as to what the player was doing under the street and how he got there. Before they could decide to call the police a large audience had collected and when the solo gave place to the strains of a full brass band the applause was enthusiastic.

NEW YORK is to rival the splendor of the ancient Rome baths of Caracalla, famed as the most sumptuous the world has ever known. Father Knickerbocker's effort in this line, however, is to be in the equipment of a barber shop de luxe, which really will deserve the much abused name of "tonsorial palace."

The new regal hair-cutting and shaving establishment is to be installed in one of the great railway terminals now being built. The whole construction is to be of marble and glass. Each chair will cost $150 and will be surrounded by a canopy and velvet hangings. There are to be ten shower baths, all finished in marble, and each manicurist will have a little glass compartment at her own. Marble benches like those in the Roman baths will line the walls, and each chair will be directly in front of its own marble washstand.

It will undoubtedly be the costliest and most splendid barber shop in the world, but it is not known whether the best suggestion of all, that only males be employed in it, will be adopted.

BARBER PALACE PLANNED IN BIG RAILWAY TERMINAL

STOKES PREVENTS RAID ON SON'S ROOF BARNYARD

W. E. D. STOKES, owner of the Ansonia apartments, at Broadway and Seventy-third street, spent a busy hour the other day when he heard that complaint had been made against him to the board of health for harboring "pigs and geese" on the roof of the big building in violation of the sanitary code. Mr. Stokes did have a pig and four geese on the roof, but they were all in safety before the arrival of the man sent by Chief Sanitary Inspector Raynor to investigate the sky farm.

The pig is called Ninky Poo and is the adored pet of Mr. Stokes' son, Willie. Harle Dodge Stokes, Jr. Ever since last summer the little animal has had an ideal home amid the chimney pots of the Ansonia. Four wild geese with clipped wings were recently added to the establishment to keep the pig company.

All was serene until a complaint was lodged with the board of health. But Mr. Stokes heard a brief hour in advance that his farm was to be raided. He was in an office on the sixteenth floor of the apartment house, but when the safety of his son's pig was threatened business was dropped. He dashed up the narrow stairway in the twilight, followed by his son, and made a brief survey of the roof. Ninky Poo, unconscious of her peril, was noisily devouring pep. The four wild geese were dining sumptuously on cracked corn.

Mr. Stokes, sent for John a servant.

"The board of health is after the boy's pets," said Mr. Stokes. "We must get the geese and the pig out of the way before the inspector comes. Take them down to the basement in the freight elevator."

NO INSANITY SIGNS IN MRS. BRADLEY

SO DECLARE TWO EXPERT ALIENISTS WHO TESTIFY FOR THE PROSECUTION.

Evidence In All In—After Eight Hours of Argument and the Judge's Charge the Murder Case Will Go to Jury.

Washington, Nov. 30.—"Oh! I am so glad it is all over at last." These words were uttered Friday by Mrs. Annie M. Bradley, charged with the murder of former Senator Arthur M. Brown, of Utah, as with a smile she was led from the courtroom to the prison van which was to take her back to jail.

The presentation of evidence had just beeo concluded and court adjourned until Saturday, when arguments began. Justice Stafford announced that an agreement had been reached among counsel for four hours of argument on each side. These will be completed Monday afternoon, and Justice Stafford said he would then deliver his charge and give the case to the jury.

Two Experts for Prosecution.

The testimony of the two government insanity experts, Dr. Edward H. Brush of Baltimore, and Dr. Smith Ely Jelliffe of New York, was the feature of Friday's proceedings, both of these alienists declaring that there was nothing in the record of the case to indicate that Mrs. Bradley was insane. Counsel for the defense attempted to impeach the testimony of these experts by showing that they had been called for the government and that as a matter of course they were testifying in the interest of the government. Each of them repudiated this charge and declared that they would have testified to the insanity of Mrs. Bradley as readily as they testified to her sanity had they found her to be insane. They were questioned at length and both cited the acts of the defendant, testified to by witnesses, as showing her to be sane.

Rev. D. H. Utter Testifies.

Rev. David H. Utter, pastor of the Unitarian church of Denver, Col., who in former testimony has been referred to as "the priest," was called on the stand. He was Mrs. Bradley's pastor in Salt Lake City and testified to a conversation he had with her in 1905, she saying in effect, according to his testimony, that Senator Brown would merry her when a gun was placed before him, but the prisoner added he did not understand that she proposed shooting him. He rather thought some one else would undertake to force him to marry her.

Mrs. Bradley was recalled and stated that she had no recollection of such a conversation. The pastor occupied a seat at her side during most of the day and appeared to sympathize with her in her predicament.

Court Admissions Expert.

Washington, Nov. 27.—Dramatic scenes marked the proceedings Tuesday in the trial of Mrs. Annie M. Bradley, charged with having killed former Senator Arthur M. Brown, of Utah, in this city last December. Dr. Stanton D. Evans, of New York, the alienist who testified in the Thaw case, not only declared that Mrs. Bradley was insane when she shot Brown, but entered with such vigor in defending his opinion and in denunciation of the conduct of the dead senator that Justice Stafford reminded the witness that the late Senator Brown was not on trial and not there to defend himself, and admonished him to refer to the dead man only when necessary to show the effect of his acts upon the mind of the defendant.

MURDER QUICKLY AVENGED.

Italian Kills Railroad Employe and is Slain by Hunters.

Mifflintown, Pa., Nov. 28.—Julius Derr, an employe of the Pennsylvania railroad, was shot and fatally wounded Thursday by an unidentified Italian laborer, who was pursued by a party of hunters and shot dead. The Italian, who had been drinking and was disorderly, shot Derr when ordered from the railroad station. The Italian then fled, pursued by hunters who had witnessed the shooting, and took refuge under a railroad bridge. Here he drew his revolver and began firing at his pursuers, who returned the shots killing him instantly.

Must Not Seize Imported Liquor.

Grand Forks, N. D., Nov. 29.—Judge C. F. Templeton of the state district court Thursday decided that the North Dakota statute authorizing the seizure of liquor imported into the state to be used as a beverage is unconstitutional. He held that the law violated the commerce clause of the United States constitution.

Woman Reaches Age of 106 Years.

Oxford, Mass., Nov. 30.—Mrs. Catherina Seay passed her one hundred and sixth birthday Friday at her home in North Oxford. She is bedridden, almost blind and her right side has been paralyzed for years. Mrs. Seay has smoked a pipe since she was ten years old, and now it is her only solace.

Florence Nightingals Decorated.

London, Nov. 30.—Florence Nightingale, the English philanthropist, has been decorated with the order of merit by King Edward. She is the first woman to receive this distinction.

POWERS JURY COMPLETED

EIGHT DEMOCRATS AND FOUR REPUBLICANS SELECTED.

Attorney Williams States the Case of the Prosecution—Condemns All Political Bias.

Georgetown, Ky., Nov. 29.—The jury in Caleb Powers' case was completed Thursday afternoon. There are eight Democrats and four Republicans on the jury.

At the afternoon session witnesses for the commonwealth were called and attachments issued for those who did not answer. The indictment of Powers found by the Franklin county grand jury April 17, 1900, was read and Attorney Williams stated the case of the prosecution, reciting the crime and defining the term conspiracy.

Judge Williams touched one political feature of the case, saying that the only man meaner than a Republican who would acquit a prisoner guilty of a crime because of Republican affiliation would be a Democrat who would cut the prisoner of liberty because of political bias.

He gave brief statements of the political history of the period surrounding the commission of the crime, purposing thereby to show a motive for Caleb Powers' alleged participation in it. He recalled the bringing of armed men from the mountains, the responsibility for this being placed on Powers.

CZAR NO LONGER "AUTOCRAT."

Russian Duma Decrees Ancient Title is Now Untenable.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 27.—The Duma Tuesday night decreed that the title of autocrat, which has been borne by the emperors of Russia for centuries, is no longer tenable within the Russian state and is incompatible with the regime inaugurated by the manifesto issued by Emperor Nicholas on October 30, 1905.

At the close of a great constitutional debate in the lower chamber, by a vote of 113 to 246, rejected the word "autocrat" and then adopted a reply to the address from the throne unanimously, amid scenes of intense excitement, prolonged cheers and the singing of the national anthem.

The result of the session is regarded as a fine victory for the Constitutional Democratic party, the leadership of Prof. Paul N. Milnkoff, who succeeded in forcing the Octoberists' hand. The final vote was taken after the demonstrative withdrawal of the extreme right Social Democrats, members of the group of toil and the Poles.

WATERWAY BILL IS VICTOR.

Senate Declares Des Plaines and Illinois River Navigable.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 27.—Deep waterway stock went up Thursday when the senate started on its way to the governor's office the so-called Allen party bill declaring the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers to be navigable streams. Members of the upper branch of the legislature heard a message from Gov. Deneen asking them to pass it with an emergency clause attached to it. The bill received 34 yea votes, only two negatives being recorded. The bill has been passed by the house and now goes to the executive for his signature.

This is first blood for Gov. Deneen in his fight to oust the Economy Light and Power company from rights it claims in the Des Plaines river where the concern is constructing a dam at Dresden Heights. The measure gives authority to the governor to remove any obstructions that may be found in the Des Plaines or Illinois rivers.

WESTON REACHES CHICAGO.

Aged Pedestrian Completes His Tramp from Portland.

Chicago, Nov. 27.—Escorted by prominent city officials in automobiles and cheering crowds of people on foot, Edward Payson Weston arrived in the outskirts of Chicago late Tuesday evening and was almost within sight of the destination of his long journey. The last few miles of the way from Portland, Me., were completed Wednesday. He had traversed a distance of more than 1,100 miles. He was greeted by thousands of people which ontdid his welcome 40 years ago when more than 50,000 turned out to greet him.

Blow for Anti-Pool Selling Law.

St. Louis, Nov. 27.—A decision was rendered by Circuit Judge George H. Williams Tuesday that practically renders void the new anti-pool selling law enacted by the last legislature at Gov. Folk's request and opens up the way in St. Louis for a resumption of handbook bets on racing. In freeing Frank O'Haver, a barber, of the charge of pool selling, Judge Williams ruled that; to prove the offense charged, it must be shown that the race on which O'Haver placed a bet was actually run, and that the horse on which the money was placed ran.

Jenkins Brothers Indicted.

New York, Nov. 27.—John O. Jenkins, Jr., until recently president of the Jenkins Trust company of Brooklyn; Frank Jenkins, deposed head of the Williamsburg Trust company, and Fred Jenkins, formerly a director of the latter institution, were indicted Tuesday for forgery in the third degree. The indicted men are brothers.

SUGGESTION FOR UNCLE SAM.

PRESIDENT GOES TO OLD MADISON HOME

HE SPENDS THANKSGIVING DAY WITH FAMILY AT MONTPELIER, VA.

Secretary Taft Celebrates on His Russian Train—American Colonies in London, Vienna, Berlin and Tiflis Observe the Day.

Washington, Nov. 29.— President Roosevelt spent Thursday at the old home of President Madison near Montpelier, Va. This trip was taken in variation of the custom of the president, which has been to go to his country home at Pine Knot, Va., on Thanksgiving day. With him were Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Longworth, Ethel and Quentin Roosevelt.

Upon reaching home carriages were taken and all were driven to the White House. Their Thanksgiving dinner was the occasion for a family reunion, Mr. and Mrs. Longworth remaining at the White House.

Taft Celebrates on His Train.

Ufa, European Russia, Nov. 29.—On board the train bearing Secretary Taft and his party to Moscow toasts were drunk Thursday to President Roosevelt and Emperor Nicholas. In honor of Thanksgiving the Russian passengers presented an elaborate cake to the American secretary of war, hearing Russian and American flags.

Mr. Taft's train crossed the frontier at noon local time.

Banquet in London.

London, Nov. 29.—Whitelaw Reid, the American ambassador, spoke optimistically of the financial outlook, and Field Marshal Sir George Stuart White eqologized President Roosevelt in the warmest terms at the Thanksgiving dinner of the American society Thursday night.

That the financial depression was felt among the Americans in England was shown by the attendance at the banquet, which was the smallest in several years. Three hundred guests participated, compared with 400 at last year's banquet. The president of the society, Col. Millard Hunsiker, was absent, R. Newton Crane, a former president, presided.

Feast and Dance in Vienna.

Vienna, Nov. 29.—The American colony celebrated Thanksgiving day with a banquet which was followed by a dance. Among the notable guests were Profs. Pollitzer and Obersteiner of Vienna university, both of whom, in able speeches, referred to the scientific progress in America. The other guests included Nelson O'Shaughnessy, third secretary of the American embassy, and former Congressman O'Donnell of Michigan. Both the emperor and President Roosevelt were toasted.

Big Dinner in Berlin.

Berlin, Nov. 29.—Three hundred Americans celebrated Thanksgiving by dining together Thursday night at the Zoological Gardens. In the absence of the American ambassador, Charlemagne Tower, Consul General Thackara presided. President Hadley of Yale and Prof. Schofield of Harvard made speeches. A telegram of greeting was sent to President Roosevelt.

Gala Dinner in Tiflis.

Tiflis, Nov. 29.—A gala Thanksgiving dinner given here Thursday was attended by John F. Jackson, American minister to Persia, who arrived Wednesday, and the highest military and civil officials in the Caucasus.

Lad Implicated in Big Theft.

Pinconning, Mich., Nov. 27.—Martin E. Bourke, aged 19, was arrested here Tuesday afternoon in connection with the theft of a package containing $1,000 from State Treasurer Frank P. Glazier on a Grand Trunk train November 13. Bourke confessed to having the money, and returned $812 to the officers who arrested him. His father, an undertaker, says he will make good the remaining $187.

JUDGE BRADWELL IS DEAD

CHICAGO PIONEER AND LEGAL EXPERT PASSES AWAY.

Had Lived in Metropolis Since 1834—Was an Indian Fighter of Note—Leaves Two Children.

Chicago, Nov. 30.—James B. Bradwell, former county judge, publisher of the Chicago Legal News and pioneer lawyer of this city, died here in Chicago since 1834, died Friday at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. F. A. Helmer. He was 79 years old. Pneumonia and kidney disorder caused death, although the veteran had not been in his usual vigorous health for two years. Present when he died were his children, Thomas Bradwell, former justice of the peace, and Mrs. Helmer. Attending him were his grandson, Dr. James B. Bradwell and Charles E. Kahler.

His wife, who was Miss Myra Colby, was distinguished as the first woman lawyer in the United States. She edited the Legal News until her death in 1894.

Mr. Bradwell was an Englishman, having been born April 16, 1828, in Loughborough, coming to the United States with his parents, however, when he was two years old. After a stay of three years at Ithaca, N. Y., the family came west to Jacksonville, Ill., traveling in a "prairie schooner" drawn by a yoke of oxen and a span of horses. The stay in Jacksonville was short and the same conveyance which carried them from the east was again put into commission and headed for Chicago, tying up on the lake shore, where Randolph street now is.

Indians and wolves kept them and their days were passed in danger and physical discomfort. Trekking on, Bradwell's journeyed in their schooner to a point on the Desplaines river near Wheeling, where a tract of government land was pre-empted. Although the site of the homestead on the Desplaines river is not a great way from the present limits of Chicago, yet in that day the farm was a long way from Fort Dearborn.

B. FULTON FRENCH ACQUITTED.

Jury's Verdict Ends Noted Feud Trial in Kentucky.

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 30.—A special from Bestyville says that the jury in the case of B. Fulton French, accused of complicity in the assassination of James B. Marcum, returned a verdict of not guilty. The acquittal of French ends one of the most noted feud trials in the Kentucy mountains. Judge Hargis and Edward Callahan former sheriff of Jackson, who were charged with being implicated in the murder, have also been acquitted.

SON KILLED AND FATHER SHOT.

Edward Ford's Deadly Work with Revolver in Bloomington.

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 30.—Frank McCoy, 40 years old, was shot and killed and Charles Ford, McCoy's son, fatally wounded Friday, when Edward Ford opened fire on the McCoys with a revolver. The shooting was the outcome of charges made by Ford that the McCoys had poisoned several of his horses. After being arrested Ford claimed he shot in self-defense. The men are all well-to-do farmers.

Family Tragedy at Sass Lake, Ind.

Knox, Ind., Nov. 30.—During a family quarrel, Carl Farina shot and killed his brother-in-law, Philip Mundon, at Sass Lake Friday afternoon. After the shooting Farina fled and has not yet been apprehended. The victim was a stepson of the late George Scoville, an attorney, who defended Guiteau, the assassin of President Garfield.

Gen. B. D. Pritchard Dies.

Allegan, Mich., Nov. 27.—Gen. B. D. Pritchard, a civil war veteran, died at his home here Tuesday night, aged 72 years. It was Gen. Pritchard's regiment, together with a Wisconsin regiment, which effected the capture of Jefferson Davis.

ACCUSED BANKER COMMITS SUICIDE

HOWARD MAXWELL OF BROOKLYN CUTS HIS THROAT WITH A RAZOR.

Was Under Indictment—Deposed Head of Borough Bank, Charged with Grand Larceny and Forgery, Overcome by His Disgrace.

New York, Nov. 27.—Howard Maxwell, deposed president of the Borough bank of Brooklyn, who was under indictment for grand larceny and forgery, and was released from jail Monday night on $30,000 bail, committed suicide Tuesday. He cut his throat and left wrist with a razor and penknife in the bathroom of his home in Brooklyn and died at night at Long Island College hospital.

Maxwell, who was locked up last Thursday, had felt his humiliation keenly, and during his incarceration had appeared hopelessly despondent. He had, however, given his family no intimation, so far as known, that he contemplated making away with himself. His wife was prostrated by the tragedy and is under the care of physicians.

Had Trouble Getting Bail.

Maxwell was 49 years old and leaves a wife but no children. On November 21 he was indicted for grand larceny jointly with former Cashier Arthur Campbell and Director William Gow of the Borough bank. There were other indictments against him, involving forgery in a quarterly bank statement made to the state banking department. When the three men were arraigned Campbell and Gow secured bondsmen, but, to the surprise of many who knew of Maxwell's popularity in financial circles and society, none offered to go upon his bond.

Was a Rising Financier.

Maxwell had been regarded as one of the rising financiers of Brooklyn and was reputed to be worth $200,000 when the crash in banking affairs came. The home in which he killed himself was recently made over to the Borough bank. He was cashier of the Kings County bank when that institution was merged with the Union bank four years ago. At that time he had no property, so far as known, but he enjoyed the confidence of William Gow, of the advertising firm of Ward & Gow, and these two, with others, organized the Borough bank of Brooklyn. The Borough bank, operating on what has been described as "liberal lines," for a time achieved remarkable success.

NEW YORK ANGERS BANKERS.

Many in the West Will Transfer Exchanges to Chicago.

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 30.—"I am president of three banks in Nebraska and I have been keeping money on deposit in New York, but from now on I will transfer my exchanges to Chicago and cease relations with New York, and so will hundreds of other western bankers who have been in the financial reports and newspapers of New York the mops indicating by colors what Omaha and other western cities are in sore financial straits," said M. A. Ayers of Dakota City, Neb., who is in Omaha.

This sentiment is expressed by many other bankers of Nebraska and the west. President H. W. Hates of the Omaha Clearing House association, without condemning New York, declares Chicago the logical depository of the west.

KIMMONS ALIVE IN TEXAS.

Wilkins at Least Innocent of Killing That Man.

Oakland, Cal., Nov. 30.—Sheriff Barnett of Oakland Friday morning received this telegram:

"Am in Sour Lake, Tex. Know nothing of accident. Write to-day.—T. Earl Kimmons."

This definitely clears up the mystery surrounding the man who the authorities at one time suspected had been probably murdered by M. A. Wilkins, now a prisoner charged with having killed his wife.

Tragic Death of College Student.

Davenport, Ia., Nov. 29.—The body of Frank Wade, a student at Ames, was found Thursday evening beside the railroad tracks near here. He disappeared after leaving the college to spend the Thanksgiving vacation with his fiancee, Katherine Carlin, who lives near Davenport, and when he failed to arrive in time for dinner search was instituted. Robison had evidently been killed by jumping from the train as it passed the Carlin home.

Louisville Car Strike Over.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 27.—The strike of 700 union employes of the Louisville Railway company was called off by a vote taken by the men Tuesday evening. The men made no conditions, acknowledging themselves beaten. The strike lasted 12 days and was marked by two serious riots.

Turns on Gas and Music and Dies.

New York, Nov. 29.—Turning on the gas and a phonograph at the same time, Mrs. Georgia Tittle, aged 35, committed suicide at her home Thursday to the strains of "In the Wild Woods Where the Blue Grass Grow," her favorite air. She was despondent because of ill health.

PROOF FOR TWO CENTS.

If You Suffer with Your Kidneys and Back Write to This Man.

G. W. Winney, Medina, N. Y., invites kidney sufferers to write to him.

To all who enclose postage he will reply telling how Doan's Kidney Pills cured him after he had doctored and had been in two different hospitals for eighteen months, suffering intense pain in the back, lameness, twinges when stooping or lifting, languor, dizzy spells and rheumatism. "Before I used Doan's Kidney Pills," says Mr. Winney, "I weighed 143. After taking 10 or 12 boxes I weighed 162 and was completely cured."

A Sensitive Soul.

Owen Mudge was a very sensitive man. More than once at a harsh word he had forsaken profitable work and gone home for sympathy to his wife. One morning Owen started out to help Glenn Butler, who had bought a new stump-pulling machine and was preparing to clear a field.

Toward noon Owen came heck. Mrs. Mudge sighed and waited sympathetically for the explanation.

"I just couldn't stand it," said Owen, rubbing his jaw. "When I was that stump-puller twist them roots out, it reminded me so of the times I went to the dentist to get back teeth extracted. The first thing I knew I was limp as a rag, and I just ached oil over and had to quit."—Youth's Companion.

Best He Could Do.

It was his first circuit, and, moreover, he had to defend his first client, who was a burglar more than respected burglar. In an interval he approached a veteran member of the bar and asked for advice.

"And how long do you think I ought to make my speech to the jury, sir?" he inquired.

"I should say about an hour," said the old hand.

"An hour! Why, I thought ten minutes would be ample! Why so long?"

"Well," said his adviser, "you see, they can't sentence him till you're finished, and the longer you talk the longer he'll be out of jail!"—Story Stories.

Was Holding His Own.

A wealthy man, revisiting his native village, was telling his old cronies around the store stove how he had achieved his great success. At the conclusion of his recital an old character thet he had known as a boy contered.

"Now are you, Tom?" said the great man, holding out his hond. "And how have you been getting along all these years?"

The old fellow shifted his quid and spat.

"Well," he said, "when I hit this town more'n 40 years ago I didn't have a red cent, an' now—wa'al, I guess I'm holdin' my own right."

A Fascinating Game.

A precocious little girl living on one of the crowded business thoroughfares of the city has the habit of running out of the window at the busy, street below for hours at a time.

"What is it, Gladys, that you find so constantly interesting in the street?" asked her mother one day.

"Oh," came the wise rejoinder, "I'm just watching people go pro and con."—Harper's Weekly.

Experience.

"Experience is the best teacher," remarked the man who indulges in tart sayings.

"Yes," answered the skeptic; "but occasionally, in distinguishing between mushrooms and toadstools, your edncation comes too late to be of practical service."

The statesman leads the masses. The masses lead the politician.

BEGAN YOUNG.

Had "Coffee Nerves" from Youth.

"When very young I began noting coffee and continued up to the past six months," writes a lady, "and have been for some exceedingly nervous, thin and very sallow. After quitting coffee and drinking Postum for a month my nervousness disappeared and has never returned. My complexion now is clear and rosy, my skin soft and smooth. As a good complexion was something I had always desired, I need simply regard even the this were the only benefit derived from drinking Postum.

"Before beginning this I had suffered greatly from indigestion and headache; these troubles are now unknown.

"Best of all, I changed from coffee to Postum without the slightest inconvenience, did not even have a headache. Have known coffee drinkers who were visiting me, to use Postum, for a week without being aware that they were not drinking coffee.

"I have known several to begin the use of Postum and drop it because they did not boil it properly. After explaining how it should be prepared they have tried it again and pronounced it delicious."

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE

CAUSES OF THE PRESENT FINANCIAL CONDITIONS IS MADE THE CHIEF TOPIC.

SUGGESTS REMEDIES FOR ILLS

CONTROL OF CORPORATIONS AND RAILROADS TO PREVENT OVERCAPITALIZATION.

Believes This Would Solve the Problem Together with Provision for More Elastic Currency—Recommends Postal Banks and Asks for Legislation Along Many Lines.

Washington, Dec. 5.— President Roosevelt's annual message to congress is a voluminous document of nearly 20,000 words, for the longest time possible has been confined to 15,000. The opening subject of the message is the financial condition of the country, and for which the president places much of the blame upon unscrupulous stock speculators, and says:

"In any large body of men, however, there are certain to be some who are dishonest, and if the conditions are such that these men prosper or commit their misdeeds with impunity their example is a very evil thing for the community. Where these men are in business men of great sagacity and of temperament both unscrupulous and without conscience the conditions are such that they act with superior power, and can act at first without effective check from public opinion, for the time many innocent people into making investments or embarking in enterprises that are really unsound. When the misdeeds of these men come to dishonest practices are discovered, suffering comes not only upon those who have misled, but upon many whom they have misled. It is a painful awakening, whenever it occurs, and it naturally, when it does occur those who suffer are apt to forget that the real cause of the deferred the more painful it would be. In the effort to minimize the evil it is both wise and proper to endeavor so far as possible to minimize the distress of those who have been misled by the gulling of the unscrupulous, but it is certain that no such distress from relief in advance and to the effort at striving to put at once the authors of the evil where their power for evil can end, faring, and, as a means to this end, where possible to punish those responsible for them. There may be honest differences of opinion as to many governmental policies; but surely there can be no difference as to the need of unflinching perseverance in the war against crooked dishonesty.

He quotes at length from his message of last year in which he advocated federal control of corporations doing interstate business, and believes that in such control would be found the remedy for overcapitalization which he believes has brought about the present financial condition. He says:

"Of steady alert should be by publication, enforced if need be by penalty under-taken, but resolutely persevered in, to assert the sovereignty of the national government by affirmative action.

"This is only in form a reenactment, in substance it is merely a restoration; for from the earliest time such regulation of industrial activities has been recognized as in the sphere of the law-making bodies; and all that I propose is to treat the business of interstate commerce in such manner as will prevent the commonwealth slaughtering that it has always possessed, not only in this country, but also in England before we assumed the control became a separate nation.

Federal Control at Railroads Is Favored.

"No small part of the trouble that we have comes from carrying to an extreme the national virtue of self-reliance, of individual initiative of energy and action. It is wise to conserve this virtue and it is provide for full play for its exercise, compatible with seeing that liberty exercised by one man does not work wrong others. Unfortunately, this is the kind of liberty that the best and most effective regulation inevitably breeds. The founders of the republic fully provided that the national government should have complete control of matters of interstate commerce. There was then practically no interstate commerce save such as was conducted by water, and this the national government actually proceeded to take in hand by improving and effective fashion. Conditions have now so wholly changed that the interstate commerce by water is insignificant when compared with that which that goes by land, and almost all big business concerns are now engaged in interstate commerce. As a result, it can be but partially and imperfectly controlled or regulated by the action of any one of the several states; such action inevitably tending to be either too drastic or else inadequate in the different cases ineffective for purposes of justice. Only the national government can in thoroughgoing fashion exercise the needed control. It is well to make sure that there should be any extension of federal authority, for such authority already exists under the constitution in simplest and most effective form. It is merely looking facts in the face, and realizing that the centralization has already come and can not be avoided, and of the good that can be done at large can only protect itself from certain evil effects of this inevitable centralization by providing better methods for the exercise of governmental control, authority already centralized in the national government in the same centralization itself. There must be no halt in the healthy continuance of the process in which this nation has elected in pursue, and has steadily pursued during the last six years, as shown both in the legislation of congress and the administration of the law by the department of justice. What the present need is is connection with the railroads. As in time in other matters there should now be either a national incorporation act or a law making each large company in engage in interstate commerce adopt certain general rules which should be so framed as to give to the interstate commerce commission power to pass upon the future issue of securities, which should be provided to enable the commission to supervise in its judgment it is necessary, in make a physical valuation of any railroad. As I stated in my message to the congress a year ago, full power should be given power to enter into agreements, subject to these agreements being made public in unless detail and to the consent of the interstate commerce commission being first obtained, limit the national government, assumes proper control of interstate commerce, in the exercise of the authority already possessed, it will be impossible to give to, or, to some from the railroads the power that they require and all other great corporations will do well to recognize that this control must come. Any such question is as to what government body can most wisely exercise it. The courts will determine the limits within which the federal authority can exercise it, but there will still remain ample work within each state for the railway commission of that state; and the national interstate commission will combine to work in harmony with the several state commissions, each within its own province, to achieve the desired end.

Control of Interstate Business Concerns Urged.

"Moreover, in my judgment there should be additional legislation looking to the proper control of the great business concerns engaged in interstate business. Such control to be exercised for their own benefit and prosperous on the subject can only accomplish a certain amount. No legislation can by any possibility guarantee the business community against the results of speculative folly and flurry, but it can guarantee an individual against the evil consequences which spring from individual mortgagee his house to buy an automobile he himself can not afford and wealthy men, or men who pose as such, are in consequence apt to be tempted to become such, indulge in reckless speculation—especially if it is accompanied by dishonesty—they jeopardize not only their own fortunes but the fortunes of many innocent fellow-citizens, for they expose the whole business community to dangerous distress.

He advises against any general tariff legislation this session by congress, and says:

"In a country of such phenomenal growth as ours it is probably well that every dozen years or so the tariff law should be carefully scrutinized so as to make sure that the various schedules therein are conformed thereby, that proper revenue is provided, and that our foreign trade is encouraged. There must always be a minimum a tariff which will not only allow for the collection of an ample revenue but which will at least make good the difference in the cost of production here and abroad; that is, the difference in the labor cost here and abroad, due to the high being of the wage-worker must ever be carefully safeguarded by our tariff laws. The question should be approached purely from a business standpoint, and at the times and the manner of the changes being such as to avoid the minimum of disturbance and disturbance in the business world, and in the least degree to affect selfish and factional motives. The sole consideration should be the welfare of the whole people, which means that the business should be conducted with the utmost regard to the effect upon the wage-worker, and the interest of the laboring man should be carefully guarded in every way. The question should be approached purely from the standpoint of the public good. In my judgment the best way to secure this result is to provide that the whole matter is immediately after such election as may be held.

He asks for the repeal of the tariff on paper and wood pulp.

He reviews and enlarges upon his previous recommendations for the establishment of federal inheritance and income tax laws.

Attention is called to the prosecution of wealthy offenders against the national laws, and in this connection he says that the laws under which these prosecutions are based be strengthened and made more definite.

The Use and the Abuse of Injunctions.

"Instances of abuse in the granting of injunctions in labor disputes undoubtedly occur, and the resentment in the minds of those who feel that they have been unjustly leveled and their liberty of action and of speech unwarrantably restrained continues to grow. Much of the attack on the writ of injunction process is wholly without warrant; but I am convinced that there is warrant for the assertion that in some of it there is warrant. The question is hard to solve, for the abuse is important, and unless the courts will themselves abate the abuse special legislative is certain ultimately to demand some form of legislative action. It would be most unfortunate for our social welfare if we should permit many honest laboring men to come to feel that they had just cause for regarding our courts with hostility. I earnestly recommend to the attention of the congress the plan which has been partially devised which will limit the abuse of injunctions and protect innocent parties from time to time it unwarrantably incommoded by injunctions granted on ex parte showing. The plan is substantially expressed with the use of the process of injunction by the courts in labor disputes, but where state laws are in question it is not immediately applicable to this question as I am informed that it will soon receive the consideration of the supreme court."

He asks legislation in the interest of labor he favors federal incorporation of railroads; providing limited hours of labor for railroad employes; to all workmen employed in any way by the government, and says:

"The constitutionality of the employers' liability act passed by the last congress has been carried before the courts. In one jurisdiction it has been by the declared unconstitutional, and in three jurisdictions constitutionality has been affirmed. The question has been carried to the supreme court of the United States and heard by that tribunal, and a decision is expected shortly. I trust that the court will sustain the constitutionality of this act. I urge that legislation along the lines advocated in my message to the last congress, especially in practice of putting the entire burden of loss of life or limb upon the employer, the victim's family is a form of social insurance which is both the most effective and the most unavailable prominence. In both our state legislation and our national legislation with few exceptions, scarcely gum has been done to effectively put into force servant principle of the old law of liability, and in some cases there has been a slight modification of a complete outgrown principle has not yet been secured.

He favors the extension of the eight hour law to all government work, and government, and to all work carried on by the government. He favors the creation for the compulsory investigation of industrial disputes, and says:

"The need for some provision for such investigation was forcibly illustrated during the past summer. A strike of railway employes seriously threatened, with telegraphic communication, causing great damage to business interests and serious inconvenience to the general public. Appeals were made to me from many parts of the country, from boards of trade, from bodies of citizens, from chambers of commerce, and from labor organizations, urging that steps be taken to terminate the strike. Everything that could be done in propriety be done by a representative of the government was done without avail, and for weeks the public stood by and suffered without relief from the strike. Had the machinery existed and had there been authority for compulsory investigation of the dispute, the public would have been spared its worst evils. of the merits of the controversy, and public opinion would promptly have brought about prompt adjustment.

"It is idle to hold that without good laws some substantial relief in the over-working of women, as the failure to protect injuries from loss of life or limb, can be effectively reached, save in less than the evils of sweating and stock-watering can be reached without good laws. To fail to stop these practices by legislation means to encourage honest men into them, because otherwise dishonest men, and surely will take advantage of them will have a certain gain over men who do not. We will correct these evils, well and good; if we do not we are ready to aid them.

Postal Savings-Waterway Systems Should Be Developed.

"The conservation of our national resources and their proper use constitute the fundamental problem which underlies almost every other problem of our national life. We must maintain for the advantage of the stalwart and self-reliant people the natural resources of our land without which that civilization cannot exist. We must show foresight, we must look ahead. As a nation we are trying to conduct the business of the present prosperity but if this prosperity is to be permanent it is as necessary for future success such as no other nation has had as it is necessary for present well-being. The reward of foresight is great and easily foretold. But there must be the actual foresight that is waste, to destroy, our natural resources as fast as we have been doing instead of using it so as to increase its usefulness, is to commit a crime against the days of our children the very basis of their welfare is being cut down to them simplified and developed. Especially in the new states, through several agencies, the government has been enabled to encourage to do everything possible to aid the small town and the development of the agricultural resources in place of a haphazard striving after immediate profit. Our great river systems should be developed as sections of a great national highway, with the tributaries, standing first in importance, and the canals, second in importance, and the many others of importance on the Pacific slope. The national government should undertake this work, and I hope a beginning will be made forward in accordance with some well-conceived plan. The terminal facilities should be improved to the highest point of efficiency before the great crops of the present year are harvested.

"In the eastern United States the money centers have already passed into the hands of large private owners, and the task of the future will be to develop them. It is obvious that these funds should be conserved with the greatest care, and that we be well to protect the people against lavish and improvident use of them. But as that can still be done. What has been accomplished in the Philippines by the fields of the Indian Territory by the state of Oklahoma, which offers a striking example of the good results of what can be done. The need of the hour is large campaign funds would vanish if congress provided an appropriation for the proper and legitimate expenses of each of the great national parties, and provided further that to meet the necessity for thorough organization and campaign education, and the like, the expenditure of money. Then the stipulations, the right to mine coal being separated from the title to the land, publication would permit coal lands to be worked in sufficient quantity by the present private holders. The present limitations have been absurd, expensive, and wasteful publication, and often render it necessary that there be a shameful waste or actual abandonment of the work of getting the coal.

Progress at the Work On the Panama Canal.

"Work on the Panama canal is proceeding in a highly satisfactory manner. On the Culebra Cut, where effort was chiefly concentrated, the total excavation to April 1 this was increased to 30,000,000 cubic yards, at a cost of $19,317 cubic yards.

Favorable increase in the output for May and June owing partly to the better work of the steam shovels and partly to temporary trouble with the steam shovel over the material in the bottom of the canal prism by steam shovels. This trouble was settled satisfactorily and put prism in good shape for excavation advanced materially and in September the excavation of the entire prism was completed with the exception of a small section, which was 17.1 inches. In fact, experience has demonstrated that the rains are a less serious obstacle than was anticipated. Slides have been supposed.

"Work on the locks and dams at Gatun, which began actively in March last, has progressed well. It is thought that masonry work on the Gatun locks will be completed in two years.

"Last winter bids were requested and received from the principal firms in the construction by contract. None of them were considered entirely satisfactory and were rejected. It is the unanimous opinion of those in charge of the work that it can be done better, more cheaply, and more quickly by the force of the present force of contractors. Fully 40 per cent. of the entire plant necessary for construction has been purchased or contracted for; machine shops, dredges, engines, locomotives, for making all needed repairs to the plant; many thousands of employes have been secured; an effective organization for the control of the work and system is in operation which is capable of furnishing more than twice as much used advantageously; employes are now distributed at work, well housed, paid are satisfactory, and the work is not only going forward smoothly, but it is producing results far in advance of the most sanguine expectations. Under these favorable conditions, although in the method of prosecuting the work would be unwise and unjustifiable, for it would inevitably disorganize existing conditions, check progress, and increase the cost and lengthen the time of completing the canal."

President Recommends Postal Savings Banks.

"I commend to the favorable consideration of the congress a postal savings system, such as is recommended by the postmaster general. Such a system, by encouraging among our people economy and thrift and by the use it would make of the funds, would form an opportunity to husband their resources partially those who have not the facilities at hand for depositing their savings with profit. There is, however, from the experience of the past, reason to fear that the great advantages of such an institution are still more far-reaching. Thrift depositors have withdrawn their savings for the time being from national banks; individuals have hoarded their cash and the workingmen their earnings; all of which money has been withdrawn and kept in hiding or in the safe deposit box to the detriment of prosperity. There can be no doubt of the panic savings banks such money would be restored to the channels of trade, to the benefit rather of capital and labor.

"I further commend to the congress the consideration of the postmaster general's recommendation for an extension of the parcel post, especially on the rural routes. There are now 45,000 people who do not have the advantages of city residents of choice in obtaining their supplies. These recommendations have been drawn up to benefit the farmer and the country storekeeper, and I believe that it is a good thing for them, for I believe that it is good policy for our government to do everything possible to aid the small town and the development of our agricultural resources in place of a haphazard striving after immediate profit. Our great river systems should be developed as sections of a great national highway, with the tributaries, standing first in importance, and the canals, second in importance, and the many others of importance on the Pacific slope. The national government should undertake this work, and I hope a beginning will be made forward in accordance with some well-conceived plan. This trouble was settled satisfactorily and put prism in good shape for excavation advanced materially and in September the excavation of the entire prism was completed with the exception of a small section, which was 17.1 inches. In fact, experience has demonstrated that the rains are a less serious obstacle than was anticipated. Slides have been supposed.

"Work on the locks and dams at Gatun, which began actively in March last, has progressed well. It is thought that masonry work on the Gatun locks will be completed in two years.

"Last winter bids were requested and received from the principal firms in the construction by contract. None of them were considered entirely satisfactory and were rejected. It is the unanimous opinion of those in charge of the work that it can be done better, more cheaply, and more quickly by the force of the present force of contractors. Fully 40 per cent. of the entire plant necessary for construction has been purchased or contracted for; machine shops, dredges, engines, locomotives, for making all needed repairs to the plant; many thousands of employes have been secured; an effective organization for the control of the work and system is in operation which is capable of furnishing more than twice as much used advantageously; employes are now distributed at work, well housed, paid are satisfactory, and the work is not only going forward smoothly, but it is producing results far in advance of the most sanguine expectations. Under these favorable conditions, although in the method of prosecuting the work would be unwise and unjustifiable, for it would inevitably disorganize existing conditions, check progress, and increase the cost and lengthen the time of completing the canal."

President Recommends Pensions for Soldiers and Sailors.

"I commend to the favorable consideration of the congress a postal savings system, such as is recommended by the postmaster general. Such a system, by encouraging among our people economy and thrift and by the use it would make of the funds, would form an opportunity to husband their resources partially those who have not the facilities at hand for depositing their savings with profit. There is, however, from the experience of the past, reason to fear that the great advantages of such an institution are still more far-reaching. Thrift depositors have withdrawn their savings for the time being from national banks; individuals have hoarded their cash and the workingmen their earnings; all of which money has been withdrawn and kept in hiding or in the safe deposit box to the detriment of prosperity. There can be no doubt of the panic savings banks such money would be restored to the channels of trade, to the benefit rather of capital and labor.

"I further commend to the congress the consideration of the postmaster general's recommendation for an extension of the parcel post, especially on the rural routes. There are now 45,000 people who do not have the advantages of city residents of choice in obtaining their supplies. These recommendations have been drawn up to benefit the farmer and the country storekeeper, and I believe that it is a good thing for them, for I believe that it is good policy for our government to do everything possible to aid the small town and the development of our agricultural resources in place of a haphazard striving after immediate profit. Our great river systems should be developed as sections of a great national highway, with the tributaries, standing first in importance, and the canals, second in importance, and the many others of importance on the Pacific slope. The national government should undertake this work, and I hope a beginning will be made forward in accordance with some well-conceived plan. The terminal facilities should be improved to the highest point of efficiency before the great crops of the present year are harvested.

"In the eastern United States the money centers have already passed into the hands of large private owners, and the task of the future will be to develop them. It is obvious that these funds should be conserved with the greatest care, and that we be well to protect the people against lavish and improvident use of them. But as that can still be done. What has been accomplished in the Philippines by the fields of the Indian Territory by the state of Oklahoma, which offers a striking example of the good results of what can be done. The need of the hour is large campaign funds would vanish if congress provided an appropriation for the proper and legitimate expenses of each of the great national parties, and provided further that to meet the necessity for thorough organization and campaign education, and the like, the expenditure of money. Then the stipulations, the right to mine coal being separated from the title to the land, publication would permit coal lands to be worked in sufficient quantity by the present private holders. The present limitations have been absurd, expensive, and wasteful publication, and often render it necessary that there be a shameful waste or actual abandonment of the work of getting the coal.

Progress at the Work On the Panama Canal.

"Work on the Panama canal is proceeding in a highly satisfactory manner. On the Culebra Cut, where effort was chiefly concentrated, the total excavation to April 1 this was increased to 30,000,000 cubic yards, at a cost of $19,317 cubic yards.

Favorable increase in the output for May and June owing partly to the better work of the steam shovels and partly to temporary trouble with the steam shovel over the material in the bottom of the canal prism by steam shovels. This trouble was settled satisfactorily and put prism in good shape for excavation advanced materially and in September the excavation of the entire prism was completed with the exception of a small section, which was 17.1 inches. Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Congress convened last Monday, and about the first thing they better look into is the financial situation, if the same crew want to meet in the future, for when wheat won't sell for cash, the people begin to get ugly.

We were somewhat surprised to hear the past week, that some of the farmers living above the town of Highlanding were under the impression that the river improvement, that we are petitioning the government for was not to extend east of Highlanding. Now we don't know who sprung this tale, but it is wrong, as one of the principal reasons for trying to get government aid, was to lower the Red Lake River so to reclaim the low meadow lands ABOVE Highlanding, and make them useful and to dig out the sand bars and stone so boats can run on the river. If Congressman Steenerson gets the appropriation, and we believe he will get it, the work will be done under the direction of the government and will be done where it needs to be done to prevent floods, reclaim the low meadow lands, and open the river for navigation.

Law-vs-Gold Bricks.

We fail to see where there is any violation of the postal laws in answering an advertisement of a catalog house and sending for one of their catalogs, after having been invited to do so. They have come into competition with the local dealers, and the local dealers in all lines of business naturally want to know their prices and the quality of the goods they are selling, and the only way to do this is to send, or have some of your friends send for a catalog.

The catalog houses are in the same position as a confidence man that is selling a gold brick, he naturally would object to a prospective purchaser taking the brick to an honorable jeweler man for examination before he bought it, and they, (the catalog houses) are mad because their catalogs came into the hands of people qualified to size up their goods at their true value.

The mail order house is a menace to the country merchant and the unbuilding of the North West, and it seems to us that the federal courts of Minneapolis are in the same position that a magistrate of a city would be in, that ordered the arrest of a policeman for exposing a confidence man that was trying to sell a gold brick to an unsuspecting farmer, when they ironically proceeded to order the policeman for ordering their catalogs to get their prices, and not for the purpose of ordering goods.

The Quicker Way.

There goes a quick observer," remarked a steamship agent as he directed attention to a surly looking individual who had just engaged passage for Europe. "Some efforts are directed in connecting short cuts in business methods, and in eliminating all those conditions that hamper the progress of the busy existence. He is a man of very few words.

"Some years ago this gentleman booked the ocean and had a very unpleasant trip. One morning a steamship passenger offered him a bunch of cigars, a sincere wish that it would be relished.

"The traveler seized the bunch of cigars, and, without taking the trouble to remove the bands, he lighted one and began to smoke it. In a little while he was a sick man, and he remained so until the end of the voyage. He is a believer in quick methods."

THE EARTH'S INTERIOR

Our Planet's Core Is Liquid, Yet It's as Rigid as Steel.

UNDER ENORMOUS PRESSURE

Neither Rock Nor Metal Could Remain There in the State in Which We See It on the Surface—The Lava That Breaks Through the Earth's Crust.

The idea that the interior of the globe is composed of flowing lava has long since been abandoned, but the picture that modern science offers of the inside of the earth is hardly less appalling. All investigations unite to prove that the heat increases as we descend deeper in the terrestrial crust at such a rate that forty or fifty miles down no substance with which we are acquainted could remain unmelted. And yet the same science tells us that the core of the globe is enormously more rigid than the hardest steel. This apparent contradiction is due to the tremendous pressure inside the earth. No rock and no metal can remain there in the state in which we see it on the surface. Its molecules must lose the adherence characteristic of solid bodies in consequence of the heat, but still they are not free to flow like an ordinary liquid, because of the compression to which they are subjected.

The phenomena of earthquakes have given wonderful information about the internal state of the globe. All observations show that the shocks of earthquakes are confined to a thin upper shell. They originate at a depth of only a few miles at the most. But the vibrations which they set going are felt all through the earth, often exceeding in the antipodes. The great core, held right by the pressure, is extremely elastic, and it responds to a shock like a ball of steel or of glass. The density of the earth increases toward the center. It is only in the upper part of the crust that local movements can take place, causing shocks and changes of level at the surface. Deeper down everything is crippled and immovable, except, as already remarked, that the molecules of the rocks and their there are subject to vibration like those of a bell against which a blow is struck.

But this is not all. Whenever a local release from the pressure is brought about by changes near the surface the potentially liquid but effectually solid core at that point may suddenly become fluid and flash forth through a vulcanic throat or other vent. But such effects cannot extend to any great depth. Nothing comes to us from the vast interior mass. That remains a perpetual mystery, far beyond the searching head of science. Indirectly, however, we may learn much about it. Astronomical considerations throw a great deal of light upon the subject. We see that through the planetary system rotating globes are flattened at the poles. The same thing is true of the earth. Its equator bulges; its polar regions are drawn inward. Mechanical laws are aware as that the cause is to be found in the fact that the earth and the other planets have assumed about under the influence of the centrifugal force of their rotation. That force is necessarily greatest at the equator. Beginning as completed molten bodies, they have commenced to solidify at the surface after having assumed an ellipsoidal form due to their rotation.

Another very significant fact is that the shape of the earth corresponds with that which a globe rotating with its velocity would have if composed of layers arranged in their density—that is to say, growing denser toward the center. The heaviest materials, such as iron, are known to the globe, the lighter materials have remained at the surface. This again corresponds with the laws of gravitation. We know the total weight and the average density of the earth. It "weighs" 11 septillions of tons, and its average density is five and a half times that of water. But the substances composing the crust of the earth have an average density of twice that of water. It follows that the heaviest things in the earth, on the average, exist deep down in its exterior. For all that we can tell, its inner core may be wholly metallic. At the center there is probably an enormous aggregation of dense metallic substances.

An indication that the inner parts of the earth consist largely if not mainly of iron is to be found in the meteorites of the globe. The earth is a great permanent magnet. If we could reach the place it might turn out that iron is the most abundant substance in the solar system and perhaps in the whole universe. The majority of the meteorites that fall upon the earth consist of solid iron. How the earth to possess this enormous mass of iron under the crust of the rocks that we are familiar with would be almost inexplicable. They would be a mass of iron and other metals descending upon the mount and upon any other attracting body in the vicinity.

This view of the interior of the globe disposes of the notion, so picturesquely developed in one of Jules Verne's romances, of the existence of vast cavernous openings in the interior of the earth. Such void spaces, though to no large scale, may exist in the upper part of the crust, but not at a great depth. The earth is effectively more solid than a cannon ball, and the movable rocks compose but its crust are like a film of rust on the hard metal.—Professor Garrett P. Serviss in New York American.

Major Mistkiller—I suppose that is the reason you never drink water. You are afraid it will rust.—Philadelphia Press.

A Curious Tree.

In the village of Clymon, Wales, there is an old cottage, formerly a country tavern, upon the roof of which there is a full grown sycamore tree. About fifty years ago a sycamore found a neighboring chimney, where other sycamores are growing, forgot to stop taking water in the center of the tree above a stub of stone over the entrance to the building. The young tree rooted for a time on the small quantity of soil collected in the corner of the ruin and finally forced its roots downward through the walls into the earth below. From the outside no trace of the roots can be seen.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Childless Men and Women.

There are parts of the world where girl babies are drowned like superfluous kittens and others in which it is not uncommon for the daughters in the large families of the poor to be sold by their parents into lives of prostitution On the other hand, the pages of history are filled with examples of the devoted lives of childless men and women who have worked unselfishly for the good of their kind. Bachelors and virgins have been the saints of the world, and the childless are the philanthropists the founders of colleges, hospitals, art collections and libraries, the philosophers, the great writers, leaders and thinkers of the race. Plato, Joan of Arc, Savonarola, George Washington, David Hume, Locke, Spinoza, Thomas Carlyle, Florence Nightingale, Ruskin and Herbert Spencer are only a few of the great names in this class. An interesting volume could be written on the indebtedness of the world to childless men and women.—New York Medical Journal.

Hanging as a Sport.

We would not deny the gravity of death. It is a quite serious matter even to those of us who, while conscious of, be at least admitting, no remiss sinful performances in the past, would nevertheless, if pressed, confess to certain minor indiscretions which we would be only too willing to join with the Lord in forgetting. Nevertheless, if form or ceremony or general interest be considered the criterion, dying is one of the most popular things one can do. Nobody goes to see a man born, but the entire community turns out to see him hanged. Indeed it is well known that many people, perhaps a majority, derive actual enjoyment from beholding with their own eyes life flicker out of a person's body. The utmost unfeeling sufferer could feel no more than a certain, possessed grisly humor likewise to a distinctive degree, is presumably jointly just one. In any case, is unpreventable. If the hanging [illegible] anyway, why should [illegible] is the spectacle [illegible] enough if one [illegible] of sport.—George [illegible] in American Review.

THE BEST TREE OF ALL

BY J.P. COLLINS

One winter's night when the snow lay deep, And the earth beneath it was fast asleep, And the dormice were snuggled all cosy and warm From the hurry-go-hullabaloo of the storm, A drooping Tree on the edge of a hill, That shivered as it had to confess, It couldn't keep still, Nursed grumblesome thoughts in his silly green head Till he tumbled the flakes from his branches and said:

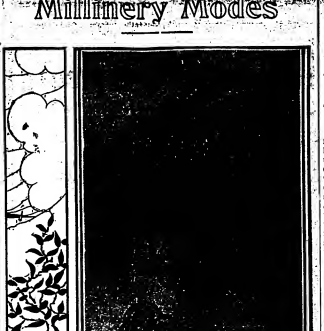
"Oh, what is the use of living at all, For a fellow like me who am slender and small, When even the birds say I'm feeble and bare, And the squirrels turn tail and visit elsewhere? My bandybought neighbours, the Holly and Oak, They put on the airs of superior folk; And to hear them a-boasting, you'd think they were kings, Because they are made into tables and things. It's the same with the Poplar, the same with the Beech, They're declared to be full of the highest conceit, With their lofty ideas and their loftier speech; going to be shipmasts or something at sea, And there's no use for a scrubby Fir-Tree."

This was all very well, but the Woodman knew better, He chopped down the Fir-Tree and posted a letter, Saying 'oping as ow it deserved to be known He'd the finest young Spruce that ever was grown. So without being asked if he liked it or not, Our fidgety friend was installed in a pot That was packed to the brim with sawdust and toil, And waistcoated round with charming tinfoil.

This startling treatment was hardly complete When he found himself carted through byway and street, Till they bundled him in through a hospital door, And dumped him down in Ward Number Four. Now the sight of a bandage, the taste of a pill, And the odours of physic make some people ill; But he grumbled no more, so beyond feeling faint, We may fairly conclude that he had no complaint. And yet he arrived with so many wraps, You'd have thought him a patient, or postman perhaps. But when he stood up in his garment so green, What a giant he looked in that singular scene!

Just think of a room with a long double row Of fifty wee cots all whiter than snow, Though at each little house in that invalid Lane There rested a Curly Head throbbing with pain. But once in a while, when the aching grew numb, Those Crippled Mites dreamt of the revels to come, Till they smiled with delight in their slumber, and then woke. They whimpered, and turned to their slumbers again.

The Fir-Tree was tired, and sank in a doze, But was all eyes and ears when a murmur arose; He watched the Nurse bend o'er a sufferer's bed Till his wonderment grew to a whisper, that said: "Why, these must be children like those who once played Through our green summer woods, and were glad of my shade! But those were all laughter, and these are all grief, and here I'm afraid my shade's no relief. Oh, what can this Pain be, that I never feel, And why should it take so much trouble to heal?" The thought was so sad that he wept, very near, Till perhaps 'twas a snowflake turned into a tear; And perhaps, to hide his distress from inquisitive sight, He was walled there and then with a curtain of white, And fairly hemmed in the strange preparations behind the scenes puzzled at the heads of those bed-ridden Queens.



At last there arrived one radiant day When the Medicine Men were ordered away, And all things full of Joy and Song-sters all trooped into one, To share in the frolic and fun. Whole in the fun. There were Bobbies and Bessies, and Jennies and Joes, With the usual array of unusual limbs; There was Hobbling Harry, who limped upon crutches, And a Motor Boy bragging of brakes and of clutches. If you gave him the word he was off like a shot, A-trundling along till his wheels were red-hot; He was sent to invite the Matron and all, And back in a trice that the curtain should fall.

Oh, at that very moment when the Tree came to sight, All Christmassy loaded with presents and blazing with light! When one Chickabiddy crowed in her glee,—"Oh my, what a lufferly Tissmas Tee!" For among the branches, half bidden from view, Were toys of all sorts and of every hue, And everywhere till they dazzled your eyes, There were candles as many as stars in the skies.

Oh, the toffees and trumpets, and watches and chains, And packed Noah's Arks, and engines and trains, Blue sailors, and ships that could never have sunk, And a button-eyed elephant dangling his trunk! There were chocolate puppies and whiskerful cats, And blinkable dollies and squeakable rats, A sturdy red Soldier all scarlet and brave, And a Banner so starchy it never would wave; Silver balls for elastick, gold beads on a string, Pink pigs that would grunt, bright birds on the wing, And topmost of everything shining, afar, Stood a flaxen-haired Fairy Queen crowned with a star.

Then just as the height of the staring and wonder, The signal was given for presents and plunder; Each Toddler in turn got the thing he desired, And at every fresh gift a fan cracker was fired. So when all the stomps and excitement were done, And the Merry-go-rounders went off one by one; And mumbled their prayers and crept off to bed, With their treasures all cuddled close under their heads. Why, you couldn't imagine a Fir-Tree so proud As our friend when he thought of that happy young crowd; And he said, as they bundled him into the yard, Where the snow was adrift and the wind blowing hard,—I am glad I was born neither Oak-Tree nor Beech, For fifty ambitions are out of my reach; But if I'd my life to live over again, I'd spend it in gladdening Children. Amen!

MAUVE VELVET HAT.

One rather extraordinary thing to be noted about the hats of this season is that the models were all originated last spring in the mushroom shape, and, while by now there are some few departures from this idea, still the style of the round, turned down brim is the prevailing shape for the winter.

Hats, and large hats at that, composed entirely of ostrich feathers, are to be seen in the various fashionable shades, and delightfully new and decidedly smart are these latest models. A toque of the new bottle green ostrich plumes, enlivened somewhat by a stiff algrette on the left side or a tuft of goura feathers, makes an attractive complement to a costume of chiffon velvet of the same superb shade of green. There are also many wide brimmed velvet, satin and felt shapes, with the crowns completely covered with ostrich feathers, one long plume being carried about the brim, with the tip allowed to fall just a little over the edge on the left side. Long, sweeping Gainsborough plumes are seen on a number of the large picture hats.

Visiting Costume in Greenish Blue Cloth

The dress is in a pale greenish-blue fine cloth; the skirt is cut with a slight train, and is trimmed with wide silk braid the color of the cloth, forming diamonds at regular intervals.

The bodice has a round yoke composed of lace insertion, the material joins the yoke without fulness under a trimming of the braid like the skirt.

The jacket is of fine white serge lined with silk—it is open-fronted; the kimono sleeves and the basque are cut with deep points, each being finished with a silk tassel; a pattern of fine braid is worked round the edge of jacket.

Hat of satin straw the color of the dress, trimmed with wide ribbon and a long ostrich feather.

Material required for the jacket: 4 yards serge 46 inches wide, 6 yards lining silk and 5 silk tassels.

The Woman Beautiful

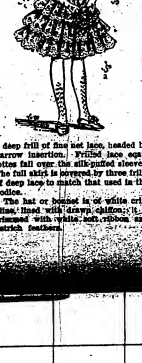
Lemon juice and sugar will clear the voice. Singers often eat an apple just before singing, as this helps also to clear the voice.

Buttermilk used as a wash or made into paste with talcum powder will both prevent and cure sunburn and hot water comes into play here also, as it must be used when cold water would only set the burn.

Next to water, perhaps the best fluid complexion maker is lemon juice. Taken externally, alone or with hot water, it is generally beneficial, and, externally, cut in half and the lemon, rind and all, rubbed over the face, it remedies sunburn and light freckles.

Women who want to be beautiful must pay attention to their diet. Buckets of lotions, pounds of creams and skin foods, boxes of flesh brushes, complexion rollers, soaps—nothing can produce the slightest effect in helping to give the right color and glow to the complexion that has been spoiled by improper food.

Did you ever notice how American women are beginning to take on flesh after they reach the age of 30? The slender, aristocratic type of middle age seems to be disappearing and obesity of greater or less proportions is to be reckoned with and conquered if possible, says a writer. It takes no quires courage and self-denial, but it is worth while both from the physical point of view and beauty.



Season's Styles Are Bemoaned by Some

Some of the recently imported cloth costumes for visiting are giving great delight to stout women, but flat chested, long limbed women groan inwardly when they see them, for the powers at Paris and Vienna are devoting their talents to the emphasizing of elongated effects, cunningly arranging the seams of the coats and the lines of the skirts in ways calculated to decrease the apparent breadth. A new skirt which has this effect, and which is specially in favor with smart dressers, is the one with a central front seam.

When bordered cloths are used for visiting costumes the material is so cut that the border edges the skirt bottom, but if serge, English mixture or plain broadcloth is used most women prefer this hands of cloth put on to form large squares or points, their corners emphasized with buttons or chenille ornaments, to the absolutely plain skirts on the same model, which are being made up in lighter materials for house and dinner gowns.

As to colors, the dull blues, browns and greys which are so artistic have always a host of adherents. Purples are very fashionable, and so are myrtle and cheese greens. There are seen any number of pomegranate and prune shades, their dullness relieved with self-colored velvet collars, cuffs, vests and innumerable ornamental buttons. Bloom, one of the new light shades, is prettiest of all in fine broadcloth, and most effective when combined with black velvet or dark brown fur. One beautiful costume shown lately is of blond cloth, with a tunic skirt edged with sable, a bodice of cloth and self-colored lace, and a long shaped cloak of blond cloth lined with sable. The same effect may be produced for much less money by using squirrel fur stained in sable shades.

Dress of White Silk for Child Bridesmaid

Finely spotted white silk is used for the dress itself. The bodice is slightly long waisted and is gathered to a square yoke, composed of strips of the silk finely tucked, divided by lace insertion; the yoke is then outlined by a deep frill of fine net lace, headed by narrow insertion. Frilled lace epaulettes fall over the silk-puffed sleeves. The full skirt is lavished by three frills of deep lace to match that used in the bodice.

The hat or bonnet is of white crêpe de chine, lined with drapy chiffon; it is trimmed with white soft ribbon and ostrich feathers.

POULTRY AND BEES

A COMB-CARRYING CART.

Arrangement Which One Bee Keeper Has Found Convenient.

I send you a photo of my cart and fixtures for conveying the combs of honey from the hives to the table in the extracting room, writes an Illinois correspondent of Bee Culture. Tha raised removable platform in the cart on which the two boxes of combs stand has a shelf or bridge projecting on the further side between the cart-wheel and handle, making connection with a low table in the extracting room, so that the boxes of combs standing on boards with casters under the corners are easily pushed through the opening onto the table near the uncapping-can. This table, as well as a part of the cart platform, has a raised edge to keep the casters from running off. A pin, seen in front of the comb boxes, holds them securely on the cart.

Comb-Carrying Cart.

The table top should be large enough to allow the two boxes of empty combs to be run out onto the cart after receiving the full ones. A light sliding door on the inside of the room is easily handled from either side. The hinged door seen is fastened on the inside.

COMBS THAT FREEZE.

Not Wise for Farmers in Cold Climates to Keep Hens with Big Combs.

In the more northern sections of the United States it is a mistake to breed hens that have this big combs, as they often freeze, and this is to the detriment of the health of the hen and interferes with her services as an egg layer. In the milder portions of the country the farmer can indulge in his liking for pretty combs, but not in the cold north, if the hens are to be made up in lighter materials for house and dinner gowns.

As to colors, the dull blues, browns and greys which are so artistic have always a host of adherents. Purples are very fashionable, and so are myrtle and cheese greens. There are seen any number of pomegranate and prune shades, their dullness relieved with self-colored velvet collars, cuffs, vests and innumerable ornamental buttons. Bloom, one of the new light shades, is prettiest of all in fine broadcloth, and most effective when combined with black velvet or dark brown fur. One beautiful costume shown lately is of blond cloth, with a tunic skirt edged with sable, a bodice of cloth and self-colored lace, and a long shaped cloak of blond cloth lined with sable. The same effect may be produced for much less money by using squirrel fur stained in sable shades.

THE POULTRY YARD.

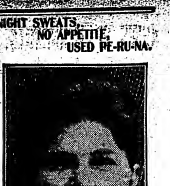
In her second year a hen is more profitable than at any other time, and it is then they make the best breeding birds.

Flat perches are more comfortable than the round ones. The latter also cause crooked breast bones in growing birds.

In building perches in the poultry house, see that they are far enough from windows and doors to be out of all draughts.

Any farmer who has a large orchard and does not keep a flock of poultry is wasting valuable space which could be utilized to advantage.

When face and head swell a good deal and the discharge from the nostrils is profuse fowls have roup, or influenza. Scattering of chaff is likely to accompany colds of all kinds.



Whole wheat is better for fowls than corn. It does not fatten them so fat and considering the greater number of eggs that can be secured by using it is a more economical feed.

The throat is so tender in colds that bread and milk, warm mashes and table scraps are the best of that fowls can swallow. A little ginger or pepper in the mashes is helpful.

Broilers.

If the farmer becomes interested in brothers and wishes to raise them for the city market he will find it safer to begin in a small way rather than in a large way. The people that go to great expense generally find themselves caught at some point in the operations the first year or two. Either they cannot get the kind of eggs they want to use or they cannot get the help they need at the right time. It must be remembered that a broiler does not remain a broiler for all time and that he must be disposed of while still of tender age. It is better to let the broiler business grow up with the rest of the business. Then all the different factors will be developed at the same time.

NIGHT SWEATS, NO APPETITE, USED PE-RU-NA.

MRS. LIZZIE LOHR

MRS. LIZZIE LOHR, 1138 W. 18th St., Chicago, Ill., writes:

"I take pleasure in writing you these few lines, thinking there may be other women suffering the same as I did.

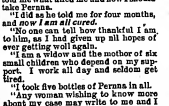
"I had my complaints for over a year, nights were all sweat and no appetite. I was run-down so far that I had to sit down to do my cooking. I was so weak.

"I tried many different medicines and doctors also. Nothing seemed to do me any good. The doctors wanted to operate on me.

"At last I wrote to Dr. Hartman. I told him just exactly how I was, and he told me what ailed me and how I should take Peruna.

"I did as he told me for four months, and now I am all cured.

"No one can tell how thankful I am to him, as I had given up all hopes of ever getting well again.



"I am a widow and the mother of six small children who depend on my support. I work all day and seldom get tired.

"I took five bottles of Peruna in all.

"Any woman wishing to know more about my case may write to me and I will gladly tell all about it.

"I thank Dr. Hartman for what he has done for me."

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Football Profits.

Minneapolis.—Minnesota's athletic treasury has benefited by the four football games at Northrop Field this fall to the amount of $45,735. The figures were announced by Joseph Bren, treasurer of the athletic association and cashier of the university.

According to the figures made public by Mr. Bren for the first time the receipts for the Ames game were $1,590.76. Ames was given $600 as its share. Nebraska took $9,762 of the $5,556 taken in at the game of Oct. 26. The Chicago game receipts amounted to a total of $26,818.50 and the Maroons put $13,914.62 in their pockets before going home. Full receipts of the Carlisle game have not been received, as some reports are still due, but Mr. Breen estimates the total at $18,000 and will send Carlisle a check for about $7,000.

According to the estimates of the treasurer, the athletic association will show a surplus of about $25,000 on Jan. 1. Football has been the only branch of athletics that has paid well, and some of the others have run very near the margin. There was a surplus of $13,000 on hand the first of the year, the result of several years' saving, and that amount will be nearly doubled this season.

Sanitary Regulations.

St. Paul.—A number of changes in the regulations of the state live stock sanitary board were made at a special meeting in the secretary's office in the old capitol yesterday. The principal changes relate to tuberculosis in cattle and hog cholera.

The change in the tuberculosis regulations is for the purpose of fighting more effectively the progress of this disease. It is now provided that whenever any cattle have been inspected and found to be free from tuberculosis, or when so tested have been found to contain any tuberculosis cattle which are removed, the owner of the cattle shall not introduce any new cattle into the herd which have not been tested with tuberculin and found free from tuberculosis, either by the state board or the local board having jurisdiction in the territory in which such cattle are usually kept.

Sent to Prison.

Fergus Falls.—The United States court disposed of its criminal business in the course of a few hours today and the term promises to be the shortest ever held here.

George Meley a young Indian, was accused of robbing the reservation postoffice at Red Lake. Meley was attending school at Pierz, Minn., and He came home on a vacation, visited the little postoffice, which was in charge of his sister, and appropriated $20 to himself. When brought into court he pleaded guilty and was sentenced to a year and three months at the St. Cloud reformatory.

Fright Kills Girl.

Cannon Falls.—Miss Mary Hadin of White Rock and her brother were driving together when his team became frightened and started to run away, breaking loose from the carriage. The young man was pulled over the dashboard, but the girl was left in the carriage and not hurt. She started to a near-by house to get a lantern but when almost at the door screamed and fell dead. She was eighteen years old and the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sepban Hadin.

D. & N. Ry. Exempt.

Duluth.—The state railroad and warehouse commission has issued an order exempting the Duluth and Northeastern Railway company from the provisions of the state law establishing new low rate schedule. The law permits the state commission to exempt railroads from these rates when such company can demonstrate that enforcement would be confiscatory of railroad property.

NEWS NOTES.

Preston.—Sam A. Langum will be postmaster of the national house of representatives.

Minneapolis.—Oliver Baker sues the Great Northern Express Co. for $5,000 because his wife was knocked down by one of their horses.

Minneapolis.—Robbed of all his money which represented years of toil and saving, Thomas Marrup, enroute to his boyhood home in Norway, committed suicide by hanging himself in his room at the Cliff Hotel, 17 High street.

The "Ninety and Nine," a rural comedy drama, built upon lines suggested by the religious hymn of Ira Sankey of the same title, will be the offering at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, the week of December 1st. It is considerably removed from the usual run of melodrama, and has attracted much favorable comment from the critics.

Minneapolis.—Prof. Albert Ernest Jenks of the sociological department of the university has just received four gold medals from the St. Louis exposition authorities in token of his work as head of the ethnological exhibit at St. Louis in 1904.

PRODUCTIVE POWER OF WESTERN CANADA SOIL

Winnipeg Correspondence.

There has never been any who have doubted the productiveness of the soil of Western Canada, but there are sometimes found those who question the fact of its superiority. During last season it has been shown that in grain raising qualities it possessed the very best. The late spring prevented grain being sown in many cases before the middle of May. Yet, a large percentage of that sown at that time produced excellent yields. Had it not been for the frost early in August, which visited most of the north half of the continent, there would have been a magnificent yield in every district in Western Canada. Throughout the Southern Alberta district where about 100,000 acres was sown to winter wheat the yield will be enormously large. There are vast tracts of valuable grain growing land in Western Canada that are available for homesteads, the Canadian Government giving 160 acres free, and entry may be made by proxy, by any near relative, thus saving considerable cost to the American who may have entry made in this way. Any Canadian Government Agent will give you the particulars.

Your correspondent has just received the following letter from Craik, Saskatchewan, which bears out the statement made in the first part of this letter.

"Craik, Sask., Aug. 1907.

"May 24th we planted a Dahlia root, which we brought with us from Minneapolis, Aug. 12th, 80 days later, it was in bloom. The plant is now 4½ feet high and covered with blossoms. We never got half as many flowers on it in Minneapolis, even during September and October, although we had more time to attend to it there."

I mention this only as an example of the great productive power of the soil here in Saskatchewan, Canada.

EQUAL TO THE OCCASION.

This Servant Girl Was Evidently a Person of Resource.

As a source of humor the Irish servant girl has long since fallen from her high estate, a result probably due to the better class of young women from the Emerald Isle who come here annually to help confuse the eternal "servant girl question." But now and again one of the old, naively ignorant sort turns up in a New York house, bold, as was demonstrated the other day to a caller at a house on the West Side.

The girl who responded to the bell was asked if her mistress was at home. To this inquiry she surprised the caller by putting her arms behind her back and replying in a rich brogue, as she thrust her face toward the caller: "Put th' tickets in me mouth, ma'am, an' I'll go an' see. Me hands is wet."—N. Y. Press.

SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO. INDICTED.

Charged with Using Mails to Defraud and in Misrepresenting Articles Sold.

Des Moines, Ia.—(Special)—Sears, Roebuck & Co. of Chicago have been charged with using the mails to defraud. The indictment is on three counts. It is alleged that the company misrepresented articles in its catalogues sent through the mails. The first count charges that on June 13, 1907, the company devised a scheme to obtain money by false pretenses from Dr. C. F. Spring of Des Moines by selling him white lead that Sears-Roebuck claim to have made. The indictment alleges it was made by others. A second count is on a ring stand by H. Miles, and the third count is the sending of another ring, alleged to have been misrepresented, through the mails.

Strange Disease.

Two middle-aged women on a car were discussing the sickness of two children of one of them. "And what does the doctor say ails them?" asked one. "The little child has some sort of a fever," was the answer, "and he said that the disease of the other was epidemic." "It's a sickness I never heard of," responded mother number one.

MEAN THINGS AT EDITORS.

Tributes by Lafcadio Hearn to Class of Workers He Dislliked.

"Lafcadio Hearn, that wonderful writer, worked on newspapers in his youth," said a publisher, "and the ruthless way his studies were chopped, cut and butchered was a great woe to his heart.

"In after years Hearn took a malicious joy in collecting stories about editors—editors and their superior and consistent way with manuscript.

"One of his stories was of an editor to whom a subscriber said:

"'I enjoyed that poem on the three ages of man in to-day's paper, Mr. Sheers; I enjoyed it immensely. Do you know, though, I thought it was originally written the seven ages of man?'

"'So it was, sir; so it was,' said Editor Sheers, pompously. 'Yes, the extract was originally written the seven ages of man, but I had to cut it down for the lack of space.'

"Another story concerned a weather report. A reporter, discussing the weather, wrote that winter still lingered in the lap of spring.

"The editor, as he read over the article, called the reporter to his desk and told him that he would cut out that sentence about winter lingering in spring's lap. He said the idea was good enough, and all that sort of thing, but it would not do to publish because the high moral tone of the paper had to be maintained in a town full of school girls."

TO CURE A COUGH OR COLD.

Doctor's Prescription Checks an Acute Cold in a Day and Cures Chronic Coughs.

The following formula is a never failing remedy for coughs or colds: Two ounces of glycerine, one-half ounce of Concentrated oil of pine, one half pint of good whisky, mix and shake thoroughly each time and use in doses of a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours.

This, if followed up, will cure any cough that is curable or break up an acute cold in 24 hours. The ingredients all can be gotten at any drug store.

Concentrated oil of pine comes put up for medicinal use only in half ounce vials sealed in air tight cases designed to protect it from heat and light. Other oils of pine are insoluble and are likely to produce nausea and cannot give the desired results.

HIS TURN TO CRITICISE.

Youngster Felt Called on to Manifest Disapproval of Prayer.

Little John, who, at the mature age of four, has learned the Lord's Prayer, is often criticised by his father, two years older, for slight mistakes which he cannot always avoid in offering the petition. A few Sundays ago he was taken to church for the first time. When the moment for the prayer arrived and the congregation bowed their heads John's mother took the precaution to whisper to him that he must be very quiet. "Listen," she said, "and you will hear the minister pray." This interested John at once, and his little face took on a look of serious attention, but his mother, watching him covertly, saw his expression change presently to one of surprise and disapproval. A few minutes more, and he could stand it no longer. What could this man be saying? Not a word of the prayer did he recognize as the only formula he had ever heard called by that name.

"Why, mother," he exclaimed, in a tone audible over nearly half the church, "do you hear? He isn't saying it right at all!"

The very next day the mistress, looking out of the window, observed something peculiar in the yard.

"What is that, Sophie?" she asked. "And how did it get there?"

"That is old ice, ma'am," was the prompt response, "left over from yesterday. I threw it away lake you tol' me."—Harper's Weekly.

SORES AS BIG AS PENNIES.

Whole Head and Neck Covered—Hair All Came Out—Cured in Three Weeks by Cuticura.

"After having the measles my whole head and neck were covered with scaly sores about as large as a penny. They were just as thick as they could be. My hair all came out. I let the trouble run along, taking the doctor's blood remedies and rubbing on salve, but it did not seem to get any better. It stayed that way for about six months; then I got a set of the Cuticura Remedies, and in about a week I noticed a big difference, and in three weeks it was well entirely and I have not had the trouble any more, and as this was seven years ago, I consider myself cured. ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

John Chinaman Is Afraid of Spooks and Spirits

Peking, China.—Why Chinese have said, in English speech and print, that, to all is ill, Confucianism is quite as good as Christianity, if not better, and they have more than implied that it is a superior substitute for Christian nations to send missionaries to their country. This matter is fundamentally important; any investigation of missions must deal with the native religions of the mission fields. Moreover, as I am studying mission work at first hand, and not from the books written about it by propagandists, I am bent to form my conclusions of China's religion by observation of the life of the people, especially with respect to their religious practices.

Broadly speaking, and apart from the Christian adherents, the Chinese are less religious than the Japanese, and more so than the Koreans. One looks in vain for the multitude of idols and shrines which are to be met on every side in Japan. The idolatry of the Chinese may almost be said to have been exaggerated. While every house has its "kitchen god," there is looking the god afresh that is found in most Japanese homes, and the public idols are few, except in temples.

A word about this kitchen god. He is a paper image, before whom are placed candles and incense, generally unlighted. As all family affairs, even in the greatest households, find their way to the kitchen, the kitchen god is supposed to know everything. Accordingly, on New Year's day, before seeking him up to the realm of divinities in smoke red flame, his face is smeared with sweets. Then, when he is inquired of concerning the family's behavior, he can only mumble—for his mouth is sticky with candy.

A Poor Man's Funeral in China—The Mourner is in White.

"m-m-m," which is esteemed good report.

The Superstitious Chinese.

John Chinaman seems to care more for the little gods than for the big gods. Occasionally one is met who regards "the favor of heaven or worships the important figures in the national pantheon; but 99 Chinese out of a hundred are chiefly solicitous concerning the evil spirits of the air.

Confucianism, which is more a code of ethics than a religion, is the nearest creed, and Buddhism is supposedly the dominant faith, but Taoism, which makes room for an innumerable variety of spirits, holds the greatest sway, if any one of these three, but Social religionists may be said to dominate. The ordinary Chinese is not a Confucianist, or a Buddhist, or a Taoist; he is all three. In a Buddhist and Taoist temple he worships in exactly the same way—indeed, he often goes before his ancestral tablets—and it is difficult for an uninitiated person to distinguish between the two public cults. None of them, as a matter of fact, is ever rushed with business.

On New Year's day there is considerable patronage of the temples, with the burning of unmeasured incense and baskets of paper money and the offering of innumerable candles, which last the thrifty priests quickly extinguish and melt down, to be sold over again. There seems to be no moral idea connected with Chinese worship, gambling games run in full blast in the temple courts. A proverb showing the contempt in which priests are held, runs, "Every shaveling is a rascal, and every rascal is a shaveling." The priests are a despised lot.

Fooling the Spirits.

But the geomancer, the fortune teller, and the writer of charms, does a thriving business. John has all the invincible gambler's belief in "good luck." And he is superstitious to the last degree. Mr. Charles M. Alexander, the famous evangelistic singer, fell with his horse a few weeks ago, during a visit to southern China. He lay unconscious, but none of the coolies accompanying the party would help pick him up. They thought they might displease some of the spirits who wanted Alexander's life. As it took, he lay helpless and unassisted until a missionary and a native Christian came along to pick him up, and he was in a semi-conscious condition for several days subsequently. Similarly, one Chinese will watch another drown without stretching forth a hand to help him.

Every imposing residence in China has pasted on its doors hideous images to scare off the evil spirits. Streets do not run straight, in order to baffle the spirits. Inns and large residences have stone screens in front of the principal entrances, so that evil spirits may not find their way in. Charms hang over almost every doorway. Grave-yards are located only after the dispositions of the spirits of wind and water have been consulted—and, in the case of wealthy persons, it requires a deal of time and money to find out what the spirits wish. Much of the native religion is associated with the dead. The Chinese are fearful lest their dear departed should returns to trouble them. Therefore, the messive coffins, the offering of food at the grave, and the burning of paper images of money, houses, clothes, servants, and cows, in one case I witnessed, paper jinrickishas.

The nearest approach to street idols seen in China is the oven wherein is burned every scrap of paper that floats about the streets, lest it contain a sacred character, and also paper prayers. The Chinese believe in the fire route to the spirit world. Dwellers in Caston every housebost has its little sanctuary in front, before which a light is kept burning; in that part of the country it is also the custom to burn incense daily outside the door-way.

The Chinese and the Grandfathers.

Of all the religious tenets of the Chinese, that of ancestor worship is the strongest, although it can hardly be disassociated from spirit worship. It is probably less a matter of love for ancestors than of fear of their spirits which ties at the bottom of the Chinese regard for the departed. The great occasion for doing reverereca to ancestors is the New Year; elaborate offerings are made before the ancestral tablets, and afterwards there is feasting and music.

So in wrought is ancestral worship with the social, civil and political life of the Chinese that it is vary difficult for a Christian convert to separate himself from it all, especially on the occasion of funerals and the New Year. Certain Christian missionaries assume the position that the veneration of ancestors should not be regarded as idolatry; that refer to look straight from Lihassa, the home of the grand Llama. In its prime the building was no doubt splendid, and it had many interesting carvings and bronzes; but as a whole it is in a state of miserable decay. Its dirt and griminess and squalor, however, are nothing as compared with the filth and odiousness of the priests. They are the most repulsive lot of mortals it has ever been my bad fortune to meet. Their unwashed, unkempt external appearance is less hideous than their manifest moral rotteness. One does not need to hear the tales with which the community abounds to learn that here is depravity unmatched even for China.

There are some 800 of these yellow-robed priests, men and boys. They are famous for the deep tones in which they chant their ritual daily, recording. It is said, a lower register than the human voice has been known to attain elsewhere. Nothing manly is to be associated with these deep voices, however. They are a lot of degenerate mendicants, whom no Chinese is so low as to respect. There are few visitors to the temple except tourists. At every doorway—and one must pass through at least a dozen in visiting the temple—one or two priests stand with outstretched palm, demanding a fee. Others try to sell bits of bronze or chinaware. This is Buddhism at its highest and worst.

One of China's Great Sights.

The old Confucian temple at Peking, although very shabby, and manned at every gate by hagging attendants, commands respect for its sacred precincts, its ancient royal tablets on the backs of great stone turtles, its meteoric drums, its immemorial antiquity, and its tablet to the great teacher and his 12 disciples. It was at the Confucian temple that I first heard the sweetest sound in the east, the pigions with soft whistles fastened to their backs, making, as they circled and flew above one, music out-rivaling an Aeolian harp.

The greatest native religious spectacle in China, exhibiter even than the Shinto shrines at Ise, in Japan, is the Temple of Heaven, in Peking. This is now open to visitors, although formerly closed to alien eyes. Hither the emperor, or his representative, journeys every year to offer sacrifices to heaven. Smaller temples of heaven exist in every provincial capital.

The Lost Jews in China.

One of the many romances of China lies to do with the Jewish colony at Kaifoutfu, in Honan. The history of which has baffled all investigators, although many curious conjectures are made. It is certain that here one is to found a small colony of Jews, who, while retaining certain Jewish characteristics, have no longer intermingled with the natives that they are now practically Chinese., it is certain, from the inscriptions and the monuments still remaining, that they came to China not later than the early part of the twelfth century. They subsequently intined a synagogue until withhe less than 50 years, Dr. W. A. P. Martin having visited it while in ruins still having talked with the Jews who tore it down, after it had fallen into decay. The scriptures and the Jewish ritual were also partly preserved. The manner in which this mysterious remnant kept alive their national and religious identity through at least eight centuries is one of the marvels of Chinese history.

The inscriptions of the two monuments still standing have been translated by Dr. Martin. One monument was erected in 1485, to commemorate a rebuilding of the synagogue, and the other in 1512. Both summarized the history of Israel, from Abraham down to Adam being mentioned. The Hebraw faith, as set forth on the tablets, is, however, tinctured by Confucianism.

Mohammedanism widely exists in China, its adherents numbering millions. Mohammedan mosques and pagodas may be seen in various parts of the empire. The Mohammedans, for one thing, are the butchers of the nation.

Of all the faiths of China, except Christianity, one is bound to admit that they have deteriorated greatly from their original character, and that in practice, little more than superstitions, with scarcely any corrective influence upon character. This nation is in need of a new religion.

Will China Become Christian?

Is that new religion Christianity? Have the nearly 4,000 Protestant missionaries in China (the figures for the Roman Catholic mission are not available) made such an impression upon this nation of 400,000,000 that the ultimate conversion of the whole is to be predicted? Faith, rather than facts, would have to underlie such an assumption. The missionaries have not begun to make an impression upon China. Vast as have been the treasures of human life and gold and energy expended upon the Christianization of this inconceivably immense empire, the visible return has been out of all proportion with this expenditure, there being to-day only about a hundred thousand enrolled church members, not all of whom, it is to be feared, are sincere Christians. Not until within recent years has there been anything approximating an organized effort to administer Christian missions nationally, or as a unity; an effort which even will be one of the notable characteristics of the Shanghai centennial.

A greater degree of relatedness, unity and cooperation has been one of the manifest needs of the Christian propaganda in China. Lack of this has been the cause of great waste of work and money, and of the delay and failion of effort and of mission rivalry. All this being true, it yet remains undeniable—and this is the most sweeping criticism I have to make upon Chinese missions—that the enterprise is conducted on too small a scale for the results sought. If missions are to be operated at all, they should be maintained in a manner commensurate with the object. There has been a deal of burying of gospel-leaven in China during a hundred years, past, and by no means without result. But it strikes an observer forcibly that if this generation or the next is to see China as a whole reckoning seriously with Christianity, there must be some bigger, broader, more aggressive and more comprehensive campaigning done.

TRICK THE FOOLISH

SCHEMES OF PREMIUM MAIL ORDER HOUSES.

STUFF IS OF LITTLE VALUE

Cheapest Kind of Goods Handled by These Concerns, and They Are Sold at the Highest Market Prices.

There are dozens of premium-giving mail order houses operating in different cities of the country. These houses reach out for trade in all parts of the country, and do not overlook the largest cities. They gain for their aides and their agents men, women and children, wives of lawyers, merchants, church workers and any class that they can. Some of them make a business catering to the Epworth leagues, the Sunday schools, the churches, and have plans by which the people are hambugged and loaded down with inferior goods, and the leagues, the Sunday school or some church gets a little cheap furniture, some dinky-dinky thing almost worthless for all the trouble gone to.

These premium concerns that put out baking powder, cheap coffees, groceries of every kind and description, especially put out the cheapest kinds of stuff. Recently samples of the goods that have been received here have been sent to the chemists of the pure food departments in a number of the states investigating. The goods were found to be of the rankest kind. The coffee the cheapest Santos, and doctored up with roasted cereals and chicory; the baking powders were an abomination of cheap acids and other materials; the spices were wholly synthetic, produced from coal-tar products, and so adulteration was carried to the extreme. These goods were sold at the highest prices and were of such class that no respectable grocer in any city or town let would have them in his stock. These are the classes that the good women, perhaps well-meaning, of each church, palm off upon their neighbors when they become the secretary of "the club," and the kind of stuff that generally give to their husbands and children, and when the little ones become sickened by partaking of the stuff, the dear little woman gladly pays some doctor four times the amount the abominable goods cost.

There will ha something dropping pretty quick among a certain class of the "premium" people. Their business is of the fraudulest kind and there is a likelihood that at no distant period the government officials will execura such evidences as will put many of the concerns out of business.

Catalogus Houses Busy.

Thousands of dollars are being spent by the big catalogue houses of the east by the residants of the small towns in southern Utah, according to the report brought to the rake by Orson Hewlett, president of the Manufacturers' and Merchants' association, and Lorenzo Hanks, secretary and manager of tha Retail Marchants' association of the ettte.

Messrs. Hewlett and Jenkins spent nearly a week in Sanpete county and vicinity, calling merchants and farmers together to urge greater patronage of home industries. Ephraim, Moroni, Fairview, Spring City, Mount Pleasant, Fountain Green, Manti and Chester were visited and in each place the greatest enthusiasm was manifested by merchants over the campaign recently inaugurated by commercial bodies of the state for a more extensive patronage of home industries.

Meetings were called and ways and means discussed by which the evil influence of sending the mell order houses can be done away with. The practice has reached considerable proportions in the southern part of the state, according to Messrs. Hewlett and Jenkins. One merchant reported that he had received goods to the value of $1,200 from a big eastern mail order concern.—Salt Lake (Utah) Herald.

Calls for Energetic Action.

"They is no better way for the country merchant to combat mell order evil and thet is to organize and syste-matically fight the mell order trust in an energetically if it is to win. This has been done in some sections of the country and can be done in oth-ers. Where a few years since the larger portion of the people have spent the entire portion of their trade with the mail order houses, today they do their purchasing at home, and the mail order business is done by hard work by a thoroughly organized body.—New Iberia Enterprise-Leader.

Broke Status in Spite.

Mr. Hamilton Mabie, sculptor of the marble statue of a female, priced at 13,000 yen, which is exhibited in the Fine Arts building of the Tokio exposition, proceeded to the exposition on June 11, at 7 a. m., and destroyed the statue. He broke the statue and destroyed the head and arms with an iron hammer, which he had concealed in carrying the figure. The reason for this violent proceeding was that he considered that the prize commissioners of the Tokio exposition had shown bias in their awards, and were prone to confer honors and medals to artists of their own clique.—Japan Advertiser.

Has Too Good a Thing Here.

One of Chicago's mail order houses announces that for the present at least it will not invade England. It are prefers to keep busy building up its little $60,000,000-a-year business in Uncle Sam's domain.

MUST BUILD UP BUSINESS

Country Merchant Can Use the Local Press to Advantage.

The sentiment exhibitated in the numerous articles now printed in country papers for the purpose of inducing people to trade at home instead of sending their money to mail order houses is good and noble, but we donbt it it appeals to the multitude who patroulze these mail arder houses.

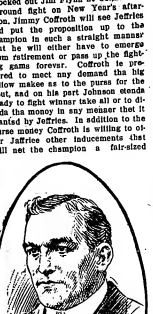
The best way in which the merchants in the towns and smaller cities can fight the mail order houses is to advertise. They know most of their patrons personally, can show them the goods before they buy them, have many other advantagos over the mail order houses and in almost every instance can sell just as cheap, if not cheaper.

If the home merchant lacks foresight and is too penurious to properly advertise his goods, why should the publisher exert himself to keep the trade at home for him? If solicitations on the part of the publisher fail to educate the merchant to the fact that he must advertise if he wants to keep up with the procession, then nothing is left to the merchant but to learn in the school of experience, and if the teachings of that reasoned school are of no effect we see no use in the publisher's continuing to waste his time in the commercial world will be taken up by some more enterprising competitor.—Buckeya Informer.

Catch-Penny Schemes.

Those who make a habit of answering advertisements in the cheap mail order papers are sure to hita at the "hail" held out to them sooner or later. One of the common grafts is advertising for men to "distribuis circulars" and offering from three dollars to five dollars a day for the service. Theea concerns ganerally charga fea of frbm two dollors to five dollars for "registering," and in return send a number of printed blanks and names of compliines who want advertising matter circulated. After some dollars' worth of postage stamps is wasted in writing to the names supplied, the unfortunate victim for a job concludes that he is out of pocket.

A common form of fraud is the advertising for men to become detectives. There are few of thasa rank humbugs doing business, and in a way so cleverly devised that the authorities cannot deny them tha use of tha mails. In a few cases fraud orders have been issued against them, but a change was quickly mada to another city, and the same old graft put in operation. In these cases a fee is charged for commiedon and hedga and instructions. The hit of mickled hrase sent out as a bedga to beat the devil is nearly every police court ee a source of troubis for green young man who think that he possession gives them official authority.



Business men should ha on the lookout for a new game which has been out for a naw game which has been played in a number of parts of the country of late. A stranger enters a store, buys a small bill of goods, and exceeding six or fifteen dollars, says that he will call for them later, and gives a check for $50 or more on a bank, receiving no change in return. He remains away for a few days, then calls for the goods. He is told that the check is no good. After roundly "cussing" the bank he pays for the goods, takes the check and goes. In a few daye more the check comes to the merchant, paid at the bank, because it was the merchant's endorsement on the check that was the end to he obtained. Be on the lookout for this game.

Fake Spices Sold to Public.

It has been found that more than 80 per cent. of the spices sold in the United States by agents who cell direct to consumers are of the adulterated class. Examinations made of Santos coffees by such concerns proved that there was 50 per cent. adulteration. The chocolate sold as Santos is found for a base, and with this ground cocoanut shells, burnt corn and chicory are compounded. Such concoctions are dangerous, and a rank imposition upon the people. The spices that are sold by many of the alleged pure food concerns that have agegte working among the people in small towns are dangerous to health, and even jewalry. The guides make a profit out of it by pressing coins or other objects are partially cooked fragments and selling these to visitors. On the ashy sides of the mountain there is enough lava to build a large city. In appearance it resembles a shoreless frozen sea of dull black that shimmers strangely purple in some lights.

Cheyenne (Wyo.) marchants are organizing to fight the mail order houses. It is claimed that fully one-half of the clothing and dress goods purchased by the people of Cheyenne come from outside towns, and if the local merchants are deprived of this business, to say nothing of the hardware, notions, novelties, etc., that are secured through the mail order houses.

SPORTING FACTS AND FANCIES

JIM JEFFRIES

Another effort is to be made at once to induce Jim Jeffries to seal champion heavyweight of the world, to reconsidar his determination not to box a colored man and to take on Jack Johnson, the gladt boxer who so asstly knocked out Jim Flynn at Colma in a forty-round fight on New Year's afternoon. Jimmy Coffroth will see Jeffries and put the proposition up to the champion in such a straight manner that he will either have to emerge from retirement or pass up the fighting game forever. Coffroth is prepared to meet any demand tha big fellow makes as to the purse for the bout, and on his part Johnson stands ready to fight winnar take all or to divida the money in any manner thet it wanted by Jeffries. In addition to the purse money Coffroth is willing to offar Jaffrioe other inducements that will net the champion a fair-sized fortune for the one fight. Among tha other tempting baits that will bo dangled before thb eyes of Jeff will be a lion's share of the money made through tha receipte of the moving pictures of the fight. While Coffroth has not said what he is willing to offer - in tha way of a purse it is understood that he can go as far es $60,000, and this with other coin that Jaffries would hn able to gather, would bring hie carnings up to more than $100,000 should he succeed in beating the husky colored man. So well satisfied is Coffroth that bo will ha able to get Jeffrie to come to re-ster ing that he is already planning what he will do to make tha holding of the battlo a success. If Jeffries comes through with hie signature to the articio Coffroth's fighting arenn at Colma will bo rebuilt so as to provide seats for twice ne many people as it'holde now. The Colma orena ie 20 minutes' ride from the city. Recing will be in full blast at Oakland and Los Angelce at the time tha fight will be held, and tho contest will draw thousands of the race track people, as well as the usual crowd that thie city supplies to ad fa fights. In addition to all of this importance will draw hundrede from fara-away pleces that would not turn out for any contest of less importance.

The Nome athletcs are arranging the longest trip on record. Postmaster Lomen of the Nome Athletic Association baskot bell team of Nome, Alaska, will visit every state in the union that ever and play a series of games in each. The Alaskan team is composed of members of the Young Men's Christian Association and the 67th Co. of the Arctic Brotherhood, which teams have brought the basket ball interest in Nome to a boiling point during the last two eeasons by their close and speedy play, and it was due to the efforts of these two teams that the prominent business men of Nome that the team is being sent more laurels to Alaska. The team le now assembling in Seattle, Wash., for a little preliminary practice before the eyes of Peter Overfield, the former Pennsylvania football center, and in about a month's time will start eastward in its private car to play the college teams and those of athletic clubs from Montreal to Boston, and a series of games in each. It will take very little time to convince the Alaska business men that a trip of such a team will be a clever advertisement for their country, and $10,000 was quickly raised to bear the expenses of the trip, and the team will travel entirely in its private car.

It is settled that only four teams will compriea the International Hockay league the coming season. This was decided at the adjourned annual meeting of the club owners held at Marquette, Mich. The eevana will be those of Houghton, Calumet and the American and Canadian Soo. The Pittsburg team has withdrawn because of the great distance necessary to travel without a break between the Smoky City and the Lake Superior region. A proposition was presented on behalf of Toronto, but it was indefinite and was not acted upon. Duluth will have a team for the season of 1908-9, and possibly Chicago also.

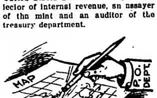
WASHINGTON.—Thn nnwest and most uniqua mnthod of dispensing federsl patronage was exemplified by Presidnnt Roosevelt in thn Whito House thn other day. It msrks a dnpariure in ths ususl procedure govsrning the selection of presidcntisl appointees. Thers is nothisg compisx or intricate in ths process. It is msrely a cssn of "Hesds I win, tails you iose."



Thore wcre a largs number of vacsst offices in South Dakota due to thn fact that the two sesstors, Kittredgc and Gamble, have been unabln to sgree upon spplicants, thus permitting thn old officn holders to retnis their positioss long beyond the time to which thny were nppointed. Scsstors Kittredge and Gamble scarcely havn spoken to esch other sinca ihs former atarted in to defeat the istter for re-election two ycars ago.

The senstors met in the president's offics by appointmnnt to agree, if possible, upon a distribution, but when they confronted the president they fonnd themseives just as far apart ar they havs been in his absence. The president saw thn difficulty, and proposed that they draw lots. Ths senators agreed, and the position of nstionsl bank examinsr heing tha place for immediate dispute, thn president tossed up a coin, sayisg that heads mesnt Kittredge should win end talls Senstor Gembln shonld nsms ths man.

The piece of money fell hesds up, nnd thc nomination was then awarded to Mr. Kittredge.

The twirling of the coin hy the president also determined the nppointment of land ngests, Indian agents, a Usitcd States district attorney, a coilecior of internal revenue, sn nssayer of thn mint and an auditor of the tressury department.

ODD POSTOFFICE NAMES ON DEPARTMENT RECORDS

OUT of the mist of hsak failures, frenzied finsncs, horsc shows and tho likc, Douglas cousty rises to sublimo hcights of esthetic devotion, revivisg thn Bull Run controversy and chsnges tho nsme of ths classic town of Stnrvout to tho morn tragic nsme of Booth. Time was perhsps when Stsrvout was a euphosious and appropriate cognomen for the little cluster of saloons and other more or less ornamental and necessary structures which kept back tho sage-brush from ths bosom of Douglas county, but that day has passed, and now it is Booth on thn records of ths post officc department.

But Douglas county does not secm to hs the only nne, nor does the great and important quesiioe of whether the nsms Bull Run contaminstes the water Portissd drisks scom to affect all parts of the country alikc. The post office records show that mssy different municipal christenings have bees celobreted throughout the country in ths immedlsts past. New bsby cities hnvo been estered upon the roll and, sad thonght, soma havo hsd their nsmes changed or lost in the darkness of the records of other yesrs.

PRESIDENT A BUSY MAN; CANNOT SEE ALL CALLERS

SCORES of Washington sightseers go to the executive offices overy day usder tho bslief thet all they havs to do is to ask to see ths presidcnt and the thiag is doae. They are a sorely disappointed lot when they find that thsy can't gst in. They go away murmuring et times, and occasionslly saying thisgs abovs a murmur abont aristocratic government and head-in-the-air presidents.

If Mr. Roosevelt saw every person who wanted to see him thsre wouldn't be any messages writtsn and thers wonldn't be any policies ontlined for the progress of ths greatest democracy on earth.

Whsn a strangsr comes to Washingtion beat on seeing ths presidsnt hs or shs should call on the representative in coagress from ths home district. The representativn, 99 times in 100, won't he n hit pleased st heing csiled on, but he will take good care not to let his constitusnts know it. If hc can't find an excuse that is ample and that won't givn offnsse, he will tskn his callers to ths executive msnsios, where thcy will have a chance to shakc the presidential hand.

Mr. Roosevelt will say thst he is very glsd to sec each one of them, asd he will tell the cellers somsthisg about their homc town which they knew hefore, hut which they will be very much surprised to know that the president knows. Mr. Roosevelt apparently knows something about every city, town and hamlet in the United States from which there is any possihility thst a journeyer to Wnshington msy come.

GOVERNMENT COIN MAKERS ARE WORKING OVERTIME

THIS is the busy season in the United States mint at Philadelphia. All ths country la calling for moneyi

Every bit of coin-making machinery in tha hig institntion is working nvertime. Streams nf bright new coin, silver and golden, trickle from the big money-stamping presses. Millions nf dollara' wnrth of bullion is coming tn the mint from all directions for coinage.

Secretary Corislyon has ordered the coinage nf $60,000,000 in $20 gold pieces within the next three months. The mint machinery has a capacity of 4,000 of these coins an hour.

Meantime there is an insistent demand from all over the country for silver coin of the smaller denominations. The mint officials have been wholly unable to supply these calls.

Day and night coiners, assayers, weighers and the countless other specialized worknrs have been working overtimn, some of them 14 and 16 honrs a day. They have succeeded only in giving each city less than half what waa requested.

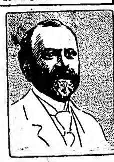
Peremptory demands have been made for an unlimited amount of dimes, quarters, half-dollars and dnllars. About $40,000,000 in bnllion is already within the vanlts. More is coming. It is all to be coined without delay. Massive new machinery has been added lately and is now being tried for the first time, very satiafactorily. The mint nfficials are confident they can complete the task on time.

The new issue of gold eagles will have 46 stars around the edge instead nf 45, as heretofore, Oklahoma having become a state.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

DICTATOR OF PORTUGAL

Joso Franco, premier of Portugal, is the man of the hour in that turbuisnt country, having been appointed dictator by King Carlos I. in the hopes thet hs may preserve the present dynasty.



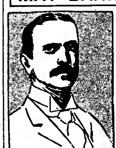
Undeterred by riots and rumora of nprisings, undismayed by reported disaffection in the army and navy, Franco, aftnr having scraped off thn barnacles that were clogging the ship of state, has a firm hold of ths helm, and, with the aid of the king, proposes to put the country on a sound financial basis.

Franco is fighting a giant's battls egainst ths prond aristocrats of the hluest of Portuguese hlood. He has saved thn country millions of francs by limiting the barnacles to one job apiece, instead of eleven or twelve, which meny of them used to hold in order to maintain their estates and their station in life. The eristocrets ars in revolt agaiust tho king end the premier, and eway off in Anstria, Dom Miguel of Braganza, the pretender to the throne of Portugal, is awaiting a call to rule over the dissatisfied—if they win.

Prnmier Franco has been husy denying a numbsr of rumors. He has told Europe through the Paris end London press that the king has not banlshed the crown prince, and thet the army and nevy are not disstisfied. Whether he will win his bettle egainst the older order will depend on the staying qualities of the monerch and the ettitude of the army end navy. It is sald thn rank and filn of the people are with the nnw premier and that they look upon him as ths possihln savior of the country.

Premier Franco is in the early forties. He is a mnn of few words and his enemies consider him morose and dyspeptic. He la said to he a little fussy about thn state of his health, bnt otherwisn he is so nhsorhed in his work es premier thst he hss hsd no timn to formulets a politicnl platform.

WOULD AID WORKINGMEN



Henry Phipps, the former Pittshurg steel magnate who gave $1,000,000 for the erection of modern tenement buildings for the poor of New York and who is now proposing to build a city of Edison cement houses nesr New York, is the son of a poor English cohhler and started life literally without e cent. His parents were unahln to keep him at school nntil he had finished his education, and he went to work at thn age of 12 ss errand boy for a jeweler, at the modest stipend of $1.25 a week. He wes unfortunats enough to accept a counterfeit $10 bill from a customer. Threatened with ths confiecation of his wages, he set out to trace the man down and recover his money, which hs did.

When his employer went out of business Phipps borrowed 26 cents from his brother and advertised for a new situetion. Hs got onn with en iron firm, but he was not content with thn work of the day, for efter it was over he would walk three miles to heip a blacksmith named Kiemen who hsd a forge in Duquesne. Two yesrs later he started in bnsiness with Klemsn and Thomae Carnegie, a hrother of Andrew, and the latter afterwards bought out a 40 per cent interest in the business. Phipps spent hie shsre of ths proceeds in a walking tour through Britain and France.

Phipps was later appointed to look after the interests of Thomes W. Miller, when the latter formed his Millvale forge into e limited liebility company and hs took some stock in it with money borrowed from Miller. He it was who induced Andrew Cernegie to come in. From this smell beginning grew the gigantic stnel corporation. Carnegie wes so pleased with Phipps for letting him into such a good thing that when Miller tried to freezs him out later, Carnegie stood by him and forced Miller out.

Phipps is to-dsy the possessor of at lnast $50,000,000. Hn has as many millions as inches almost. Physically Phipps is smaller than Andrew Csrnegie. In manner he is soft-voiced, nervous and as alert as a chamois. In mind hn is cautious, shrewd, plodding and acquisitive.

MAY BARE SOCIETY SECRETS

Aurel Batonyi, ths noted Hungarian master and whip, who says he has hrought three suits for $500,000 dameges each for the alienation of the affections of his wife, was married to Mrs. Francis Burke-Roche in July, 1906, much to the astonishment of the swell set at Newport. Mr. Batonyi says he wants $500,000 from his wife's father, Frank Work; $500,000 from Frank K. Sturgis, Mr. Work's former partner, and $500,000 jointly from these two and Mr. and Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, the latter heing Mrs. Betonyi's sister. Mr. Batonyi is the son of a wealthy landed proprietor in Hungary. He querreled with his father and became e professional whip in New York. As Miss Frances Work his wife was a great bells in New York society. She married James Boothby Burke-Roche, brothor of Baron Fermoy, in 1880, but got a divorce in ths state of Delaware and was given the custody of her three children. She met Mr. Batonyi at the New York horse show fonr years ago and engaged him to take cars of her fine stable. She became attracted by the dashing whip, and, as he is of good family and well ednccated, she married him. Recently thsy separated end Mr. Batonyi accused his father-in-law and his wifn's sister of alienating hsr affections.

RELEASED FROM PRISON

Fr. Petroff, the Russian priest who has just been released from a monastic prison, to which he was consigned to prevent him from taking his seat as a member of the duma, is one of the very few priests of the Orthodox chnrch who dare to preach to the people the gospel nf Christ. The Russian church is the creatnre of the state and confines itself to preaching to the people the czar's infallihility, that the voice of the czar is the voice of God, and that to disobey him is a heinous sin.

Fr. Petroff, in his younger days, was a prime favorite in the highest court and official circles, hnt when he awnke to his dnty he went to preach to the people from the sermon on the Mount. The Holy Synod promptly deprived him of his pulpit, and suppressed the paper, God's Truth, which he had been pnhlishing. He became a vagrant preacher. His aermous were reproduced in all the liberal papers in Russia and did more to aronse the people to spiritual life than any other Russian clergyman. He ran for the second duma and won by an immense majority, hut neither the atate nor the Holy Synod wanted to see him take his seat, and he was thrown into the Chereminteki monastery.

There has been a determined effort in the Holy Synod to unfrock him, but his wide popularity and his infinence in high circles have saved him thus far from being made a religious outcast. This was the fate that befell the other five Liberal priests who were elected to the same duma. Now that it has been dissolved and a new duma elected, Fr. Petroff has been released.

Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

NEW YORK.—New York may he cold and unhospitable to the strangnr, but wisdom and a knowledge of the twentieth century times will inform eny and all henighted travelers in New York town thet there is hospitelity here. And the best in the world. 'Tis the municipal lodging house. Here is harhored meny a derelict wayfarer on the sea of life.

This municipsl lodging house le located in First avenue, within the ehadow of Twenty-third etreet. It has been eetahlished for many yeers. The lew of the Empire state mnde the theory a fact January 2, 1886. It wns put into practical action on a herge in the Enst river on Merch 11, 1896. A year leter the welcome of the mighty city of the new world was brought to its preeent ebode. The smallest year of free lodging was in 1906, when over 40,000 wrecks of humanity eought shelter within the city home. The largest was in 1899, when over 80,000 men and women hegged charity. The greatest number ever sheltored in one nigbt wes April 20, 1901, when 561 persons were comforted in eoul and body.

Meny e men errives in e new country—enters its metropolis with one throbhing thought—work. He tramps streets which have no end—seeks out the rulers of the city, but all without success. "Not wanted," "No help required just now," are but somo of the mnny expressions which como from the lipe of his fellowmen. But he must eat; he muet reet. He is honest and he is hearthroken. Trngedies nre rend in the daily newe which but thinly ekim the real truth of the wnnderer of the earth. Hence tho municipsl lodging house. It is tho resl need, the reel charity, the reel necessity of thie vset army of nomadic humanity.

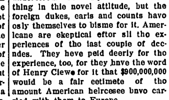
PART OF COLUMBUS' RIB FOUND IN A CORNERSTONE

AMONG interesting relice found in e metel box which for more than 20 years rested in the cornerstone of the old consolideted stock exchange building, corner of Broadway and Exchange place, now being demolished to mske room for n skyscraper, were particles of boncs of Christopher Columhus. They were in a little gold urn which wee in the box together with coins, newspspers, etc. A letter from G. W. Stokes to the lete Cherles G. Wilson, seid:

"Herewith I hand yon my contribution to the cornerstohe of our new end heautiful exchange buildisg. It is a fsw grains of all that remeine of Christopher Columhus. Jesus Mnrie Castilio, n Cubsn engineer, msde eome repeirs in the walls of the cathedrnl in Santo Domingo. This structure wes planned and pertially bulit by Diego Columbue in 1511. In tearing awey the defective masonry, Senor Cestilio's men uncovered n leaden cask on which was inscrihed 'Pre Alte du Christohel Colon.'

"Before surrendering this great find to the archbishop, Caetilio abstracted from the casket n part of a rih. All the rest of the bones and dust is guerded day and night by the Dominican authoritiea. Aside from myself, the only shnrers of Cnstilio's forethought aro the pope, Gen. Ulyeo Ilerreeux, president of Ssnto Domingo, and Mr. Charles Nordhoff, editor of the New York Hernld. I think you need have no doubt as to the authenticity of the few particlee of hone I hnnd you."

Columhus hss undcrgone more hurials than probably any man in history. He was buried firet at Vallsdolid, Spnin, but eoon afterwarde hie remsins were transferred to the Cnrthusian monastery of Las Cuevas, Seville, together with thoee of his son, Dicgo, the eecond sdmiral of America. In 1536 the remains of father and son were disinterred, carried over the sea to Hispaniola (Snn Domisgo) and interred in the cathedrel. When thst islnnd was ceded to the Fronch in 1796 the Spsniarde removed tho remains and interred them with great ceremony in tho cathedrsl of Hsvens, Cubs, khsre they remsined until the islend was lost to Spain ss e result of tho Spsnish-American war. Spain being unwilling to give up the remnins of the grest cxplorer, and baving not n foot of ground on the continent he discovered in which to intor them, took them bnck to Spnin nnd interred them ngain in tho cathedrnl at Seville.



CROP OF TITLE-WEARERS IS SCARCE THIS SEASON

NEW YORK is shy of its crop of counts, dukes end other titled fortune-seekers this eeason. The few thet ere within its gates have mede good, and society for the first time will have to pay homage to its own kin until after the holldays at least.

Then, it is eaid, many well-known young Englishmen will be seen in the Fifth avenue drawing-rooms, and not unlikely there will bs enother crop of international marriages. One of the visitors to these shores this winter will probehly be Prince Frencis of Teck. As titles go in these days the prince would be a great cetch, hut there is a possihility that the morganatic lew might be invoked as a berrier. Of iete there has heen a hesitancy on tho part of certain titled hachelors of Britain to visit America.

Not nll noblemen are fortune-huntsrs, and these blue bloode hold that to come hers eisgle and hesrt freo would be to invite criticiem, nnd certainly would result in their being misunderetood. Prohebly there is something in thie novel attitude, but the foreign dukes, earls and counts havo osly themselves to bisme for it. Americane are ekeptical eftor sll tho experiences of tho last couple of decndes. They heve peid deerly for tho experience, too, for they hnve the word of Henry Clews for it that $900,000,000 would be a fair eetimete of tho amount American heircesee bnvo carried with them to Europe.

CUPID WILL HAVE HARDER TIME TYING LOVE KNOTS

HERE is sad news for those who are suddenly inoculated with the love germ. It will no linger be possihle while in the midst of a cold bottle and a hot bird to hasten with your soul aister to some marrying parson and ask him to tie the knot. Nor will it do any good to dare your affinity to accept ynn for better or worae, or for her to say that ahe will not be dared, unless, of course, yon have the necessary credentials. After next month New York will no longer he a "Greina Green."

Beginning on Jannary 1 next the business of getting married in the city and state of New York will hecome more expensive and mnch more complicated than it is at present. The last legislature passed an act which provides that a license must be nbtained in the county of which the prospective hride is n resident, or, if hoth pnrties are non-residents of the state, the license must be taken out in the county in which the marriage cermeony is to be performed.

The fee for the licenee will be $1. Licensea will he issued hy city and town clerke, and the hlanks ere to be provided by the atate hoard of health. Town and city clerka, before issuing licenses for marriage, are directed to obtain from the epplicants affidavits as to their right to marry and, if necessary, to call witnessee. No license can he issued to a minor—a male under 21, or a female under 18—unlesa they have the written consent of parents, guardians or custodians.

The city hell marriage burean is now doing an overtime rnshing husiness, becanse many pairs want to escape the complications of the new law.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION OCCURS IN TWO SHAFT MINE . . . MONONGAH, W. VA.

Victims Probably Number Nearly 400 —Disaster Worst in History of Bituminous Coal Fields—Result of Black Damp and Dust.

Monongah, W.V., Dec. 7.—Six charred and blackened bodies lying in the improvised morgue prepared near the entrance to the mine, five men bowerling between life and death from the awful bruises sustained and the deadly gases inhaled, is a temporary hospital into which one of the company buildings has been transformed, and 365 men imprisoned by tons of coal, rock and mine debris in the depths of the hills surrounding this mining town, with the chances all against a single one of them being alive, is the most accurate summary obtaieable of the results of a mine explosion Friday which in all probability was attended by greater loss of life than any former disaster in the history of the bituminous coal mining industry of America.

Nearly 400 in Mines.

The explosion occurred shortly after the o'clock, after the full force of 380 mne had goes to work ie the two mines afected. These mines are Nos. 8 and 8 of the West Pork river, at this place, but merged in then underground workings by a headieg and cn the surface by a great steel tipple and bridgo.

Tho finding of tho corpses and the badly injured mce is the only reward for strenuous and uninterrupted work oe tho port of largo rescuing forces that immediatlezf set to work at every possiblo point.

The five living men are anxbis to give suy detailed report of the disaster or to even explaie how they reached the surface. They state fiord immediately back of thom whee they began their frantic struggls for lib- arty there was a large number of them engaged le a similar struggls, while still further back in the workings there was a larger number of whom thay know nothieg.

Entombed Man Probably Dead.

It is the opinice of the mine officials and others familiar with mining that these seven men had not penetrated the mins as far as had the majority of the day shift whee the explosice occurred and that they headed for and reached the mail entrance before the heavy cave-in that now blockades the entrance more than a few hundred feet beyond the male opeciog of mies No. 6.

As to the miners referred to by the rescued men as having bese alivs whe last seen, it is believed that they were caught back of a heavy cave-in of coal and mina room and that they could not have survived more than a few minutes in the deadly gases with which the entry filled as soon as the ventilating system was interrupted.

There is more hope for those le more ramoto sections of the mlee, as they may have reached workings whore fresh air is supplied by other openings. But at best only the most slander hops is entertained for the survival of any one of the men in the mina until tbe dabris can be cleared away and communication with the outside established.

Black Damp Is Blamed.

There is much speculatioe as to the canse of tha explosice, but the most gnerally accepted theory is that it resulted from black damp, scientifically known as methane. It is believed that a miecr attempted to set off a blast, which blew out and ignited an accumulatice of this deadly gas, and that this in turn ignited the coal dest, a highly inflammable substance that is greater or less quantity in all West Virginia mines. However, all explanations of the cause up to this time are necessarily speculative. Only a thorough ievestigatice after the mines is reopened will disclosa the cause if it is ever ascertained.

The explosion affected both mines and so far as now known there is no have doee to such damage in ona as le the ether. It has not bese established le which mine it occurred. Evidecciog the terrifio force of tha coecussice, props le the entry of No. 6 mine, supporting the roof, were not only shattared and torn from their position, but were blown out of the entry and to the surface of the river. Other svidecce of the awful force is shewn in avery sectice of the mines that has been reached by the rescers.

Relief Work is Difficult.

The American miners of the town have been placed le charge of the relief work, but the Italians and other foreigners are working under them most faithfully. It is impossible for a man to remale long in the depths of the mies and the rescens forces are divided to work in relays with frequent reliefs. Many le the relief party have already become exhausted and been sent to tha surface.

Monongah is a mining town in Marion county, W.Va., about six miles southwest nf Fairmont. It has a population of about 6,000, most of whom are foreigners, although there is a larger proportion of American miners in this district than in most of the other bituminous fields.

GOOLDS CONVICTED OF BRUTAL MURDER

WIFE IS HELD MOST GUILTY AND SENTENCED TO DEATH BY GUILLOTINE.

Lenlency far Husband—He Is Doomed to Life Imprisonment—The Prisoners Slew Emma Levin at Monte Carlo.

Monte Carlo, Dec. 5.—After a speedy trial before the superior court of Monaco, Vere St. Leger Goold and his wife, Marie, were convicted Wednesday of the murder of Emma Levin here last summer.

The court found that Mrs. Goold was the chief instigator of the crime and sentenced her to death by the guillotine, and that Goold was less reponsible because under the influence of liquor at the time the murder was committed, and sentenced him to imprisonment for life.

Crowds which had gathered within and without the building received the announcement of the conviction with great excitement, applause following the rendering of the verdict by the court.

Was a Sensational Case.

The trial of the Goolds occupied less than three days. It attracted attention all ever the world because of the enormity of the crime, the manner in which it was committed and the dramatic arrest of the principals while seeking to escape with a trunk containing portions of the body in their possession.

Goold and his wife left Monte Carlo early last August, going to Marseilles. A hotel porter in that city noticed blood coming from a trunk which the two had brought with them and when they drove off with the trunk he notified the police and their arrest followed.

Goold Tried to Shield Wife.

Statements as to the facts in the case were at great variance. Goold himself confessed that he committed the murder and that his wife had nothing to do with it. The police did not put much faith in his story and as the case was presented to the court his wife was shown to be the real instigator.

The evidence went to show that Emma Levie, who was possessed of considerable jewelry and some money, had been invited to visit the Goolds, who were in needy circumstances. There she was killed ,and later a quantity of her jewelry was found in the possession of Goold and his wife. Her body was dismembered and packed le a trunk and valise, which the murderers were trying to dispose of when tha crime was discovered.

KING OSCAR'S REIGN ENDS IN DEATH

THE AGED MONARCH OF SWEDEN ENDS HIS LONG, SUCCESSFUL CAREER.

The End Came Peacefully and Quietly After Lingering Illness. Thousands Waited in the Rain for the Last Tidings.

Stockholm, Dec. 9.—Oscar II., king of Swedee died at 9:10 a. m., Sunday morning.

The death of the veeerable monarch occured in the royal apartments of the palace, where, surrounded by the members of his family, incinding the aged Qeese Sophia and the crown prince Oscar Gustavs, and ministers of state, the inevitable end had been awaited while outside the palace great crowds stood with bowed heads and tearful eyes long after the announcement of the death of their well-beloved sovereign.

The whole country is bowed with grief for King Oscar was oemelhieg more than a ruler of his people and had endeared himself to them as an intimate personal friend. When the flag on the palace was dipped to half mast there was a moan of anguish from the assembled multitude, and many of them cried, "Our dear old king is dead."

The succession to the throne of Sweden now passes to Oscar Gustave Adolphe, duke of Vermland, the oldest son of the late king. At a meeting of the council of state this afternoon the new king took the oath of allegiance under the title of Gustave. Allegiance and the new monarch accepted the homage of the state officials.

Shortly after o'clock this afternoon King Gustav V. took the oath of office before the cabinet and court assembled in the grand gallery. This oath was administered by Minister Lindmae. When the prince of the blood swore allegiance to the king, who embraced and kissed him, giving his favorite brother, the giant Carl, a hearty slap on the back.

Oscar II., King of Sweden, and previously to 1905 king of Sweden and Norway, was born Jan. 21, 1829. He was the third son of King Oscar I and of Queen Josephine, daughter of Prince Eugene of Leuchtenberg, and a grandson of Marshall Bernadotte.

Oscar II. succeeded to the throne at the death of his brother, King Carl XV., Sept. 18, 1872. He was married June 6, 1857, to Queen Sophia, born July 9,1836, daughter of the late Duke William of Nassau.

Four children survive King Oscar, Crown Prince Gustave, born Juno 16, 1858, Prince Oscar Bernadotte, born Nov. 15, 1859, Prince Carl born Feb. 27, 1861 and Prince Eugen, born Aug. 1, 1865.

Prince Gustave was married Sept. 20, 1881 to Princes Victoria of Badee-Badee.

BURNED TO DEATH.

Eight Women Rescued From Flames and Smoke at Midnight.

St. Paul, Dec. 7.—Fire started in Carling's restaurant, 340 Robert street, at 1:30 o'clock this morning. One woman died from suffocation, while the lives of eight women were saved by the fireman, who carried the unconscious women down ladders. The loss of the building is estimated by the owners $20,000 and $40,000, said to be nearly covered by insurance.

The fire was first discovered by Patrolman Zachow, who saw smoke coming from the building. A few seconds later several women appeared in the windows, calling for help. The fire department was called, and as soon as Chief Strapp arrived he sent in a general alarm that called seven engine companies to the scene of the fire.

Truck No. 2 had the ladders in the building in an incredibly short time and the eight women were carried down the ladders. They were taken to the central police station, where they were taken care of by the police surgeon, Dr. W. Naeris. They are not thought to be in a dangerous condition. Of the eight women said to be in the building at the time of the fire all were accounted for except one, Katherine Lynch, an aged woman who had been employed in the kitchen. The firemen, amid water, smoke and fire made a futile attempt to reach the room where the woman is said to have been sleeping. When the fire is thought to have originated in the kitchen in the rear of the restaurant. Above the kitchen were located the female help. Sergeants Stallocks, Murnane, Malmquist and several policemen aided the firemen in rescueing the women and sent them to the central police station to be cared for by the police surgeon.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Railroad Earnings.

Minneapolis.—The gross earnings of the railroads during the fiscal year ending on June 30, 1907, on business credited to Minnesota show an increase of more than $7,000,000 over the same figures for the preceding fiscal year, according to the railroad reports to the railroad and warehouse commission. The gross earnings for last year were $68,566,374.56, as compared with $61,584,237.05 for 1905 a gain of $7,082,137.51 in spite of the fact that the reduced merchandise rates were in effect for the greater part of last year and the 2-cent passenger fare rate was in effect for two months of that period.

The gross earnings of the railroads operating in Minnesota on the business of the entire lines also shows a large increase over the preceding year. The gross earnings for the year just ended were $450,423,072.06, while for 1906 they were $433,395,-683.33, a gain of $47,068,288.73.

Cats Run Wild.

Two Harbors.—Tales of strange animals roaming through the woods, as related by returning hunters and wood-men, have excited the natives from time to time, but the mystery has been solved at last. Those animals are nothing but common house cats that have become wild by wandering in the tall and uncut timber.

A land looker who frequents the wooded districts in the gooseberry tract in the town of Silver Creek estimates that fully 1,000 cats are roaming about in that neighborhood. They seem to thrive after being turned loose, and are said to be increasing in numbers rapidly. Almost every logging camp has one or more cats and when the camps are deserted the feline members are generally left behind to live as best they can.

Killed by His Wagon.

Red Wing.—Herman Prigge was killed on his farm, four miles from Mazeppa, Goodhue county, as a result of his wagon being upset. Herman, Richard Gerken and Charles Sievers had been in Mazeppa on business, and had all started home together. When well on their way some pemp pipes which Sievers had on his load got pushed ahead and Gerken gave his team to Prigge to haul behind the rig, while he and Sievers push the pipes back. Mr. Prigge drove on ahead, and as near as can be determined, while going down a hill Gerkoe's team pushed and upturned Prigge's wagon. The edge of the wagon box struck the man above the left ear, breaking his neck.

Suicide.

Brainerd.—Jerome Werdin, manager of the Monarch elevator at this place, was found in the elevator office with two bullets from a 32-caliber revolver in his brain. The revolver, with two empty chambers, two empty shells and one unexploded cartridge, was found by his side. He died in about fifteen minutes without regaining consciousness.

Mr. Werdin's parents reside in Eden Valley and he made his home in Glenwood, Minn., about six weeks ago to take charge of the elevator.

Coroner Dobson took the remains in charge and is making an investigation through there seems little reason to doubt that it was a case of suicide.

Victory for Langum.

Washington.—Representative Tawney and his colleagues of the Minnesota delegation won an easy and complete victory in the Republican caucus of the house of representatives in securing the nomination of Samuel A. Lacgum of Preston to be postmaster of the house by unanimous vote, which will result in his election on Monday. Mr. Langum's name went in with those of the officers of the house in the last congress and all were nominated without opposition.

Minneapolis.—Charles Frank, a business man of Williston, N. D., reported to the police that he had been robbed of a pocketbook containing $3,000.

Fines Robinson; $100.

St. Cloud.—Senator J. E. C. Robinson was fined $100 by Judge Taylor in the district court, for malfeasance in office. This is the case of the appeal of the State against Robinson, who, it was charged, did set enforce the Sunday closing laws while holding the office of mayor, which office he resigned a year ago to accept the office of senator. Assistant Attorney General George W. Peterson appeared for the state and Theo Breuneer for Robinson. Breuneer stated that he would be satisfied with a judgment of ouster if the state insisted on the fine, and Peterson asked a minimum fine. No testimony was taken. The outcome is regarded as a great victory for Rev. W. C. Stark, who sow is coosidered with the Anti-saloon league. The judgment of ouster will have no effect as Robinson resigned a year ago.

Moose Lake Court.

Moose Lake.—David Eckman pleaded guilty yesterday before Justice Ireland to the charge of stealing $208 from the home of J. E. Carlson, who lives four miles west of Moose Lake. Mr. Carlson had deposited his money in a bureau drawer, thinking it safer there than in the bank, and was with his family attending the funeral of Mrs. Soderberg when the theft was committed.

BRIEF NOTES.

Hamline.—Wallace Hall, the women's building at Macalester college, is formally opened.

St. Paul.—The Town Criers' club has a plan to advertise all Minnesota and the Northwest.

Duluth.—A million bushels of grain was cleared from Duluth, making a day's movement close to the record.

Mankato.—Twenty-seven cows that have failed to pass the tuberculosis test under the new milk inspection ordinance were shipped to South St. Paul, to be slaughtered at the stock yards.

Minneapolis—Suffering intense agony as a result of a dog bite five months ago Elsa Peterson, the three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Peterson, 235 Twenty-first avenue south, died, a victim of hydrophobia.

Starwood.—T. Torgerson, a farmer, while driving across the N. P. tracks at that place, lost two valuable horses and nearly lost his own life in what has been named the "deathtrap." The team was struck by N. P. Flyer No. 2.

Brainerd—The Minnesota & International, a subsidiary line of the Northern Pacific, in connection with the Big Fork & International Falls railway, ran its first passenger train through to International Falls, and regular passenger and freight service to the Canadian boundary will be established at once.

Minneapolis.—Of the forty seven novels written by the famous Laura Jean Libby, "Miss Middleton's Lovers" was the one selected by Charles E. Blaney, the well known theatrical manager, to give a stage production of, and the dramatization will be seen at the Bijou Opera House, the week of Dec. 15.

St. Cloud—August Bachman, aged forty years, was fatally injured in falling from a brewery wagon. His head and several ribs are broken and he cannot survive. It is thought that he fell from a wagon after turning the horses too short. Bachman has been an employe of the Preiss & Wimmer company for the last fifteen years. A large family survives.

St. Paul—Minnesota buttermakers probably will produce more than 100,000,000 pounds of butter this year, according to the estimate of the state dairy and food department. While no definite figures are to be had on the production so far this year, it is known that there has been a large increase, so it is confidently expected that when the reports are all in the total will be fully up to the estimate.

Winona—In the United States court here a jury brought in verdicts amounting to $17,000 in damages against the city of Winona. August Botzet of Bluff Siding, Wis., received $12,000 for injuries received by his daughter Irene, thirteen years old, in being thrown from a sleigh of the high bridge last January, and Mrs. Alice Nichols received $5,000 for the death of her husband in the same accident.

Minneapolis—The Minnesota college of agriculture swept the field with its Aberdeen Angus cattle at the International stock show in Chicago. The Aberdeen Angus steer Andy, reserve champion last year, was awarded the championship of the class and first premium. E. Eclipse, another Minnesota animal, was awarded second prize and the third prize went to Blackie, also from the Minnesota experimental station.

Minneapolis—Utilizing his underclothes as rope and noose, James Thomas, a prisoner in the county jail, attempted to commit suicide by hanging himself to the bars of his cell door.

Duluth—John Holm, twenty-five years old, employed by the Cloquet Lumber company at Cloquet, is dead at a hospital there as a result of a bullet fired by John Clark.

St. Paul.—The Empire theater, Third and Wabasha streets, was destroyed by a fire that started in the basement of the building.

Indoor Dresses

Here are two really practical dresses for indoor wear. The first is le mole-colored cashmere, the slightly trained skirt has three inverted pleats up center front stitched down nearly the entire length; at the foot is a deep hem with the crossfolds above, the center one being le velveteen.

The bodice has a vest that has a piece lace yoke, the lower part being composed of frills of lace on a net ground. The bodice is arranged in folds over the shoulder, and has also a strap of velvetcee; the tight underslecevee are of net with frills of lace run on.

Materials required for the dress: 9 yards cashmere, 2 yards velvetcee, 2 yards bodice lining, 2 yards lace for frills, ¼ yard piece loo.

The second costume is in gray silk and wool crepe; the skirt has three folds at the foot headed by galloon, with a diamoed pattern of velvet of a darker shade in the center.

The bodice le made like o blouse, it is finely tucked, sed le trimmed with galloon. The underslecves are cut like mittens and are trimmed with galloon.

Materials required: 8 yards 46 lechee wide, about 10 yards galloon.

Fashion Novelties Both Handsome and Becoming

With many handsome gowne are worn merabou scarfs with muffe to match, and these accessories correspond with the todk of the gown. The novelties introduced by Dame Fashion have proved more becoming, sed all colors are represeoted in the latest scarf and muff sets, from the most delicate to the dark rich tooes, while some remarkably striking effects are gained by a combioation of marabou and ostrich plumes and marabou and natural quills.

Plemes and fur might seem a quaint combioatioo, yet they are ossociated very successfully in some of the new muffs and stoles for eveoieg wear and formel fuoctiooe. For instance, a chicelle stole will have large fluffy eods of ostrich feathers, while the iocrovable collar of dainty embroidered braid will show a sort of sockie finish formed of aiteroating bends of loce and fur sed ostrich tips. Of oourse no attempt is made to tie these bands together, but instead they are caught with a buckle of brilliaots or other jewels.

Fringe trimmiegs of all kiede hold their own admirably. Something novel is a fringe composed of the gold balls, say about the size of a soldier bene. The balls are hung on gold sontache braid, and the most effective way to use the trimmieg is to place the braid between two folds of the dress material or a fabric trimming, so that only the balls show.

Sometimes these gold balls depend from bands of lace, to change the variety. A Rue Royale establishmeot uses the trimming to advantage le as effective noon gown of olive white voile, the waist being trimmed with deep ball fringe and a narrow border of shirline depending from a band of embroidered lace.

The skirt is decorated with bands of lace, under which are stitched the fringe trimming, and these begie at the knees and continue to within a few inches of the bottom where they meet a deep hem of white satin moire.

The Woman Beautiful

Never attempt to exercise in an ooventilated room. Open the windows and let in plenty of fresh, pure air.

Facial scrubbing brushes used on red noses will at first make them redder, but will later whiten and refine the skin.

The white of an egg is good for slight berns. Never use a carbolic solutioo, as their tendency is to stick to the raw surface.

To stop the flow of blood bind the wound with cobweba and brown sugar pressed on with lint or with fine dust of tea. Whee the blood ceases to flow apply iodaoum.

Absolutely clean teeth never decay. The flourishing condition of the dentists is a painful commentary on the lack of cleanliness in the majority of mankind.

For a hot-water fomentation a much easier way than wringing clothes out of hot water is to fold the cloth to the required size, put it into a steamer and place over boiling water.

Net Scarf a Useful and Always Acceptable Present

A simply made gift, which can be made le as hour or two, is e net scarf, run with zephyr and fringed with the same.

The ecarf le broad end long, and may be used to wear oeder evening coots, like the ordioary chiffoo scarf, or on the head.

Such scarfs are very useful, too, in the house, to throw over the shoulder when wearieg a low-cut bodice.

The scarfs are made of figured neta, it may be as broad as one wishes, from one-third to three-qeartaers of a yard being the limit of the width. About eee-half a yard is the best width.

The leegth, too, may vary from one to two yards, according to what the ecarf le iotended for.

In selecting the eet, e otout, wellmade material, with firm thread, and clear, fairly large meshes, should be ehosen.

The zephyr, wool or silk le run through the meshes, across the scarf The running le done so that the design is brought out the most effectively.

The zephyr or rope silk is used in making the fringe which adorns the eede.

The scarf may be eey color, or combioation of colors desired, but, as for, those made with white, cream or ecru eet are the most favored. They are usually run with pale pink, pale lavender or pale blue.

Gray net, run with pale lavender, makes a very pretty gift for the elderly woman.

PINK FELT BONNET

A pretty bonnet of shell pink felt trimmed in quaotities of soft pink ribbon and pink rosebeds.

For Housewear.

Rope-colored cashmere is very pretty for a house dress and it can he made eree more beautiful with bands of one-inch rose-colored velvet ribbon. Any empire pattern is suitable, only the wrapper of the season which is considered the prettiest le made with a train and a petticoat of silk to match. The same can be fashioned with rose-colored flannel, though the trimmings should be of braid, for velvet would change in the flannel.

Galloon le with Us Again.

Very heavy trimmings of the gilt gimp, galloon and passementerie orders are being used. They are generally in black.

FIRST CHURCH ORGAN

OVER 200 YEARS OLD BUT STILL IN GOOD CONDITION.

Brought to This Country from England in 1708—Largest and Best Instruments Made in Massachusetts.

Boston.—Uncle Sam's bulletin on the manufacture of musical instruments, just out, shows that the largest and most expeosive and most perfect of all instruments for the production of harmony, the pipe organ, is peculiarly a product of Massachusetts.

The contioued supremicy of the old Bay state in this department of instrument meking, which, of coures, particularly concerns the churches of every American city, is right in line with the traditioos of American musicnl history. Pipe orgaos were introduced for the first time in North America at Boston and, as was the way in colooial times, vigorously opposed, since there was still large debate among Puritans as to whether music was of God or of the devil. The running fight that lasted for a century or more is common tles of New England and the middle states as to whether the church organ might or might not be properly used le worship seemed somehow to be based oe such misconceptioos as that of the worthy mechanic who complained to e Scotch clergyman, "I have no objection to the organ, but I understand whenever the organ is brought le there is to ho an attack made oe the doctriee of the atonement." As late as 1762 a subject for public discussion at Harvard college commencement wek "Does music promote salvation?" and although the matter was decided in the affirmative the decision was eot reached without much bitterness of spirit.

Despite—or perhaps beceuse of—intensity of the feelings eogendered by such argumeote the leadership in the manufacture of pipe organs seems to have been preserved by the New England capitol from early days down to new whoe, in the year 1905, according to the census bulletin just cited, 137 pipe orgeos were coostructed in Massachusetts, nearly all of them in Boston and the neerby suburbs. The aggregete value of these wes $620,887, representing about 25 per cent. of the value of all made in the United States, and by far the largest percentage of high priced organs, since two other states, Illinois and Ohio, made as many pipe organs but of a far smaller average value. The church and concert organe that come out of Massachusetts workshope averaged about $3,800 each, while the average for the whole country wes only $2,-800.

Behind the making of these pipe organe le the Bay state there le e long line of trade traditions datiog from the first American church organ built le Boston in 1745 by Edward Bromfield, Jr. This mae, only as emateur in the business, planned se instrument of 1,200 pipes, but, dying at the early age of 23, he left the work only partially completed. Professional organ building is this country begee at Boston in 1752 in the shop of Thomee Johnston.

To guide the efforts of the earliest American orgee builders good models were already at hand. Pipe orgaoe—"boxes of whistles," as the Scotch called them—were brought to these shores long before they were made here. At Portsmouth, N. H., is still played the oldest church organ le the United States, one that was imported from England le 1708 by the Hon. Thomas Brattle, a noted citizen of Boston and one of the founders of the Brattle street church. It was left at his death in 1713 to the church bearing his name with the condition that if this Puritan body did not accept it, the instrument was to go to King's chapel, then representing the Church of England in New England.

Brattle street politely bet firmly refused it and the organ was installed in Boston's Episcopal church, later to be sold to a chapel of the same denomination at Newburport, and finally to be set up le St. John's chapel at Portsmouth where during the peece coetereos it pealed forth its notes of "peace and good will to men." It is only a little organ, of course, as compared with the big ones of to-day—an affair eight feet two inches high, five feet wide and two feet seven inches deep, but it was well made originally and it has had good care. It is probably more often examined by curious sightseers than any other musical instrument in the United States, for everybody who goes to Portsmouth wents to see the first specimen brought to this country of the glorious instrument which Abt Vogler invented.

Old Keith Homestead in Bucks County, Pa.

Bucks county, it wes the home of Governeor Keith from 1722 to 1727, and was the house which Washington found so comfortable during his encampmeot eear Whitemarsh, thet he virtually made it his headquartere. It hee just goee uoder the hammer, and probably will meet the fate of many another historical landmark which has been razed.

The Keith mansion is a handeome eloee edifice, three miles eorthwest of Hatboro and nineteee miloe from Philadelphia. It has been known for eearly eee and three-fourth centuriee as the governor's house for it was built and occupied by Sir William Keith, lieutenant governor of Pennsylvaoia and his wife, Lady Anne Keith, both famous figures in colonial history.

Sir William and Lady Anne came from England in 1717 and soon discovered the beeutiek of the Whitemerah valley, where the lieuteeant governor decided to build a home. He selected the site, work was begun in 1721, and the mansioe was completed the following year. With its thick walls, high ceilings, huge firepieces, carved meotels and oakee balusetrade, the mansion wes a handsome example of the architecture of the period. The Keith coat-of-arms, with the motto, "Remember Thy End," was spread illerelly about and still remeles to remind all beholders of the original owner.

MISTAKEN FOR PETTY OFFICER.

When Rear Admiral Evans Did this Work of s Porter.

According to the Bluejacket, Rear Admiral Evans, while traveling on a steamer between Port Monroe and the exposition grounds, was accosted by a lady passengor, who had n hehy and some buedles in her ermo, with the query: "Are you going ashore here?" When the admiral said yee, she asked him to carry her bundles "Certainly, meadam, only too pleased to." was the quiek reply. The admiral was in uniform, and the lady took him for one of the steamer's deck stewards or porters.

Petty officers of the navy are frequently asked to stop a trolley car, but the duty is also told of a midshipmen le Washiegtoe, who was asked by an old lady to carry her baggage, and offered him ten ceets ne a tip. Theee mistakes are due to the fact that naval uetforme are so closely copied le the dress of municipel, railroad and other employes thet it le sometimes difficult to tell the real from the imitation.

Fortune from Absinthe.

The secret of making absinthe, the subtle but harmful stimulant so popular le France, was sold by its inventor to a distiller for $125. The distiller sold it for $50,000.

OLD HOUSE WITH A HISTORY.

Built by Colonial Governor Nearly 200 Years Ago.

Philadelphia.—"Millions of grafters, but nothing to promote patriotic sentiment," was the way a Pennsylvania historian summed up, somewhat bitterly, the situation in the Keystone state, after trying for many years to interest his commoewealth le the purchase and preservation of e number of Revolutionary and colooial relics, and after another of these memeotos had just been sold at public meetion without a bid from the authorities at Harrisburg.

The sale which inspired the remark was that of the Keith homestead in President Roosevelt's message to congress was a bummer, but of course it did not please everybody.

The next republican national convention will be held at Chicago, on June 16th, to nominate the next president of the United States.

Don't be a knocker and out in your time trying to change the political situation in America with 25 votes, but try to do something for yourself and the locality you live in.

The Red River Vally is basking in sunshine, base ball fans are out in uniform playing the national game, lambs are frolicking in the clover fields—and down in Illinois the farmers are shoveling snow for a path to the barn.—Crookston Daily Journal.

Mathison, the condemned murderer of Johnson, who is to be hanged at Bemidji the fore part of February has wasted away to a skeleton. He evidently don't like to be put to death, neither did poor Mr. Johnson, and can console himself with the thought that he will have a more respectable burial than he gave the man he butchered, for his money, and sank his body in Gull Lake.

Seth Hayford, who has spent the past summer in Montana and Northwestern Canada, returned a few days ago to his home at Guilty. Mr. Hayford visited the Alberta country the latter part of September, just after the frost that distroyed the wheat crop. Any idea that he may have previous to this time of acquiring land in that country was quickly dissipated.—Thirteen Towns.

Japan recalled their ambassador Viscount Aoki, as soon as the fleet of American battle ships left for the pacific coast. They gave no reason for his recall, and have not named any one for his successor, and it begins to look as if they did not like it been use president Roosevelt did not consult them, as to whether he should send the fleet there, or not. To recall of a minester from one nation by an other nation, it is done by the head of the government and not by a few "hot heads" who want to stir up war. It is to be hoped that the negotiations now pending between Japan and the United States will be concluded by establishing peace between the two nations, and our colored friends are more apte to listen to reason with that fleet on the western coast than they would be with it on the eastern coast, and we consider the action of president Roosevelt, in sending that fleet around there at this time as highly commendable. They will not harm a hair of the little Japs heads, and are not there for that purpose, and if Japan are of the opinion that the withdrawal of their minister at this time would raise any protest, by this country against the president for sending a stong fleet of our best baltile ships to the western coast, they are mistaken in the nation they are dealing with, for the American people are with president Roosevelt on this question of not asking any favors, on this globe, "hell, or water to send our navy."

FEAR OF THE FOREST.

The Feeling That Comes When One Finds Himself Lost.

One must be independent to enjoy the vast freedom of the woods, calmly and protecting, yet unfettering, gallery myriads of living things in safety in within their shelter. It is a wonderful experience—and familiarity cannot lessen the wonder of it—to choose some unfrequented trait that the forest has half reclaimed and follow it for a time, then suddenly to stop and listen. The undertrend, the trees, the broken thread of path, which had seemed only to echo our footsteps and frame a human form, now by our silence give forth all the voices of the woods, distinctive, intermittent, but alive—life everywhere, whispering warning of an intruder, leper who may have come for evil or for good, and our feels without seeing myriad eyes upon him.

I have you ever been afraid to the stockin' Not that mysterious awe of the first twilights that all know who have camped, when the silence is absolute, when shadows have swallowed up the distance and the light has almost faded from the sky, when one feels dimly the vast, latent power of nature around him with which some time or other he must struggle and conquer or be crushed. This fear of the forest was different. I was alone and lost. I had taken a false trail at some unblazed turn and of a sudden realized the truth. For a long moment I could think of nothing, see nothing, hear nothing, only be conscious of the fact of my utter helplessness. I felt the heart deadening panic of the trapped animal, wanting to run against my fate on every side. Only a moment, I say, and then my reason was alert to solve the problem of return. But the mental experience left a vivid impression, and I can understand the despair of the really lost, wandering aimlessly in aimless circles.—Outing Magazine.

A SWORDFISH DUEL.

Two of the Monsters Put to Vigorous and Deadly Battle.

The big swordfish had reached the blue waters of the ocean when with one warning a blue backed torpedo like body shot out of the depths, bumping on it like an arrow.

The attacked tipped instantly, and a sword grazed its head as a tiger thickset member of its own family passed through the waters above it.

The two fish turned and came at each other like mad bulls. Again by some miracle they missed, just grazing one another, to whirl about and begin the circling play for time and opportunity.

Then, like flashes of light, they turned and came on with a strange whistling sound and a current that tossed the white churned spume high in the air—came together as only bodies weighing 500 or 600 pounds can when impelled by animate vibrant engines of unknown power—came together and remained there, whistling, tossing tails in air, rolling over and over. The long slender bill had pierced the other, and the terrific efforts on the part of the fish were to unsheath the sword, which was only accomplished after a struggle for several minutes.

Then both flukes shot away, then again came together, giving mighty sidle blows, and then out of the red stained water one broke and fled.

The writer found the largest of these fishes a few days later on the sand, where it had been washed or thrown by the waves. Four or five deep wounds marked the body.

In one rush the sword had entered the eye, coming out at the side, another cut a furrow along the top of the head, another still had entered slightly from below, but the real cause for defeat was evident in its sword which was splintered and broken against its enemy.—Ilerwithal.

Cutting Big Diamonds.

Big diamonds reap a great deal in the cutting. The Kohinoor was reduced by an unskilful glossmaster from 793½ carats to 280 carats, a second cutting brought it down to 186 1-16 carats and a third to 106 1-16 carats, or less than a seventh of its original size. The original weight of the Pitt or Regent diamond was 410 carats, but in the hands of the cutter two-thirds disappeared, while the Star of the South, which was picked up in a river by a negress, lost a little over half its weight by cutting.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

The White Lies.

The late David Christie Murray on one occasion told the story of the "omission printer's error of his experience to this effect:

"I wrote at the close of the story of Grace Pathpoint: 'Are there no troubles now? the lover asks. 'Not one, dear Frank, not one.' And then, in brackets, thus: '[I set the words (White lies).' This was a technical instruction to the printer and meant that one thing if there should be left clear. The gentle who had the copy in hand put the lover's speech in type correctly and then, setting it out as if it were a line of verse, he gave me:

"Not one, dear Frank, not one white lies!"

Jimmie's Christmas Stocking

By OWEN OLIVER.

(Copyright, 1902, by Joseph B. Burton.)

THERE is honor among the dealers in rags of Paxton alley, but Mr. Smith's toy-shop stood at the very entrance, and they reckoned him out of bounds.

From time to time evil-looking men muttered to one another about the long stocking that Mr. Smith was supposed to have filled; but he had figured in the prize ring in his younger days, and he was said to sleep with a big knob stick beside him. So the matter ended at mutterings. A big, powerful man was Mr. Smith; and he had a powerful edge to his tongue. Every one in the alley feared him except Jimmy.

Mr. Smith knew him as the extraordinary paper-boy who brought back a dime given him in mistake for a penny, an event which was historical in the alley. At the time it gave rise to doubts as to Jimmy's sanity, but afterward it was held that he was "playing up to the old man."

Anyhow, Mr. Smith took two papers regularly afterward; and the day after his funeral—which was the day before Christmas eve—a sleek mas in a shiny top hat invaded Paxton alley, escorted by a policeman, and took evidence as to the identity of "the boy called Jimmy who sold papers" to the public generally, and in particular to the late Mr. Smith. When the sleek man was satisfied upon this point he proclaimed Jimmy the sole legatee of the estate, which comprised the little shop and house and all their contents.

"You'll find a long stocking somewhere, I expect," the lawyer said, "and you'd better bring it to the bank to take care of; and if I were you I should take the name of Smith."

Under ordinary circumstances Jimmy would have been elated by his good fortune, but somehow the world had not interested him lately. He had had a terrible cough for weeks —his business crossing him to the climate—and just now he felt tired, sad had nasty pains in his side, and seemed to be burning all over.

Jimmie's Xmas Stocking — Jimmie Opened His Eyes.

He moved in on the morning of Christmas eve, and explored the house with a kind of numb curiosity. He spent most of the morning in the shop parlor in the arm-chair in front of the fire. He did not even go out to the quick-lunch room for the bountiful dinner that he had promised himself. He had taken a bit of milk from the milkman, and he kept drinking that. He did not seem to care about anything but milk, and every thing felt strange and uncanny. The figure on the mantelpiece—a white-bearded old gentleman which he believed was called Santa Claus—was the strangest and uncanniest of all. The fire was almost out, so he put on some more coal. He saw that it was nearly four o'clock. "Lummel!" he muttered. "I've let the day go, an' I've not been to bus'ness. This won't do. I'll take down the shutters, an' open the shop."

It had been a hard autumn, and the people on whom Paxton alley preyed were short of money. So Paxton alley was short of money, too.

If few entered the shop, there were enough outside. A dozen cold, reddies noses flattened themselves against the glass; a dozen shrill voices clamored; a dozen little hands pointed with grimy, chilblainy fingers here and there.

Jimmy remembered when he was a "kid" how he used to spend hours at the toy-shop window, and how the woman he lived with thus had thrashed him for spending on marbles a penny of the money he had taken for papers. It was his own money, he held, or he wouldn't have done it. For, by some freak of nature, Jimmy was honest. But now he could hardly sit up in a chair, and he didn't believe he could walk; but when a woman came in for a ten-cent doll, he managed to crawl to the window to serve her.

Christmas Eve Good Night

There was a wild chorus of recognition when he appeared between the dingy green curtains that slid sloegn rail. "Jimmy!" "Jimmy!" "Want any one to run your errins, Jimmy?" "Yer might give us something, Jimmy!" He heard all these greetings and a dozen more.

He shook his head and returned to his seat. He certainly did feel ill. And he seemed to lose things for a few minutes, until Bill Black came in for three little toys. Bill was looked up to in the alley as a man who did "big jobs," and the Blacks were generally reckoned well-to-do; but Bill's transactions hadn't been very profitable lately, and he had to be careful, because he knew that the police had their eye on him. So they were hard up, like the rest.

"Found the long stockin', Jimmy?" he asked, casually, when he had taken the toys.

"No," said Jimmy. "And if I had it 'e'd be at the lawyer's, Bill, an' don't yer make no mistake."

Bill growled under his breath. "If yer didn't look half dead I'd knock yer head orf, yer young hound," he said, "leavin' waitin' agfast an honest man. Goin' to offer to do anythink for yer, the missus was, wot I'll soon put a stop to now."

He gave Jimmy a ferocious scowl as he went out, and Jimmy resolved that if he found the stocking he would take it to the lawyer at once.

He went to the door and faced a crowd of excited faces that ranged in rows from the front of the shop right across the alley.

"Jimmy!" they cried. "Give us something! Yer delight, Jimmy!"

Jimmy always said afterward that he only did it because he thought he was dying, and the toys would be no use to him, and the pains to his heart "drawed him out of himself." He tried to speak, but his voice was only a whisper. So he beckoned to a big boy and whispered to him; and the boy stood up in the doorstep, and shouted to the crowd: "Jimmy's goin' to give yer a toy each. Jimmy—"

The big boy went sprawling before the crowd that swayed and struggled in, and Jimmy was driven back to the counter.

Women came in to plead for their babies at home. Boys and girls came in to remind him of their brothers and sisters. By one o'clock he had given to every small lohabitant of the alley.

Then Jimmy tried to go to bed, but was so weak and giddy that he could not climb the stairs. So he sat in the arm-chair instead. He felt strange as well as poorly. The chairs, the fire-iron, the coal-scuttle, the table-cover, everything, seemed to turn into fantastic figures, and long-tailed demons were running up the blinds. Santa Claus on the mantelpiece was scowling and sneering at him.

Jimmy got into a sudden rage with Santa Claus and struck him with his fist.

Santa Claus tottered on the mantelpiece, but righted himself. He was more solid and weighty than Jimmy had imagined, and there was a clinking sound as he swayed—a sound of clinking money. The truth flashed upon Jimmy as he sank back exhausted in the arm-chair. The "long stocking" was in Santa Claus, and he could not get to it, and he never would, because he was going to die. He saw Santa Claus leering at him when he woke, and in his dreams, and when he dosed. Then he suddenly looked frightened. Some one was knocking loudly at the door. That was what frightened him. Jimmy was completely just as the knocking ceased. He must have been asleep a long time, he thought, because the fire was low; and he supposed he had been what they called light-headed. There was a grating noise outside the window—he noticed it some one slipping a knife through the frame to press back the catch. Jimmy struggled to move, but his limbs only wriggled a little. He tried to shout, but no sound came. The shutters came open with a crash, and Bill Black stepped within. The short, jagged knife that he had opened the window with was still in his hand; and Santa Claus seemed taunting Jimmy. "You've given them my toys," he said. "I'll give him your money."

Jimmy closed his eyes to escape the sight of the knife, but he felt Black looking at him. Then, to his surprise, he went away into the shop. Jimmy heard a noise of unbarring and unlocking. Then he felt a cool hand on his pulse.

"Collapse," a pleasant voice said. "It's lucky we weren't an hour later."

Jimmy opened his eyes, and saw the doctor and Miss Beeding over him.

"I've been playin' at Santa Claus, matey," Black said. "We judged yer was pretty bad not to answer the knockin', so I got in. Rare nice toys them was yer gave my young 'ona. Judged yer was pretty bad, so I fetched 'om."

Bill Black looked at the fire thoughtfully, and repeated to himself: "Rare nice toys." Then he carried Jimmy upstairs and helped the doctor put him to bed. He was wonderfully gentle in handling Jimmy.

Mrs. Black was gentler still with Jimmy while she nursed him and he grew very fond of her. Bill and young Bill were looking after the shop, she said, and doing very fair. And she hoped he'd take young Bill in the business.

Jimmy nodded and smiled feebly —he did everything feebly just then —and promised to take young Bill, and said he made no doubt they'd do very well; but he felt his heart he was worried about the business.

Three weeks later Jimmy came downstairs to the shop parlor, and the first thing he noticed was that Santa Claus was gone from the mantelpiece. He was very weak, and he could not help a few tears coming to his eyes; but he brushed them away before Bill came in.

"Feel all right, boy?" Bill asked.

"Yes, Bill," Jimmy said. "Pretty fair."

"Seems strange down here, don't it?"

"A little strogh," Jimmy agreed.

Bill cet some hard tobacco in the palm of his hand, and rubbed softly and filled his pipe. "Where was a sort of figure there," he said, "wasn't there's Bill? I—I s'pose it got broke. It doesn't matter, Bill. It—it wasn't worth nothink."

Bill laughed and slapped his leg with his hand. "For ain't no judge of figures, matey, I can see. That 'ere was a curious old piece of stuff, an' valerble, or I ain't no judge. I took the notice o' lockin' 'im away upstairs, Jimmy—" Bill put his great hand on the boy's shoulder. "The long stockin' were inside him! Over a thousand dollars. I took the liberty of usin' the old money in the bus'ness for yer, but the thousand is there. An' it's lucky for yer, matey, as yer was dealin' with an honest man—not might have been differint if you hadn't given the kids them toys!"

For there is honor among—Paxton alley; and Paxton alley extends to the toy-shop now. Jimmy and young Bill are there!

THE GIRL AND THE GIFT

BY ELISA MONTROSE BENDOUGH

"You are not looking very jolly on Christmas day," observed the girl in brown. "Were your gifts chiefly hair receivers and silver thimbles, or were they so expensive that you are wondering how you can ever return them next year?"

"N—not exactly," replied the girl in green.

"Oh, you should see Alice," broke in the girl in brown; "She looks as happy as the girl who has got rid of the coat of tan she cultivated at the seashore last summer. She—"

"I don't know whether or not she received many presents, but she has one which seems to make her perfectly happy. It is—"

"I am sorry to hear it. If that girl got her deserts she would spend the holidays with the police. Yes—well, you know I have seen a good deal of Alice lately. You know we just had to be intimate, since Bob was dividing his attentions pretty equally between us."

"M'h'm; otherwise people might fancy you were jealous of each other."

"Jealous of Alice, the idea! However, I tried to watch her. You never know what a girl with her saintly expression is saying of you behind your back. You know that Rob is sort of literary, and he talks about books most of the time. Well, Alice is so deceitful that she pretends she, too, is literary. I hate deceit."

"But how do you manage to keep up the conversatioo whoo he—"

"Rob prefers a conversation in which the other party is a listener, dear. Of course I told him when we first met that I dearly love to read."

"Oh, well, I don't know a girl anywhere who reads as many fashion magazines as you."

"M'h'm. Well, I knew that Bob meant to make me a handsome Christmas gift this year, and-er-perhaps add himself to it."

"But how—"

"Have you never heard of feminine intuition, dear? Consequently I just mentioned to him the fact that I am collecting turquoises. I knew by the way he changed the subject that he had taken the hint and thought it accidental."

"Oh—b; do show me—"

"He asked if I was fond of Thackeray. I said I doted on him; I'd have confessed a fondness for them—he's such a swell author. Yesterday I dropped in at Alice's. I found her in the library; she seemed nervous and I said to find the reason."

"And did—"

"She asked if I did not consider a set of Thackeray the nicest Christmas gift a man could make to a girl—a girl he liked very much? I replied, 'Yes—if the girl had author hair and eyes which were located at right angles!'"

"And she—"

"She replied, Oh, she was in earnest; she knew o man who meant to give a lucky girl just such a set. Theo she intimated that he intended to bind the set in red and send it to her. Was it not kind of him to make his own roof."

"But who—"

"I said, yes, the girl was lucky if she had a genius for martyrdom; that the man who would make a girl such a gift would be the man who would expect his wife to prefer a subscription to a magazine to a new tailor-made frock and an addition to the library to a trip to Palm Beach!'

"Good! I'm glac you said—"

"I'm not myself, dear. Rob was in the next room and heard every word. Alice had helped him to select a Christmas gift for me, and when I came in she told him to wait while she met me in the library, so he could hear my cries of delight when I heard of the selection! Did you ever know such an unmitigated cat!"

"Gracious never!" cried the girl in brown. "I didn't tell you, did I, that the gift which so delighted Alice was a set of Thackeray! Rob was there and Alice's mother stopped me in the hall, as I went out, to ask the address of the dressmaker who made Mabel's trousseau."

BENEATH the SPRAY of MISTLETOE

BY WILBUR D. NESBIT

Beneath the spray of mistletoe
The comely damsel stands,
Her hair is of a golden glow
In careless, curling strands—
She tee it with a satin bow
Held in her shapely hands.

The firelight flickers on the wall;
The shadows quaintly weave
Odd patterns that arise and fall;
She feigns with her sleeve
And prinks her ribbons one and all—
This daughter fair of Eve.

In truth she is a lovely sight,
Her cheek is like the rose,
Her brow as ivory is white,
Patrician is her nose,
Her eye is blue with heaven's light;
She holds a speedy pose.

A young man passing by the door
Looks in and sees her there;
His glance lights up at the floor
Each man of us would dare
Do ere this, and even more
For she a passing fair!

He pints above her sunny head,
She looks up with a smile.
The young man it may well be said,
Is well equipped with guile;
Her lips are nicely curved, and red,
And purse in tempting style.

He puts his arm about her waist—
And she does not resist!
And then, in sudden, ardent haste,
The dazed fair is kissed!
Ah, luscious smack and honeyed taste
That he would not have missed!

And now she gazes in surprise—
Is she surcharged with ire?
The gleam within her azure eyes—
Is that from anger's fire?
Will she with wrathful rousing cries
Call forth her sturdy sire?

Ah, no! She laughs! Her dimples rare
In merriment appear.
She frowns not one bit afraid of hair
Behind her shapely ear.
She says: "Why, he not unlike there
Upon the chandelier!"

Beneath the seeming mistletoe
The damsel stands, and then
The bashful and repentant beau
Salutes as honest men
Should do; he kisses her as his you know,
And puts it back again!

All One in Christ.

The coming of Christ gave emphasis to the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The great principle of Christianity rends past proof loocitly to contradictioe to many of the noblest principles of heathendom. Race prejudices ran through all peoples and amongst all toogues, but when Christ came he taught the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. He taught that God is no respecter of persons. He made the poor as well as the rich his disciples. He dined with the publicans and sinners, as well as with priests and noblemen. He commanded that the Gospel be preached to every creature. His church today is a living witness that there is neither bond nor free, male nor female, Greek nor Jew, for we are all one in Christ.

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing. Accordingly, it is oot claimed that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is the only remedy of known value, but one of many reasons why it is the best of personal and family laxatives is the fact that it cleanses, sweetens and relieves the internal organs on which it acts without any debilitating after effects and without having to increase the quootity from time to time.

It acts pleasantly and naturally and truly as a laxative, and its component parts are known to and approved by physicians, as it is free from all objectionable substances. To get its beneficial effects always purchase the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

A MILKING STOOL.

One in Which the Top is Braced to the Standard.

My milking stool idea may be helpful to others, writes a correspondent of Farm and Home. I think it an improvement on the old-fashioned T stool, which soon becomes loose where standard and top are fastened together. Two braces are nailed to it, as shown in the cut and there is no danger of its ever becoming loose.

GARGET.

An Ailment of Cows at Calving Time and How to Treat It.

Garget or caked udder is quite a common trouble which occurs usually just before or just after calving. The udder becomes hard and the glands are enlarged and feverish. There are usually no bad consequences from the trouble unless it is neglected. It is caused by a large supply of milk remaining in the udder and is sometimes aggravated by neglecting to milk out or by the cow standing in a draft of cold air. In cases of this kind it is not well to milk the cow out clean as the irritation caused by milking makes matters worse. The best procedure is to only partially empty the udder and then reduce the inflammation with a fomentation of warm water. The mere suckling of a hungry calf and the working of the teats will sometimes help. It is also well to rub the affected parts well with the palm of the hand after each milking and rub in a little camphorated ointment or some unsalted lard or oily substance. It takes several days to get rid of the trouble.

WHAT MILK COSTS.

Result of Tests by the Cornell University Experiment Station.

In a year's observation and record keeping with the dairy cows, their feed, etc., Cornell university finds the cost of producing milk as follows:

1st. With a fairly good herd, carefully fed and kept, milk can be produced for 65 cents a hundred pounds, and fat for 16 cents a pound for the cost of the food consumed.

2d. That individuals of the same breed vary more widely in milk and butter production than do the breeds themselves.

3d. The large animals consumed less pounds of dry material per 1,000 pounds live weight a day than did the smaller animals.

4th. That in general the best yields of fat were obtained from cows that gave at least a fairly large flow of milk.

5th. In general, the cows consuming the most food produced both milk and fat at the lowest rate.

6th. For the production of milk and fat there is no food as cheap as good pasture grass.

STRIPPINGS.

Some dairy stables are free boarding houses.

The proof of the butter is the smell of the churn.

Better cows, better feed, better care of milk make sure better profits.

Light, pure air and cleanliness are the three cardinal needs of the dairy stable.

If a cow is to be kept clean the stall where she stands must not be too wide.

It is more profitable to have four cows of great producing power than to have eight cows of ordinary producing power.

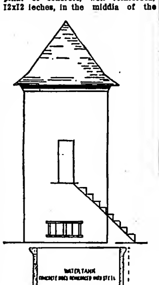
The best way that I have found to keep cream without ice in summer is to dig a hole 12 feet deep and four feet square near the separator house. As soon as cream is separated put it in a bucket with tight lid and hang it in the hole.

In a test between hand and machine milking the machine won out. They stripped the cows cleaner than when milked by hand. One man can care for five machines and with them milk a herd of ten cows in about one-fourth of the time required to do it by hand.

The Profitable Cow.

It is often urged that the average farmer should have a cow that can give milk profitably and whose steers will make profitable beef animals. The average production of the cows of Wisconsin is about 160 pounds of butter per year per cow; then will not the average cow of the average farmer fail to make any profit in butter production, and observation teaches us that there is no profit in raising the steers from those cows. Is it not better to have a cow that can do one thing at a profit than it is to have one that can do two things at a loss? And the breeding of dairy cows with the milking function highly developed and capable of perpetuating that function in their offspring, is sufficiently difficult, without being handicapped by trying to breed the opposite or beefing temperament in the same animal.—E. C. Jacobs.

NEEDED ON DAIRY FARM.



A Good Plan for Dairy with Icehouse and Water Tank.

Every farmhouse needs three things, a dairy room, cool, clean, sanitary, convenient, a store of ice and an abundant supply of water. Fortunately all of these can easily be secured in one building, and that may be a very sightly and even pleasing building in appearance. We will, of course, build it of concrete, the sides may be of plain plaster effect, if rough all the better, and afterwards covered with vines and creepers. A foreword about the finishing of concrete walls. They may be plastered after the forms are taken away. This is not the cheap way, nor does it always look best. They may be etched with acid to take away the newness and rawness; this gives a very pretty effect. Or they may be hammered with a rough faced hammer, similar to what cooks use for making tender beef steak; this also gives a nice roughness. The plain plaster wall looks better, usually, than the wall made of blocks imitating stone; the latter is too monotonous.

It is not practicable to color the whole mass of concrete to imitate brick, since it would take too much coloring matter. The best color is the dry iron ore red. It might be put on as a wash after the wall was complete.

I have given this building much thought to make it come within the cost that can be afforded by any well-to-do farmer, continues Joseph E. Wing in Breeders' Gazette. We will make it 13x13; wall six inches thick, which will be ample as they will be reinforced with steel. The walls and floors will take about 40 yards of material—that is, 40 yards of coarse stuff for concrete and as many barrels of cement.

Ample reinforcement will be provided for the walls if there is a vertical one-half inch rod each 24 inches of wall, and a horizontal one of the same diameter for each foot of height. Better a thin wall so reinforced than a thick one without reinforcement. Build up to the level of the bottom of the icehouse floor and erect also a pillar of concrete, well reinforced, 12x12 inches, in the middle of the milkroom, then put a girder across from wall to wall of strongly reinforced concrete, the girder eight inches thick and 12 inches deep. There should be two rods in the underside of this girder, each one one and one-fourth inch in diameter, and the ends turned up into the thickness of the wall a few inches. These will be all the heavy reinforcing irons needed. Over this girder lay the concrete floor to hold the ice. It must be well reinforced. Use one-half inch steel bars, the best are the corrugated sort, and space them eight inches apart in each direction, crossing each other. Lay these bars on the wooden floor, but hold them up from it about three-fourths of an inch by driving little nails under them. On them lay your concrete floor six inches thick. Make it of good strong concrete, using about one part cement, two parts clean coarse sand and five parts clean coarse gravel or broken stone. Finish it with a face of one inch of good stuff that will make it water tight and smooth. There will be need of putting through this floor three pipes, they should be in the corners, one for filling the water tank, one for overflow of the water tank, one for drainage of the iceroom. This latter may as well be over the water trough for the milk.

When this floor is laid the walls may rise above it to the base of the arch under the water tank. Here a very thorough reinforcement must be given so that the arch will not by its thrust bulge the walls. The thickness of the arch need be no more than six inches and the reinforcement as for the floor below.

The cost of it all in good finish should be between $500 and $600.

NEW STRENGTH FOR OLD BACKS.

No Need to Suffer Every Day from Backache.

Mrs. Joannah Straw, 526 North Broadway, Canton, S. D., says: "For three years I suffered everything with rheumatism in my limbs and a dull, ceaseless aching in my back. I was weak, languid, broken with headaches and dizzy spells, and the kidney secretions were thick with solids. I was really in a critical condition when I began with Doan's Kidney Pills, and they certainly did wonders for me. Though I am 81 years old, I am as well as the average woman of 50. I work well, eat well and sleep well."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

His Advice.

"Well, Uncle Josh," said the fond mother after her daughter had trilled a few times for the purpose of impressing their relative from the country, "what do you think of it? Would you advise me to have Daisy's voice cultivated?"

"Yes, I guess I would. Git it cultivated a while and then have it seeded down. Gosh, but you people seem to be warm-blooded here. I'd freeze if I hed to depend on them steam pipes for heat."

Preacher's Comforting Remarks.

At an evening prayer meeting in a Maine village the senior deacon, Dominicus Jordan, arose to make appropriate scriptural remarks about the death of the late Miss Simpkins. In conclusion the deacon said: "I respected Miss Simpkins, the members of this church respected Miss Simpkins, the citizens of this town respected Miss Simpkins, but now she's dead and gone to the Lord, and the scripture saith, 'The Lord is no respecter of persons.'"—Exchange.

HAD NO DOUBT OF HIS FATE.

Mr. Jerome Evidently Was Aware of His Wife's Culinary Ability.

Some weeks ago the wife of Judge Blank, of Pacific avenue, lost her cook, and since she had no other resource she rolled up her sleeves and for a week provided such meals as the judge had not enjoyed since those happy days when the Blanks did not keep a cook. The judge's delight was so great that by way of appreciative acknowledgment he presented Mrs. Blank with a beautiful ermine cloak. Quite naturally, the incident was a good deal noised about among the social acquaintances of the Blanks and a spirit of envious emulation was developed in certain quarters. It was in this mood that Mrs. Jerome recited the story to her husband. "What do I get, Jerry?" she asked, "if I will do the cooking for a week?" "Well," said Mr. Jerome, "at the end of a week, my dear, you'll get one of those long crepe veils."—San Francisco Argonaut.

BOTH GAINED

Man and Wife Fatten on Grape-Nuts.

The notion that meat is necessary for real strength and the foundation of solid flesh is no longer as prevalent as formerly.

Excessive meat eaters are usually sluggish a part of the time because they are not able to fully digest their food, and the undigested portion is changed into what is practically a kind of poison that acts upon the blood and nerves, thus getting all through the system.

"I was a heavy meat eater," writes an Ills. man, "and up to two years ago, was in very poor health. I suffered with indigestion so that I only weighed 95 pounds.

"Then I heard about Grape-Nuts and decided to try it. My wife laughed at me at first but when I gained to 125 pounds and felt so fine, she thought she would eat Grape-Nuts too.

"Now she is fat and well and has gained 40 pounds. We never have indigestion any more and seldom feel the desire for meat. A neighbor of ours, 68 years old, was troubled with indigestion for years; was a heavy meat eater, and now since he has been eating Grape-Nuts regularly, he says he is well and never has indigestion. I could name a lot of persons who have really been cured of indigestion by changing from a heavy meat diet to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

CONTAGION A QUESTION OF PREVENTION

Sinks, drains, eating and cooking utensils, sick room linen and clothing frequently carry the dreaded disease-germ unnoticed by the household.

Thorough and hygienic cleansing is the best safeguard against infection, and such a safeguard is found in the universal household necessity—Borax.

This simple preventive carries in itself, disinfecting qualities which enter the fabric or act upon the article to be cleansed in a hygienic manner, eliminating every unwholesome property, rendering it contagion-proof, while at the same time Borax is of itself as harmless as salt.

Unlike most disinfectants which depend upon their strength of odor or harmful-to-the-system qualities, to arrest or prevent contagion, Borax is Nature's remedy, being easy to obtain and easy to apply, a simple solution in hot water being all the application necessary and requiring no prescription. It can be obtained from any grocer or druggist in convenient, economical household packages.

In addition to its disinfecting qualities, Borax is especially a household necessity, and can be used for softening water, cleansing and whitening clothes, clearing the skin, whitening hands, makes an excellent dandruff remover and can be used on the finest laces or most delicate fabrics without injury, while as an adjunct to the bath it removes all odor of perspiration and leaves the skin soft and velvety.

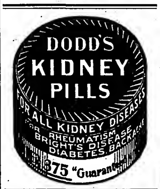
CUT THIS OUT.

Fine Recipe for the Quick Cure of Coughs and Colds.

Mix half ounce of Concentrated oil of pine with two ounces of glycerine and half a pint of good whisky; shake well each time and use in doses of a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours.



This is the formula prescribed by the renowned throat and lung specialist who established the camp for consumptives in the pine woods of Maine and whose remarkable cures attracted widespread attention among the medical fraternity. He declares that it will heal the lungs and cure any cough that is curable and will break up an acute cold in 24 hours. The ingredients can be secured from any prescription druggist at a small cost and is easily mixed at home.

Be sure not to buy the ordinary bulk oil of pine nor patent medicine imitations, as they will produce nausea. The real "Concentrated" oil of pine is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Dayton, Ohio, and is guaranteed under the National Pure Food and Drug Act. It comes put up for medicinal use in half-ounce vials enclosed in round air-tight cases which protect it from heat and light.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist Is Traveling Around the World in the Interest of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Non-Sectarian and Non-Partisan Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

Notables from the West Who Do Things in Far East

Shanghai, China.—These articles engaged to tell of the American men and women who are investing their lives in heathen lands. It is in the nature of the case that these should be pronounced personalities, and full of interest; many of them will get volume biographies when they die. Let us recall, in a paragraph each, a few of those whom I have met in China, the reader remembering that there are many other hundreds in the interior of this immense empire whom I have not had the opportunity to meet.

As he is the acknowledged foremost writer upon Chinese subjects, so Rev. Dr. Arthur H. Smith, of the American board, is probably the most interesting personality among Americans in China. His books are not more brilliant than himself; he is a scintillating conversationalist, at a two-hundred-words-a-minute gait. Yet there is not a more inconspicuous or modest American in China. He has never been mistaken for a fashion plate, for he is as unconventional as he is learned and original. Its probably understands the Chinese better than any other white man. If the legations and missionaries had listened to his urgings there would have been no Boxer uprisers and no siege of Peking in 1900. At President Roosevelt's request, he has just written a book, "America and China."

Mrs. A. P. Lowrie, of the American Presbyterian mission, has been more than 50 years in China, yet the Chinese have not robbed her of her quaint and delightful Americanism. Her tongue is as quick as ever at coining keen, searching and, at times, satirical, apothegms.

Bishop Roots, of the Protestant Episcopal missionary district of Hankow, seems more like an alert, aggressive professional or business man than an ecclesiastic. His personality (almost to as great a degree as that of his wife, who was Miss McCook, of New Haven) would be characterized as delightful by any company of men anywhere. He is rich in that quality colloquially called "horse sense," and there is no better administrator in the alon than he. In his activity for the Chinese he does not overlook the white community at Hankow, and half of the time of his clergy is given to the latter.

I have met several missionaries who hold decorations from the emperor, a prize which, I understand, the commercial community in China covets in vain. A missionary doctor who has been so honored is Dr. H. C. Beebe, of the Methodist Episcopal mission, Nanking. His steady, beneficent and self-sacrificing work for the Chinese came to the attention of the palace. An interesting sidelight on missionary influence is related concerning Dr. Beebe. He had been invited to an official feast at the viceroy's yamen one Sunday, and in sending his regrets he explained somewhat the Christian attitude toward Sunday. For some reason the letter did not reach the viceroy until the feast was in progress. The latter read it aloud, and declared that he, too, was going to keep the first day of the week free from official cares; and since then the yamen has been closed to business Sunday.

One of China's great women is Dr. Mary Fulton, the head of the Presbyterian Woman's hospital and the Woman's Medical college, Canton; the latter is the only one of its kind in the empire and it can never begin to receive all the students who apply for admission. What is thought of it by the Chinese is apparent from the fact that at the recent commencement three gold watches were awarded as prizes to the students by the viceroy. The most eminent and discriminating natives do honor to Dr. Fulton, as she is a physician, an executive and a woman of unusual ability. Her hospital is maintained on the plane of first-class hospitals at home; just to have trained her staff of native doctors would be a great life work for any woman.

"The Chinese Mother Goose" is Prof. Isaac T. Headland, of the Methodist Episcopal mission, Peking. This book brought Prof. Headland no little reputation in America; but his more serious hobby is not nursery rhymes, but Chinese art. He has the finest collection of Chinese paintings owned by any white man, and he is, doubtless, the world's leading authority on this subject. Incidentally, he is a consummate conversationalist. These pursuits are merely avocations; his vocation is that of teacher in the Peking university, where several hundred young men are learning the best that the west has to give, including its Christianity.

Two rare men, who long-headedly have elected to be inconspicuously great in China, rather than to stand among the many strong men in America, are Robert E. Dalley ("Bob" Dalley, Princeton's greatest football player), and C. H. Robertson, who are associated in Y. M. C. A. work at Tien-Tsin. Both are statesmen, whose breadth of vision, altruism and solidity of character have won the confidence of the highest Chinese. Robertson, like Dalley before him, lives in a Chinese home in the native city, and, considering it the biggest work open to an ambitious man, he has invested his personality as a foundation stone in the New China over which he is so enthusiastic. Both these men are truly leaders of a constituency of young Chinese.

China is full of Boxer stories, tragic and amusing. One of the latter concerns Dr. W. H. Park, of the Southern Methodist mission, whose long service is and for Soochow has made him one of the city's prominent and honored citizens. He was riding in a closed sedan chair one day during the turbulent times of 1900, when the cry was raised: "Here comes a foreigner! Kill him! Kill him!" The mob took up the refrain, rushed the chair, opened it, and then fell back foiled, for, as the bystanders said: "It's not a foreigner; it's only Dr. Park."

It is rather something unusual to have a whole warship or two in love with you, when you already possess a husband. But that is the unique experience of Mrs. C. A. Nelson, of the American board mission, Canton, and Mrs. W. II. Boyd, of the Presbyterian mission. In case of trouble, the United States government keeps a warship up at Canton, which is hard lines for officers and men. These two young matrons open their homes weekly to officers and men, and both are the belles that their gifts and graces entitle them to be. Incidentally, the lonely American has a jolly time, and is kept from the power of the lure of the east. The government has given medals for less worthy work than that which is done by these two ladies. Mrs. Nelson, by the way, conducts a girls' school which is so superior that Wang Fang, after inspecting it, promptly asked to be permitted to send his daughter to it.

Canada probably knows little of one of her noblest daughters, Miss Annie H. Gowans, of the Presbyterian mission. Pao Ting Fu, who went through the Boxer troubles heroically, and who is still, undaunted in spirit, spending her life beautifully for a people whom, she clearly realizes, may disappear in the fullness of their holds, but serenely, sweetly, annnily, she moves ministeringly among the Chinese, gazing at life all unafraid, through clear gray eyes that have seen deeply into great things of existence.

Two associates and friends of Miss McGowans are Miss Grace Newton, of the Presbyterian board, and Miss Lotsia Miner, of the American board. Both are survivors of the Peking siege, the latter having written a book upon that great experience. Both are engaged in female education, with results that would rank them in the class of the foremost women educators in America.

The Rev. Dr. W. A. P. Martin, China's oldest missionary, is known wherever men read thoroughly about China. He was long head of the imperial university; he is author of standard works in Chinese and upon China in English. His magazine contributions have been legion. Withal, at 86 years of age, he is as fresh and as zestful and busy as ever, and still looked up to for the last word upon obscure Chinese subjects.

Another veteran, a type of New England at its best, is President D. N. Sheffield, of the North China Union college, Tung Chow. To tell of his literary labors, ranging from his early versal history through a long list of publications to his present work of Bible translation, would be to outline a great life work for any man. Yet, these have been a mere phase of his educational and direct missionary effort. At once a dry humorist and a cultured gentleman and good companion, Dr. Sheffield is worth traveling a long way to know. In the same group with him must be classed the famous Timothy Richards, of the Christian Literature society, an overflowing Welshman; Drs. Wherry and Mateer, of the Presbyterian board; Dr. Blakemona, of the Southern Baptist board.

The romantic story of Bishop Scherschewsky, the famous Chinese scholar who died a few months ago in Tokio, demands a page, and not a paragraph. When I saw him recently, although perelyzed and scarcely able to speak intelligibly, he was working on a complete set of translations of his Chinese Bible. He was 74 years old, when he died in the chair where he sat for the 25 years of his peculiarly fine literary work time he had translated the whole Bible into easy Wenli, or blandarin, which is the written language of three-fourths of all the people in China. His Old Testament blandarin is issued by both the Bible societies. For seven years he worked eight hours a day, seven days in the week, on the translation and revision of this classical version. He called it his "two-fingered Bible," because he had laboriously written it with a type-writer with only two fingers on his paralyzed hands that he could use at all. Not soon for his splendid hatetic zgainst affliction was Bishop Scherschewsky famous; his ability as a Chinese scholar, and as a linguist generally, was almost uncanny. He was a Lithuanian Jew, and when past his majority he went to America, where he became a Christian and a clergyman in the Protestant Episcopal church. Even before he was accepted as-a missionary he had determined to translate the Bible into Chinese. During six months' voyage out he learned enough Chinese to be able to write it acceptably when he arrived at Shanghai. Twice he declined the bishopric, which he was finally obliged to accept. When I saw him he said, after outlining some translation projects which he had hoped to undertake: "But I am content. I want to go home, and I hope the good Lord will send for me soon." Not many days later I was shocked to learn that he had quietly passed away while at his labors.

American Churchmen Abroad.

Just now the west seems to be flooding the east with missionary authorities and religious leaders. The tour of President Charles Cuthbert Hall, of Union Theological seminary, New York, through India and China, has been a notable triumph. Dr. Hall seems to possess a rare genius for impressing his personality upon people. Mr. Charles Alexander, the famous singer of the Torrey-Alexander evangelistic combination, has been in the east for his wife's benefit. During a visit to missionary relatives at Pakhoi he demonstrated the power he has as a some personality over even people of an alien tongue. At Hongkong he held the largest religious meeting in the city's history, and at Manila he spoke in both the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. Nor were the stagers Y. M. C. A. men; the working force of that organization has gone to Canton to attend the national Secretary C. C. Rutledge, of Philadelphia; Secretary Morris, of the International committee, of Montreal; Secretary Ashley, of the Canadian Presbyterian board; John R. Mott, of the International Y. M. C. A. said, Boston, and Dr. Rader, of the Western Christian Advocate; John B. Sleman, of the Washington Y. M. C. A., and dozens of other friends of foreign missions, clerical and lay.

The missionaries are now having a foretaste of the visitation they expect when that committee of 50 American business men, arranged for by the action with the recent celebration of the American board, comes out to make an independent study of foreign missions. This is one of several signs, apparent out here, of a remarkable increase of interest in foreign missions on the part of the churches of America and Canada.

HOME INDUSTRIES

ECONOMIC LESSONS TAUGHT BY EDITORS OF MANY PAPERS.

COMBATTING A COMMON EVIL

Practices of Sanding Dollars from Communities Where Earned Helps Along the Centralization of Business.

Apparently the press is now-fully aroused to the importance of combatting the evils of patronizing other than home enterprises. Editorial and local columns of the papers, especially in the western states, are filled with common-sense articles setting before the people such facts as appeal to reason and patriotism. Some editors in their zeal to accomplish good, perhaps go too far in abuse of systems that take money from their neighborhoods, and by severe criticisms of patrons of out-of-town concerns mark" and fail to accomplish what is much desired.

None will gainsay that the wage-earner has the inherent right to spend his earnings wherever he desires. If he wishes to buy his clothes in some distant city, he has that privilege. Sometimes he may have cause to do so. His home merchants may not carry in stock what he wishes to secure. Others may charge him what he considers an exorbitant price. Quite often he may learn that he makes a mistake by buying goods without a careful examination of them. Whatever his motive may be, generally is—the purchaser becomes a better patron of home institutions than ever before. But there are a few large cities in the country and woman overlook. It is that the dollars that they send away means money taken out of local circulation, and the consequent impoverishing of the community. Take a city of, say, a quarter of a million people in the community. Five dollars e year from each one sent after amounts to $10,000 per year, and in ten years $100,000. Supposing that a fifth or sixth of this represented the profits that should be left in the community. It would be quite enough to establish a business enterprise that would support several families. But from some communities the average amounts sent away for goods is from a third to a half and often more than the total peid or needed supplied. Think of what a great loss that is! Think that this trade, given to the home town, would immediately increase its business from a third to a half! How many years would it take if the home trade principle was adhered to strictly before your town would be more than double in size? It would only require a very few years. And with the growth of the town everyone living within its limits and its trade radius would receive a benefit.

All the residents of a community have common interest in it. The laborer, the farmer, the merchant, the doctor and the lawyer prosper in common. Their interests are parallel. The community is cooperative. If the farmer has employed men there are still distant city to do his work, would patronize an out-of-town doctor and have him come to see his wife, or help be needed, the laborer would suffer, and suppose that the farmer should send away for things—eggs, their vegetables, fruit, butter, etc., would not the farmer be affected? Suppose that the merchant is prohibited to do business without profit; can he pay as good wages to his help as they should be? Can he be as liberal in his down the line. The better the home town can be made, the better it is for all. It will soon be the wanderlust, and by being such you assist yourself and all in your neighborhood.

MISUSE OF THE MAILS.

How the Law Reads Under Which the Postal Department Excludes Frauds.

Section 5480 revised statutes of the United States pertaining to illegal use of the mails reads as follows: Whoever, having devised or intended to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud or to be executed by means of false or forged pretenses, representations or promises, or to obtain money from or property from another by means of false or forged pretenses, representations or promises, or to sell, dispose of, loan, exchange, alter or give away any counterfeit or spurious coin, obligation, or other security of the United States, or to aid in the same, for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice, or attempting to do so, shall place any letter or package in any post office of the United States, or take or receive therefrom, such persons so misusing the mails shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars ($500) and imprisonment of not more than eighteen (18) months, or by both such punishments."

Is Concentration Desirable?

He who thinks that a 10,000-acre farm under control of one man, who reaps all the profits of its operation, is better than 100 10-acre farms owned by 100 men, each of whom reaps the reward of his labor reasons erroneously. If his farm is not for the best why then build up big stores in the large cities that do the business of 1,000 small stores in the smaller towns? Why kill off the business of the local town and help make wealthier the proprietors of the big concerns in the great cities? Does this question call for an answer?

HOW SCHEMERS WORK.

Cooperative Plan Used to Get Dollars from the People of the Country.

Financiering or promoting has become a particular science. This new science has taken the broad name of "system," and by "system" is attributed a Machiavellism that would make insignificant the chicanery of the noted Italian diplomat. At present the nation is treated to illustrations of the methods of the advocates of "system" through the magazine articles, and the disclosures made of the transactions of many big concerns which have been investigated by the courts.

When simmered down, it will be seen that it is by use of money contributed by the masses of people, and placed in the control of the few that the masters of finance are enabled to rob and build up at will, give and take, and let the people go to the bowwows.

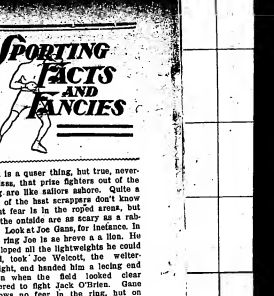
It is not the intention herein to deal particularly with the gigantic institutions, but to show how the principles employed by them are also brought into use by promoters of schemes of lesser degree. And here an anomaly presents itself, plainly showing how short-sighted the masses of people are, the small-caliber schemers who apply "system" use as their main props the cry of "trust" and "robbers." Well they know the cupidity of the messers, and by presenting what appears a plausible scheme of cooperation get from out the pockets of the people money with which to carry on business. This plan of working is generally a stock-selling scheme, a membership plan with promise of selling goods at wholesale prices, and the paying of large dividends. A number of such concerns have lately come into existence. Some of them have such mammoth things in view that if their plans could be successfully carried out, it would be the building up of greater monopolies than those that they hold up before the people as justification of their own existence.

Do not be deceived by the representations made by alleged cooperators. A close investigation will show that instead of a purely cooperative plan, it is a scheme simply with the object of getting from the people money with which to carry on business for the personal gain of a few. Don't invest money in any alleged cooperative store or concern located in the large cities, and of which you know nothing other than the representations made by their promoters. Remember that it is a poor scheme that does not carry with all appearances of soundness, for this is essential to the success of it.

WANDERING WEARY WILLIES.

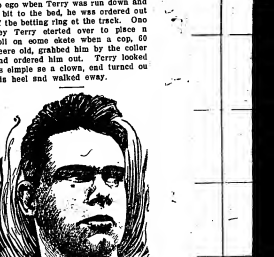
Towns by Adopting Proper Ordinances Can Assist in Decreasing Vagrancy.

Like unto the poor, the tramps and "the vagrancy," it seems, we have "with us always." With the coming of winter they drift from the north to the south. The torrid heat of summer finds them wending their way to the northern climate. While for the lest decade of years prosperity has been universal throughout the United States, and employment for all willing to work, still the wanderlust, lonely, unfortunate, remain as an object lesson of ignorance and indolence. Such unfortunate conditions are such and local laws have tended toward betterling the conditions of these "Weary Willies," and we find year after year their number is decreasing. They are the direct descendants of the early, with morbid mentalitites, with criminal instincts developed thet moko them a menace to the public. There is the harmless tramp, a proper place for him should be in the home for feebleminded, and there is the indolent tramp, with all mental faculties developed whose place should be in the workhouse, and there is also the wanderlust, vampire, who is the criminal at heart and whose proper place should be in the penitentiary. If towns should have ordinances requisiting the employment of those wibin its confines, and if such ordinances are properly framed so as to impose a penelty upon the vagrant who mayhaps visit the place, it will soon be found that such towns will be avoided and the troubleeome visitors to the community will seek fields elsewhere.



Unsound Cooperative Concerns.

"Self-protervation is one of the first laws of nature," wrote some thinker long ago, and time has failed to prove it untrue. How many communities in voluntary suicide by unwisely following the instructions of some quack doctor in their efforts to cure themselves of some ailment? And how many more bring to themselves financial ruin by wild speculation in schemes that they know little about, prompted by glittering promises of great returns for little money. Lately numerous alleged cooperative mercantile establishments have sprung up in large cities and are seeking the support of farmers throughout the country. Don't take the advice of the "great doctor" and commit financial suicide by investing in them and giving them your patronage instead of the business place of your own town.



Progressive Farmers.

The average American farmer is a progressive mortal. He is always ready to learn new things. He lately introduces more than ever the necessity of education in his business. He no longer ignores the fact that science is a wonderful factor in his work, a money saver that must be considered if he succeed. The more intelligent is the farmer, the more interest he will take in the furthering the interests of his home town, and building up and improving the community in general.

SPORTING FACTS AND FANCIES

It is a queer thing, but true, nevertheless, that prize fighters out of the ring are like sailors ashore. Quite a few of the last scrappers don't know what fear is in the roped arena, but on the outside are as scary as a rabbit. Look at Joe Gans, for instance. In the ring Joe is as brave a a lion. He walloped all the lightweights he could find, took Joe Walcott, the welterweight, and handed him a lacing and then when the field looked clear offered to fight Jack O'Brien. Gans knows no fear in the ring, but on the street at night Joe is scared to death. Young Corbett says thet the old mester hee a feerful dread of hobgo men. He never goes down a dark street if he can help it, but seeke the light every time he can, and ot that is breaking his neck looking around. There le enother thing thet has Gene' gost, and thet is en earthquake. Joe wee in Frisco a couple of years ago when the big wriggle came off, and he heat it out of town so feet they thought he wes a comet. Joe went back later on to appeer in fights, but he wee almost frightened to death thinking shat another might come while he was in town. Well, for that matter, look at Jeffries. He was invincible in the ring, but his little wife hes him ceting out of her hand when he le at home. Tommy Burns' better half hes him so bed. Why, she won't even-let hubby hox colored men. Terry McGovern is scared to death of cops. A year or so ago when Terry was run down and a bit to the bed, he was ordered out of the boiling ring at the Lenox club. Jay Terry started over to place a roll on some okete when a cop, 60 yeere old, grabbed him by the collar and ordered him out. Terry looked as simple se a clown, and turned on his heel and walked away.

BLACK HERFORDS.

Hervard's clever heifhesk, who is regarded by followers of the crimson as one of the best in the cast.

It le said to be a rerity for more then one grent athlete to be in the seme immedlete femlly, but it oppeers thet Hone femily of Celiffornis, of which Ralph Roee, the greet shot putter, is a member, le an exception to the rule. The holder of every shot-putting record on the Amateur Athletic union's booke hes a younger brother who is the finest scholastic athlete in the far west. The younger Rose, who le wey under his meloority, stands six feet three inches in his here feet, and tipe the beam at 210 pounde in his ective unit. Already the youngster has shown a glimpse of chempionship poseibility. He has romped through 100 yerds in "ten one" (an interecholestic record for hie elete), and hee flung the 16-pound shot over 45 feet. These are indeed, remarkable performances for a lad of Rose's age. More thin likely young Rose will not be heard from in cinder games for a long time. First of all, his father, Judge Rose, is greatly opposed to the interference of athletic pastimes with his sone. The many fabulous stories printed about Ralph in the local papers have been read by his much discomfort to Judge Rose and had more to do with keeping the youngster away from other athletics during 1906 than anything else. It was nothing but this undue publicity that made Rose stay away from the game, and furthermore it took all the influence of Trainer Walter Christy, who looks for great things from athletics during 1907, and wants the boy to get the big boy back in the game again. After prolonged coaxing, Rose consented to do a bit of running, and came east for the exposition. He trained just it days, and smashed every shot-putting record on the books.

In direct contrast to the conditions that prevailed at Athene last year, where the men waded through the mud and slushed up to their ankles, the track at the English stadium, where the Olympic games will be held next year, will be as nearly perfect as it can be made. It is already completed, and, during the nine months that will elapse before the games are opened, will have a chance to pack and become settled. The tank in which the aquatic sports will be contested has also been completed. The area seats will all be erected by Christmas.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Wall Provided.

St. Peter.—There are well filled granaries and root cellars at the St. Peter state hospital for the insane. From an agricultural viewpoint the year has been remarkably successful at the institution, and the showing is the best ever made by the hospital farm. In 1906 the value of farm products reached a total of $31,000, but the figures this year will exceed that figure considerably.

Diversified farming is carried on on quite an extensive scale at the hospital. There are 450 acres of land under cultivation, and John Horst, the institution farmer, made them yield abundantly. Potatoes head the list of products with 10,000 bushels, and there are 8,000 of barley, 5,000 of corn, 2,000 of oats. Onion eaters among the patients will revel in 1,000 bushels of strong-scented bulbs; there are 1,500 bushels of carrots, 1,000 bushels of turnips and 6,000 bushels of other grains and vegetables. During the summer the inmates consumed 5,000 quarts of strawberries and 15,000 watermelons and canteloupes, and fully 20,000 heads of cabbage, while as many bunches of celery, have been stored to the cellars.

Asbestos.

Tower.—What promises to be two of the greatest ore finds in this section of the country has been discovered of late and is being thoroughly investigated by the local business men.

Within a radius of three miles of the city of Tower an asbestos mine has been discovered, and within four miles a ledge of soft, iron ore has been discovered.

These latest discoveries were made by two of the local men, Dr. J. D. Murphy and D. Graham. The asbestos ledge is about one-fourth of a mile square at the surface and is of a rich quality. The men have in their possession some rich specimens, but as to the extent of the ore in depth they cannot state at the present time, as this part has not as yet been thoroughly investigated. The specimens of iron ore are rich, but nothing is known as to the extent of the body.

New Ditch Law Void.

St. Paul.—The ditch law passed by the last legislature was laid away on the shelf in an opinion handed down by the supreme court, in which Justice E. A. Jaggard declares chapter 191 of of the Laws of 1907, the new ditch law, to be unconstitutional and void.

The new law gave the owner of wet lands the right to drain them across a neighbor's land. If in the main whose land was affected by the drain offered an objection it was up to the town supervisors to appraise the damage.

William Pantake of Rockford attempted to dig a ditch across the land of Charles Schubert, who entered a protest, on the ground that the new law permitted the taking of private property for private purposes.

Big Christmas Dinner.

St. Cloud.—Inmates of the state institutions will be given a good Christmas dinner as usual. The state board of control is now securing bids on various delectables. Christmas trees will also be furnished and every effort will be made to give the inmates a real Christmas day.

Bids will be asked for on oranges, bananas and lemons, 3,350 pounds of nuts, 1,545 pounds of candy, 4,315 pounds of poultry, 223 gallons of oysters and 20 barrels of cranberries.

A Surprise.

Minneapolis.—Dressed in blue jeans and apparently not overburdened with wealth, a gentleman strolled up to the counter of the city comptroller's office and calmly stated he would like to purchase some of the recent issue of park and school bonds.

When assured that the bonds could not be purchased in lots of less than $50 each he smiled blandly and produced currency and certified checks to the amount of $10,000 which he said he wanted to invest in the bonds.

NEWS NOTES.

Breckenridge.—The Breckenridge Telephone company has filed articles of incorporation. The officers and directors are all local residents.

St. Paul.—The corner-stone of a temple being built by the Sons of Israel congregation at Fairfield avenue and Robertson street was laid.

Minneapolis.—Harry Clay Blaney, the diminutive comedian, has a new play this season entitled "Wille Live, The Boy Detective," which he will present at the Bijou Opera House, all of Christmas week. As the name of this new play suggests, it is a combination of the adventures of the irrepressible "Willie Live," the well known character which Mr. Blaney used in his former successes, "Across the Pacific," and "The Boy Behind the Gun."

St. Paul—Frozen body of J. P. Smith found in woods, pistol by his side.

St. Paul—Mrs. Bina Larson, a resident of the Upper Levee, was found dead in bed.

St. Paul—Ginseng growers of the state will meet at the old Capitol at 10 a.m. Tuesday, Jan. 14.

South St. Paul—The total number of cars received here last month was 7,570, as compared with 4,662 for November, 1906.

St. Paul—The possession of a counterfeit $5 bill got a man arrested by Detectives Collins and Schmidt on a charge of burglary.

St. Paul—The twin boys born to Mr. and Mrs. George Seitz, 84 West Jessamine street, several days ago, were found dead in bed.

Crookston—The opera house is to be dismantled, and the town will be without any of the larger attractions until a new house is built.

Glencoe—The new Woodman-Odd Fellow hall was dedicated here. Over 500 attended the ceremonies. The hall is a substantial structure, erected at an expense of $5,000.

Brainerd—George Sullivan, recently resigned as policeman, has filed a charge with the city council, alleging that he was forced to resign for impartially applying the "ild."

Minneapolis—An unidentified woman dropped a suitcase containing the body of a baby a few weeks old from the Wisconsin Central bridge in Minneapolis. The woman escaped.

Bemidji—Twenty cans of fry from the state fish hatchery at St. Paul have been placed in Lake Bemidji for the purpose of replenishing the lake with the finny tribe of fishes that inhabit the "deep" in the local lake.

Tower—What is seldom seen in even this part of the country in late years was seen here—tha old dog team. The only one that is left in this part of the country was driven to this city from the Willow river country.

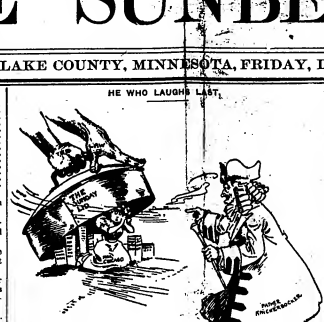
South St. Paul—Frank Poole badly burned both hands extinguishing a fire at his house, but succeeded in preventing a serious blaze. The fire started from the explosion of a lamp in the kitchen. The biggest blaze was over the pomp.

Mankato—The distribution of nine new companies needed to bring the Minnesota national guard up to the requirements of the Dick law in order that the $34,000 national aid may be secured is causing the officials considerable difficulty.

Rochester—The franchise to give the Tri-State Telephone company the right to enter this city as a competing line was given its final blow at the city council meeting. The ordinance was read three times, and when it came to a vote it was 4 to 2 against the proposed franchise.

Minneapolis—From a poor typewriter girl to the possessor of a fortune of $100,000 is the good luck that befalls Miss Stella M. Blethen, stenographer. She has been named in the will of George F. Porter, the Minneapolis business man who died suddenly last week in Omaha, as the beneficiary of a bequest of that amount.

Hamline—Thomas Russell, fifteen years of age, a student at St. Thomas college, fell a distance of forty feet from the balcony of the building, and received serious injuries. Two ribs on his right side are fractured, and he is thought to have received internal injuries, the real character of which cannot at present be determined.



Faribault—Mrs. Harry Downs, living in the northwestern part of Rice county, was killed by falling off a load of wood. She and her husband were hauling with three horses, and she drove the single horse. The wheels struck a stone, threw her from the wagon and the load passed over her. She died within several hours after the accident.

St. Paul—One of the finest specimens of a mastiff ever taken in Minnesota, now in the possession of the state game and fish commission, is to be presented to Admiral, Lord Charles Beresford, head of the English navy, by W. T. Bailey, a Duluth lumberman. The hound is already mounted and will be shipped to England at once in order to reach there for Christmas.

Twin Valley—Fire destroyed the yards, warehouses and offices of the Trimbla Lumber company, the Twin Valley Implement company's warehouse and office and the Welna & Walda warehouse. The total loss is about $20,000; insurance about $9,000. The origin of the fire is not known.

Milan—The Standard Lumber company's office and part of its sheds burned to the ground causing a loss of several thousand dollars.

HE WHO LAUGHS LAST.

OPERATION IS A SUCCESS

MRS. LONGWORTH'S CONDITION QUITE SATISFACTORY.

President's Daughter Has Vermiform Appendix Removed and is on Way to Recovery.

Washington. — Mrs. Alice Longworth, wife of Representative Nicholas Longworth, and daughter of President Roosevelt, was operated upon for appendicitis Thursday. The operation, which was performed at the White House by Dr. Finney of Johns Hopkins hospital, Baltimore, assisted by Dr. Sophia Nordhoff-Jung and Surgeon General Rixey of the navy, was declared by Dr. Rixey to have been successful in every particular and to have left the patient in excellent condition.

The following bulletin was issued at the White House at nine o'clock Thursday night:

"Mrs. Longworth has had a comparatively comfortable day. Her general condition is satisfactory. Nu merous bulletins will be issued during the night."

Mrs. Alice Longworth.

At the conclusion of the operation Mrs. Longworth emerged from the influence of the anaesthetic in a very short time and after exchanging a few words with Mrs. Cowles, her aunt, and with her husband, she fell asleep naturally and enjoyed a nap lasting two hours. Her condition was such that President Roosevelt felt little apprehension and in fact did not hesitate to engage in his afternoon tennis games with Ambassador Jusserand, Gifford Pinchot and Assistant Attorney General Cooley.

The preparations had been making for the operation for nearly a month, it being known during that time that Mrs. Longworth was suffering from incipient inflammation of the vermiform appendix. About a week ago preparations were begun for the operation which it was deemed expedient to undertake before she had suffered a loss of strength that would be sure to ensue from a severe attack of appendicitis.

Washington.—The following bulletin was issued at the White House Friday night at 9:30 o'clock: "Mrs. Longworth had a very good day. She is progressing rapidly and her condition is entirely satisfactory."

Peculiar Suicide in Paris.

Paris.—An old man was run down and killed Friday afternoon on the Champs Elysee by an automobile owned by James Watson, of Calumet, Mich. Neither Mr. Watson, who was in the car, nor his French chauffeur, who was driving it, was detained, as the policeman in charge of the regulation of traffic at the spot where the man was killed, declared it was a case of suicide.

New York Banks Swindled.

Augusta, Ga.—It was learned here Friday that parties in New York have swindled banks in that city out of a large sum of money on fictitious cotton warehouse receipts purporting to be from Augusta.

KIDNAPED CHILD FOUND.

Lillian Wulff of Chicago Located at Momence, Ill.

Momence, Ill. — Little Lillian Wulff, who was kidnaped in Chicago Saturday while playing near her home, was found Friday five miles south of Momence. The man and woman who were bar captors were arrested. They gave their names as Mr. and Mrs. William Jones, and said they were on their way from Pennsylvania to Missouri, where they intended settling. They refused to discuss the kidnaping. Jones is about 29 years of age and the woman about 25. The child declared they picked her up on the streets of Chicago, put her in a wagon and drove away.

The arrest of the people was brought about through the fact that a farmer's wife, living south of Momence, notified Deputy Sheriff Reilly that she had seen a man and woman with a little girl drive past her house in a wagon. Deputy Sheriff Reilly joined them and placed them under arrest.

The child acknowledged that her name was Wulff, but said she had been traveling under the name of Jones. According to her story she escaped once while on the road between Kankakee and Chicago, but was recaptured. The child has seemingly been neglected since the time she was taken away a week ago, her appearance indicating that in all that time she has gone without bathing.

THREE HUNDRED BODIES OUT.

Victims of Fairmont Disaster Reach High Total.

Monongah, W. Va. — Over 300 bodies have been removed from the scene of the Fairmont mine explosion, making the probable death list about 600, according figures of the rescuers. The opening of the coroner's inquest has been set for next Monday. Gov. Dawson announced Thursday that he will personally attend the inquiry for the purpose of instituting a full investigation leading the view to ending West Virginia mine disasters.

Relief funds are sufficient for the immediate wants of widows and orphans, but many of these will be dependent for a long time, making necessary a much larger fund.

Bishop P. J. Donahue of the Catholic diocese of Wheeling will provide for many of the orphans. He is considering the leasing of property for a temporary orphanage and later building a permanent institution.

WOMAN CALLED A FIREBUG.

Ohio Temperance and Church Leader Arrested.

Norwalk, O.—Mrs. Martha A. Campbell, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance union, superintendent of the Congregational Sunday school at Steubenville, and wife of a wealthy Greenfield township farmer, was arrested Friday in Sandusky on a secret indictment charging incendiarism.

The indictment charges that Mrs. Campbell burned a dwelling owned by Miss Lou Mather, a neighbor, in October.

Miss Mather also has been indicted.

The fire insurance company asserts the women framed a plot by which Mrs. Campbell would buy the place. Both women are on bonds.

Oklahoma's Senators Elected.

Guthrie, Okla. — The election of the first two United States senators from the new state of Oklahoma was consummated late Wednesday afternoon by the two houses in joint session when Speaker W. H. Murray, announcing the vote of Tuesday, declared Robert L. Owen of Muskogee and Thomas P. Gore of Lawton duly chosen.

IS NOT A CANDIDATE

PRESIDENT PUTS AN END TO THE THIRD TERM TALK.

ALL DOUBT DISPELLED

Formal Statement Issued by Mr. Roosevelt Repeating That Made the Night of Election in 1904.

Washington. — President Roosevelt will not be a candidate for a third term. All doubt on this point was dispelled Wednesday night by the authoritative statement from the White House that Mr. Roosevelt still adheres to the declaration of renunciation made on the night of the election three years ago.

In the statement issued President Roosevelt says he has not changed and shall not change the decision communicated to the American people in 1904.

It appears that President Roosevelt has been awaiting the call for the Republican national convention to afford the proper opportunity for making his position clear and unmistakable, thus leaving the field clear for Fairbanks, Taft, Cannon, Knox, Foraker and others declared or receptive candidates for the Republican nomination. The president's statement follows:

"In view of the issuance of the call of the Republican national committee for the national convention, the president makes the following statement:

"On the night after election I made the following announcement: 'I am deeply sensible of the honor done me by the American people in thus expressing their confidence in what I have done and have tried to do. I appreciate to the full the solemn responsibility this confidence imposes upon me, and I shall do all that in my power lies not to forfeit it. On the fourth of March next I shall have served three and a half years, and this three and a half years constitute my first term. The wise custom which limits the president to two terms regards the substance, and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination.'

"I have not changed and shall not change the decision thus announced."

The announcement that the president would not accept the Republican nomioetion, if tendered, came at too late an hour to become generally known in political circles, but among those who learned of it, Democrats and Republicans alike, the feeling was manifest that it left no element of doubt in the presidential situation, so far as relates to the third term talk, and that it definitely eliminates Mr. Roosevelt from the contest now being waged. Some Democrats, however, express a belief that a Roosevelt stampede in the Republican convention would shake his resolution and that he would probably be elected to the historic precedent that no American citizen ever refused a presidential nomination.

Administration Republicans declare that the announcement gives a great impetus to the Taft boom, while the Democrats, many of the leaders of which declare they are here attending the meeting of their national committee, are shouting that it means "Bryan in a walk."

ORCHARD TELLS OF MURDER.

Pictures Petitbone As His Paymaster for All His Crimes.

Boise, Idaho. — Showing signs of deep emotion, Harry Orchard, in the Petitbone trial Thursday afternoon, told of the assassination of ex-Gov. Steunenberg. In minute detail he testified in regard to the deliberate preparations for the crime; of his unsuccessful attempt to end the life of Steunenberg, and finally of placing the bomb on the night of December 30, 1905.

Before telling of the Steunenberg murder Orchard detailed his alleged attempts on the lives of Fred Bradley at San Francisco; Justice Gabbert, Justice Goddard and Gov. Peabody at Denver, and of plans which he said were made to kill Sherman Bell, Frank Hearne, David Moffatt and John Nelligan. Finally he told of having instructed Petitbone as his paymaster, and in some of his attempted crimes he himself participated as an active participant. In every detail his narrative was the same as given in the Haywood trial.

Brooklyn Bankers Arrested.

New York.—John G. Jenkins and his three sons, John G., Jr., Frank and Fred, all bankers of Brooklyn, were indicted jointly Wednesday for criminal conspiracy in having illegally obtained loans aggregating $947,000 from trust companies of which they were officers. The father, John G., Jr., and Frank were indicted for perjury in having made false statements to the state superintendents of banks. The four men were arrested, arraigned and, after pleading not guilty, held under bonds for a hearing.

CONVENTION GOES TO DENVER

DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE ALSO ACCEPTS $100,000 FUND.

Several Members Look on Sum Offered as Bribe—July 7 Named as Date.

Washington.—After deciding to hold the next Democratic national convention at Denver, Col., and fixing the date of the meeting for July 7, 1908, the Democratic national committee late Thursday entered upon a spirited debate on the propriety of accepting more of the $100,000 offered by Denver for the convention than actually needed to pay the convention expenses in that city.

The opposition to the acceptance of the contribution took the form of a resolution by Representative Clayton of Alabama, declining money not ostensibly needed for convention purposes, but after a long debate the resolution was laid on the table by a vote of 21 to 14.

Mr. Clayton, Representative John Sharp Williams of Mississippi and Gov. Hoke Smith of Georgia all spoke in favor of the passage of the resolution. Mr. Smith was especially emphatic in saying that the $100,000 which had been offered to secure the Republican convention and refused by the Republican national committee had been offered to and was about to be accepted by the Democratic committee. He said the Republicans had turned down the offer because it was regarded as in the nature of a bribe and that Democrats, in view of that circumstance, could not refuse to accept it. Mr. Williams spoke in similar vein, as also did Mr. Clayton.

Mr. Taggart advocated the acceptance of the $100,000, saying it would be needed now even worse than money was needed in 1904, and that at that time it would have been practically impossible to have opened headquarters for Judge Parker if they had not had the extra money secured from St. Louis, where the convention was held.

In selecting the convention city on first ballot, Denver received 22 votes as against 17 for Louisville, five for Chicago and one for St. Paul. July 7 was selected after a very brief discussion.

The committee held two sessions during the day and adjourned finally at six o'clock.

WANTS GOLDFIELD FACTS.

President Sends Labor Department Officials to Investigate.

Washington.—Assistant Secretary Sturny, of the department of commerce and labor; Charles P. Neill, commissioner of labor, and Herbert Knox Smith, commissioner of corporations, left Washington Tuesday afternoon for Goldfield, Nev., to make a thorough investigation of the trouble between the miners and mine operators at that place. Secretary Murray and Commissioner Smith made the announcement after a conference with President Roosevelt Wednesday.

Goldfield, Nev.—Gen. Funston arrived at 2 o'clock Thursday and was driven direct to the Goldfield, where he went into conference with Gov. Sparks. Gen. Funston stated to the governor that he would remain here until the labor situation had cleared up and there was no danger danger of trouble. Gen. Funston says he is determined to take control of the camp under martial law upon the first outbreak of serious violence, but that he will not take any such action until the conditions warrant it.

QUEEN CAROLA IS DYING.

Last Sacraments Administered to Albert of Saxony's Widow.

Dresden.—The condition of Queen Carola, widow of King Albert of Saxony, who is suffering from nephritis, is hopeless. The last sacraments were administered Friday and the queen is reported to live many hours. Queen Cagola is a daughter of Prince Gustave Vase of Sweden. She was married to Prince Albert of Saxony in 1853.

Minneapolis Pigeon Holds Record.

Boston.—At the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the International Federation of American Homing Pigeon Fanciers, which closed its sessions here Wednesday, the best record for the year was given to Tornado, belonging to Fred May, of Minneapolis, Minn., with a flight of 600 miles in 15 hours. Another record flight was by a bird owned by Dr. John Schilling, of Fort Wayne, Ind., which covered 1,000 miles in 47 hours.

Carnegie Donates $2,000,000.

Washington.—Andrew Carnegie has added the sum of $2,000,000 to the $10,000,000 endowment fund of the Carnegie Institute. Announcement of the fact was made at a dinner Tuesday night at the New Willard, of the board of trustees of the institute, to which had been invited a number of scientists and men prominent in public affairs.

THE SUNBEAM,

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn, under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The people up this way are putting in a portion of their time agitating the building of creameries, and it is certainly a move in the right direction. At the meeting held at the school house last Saturday there was a large crowde present and the location of a site for building a creamery in this Township was located at Highlanding, on the corner of the Showston farm. Of course this location did not please every one present, as some wanted it east and some west of that point, but the Highlanding location won out by a large majority. A temporary organization was made and a committee anointed to get shares of stock, which was placed at $25, per share. If we can get this creamery built it will be a great improvement to the community and we believe we can get it built If we make a united effort and all take hold and push. You could not buy the Clearwater Creamery for twice the amount it cost, if you wanted to move it away from there. If it paid the town of Deer Park to build and run this creamery, why would it not pay the town of Highlanding to build and run one?

Babes as Bait.

"We'll do ye blink," said the sailor. "Set aside like babies for bait! We'll do it in Ceylon."

"Babies for bait! Fishing for sharks? Yes. Crocodile. Baby bait is the only thing for crocodile, and every body uses it. Ye rent a baby dear there for half a dollar a day. Of course," the sailor went on, "the thing ain't so cruel as it sounds. No harm ever comes to the babies, or else, of course, their mothers wouldn't rent 'em. The kid is simply put on the end of a line of a crocodile stream and the hooter lays kid near him, a sure protection. The crocodile is lazy. He lies in the sun in indolence. Nothin' he'd relish more than to share where ye take part kids. But set a little fat naked baby on the bank and the crocodile runs ontoes up. In he comes, a greedy beast, in his dull eyes and then ye open fire. I have seen as many as four crocodiles with one baby in a morning's fishin'. Some Ceylonese women would there near as real crocodile circuses make as much as $2 a week regular out of renting their babies for crocodile bait."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Has a Job Waiting.

"I hear you're getting to be a real expert," a veteran in that line remarked to a youthful acquaintance of the contemplative cast recently married.

The young man republished my such intention.

"Just played a little let among the boys in the office, you know," he added. "Put in $1.50 and won $40 in a trifling pool."

"Well, that's a good beginning, anyhow," said the veteran. "You'll grow up after awhile. What did you do with the $40—put it on the races or upon wine?"

"Bought a ton of coal and a set of false teeth for my wife," was the reply.

When the veteran revived his pound friend had disappeared.

"Gee," he soliloquized, "that's a new one in sport! If I win tomorrow I'll buy my mother-in-law a new tooth leg and some darning cotton."—New York Globe.

Given Her Choice.

Little Harry's experience with death was limited to the decease of a pet canary which had been sent to a taxidermist and now adorned the parlor mantel.

His grandmother, of whom he was very fond, was taken suddenly ill. For some time after he learned of her condition he sat in a brown study. Then, with a resolute air of coming to a sudden resolution, he closed into the sickroom and, cautiously approaching the bed, fixed his precious big brown eyes upon his dear relative and said, with a little quiver in his voice:

"Say, grandma, if you die, which would you rather be—buried or stuffed?"

"Cause if you're buried we can't see you no more, but if you're stuffed you can set you in the parlor."

Grandma immediately began to get well.—London Scraps.

The White Line.

The late David Christie Murray on one occasion told the story of the champion pfeifer's error of his experience to this effect:

"I was at the close of the story of 'Grace Fosbeach': 'Are there no troubles now?' the lover asks. 'Not one, dear Frank, not one.' And then, in brackets, thus [ ] I set the words [White the]. This was a technical instruction to the printer and meant that the line of space should be left clear. The genius who had the copy in hand put the lover's speech in type correctly and then, setting it out as if it were a line of verse, he gave me:

"Not one, dear Frank, not one white line."

"It was a bustoh in the printing of Ike to surround a leather medal by a leather boot lace round the neck of the man who had achieved the prize belief of the year. It was somewhere about midsummer at this time, but it was instantly unanimously resolved that nothing better than this would, or could be done by anybody, and the medal was presented at once."—Westminster Gazette.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Flogging.

Flogging, in public and otherwise, is not of mediaeval origin. In the middle ages ridicule and not physical suffering was the means employed for the correction of wrongdoing, hence the pillory, the stocks and the throwing chair suspended high over the heads of the crowd, in which women, generally scolds, were brought to a sweet repentableness—but the whipping post belongs to the Tudor age. The Elizabethan servant question was met by flogging girls for idleness on Sunday morning. But it was in the Hanoverian period that flogging was carried to excess. As late as 1804 six women were publicly flogged in Gloucester, England, because they had been found wanting.

To Calculate Longevity.

Bacon took a deep interest in longevity and its earmarks," said a physician, "and Bacon's signs of long life and of short life are as true today as they ever were. You won't live long. Bacon pointed out, if you have soft, fine hair, a fine skin, quick growth, large head, early corpulence, short neck, small mouth, brittle and separated teeth and fat ears. Your life, barring accidents, will be very lengthy if you have slow growth, coarse hair, a rough skin, deep wrinkles in the forehead, firm flesh, a large mouth, wide nostrils, strong teeth set close together and a hard, gristly ear."

Why the Devil Has Cloven Hoofs.

Legends of the devil are quite common in Ireland, but the one which is most interesting and least known perhaps is that which tells why the prince of the infernal regions has split hoofs like those of a cow beast. Moore alludes to the legend in his story of St. Kevin and Kathleen at Glendalough. In that story Moore makes St. Kevin throw his former indiviee over the cliff in order to be rid of her importunities, but the peasants of the Glendalough district give the story a more poetical touch. They insist that it was not Kathleen that was thrown over the cliff, but that it was Satan, who had assumed the form of the lady in order to tempt the saint. The moment the prince of evil toppled over the edge of the yawning abyss he opened his batwings and sailed away in safety, much to the surprise of the holy saint. Later on the devil again attempted to lay a snare for St. Kevin, but the saint managed to get the arch fiend on holy ground, where, of course, he was helpless. While the devil was in this helpless condition Kevin drew forth his red hot attached cows' hoofs and [illegible] stamps, since that day Satan has been cloven footed and will be until the end of time.

Echoes and Architects.

"It is possible to make echoes," said an architect. "It is, indeed, easier to make them to destroy them. In the past men built their great temples and cathedrals with no thought of sound, yet hence when the preacher preached the roof, down the rows of sculptured columns and round and round the nave. With wires strung here and with tapestries spread there, many of the echoes of the old world buildings have been obliterated. There are echo experts—builders acquainted with the science of acoustics whose specialty is echoes' destruction. Sometimes their tasks are hard. Today an architect takes thought of the echo. His building is constructed so as to exclude this intruder. And, knowing how to exclude it, he knows how to welcome it also. I have frequently in landscape work put up summer houses and arranged trees so as to create an echo there."—Exchange.

BLACK, ITCHING SPOTS ON FACE.

Physician Called It Eczema in Worst Form—Patient Despaired of Cure—Cuticura Remedies Cured Her.

"About four years ago I was afflicted with black splotches all over my face and a few coverlop my body, which produced e severo itching irritation, and which caused me a great deal of suffering, to such an extent that I was forced to call in two of the leading physicians of ——. After a thorough examination of the dreaded complaint they announced it to be skin eczema in the worst form. Their treatment did me up good. Finally I became despondent and decided to discontinue their services. My husband purchased a single set of the Cuticura Remedies, which entirely stopped the breaking out. I continued the use of the Cuticura Remedies for six months, and after that ever spioich was entirely gone. I have not felt a symptom of the eczema sluce, which was three years ago. Mrs. Lizzie E. An organ-grinder had been playing before the house of an irascible old gentleman, who furiously and amidst wild gesticulations ordered him to move on. The Italian stolidly stood his ground and played on, and at last was arrested for causing a disturbance. At the court the magistrate asked him why he did not leave when he was requested. "Me no understan' mooch ingiese," was the reply. "Well, but you must have understood by his motions that he wanted you to go," said the magistrate. "I tink he come to dance," was the rejoinder.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Little Vida's Gray Muff

By KENDRICK FERRIS.

IT HAD begun way back in November when Sunday after Thanksgiving, when Sallie carter came in late to church with a gray astrakhan muff. The sermon was too "deep" for Vida, who had her hand on her face and was almost asleep, when a flash of gray in the next pew caused her to turn her head ever so slightly and peep through her chubby fingers. There it stood on the velvet cushiou beside Sallie, trim, warm and lined with pearly gray satin, exactly like Mrs. Carter's own beautiful big one, but smaller by half. A great longing began to grow in Vida's heart.

But from that day on till the 17th of December Vida thought of nothing but a gray muff—how she would look carrying it, how it would feel and how every Sunday afternoon she would let poor Dorothy Haines carry it for a whole block.

The 25th fell on Sunday that year, and Saturday morning dawned bright and clear. Vida and her mother were standing together at the nursery window, as with a jingle of merry bells the Carters' sleigh drove by. Vida sighed contentedly.

"To-morrow," she said, "I shall be carrying a gray astrakhan muff."

Her mother laughed merrily. "Why, Vida, dear," she said. "You asked Santa Claus for seven other things—you said so only this morning. You couldn't expect him to remember them all, and he's as likely to forget the muff as the French doll, or the tea set. It's foolish to count on any one thing when you made so long a list. I told you to be moderate." And her busy mother hurried off in answer to a call from Aunt Jane.

Not count on it! Why, she had done nothing but count on it ever since Santa Claus had found her note, says St. Nicholas. Not count on it. Why, Christmas would be nothing without it!

That twilight came, and the darkness fell. And in the corner of the great hall sofa, facing the clock on the stairs, Vida, a disconsolate little body, fell asleep.

Her mother wakened her when it was time to hang up her stocking, and with the hope of her warning, and in spite of her long hours of worry, hope was born again, and when Vida kissed her mother good night visions of gray astrakhan muffs danced in her head.

"Merry Christmas! Merry Christmas!"

It seemed to Vida she had but closed her eyes, and there stood mother and Aunt Jane beside her bed, one with her worsted shoes and the other with her red elderdown wrapper to hurry her over to the nursery, where har father stood awaiting at the door.

"Merry Christmas! Merry Christmas! Oh, papa, I said 'I will!'" she cried, laughingly, as her father caught her in his arms.

Vida drew a quiet breath, and gave a little happy exclamation. Then she flew straight to the fireplace—the muff should be there.

Of the seven presents six were not forgotteu, and there were others she had not asked for.

But Vida's lips were quivering, and a great lump swelled in her throat. The muff—the beautiful gray astrakhan muff—was not there. Santa Claus had forgotten it.

But Vida was brave. And she would not let those who loved her see her cry or suspect her disappointment. She turned away from them and went to the north window, fighter with her tears.

"Oh, papa, papa," she cried excitedly. "Come here, come here right away. See, there is something out on the roof!"

Her father opened the window quickly, and climbed out. Vida's heart beat so wildly she could scarcely speak. Her father was picking up a box—it was about as size of Aunt Jane's cooky jar, and it was round.

"Well," her father said, as he climbed back into the nursery. "Here is something old St. Nick dropped, and from its size I guess it's meant for you."

Vida's hands trembled so she could scarcely tug off the round top of the box. Just as it was about to yield, a sudden fear fell upon her heart.

"Papa, perhaps—perhaps he didn't mean it for me. Perhaps he dropped it, and it belongs to some other little girl."

Her father's eyes twinkled.

"Look at the bottom of the box, little one," he said.

Vida turned the box upside down. There was her name—Vida Gunnee Lane, as plain as plain could be, and while she was staring at it open mouthed, out dropped—not a little gray astrakhan muff, but a beautiful soft chinchilla one and a little collar to match! And Sallie Carter peeped through her fingers that Christmas morning at the happiest little girl in all Christendom.

Barney Flynn's Partner

HE boy stretched the long black stocking and regarded it with satisfaction.

"I'll take it," he said. "How much?"

"Twenty-five cents a pair," Dorothy Winslow answered.

The customer fished out a dime and three pennies and laid them on the counter.

"I'll take this one," he said.

"But we never break a pair!" Dorothy exclaimed, with some amusement. "Oh," she added, sympathetically, as the boy's face fell, "was it for some one with only one leg?"

"It's for my partner. He's got two legs, but he's crippled—just been let out of the hospital. And I'm going to give him a Christmas."

"Oh!" said Dorothy, comprehendingly. "And you wanted the stocking to hang up? I'm sorry, but—what!" she cried suddenly, as the boy was gathering up his money in disapointment. "I can let you have it, I think. Cash! Cash!"

The little girl who came in response to the summons nodded to the boy, and then sped away to the desk with the quarter that Dorothy substituted for the dime and three pennies.

When the customer had departed, carrying his package, Dorothy contemplated the odd stocking which had come into her possession.

"Well, what an idiot I am!" she murmured. "Why didn't I give him both of them? But of course he wouldn't have taken them—as long as he was buying for one."

She called the little cash girl again. "Do you know the boy that was here a little while ago?" she asked. "I thought I saw you nod to him."

"Barney Flynn. He lives on the floor above us," "Cash" answered, "with Billy; and Billy got run down by a 'lectric. Barney sees to him."

Customers claimed Dorothy's attention, and for awhile she was all hurry and hustle. During the afternoon, however, when the neighboring sales-woman volunteered to watch over her counter for her, she slipped down the aisle to the shirt waists, says Good Companion. She was quite excited for fear that the particular shirt waist should be gone. There was the woman with the bargain counter hanging it. Dorothy had seen her dallying at the counter.

She rummaged a moment in a pile of shirt waists; then she looked tragically at her friend behind the counter.

"O Peggy, it's gone! I knew it! I knew it! I saw it in that bargain woman's eye!"

She had waited so patiently for that waist to be marked down! It would have suited her complexion— it had just the right warm, rosy tints.

"Peggy, why did you let it go?" she cried, reproachfully.

"Had to, my dear. I did my best—put it at the very bottom of the pile, but she fished it out."

Dorothy went back slowly to her counter.

"Dick would have liked it, too," she thought, disconsolately. "And now he'll have to see me in just my shabby old one."

It occurred to her that other people probably had Christmas disappointments; and then she thought of Barney Flynn and his partner.

"He's going to hang up the stocking for Billy—and I don't believe he ever had a Christmas for himself in his life," Dorothy meditated. "I know what I bought the odd stocking for—so long, as I can't buy myself that lovely waist."

And she felt a glow of enthusiasm as plans began to take shape in her mind. It was almost closing-time when the little cash-girl came darting up with a message from Peggy.

"She's brought it back—the shirt waist—sleeves too short. If you want it, better hurry.

Dorothy hesitated. "No, I've changed my mind," she said resolutely. "Tell Peggy I'm much obliged." And she added to herself: "Now if Dick doesn't like me in my old plaid waist, I guess we'll have to quarrel.

When Dorothy returned to the store the morning after Christmas, the little cash girl came running up to her, and cried:

"I got it in for you all right, Miss Winslow! I worked it fine. I crep' in in the dark, when Billy and Barney were asleep; you couldn't have heard me with an ear trumpet. And I felt for Billy's stocking, and hung yours alongside. And then I filled 'em both with all the things you'd given me."

"Well," said Dorothy, eagerly; "and what happened?"

"O my sakes," said the child, "All of us on the floor below was waked up that early Christmas mornin' such a yellin' and stompin'! You'd like to have thought they'd never had a Christmas!"

Dorothy turned away to hide a smile.

"And Dick was glad to see me just as I was," she thought, contentedly.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

County Option Slogan.

Crookston—The Minnesota Anti-saloon league started a big campaign in Northwestern Minnesota by getting in touch with the county organization of Polk county here and holding a rousing mass meeting, at which Supt. N. A. Palmer, Assistant Superintendent C. A. Youngdahl, Hon. T. B. Moen of Ada and several other speakers delivered addresses.

About forty delegates from all over Polk county attended a big meeting in the afternoon at which plans for the coming election were discussed and committees appointed to keep the work going along organized lines. The anti-saloon league believes that it will be able to elect in Northern Minnesota almost every legislator at the next election who will favor their league and work for county option.

Very little work was done in this section of the state at the last election by the anti-saloon league, and the work that is being started now may make considerable difference in the next set of legislators from Northern Minnesota.

Move to Dishar.

Minneapolis—The board of governors and the ethics committee of the state bar association placed the stamp of its unqualified condemnation upon the action of Francis B. Hart of Minneapolis in the attack made upon the supreme court he made in his letter to the chief justice and to the governor. Steps will be taken at once to secure, if possible, his disbarment and his expulsion from the state bar association. Mr. Hart in his letter asked that an investigation of the court be started and suggested impeachment.

A joint meeting of the board of governors and the ethics committee of the association was held at the office of How, Hutter & Mitchell, at which the communications discussed, after which separate meetings were held. Two resolutions were adopted at each of the meetings, which were subsequently approved by the other body at the joint session which followed.

Tries to Clean Wrong Barrel.

Two Harbors—By the accidental discharge of a shotgun Ben Wooten, seventeen years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Wooten, a brakeman on the Duluth & Iron Range railroad, received injuries which may prove fatal. The injured boy and two companions went out rabbit hunting Thursday about three miles north of town. Ben's gun was of the double-barreled kind and after discharging one barrel he started to wipe it out. In doing so he accidentally placed the ramrod into the barrel that contained a loaded shell and it exploded, driving a large number of shot into his abdomen. One of his companions came to the boy's assistance and four men with a stretcher were sent out from the Two Harbors hospital and brought the injured boy to town. At the hospital he was operated upon and the doctors cannot say as yet whether he will survive or not.

St. Paul Lid.

St. Paul—The enforcement of the law is a matter of duty which is not affected by public sentiment either for or against the law. This is the position taken by Attorney General E. T. Young with relation to the enforcement of the law requiring saloons to be closed at 11 p.m. and he so informed a committee of St. Paul citizens who called upon him. The committee consisted of R. L. Goodkind, L. S. Cushing, C. W. Gordon, Eli S. Warner, Albert W. Lindeke and Jacob Dittlocher.

The members of the committee informed Mr. Young that the sentiment in St. Paul favored the 11 o'clock closing. They believe that closing the saloons at midnight, as required by the city ordinance, is favored by a large majority of the citizens and would meet all requirements of good morals and be better from a business standpoint.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis—The thirty-sixth annual meeting of the Minnesota state grange opened at the Masonic Temple.

St. Paul—Richard Peel, one of the pioneer locomotive engineers of the Omaha railway, dropped dead in his home, 839 Tuscarora street, of kidney trouble.

Minneapolis—Nearly 200 high school students will be graduated by the Minneapolis public schools at the four commencements to be held the week of Jan. 13.

Prestico—The brewery in this place is to be transformed into a packing house and the work of remodeling is already under way. The brewery has been in operation for nearly forty years and has had many owners.

Narrow Escape.

Savage—Earl Barnaby, a member of the Dan Patch Air Line surveying crew at work near here, narrowly escaped death by drowning in the Minnesota river. News of his death was telephoned to the Minneapolis office and the rumor was not corrected until later.

Burnside was working on the ice near the site of the proposed bridge near Hamilton ferry, when the ice gave way and he sank from sight. Fellow members of the crew ran to his assistance, but his rescue seemed impossible.

Twenty feet below the place where he disappeared was a large air hole and Burnside was carried under the ice by the swift current until he came to the surface of the air hole.

He grasped the edge of the ice and his companions by forming a human chain, rescued him. Burnside is sore the worse for his experience.

Tax Commission Report.

St. Paul—The Minnesota tax commission handed in its first annual report to Governor Johnson. Its most important feature is a significant analysis of the present tax system and the revenues of the state. As another report will be made before the legislature meets, there are no recommendations for new legislation at this time.

The report finds that for the current year property in Minnesota will pay an average tax of $8.37 on $1,000 of actual value, which it says cannot be considered excessive, but "under the existing conditions of the assessment and levy of taxes it is unequally distributed, not only upon individuals, but upon communities as well."

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis—The estate of J. C. Eilert, the former Minneapolis wholesale druggist, is valued at $144,961.

Winona—At the annual meeting of the Winona Poultry association just held, it was decided to hold a poultry show in Winona next winter.

Willow River—The saloon building belonging to the Hamm Brewing company of St. Paul and occupied by E. W. Olson, was totally destroyed by fire.

Solway—One fortunate, large buck deer, which escaped the slaughter of the last hunting season, visited the village of Solway, coming into the main street from an easterly direction.

Preston—This village is experiencing a reform movement and M. Turck, a saloonkeeper, has paid a fine of $50 and costs for selling liquor on Sunday and will be tried on a charge of selling to a minor.

Duluth—Stricken with small pox, deserted by friends and relatives and left alone to their fate was the sad plight of Mrs. Frederick Owens and her four children, ages of 20 North Fifty-sixth avenue west.

Duluth—In the hottest primary fight Duluth has ever witnessed Emil Tyrrell, man received the Democratic nomination for mayor, defeating Mayor M. B. Cullum by what the final returns show to have been a plurality of 138 votes.

Minneapolis—Margaret Higgins, the 11-year-old daughter of O. M. Higgins, was fatally injured in a collision of icebouts on Lake Calhoun, dying fifteen minutes later at the home of Dr. Wilcox, 3343 Calhoun boulevard.

Fergus Falls—Jorgon Ulrickson was hurled alive while digging a well in the town of Eagle Lake. He had got down to a depth of nearly fifty feet and was about to be pulled up for the night when the earth closed in around him.

Minneapolis—E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, has prepared a program for the dairy meeting at the annual convention of the Minnesota State Agricultural society, which will be held in Minneapolis, Jan. 13, 14 and 15.

New Ulm—Four teachers in the public schools came in contact with a smallpox patient at a local boarding house and in consequence the board of education and Supt. E. T. Critchett deemed it advisable to close the high school and one of the grade rooms.

South St. Paul—South St. Paul has entered complaint before the state railroad and warehouse commission against the Minneapolis & St. Paul Suburban Railroad company, asking that the company be required to furnish better service between St. Paul and the stockyards.

Minneapolis—"Texas," universally acknowledged to be one of the most charming romances of Western life ever presented in play form, will be the attraction at the Bijou Opera House, during New Years' week. A delightful atmosphere of Western life pervades the play, which is by Dunstan and braggadocia.

BLOWS EXCHANGED IN HOUSE

WILLIAMS AND DE ARMOND RE-SORT TO FISTICUFFS.

Latter Calls Former a Liar and Lively Combat Follows—Is Stopped.

Washington.—The spirit of rivalry that existed for five years between [illegible] and Williams, democratic leaders of the house of representatives, broke out in a fistic encounter on the floor of the house of representatives. Both men were on their feet at the time, shaking their fists in each other's faces, and the blood to boil. Speaker Williams, and quite a number of members rushed to the scene of action and separated the belligerents before a blow was struck.

The encounter was very short. Mr. De Armond here away, a scuffed nose.

The immediate cause of the fight was the passing of the bill by Mr. De Armond to Mr. Williams, resultant of a complaint by the former that the minority leader had broken faith in "burying" Mr. Booher of Missouri by recommending his assignment by Speaker Cannon to the committee on coinage, weights and measures.

According to the statements of the principals, Mr. Williams defended his action by declaring he had been told by Mr. Booher's colleague, Mr. Lloyd of Missouri, that the committee assignment would be satisfactory to Mr. Booher. Mr. De Armond bluntly questioned the truth of the statement, and after the failure of an effort on his part to transfer the scene of controversy, Mr. Williams struck Mr. De Armond a blow in the face with closed fist.

The exciting incident will not be set down in the official records of the Sixtieth congress, for the house had been some minutes adjourned when the first blow was struck.

Some representative cried out: "Look, look at the fight." Everybody looked; but so startled were they by what they saw that no one seemed for the moment to think of rushing forward and stopping it. Meantime Mr. Williams and Mr. De Armond, wedged between two rows of desks, were still exchanging blows. Blood was flowing down the face of the leader of the minority, while Mr. De Armond was endeavoring to grasp his opponent by the throat, at the same time vigorously returning blow for blow.

Then everybody awoke to the unseemliness of the scene and crowded in and made an end of it.

Cummins Seeks Togs Only.

Des Moines, Ia.—Gov. Cummins, of Iowa, referring to his suggested candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination, said Sunday:

"I have no thought of threatening my candidacy for United States senator. The suggestion about the presidency is new here, although I have heard about it in other states. I do not intend to do anything that will take me out of the race for senator."

Drowns in a Sathtub.

North Attleboro, Mass.—Frederick E. Sargeant, cashier and vice president of the Jewelers' National bank of this town, and prominently identified with Providence, R. I., and North Attleboro business firms, was found dead in the bathtub of his home in the same building Tuesday night. Medical Examiner Holden stated that in his opinion death was due to accidental drowning.

Yaqui Murder Twelve Men.

Nogales, Ariz.—Information which has just reached here tells of the frightful murder of 12 men by a band of 150 Yaqui Indians 45 miles southeast of Magdalena, State of Sonora, Mex., Wednesday of last week.

OSCAR OF SWEDEN BURIED.

Impressive Funeral of Late King in Stockholm.

Stockholm. — Seldom if ever in its history has this city witnessed such a grand and solemn ceremony as that which Thursday marked the funeral of King Oscar, who died December 8.

Although the weather was bitterly cold, the entire population of Stockholm and thousands of visitors from the country stood bareheaded, silent and sorrowful along the line of procession to catch a last glimpse of the cortege containing all that remained of the beloved king.

The funeral procession included 2,000 persons, among them being, save the new king of Sweden; the king of Denmark, the Swedish princes and princesses, and the ambassadors representing foreign monarchs. Charles H. Graves, the American minister, as the special representative of President Roosevelt, was given a place of honor immediately following King Gustave. The queen of Sweden and the queen of Denmark drove to the church, but the dowager queen of Sweden, widow of King Oscar, was prevented by illness from attending the funeral.

As the funeral procession entered the Riddarholm church the organ and the orchestra played Haydn's magnificent dirge and, as the casket was carried up the grand aisle by a number of officers, accompanied by the aides de camp of the late sovereign, every eye in the congregation was filled with tears. The funeral oration was delivered by the bishop of Lund.

A salute of 42 guns was fired by the forts and the ships in the harbor, and volleys of musketry burst forth as the coffin was placed in the vault of the Bernadotte.

MANY KILLED BY EXPLOSION.

Powder Magazine in Palermo Blown Up—Whole Town Shaken.

Palermo—A terrific explosion occurred Thursday evening in the military powder magazine, where a large quantity of dynamite was stored, and was followed by a number of lesser explosions, the whole town being badly shaken and the people thrown into a panic. Almost immediately flames shot high in the air and spread to the ruins of houses that had fallen, adding greatly to the terror of those who were in the immediate neighborhood of the disaster.

It is estimated that about 25 persons were killed and a hundred others injured. Troops were ordered out to aid the firemen in clearing away the wreck and securing the wounded.

Engineer Faithful Unto Death.

Cleveland, O.—Engineer Frank Krag, 50 years old, of Buffalo, N. Y., thought ill and faint, stayed at his throttle till he had run his train safely down a heavy grade and then dropped dead. Krag was in his usual health when he took his train out of Buffalo. His illness came after the train had left Erie. The engineer had hardly strength enough to lower himself from the cab at Collinwood.

Buck Hinrichsen Dead.

Alexandria, Ill. — W. H. Hinrichsen, familiarly known as "Buck" Hinrichsen, formerly treasurer and secretary of the state of Illinois, died at his home here Wednesday from paralysis after a long period of declining health. Mr. Hinrichsen was about 59 years of age and was secretary of state during the administration of Gov. Altgeld. He had been a conspicuous figure in Illinois politics for many years.

NEW MINE DISASTER

EXPLOSION ENTOMBS ABOUT 250 AT JACOBS CREEK, PA.

MEN PROBABLY ALL DEAD

Number of Fatalities Comparatively Small Because Many Miners Were Celebrating Festival of Greek Church.

Jacobs Creek, Pa.—An explosion of gas in the Darr mine of the Pittsburg Coal company, located here, Thursday entombed between 200 and 250 miners, and there is scarcely a ray of hope that a single one of them will be taken from the mines alive. Partially wrecked buildings in the vicinity of the mine and the condition of the few bodies found early in the rescue work indicate an explosion of such terrific force that it seems impossible that any one could have survived it.

That this disaster does not equal or even surpass in loss of life and attendant horrors the one in West Virginia is due to the devotion to church duties of a considerable number of the miners. In observance of a church festival many of the 400 or more men regularly employed at the mine did not go to work Thursday morning. Those who escaped through this reason are members of the Greek Catholic church and they suspended work to celebrate St. Nicholas day.

As was the case at Monongah, the explosion followed a brief shut down, the Darr mine having been closed Tuesday and Wednesday. It was just 11:30 o'clock when the tenth trip of loaded cars had been brought out to the tipple and there came in a swift rumbling sound, followed immediately by a loud report and a concussion that shook nearby buildings and was felt within a radius of several miles. At the same time there came out of the mouth of the mine an immense cloud of smoke and dust that floated across the Youghiogheny river.

As far as known, only one man who went to work Thursday morning escaped. Joseph Mapleton, a pumper, emerged from one of the side entries shortly after the explosion. He had left the part of the mine where most of the men were working and was on the way to the engine room for oil.

Forty-Two Dead Taken Out.

Yolande, Ala. — At eight o'clock Tuesday night 42 bodies had been taken from the Diamond coal mines, in which an explosion occurred Monday. Nineteen more are reported dead in the mines, making a total of 61 victims.

No one is yet able to tell what caused the explosion. The theory most generally accepted now is that ons of the men allowed a stick of dynamite to explode, which ignited the gas and this in turn exploded, spreading death and destruction through the whole mine. This theory is borne out by the fact that the entire front of one man's body was torn away.

Fifty-Two Slaughter in Mines.

Washington.—The coal mines of the United States are killing three times as many men per 1,000 employes as those of most European countries. In the last 17 years 22,840 men have given up their lives in the mines of this country.

As many violent deaths have occured in the mines during the last six years as during the preceding 11 years. The number of fatal accidents in the mines is now double that of the year 1895. In 1906, 6,861 men were killed or injured in the mines, the next succeeding 2,061 and the injured 4,800.

These terrible facts have been gleaned by government experts now at work under orders from Secretary Garfield of the interior department to investigate the nature and extent of mine accidents, particularly those resulting from explosions, and also to make suggestions as to how mining conditions may be improved and accidents prevented.

The conclusions of the experts are found in a bulletin issued Wednesday on coal mine accidents; their causes and preventions.

Diamond Jo Line Sold.

Burlington, Ia.—The Diamond Jo line of steamers has been sold, or soon will be, to a syndicate of men who will improve the present fleet of passenger and freight boats and increase their carrying capacity very materially. The statement is made that the sale has already taken place. The price is stated at a million and a half dollars.

May Be Taken to Idaho for Trial.

Madison, Wis. — J. T. Barber and Summer G. Moon, the millionaire lumbermen of Rau Claire indicted with Senator Borah for alleged conspiracy in land frauds, may be taken to Idaho for trial. Judge Quarles handed down this decision in the United States court Thursday afternoon.

INJUNCTION DECREE SIGNED

THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR IS ENJOINED.

Writ Granted Expected to Have Far Reaching Effect Against Boycott.

Washington. — After hearing arguments on various points in the case Justice Ashley M. Gould in equity court Wednesday signed the decree temporarily restraining and enjoining the American Federation of Labor, its officers and all others from interfering with the business of the Bucks Stove and Range company and from declaring and threatening any boycott against it. All attempts of counsel for the American Federation of Labor to modify the decree failed, except in one particular, and that was to exclude from the order the Electrotype Molders and Finishers' union No. 17, against which it was shown no specific allegation had been made.

Justice Gould took occasion to dwell upon the question of jurisdiction. He said there would be no attempt made by the court to assume jurisdiction beyond the confines of the District of Columbia, but that its order was operative upon all the persons defendant who are within the District of Columbia. An act, he said, committed by an agent or associate of one of these defendants outside the District of Columbia could be held as the act of the person within the District of Columbia so ordering it and subject such person to the punitive power of the court.

New York. — Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who is now in this city to attend the meeting of the National Civic federation, refused to go into the merits of Justice Gould's decision.

"This is an old one brought several months ago," said Mr. Gompers, "and before I have anything to say on the decision I should like to know just exactly what we are enjoined from doing. I do not know what further action we may take, and I shall want time to confer with some of my associates and to investigate in person before I have anything further to say."

CIGARETTES CAN BE SOLD.

Illinois Law Doesn't Prohibit it, Says Supreme Court.

Springfield, Ill.—The supreme court Wednesday handed down an opinion declaring the anti-cigarette law passed by the legislature this year does not apply to cigarettes which contain pure tobacco, but only to those cigarettes which contain substances deleterious to health. It holds that the legislature has the right under the exercise of its police power to pass an act prohibiting the sale of cigarettes, but that it cannot prohibit the sale of cigarettes under the present act, the title of which only provides for the regulation of the sale of cigarettes.

Prior to June, 1907, prohibiting the sale of theater or amusement tickets for more than the price or amount printed on the face of the tickets, was declared invalid.

The supreme court also decided that Mayor Busse of Chicago removed without authority five members of the school board appointed by Mayor Dunne.

LORD KELVIN PASSES AWAY.

Noted Scientist is Dead at Glasgow, Aged 83 Years.

Glasgow.—Lord Kelvin, the noted scientist, died Tuesday.

William Thomton, first lord Kelvin, was born at Belfast, Ireland, June 26, 1824. He was a celebrated mathematician and physicist and occupied the chair of natural philosophy in Glasgow university from 1846 to 1899. He was knighted in 1866 and was created Baron Kelvin in 1892.

In the domains of heat, electricity and magnetism he was one of the great investigators of the century. He invented a number of instruments used in navigation and deep sea exploration and took a prominent part in the laying of the first submarine cables in the Atlantic.

For his efforts in behalf of science Lord Kelvin had been decorated many times, having been a member of the Order of the Legion of Honor of France, a member of the Prussian Order, Pour le Merite, and commander of the Order of King Leopold of Belgium. He received honors also from the Japanese and other governments.

Cortelyou Denies Stories.

Washington.—Secretary Cortelyou, in a statement given out Tuesday, pronounces unqualifiedly false the current rumors of undue political activity of his friends in forwarding a candidature for his interest. The secretary declares that neither he nor his friends have used their influence in behalf of any candidate for the presidency and that he has not been a candidate for anything but the confidence of the people. He adds that if he should hereafter decide to be a candidate for any office, he will say so frankly.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class Matter August 26, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

We wish all our readers and friends a happy and prosperous New Year.

A very important commercial club convention to be held at St Paul next month will take up and thoroly discuss the catalog house question, and try to curb them. The governor and other prominent men in the state are deeply interested.

Congressman Steenerson has won another victory for the settlers on the eleventh township in the south of the town of residence required before they can make their final proof. It is not such an easy matter to induce the Secretary of the Interior to reverse his rulings, but that is precisely what Mr Steenerson has done. Sometimes things hard to accomplish seem easy for our big congressman.—Plummer Pioneer.

Yes Steenerson does things down there, and yet you necessarily meet a man that will stand up in front of you and swing his hands and say! What has Steenerson done? But the poor fellows are not to blame, as they never read any other newspaper, but "The Appeal To Reason."

Had His Revenge.

The rivalry was great at the annual picnic match police versus pedlums and many friendly bets deposited on the result. When the last batsmen, Police Constable Robinson, walked to the wicket the police required only two runs to win, and naturally great excitement prevailed. He batted with care and avoided a loose ball came, and, hitting this part mid-on, he started for an easy run. He got home comfortably before the wicket was thrown down, but to his disgust he was given out.

"Why," exclaimed the indignant constable, "I was yard past the wicket!"

"My boy," said the umpire in a soft confidential tone, "look, per see. It ain't what you say; it's what I say, an' I say you're out!"

"But," began the irate Robinson.

"Never remember," interrupted the umpire, instinctively scrutinizing his boots, "might be one hout six months. Don't argue with the boy! Well, you was the law that time an' I was hump on Sure," he added, triumphant "I'm the law an' you're run out!"—London Tit-Bits.

Pay of Army Officers.

A glance over the army list shows that one of two-thirds of the officers are receiving less pay per day than good mechanics receive in civil life. The latter has no home, but must be prepared to live in the arctics or the tropics and change, from one to the other at short notice. He must have equipment for both, and while in one place the equipment for the other is stored and deteriorating. He is sent on long journeys to distant stations and must suffer banishment from his family or take them along. Either is a great expense—on one hand for travel and on the other for maintenance of two establishments. His changes of station are so frequent that he must put his children in costly private schools or see them grow up in ignorance. Because he is an officer of the United States service to use the respectability of his position to add to his income commercially is regarded as reprehensible, and if he makes an investment he must intrust his interests to an agent.—Army and Navy Life.

The Old, Old Story.

Hot, tired and dusty, the excursion train returning from the seaside Ned and Sinkins, a little maid used with big curl, overcome with his day of happiness, dropped off to sleep. In the hatrack above another passenger had deposited a ferocious crab in a basket, and when the train began the crab woke up and, finding escape dull in the basket, started exploring. Presently Archibald Sinkins reached the edge of the rack, lost his equilibrium, and down it fell, right on the sleeping Sinkins. Sinkins awoke with a start, grabbed the intruder by the throat, and, thinking it was a monster, held on with all his might. The crab, feeling itself choked, struggled desperately to get free, and Sinkins, still thinking it was a monster, held on all the tighter. Finally the crab, with a last convulsive effort, managed to get free, and, scuttling down the rack, disappeared. Sinkins, with a sigh of relief, sank back into his seat, and, opening his eyes, looked at the crab, which was lying dead on the floor. "Well," he said, "I'm glad I killed you, anyhow!"—Tit-Bits.

PUBLIC NOTICE

To Users Of Calcium Carbine and Acetylene Gas.

The Union Carbine Company, the owner of United States Letters Patent No. 541,138 of June 18th, 1895, for the product crystalline Calcium Carbide, cautions the public against the use or sale of Calcium Carbide (or carbolite) manufactured by any other person, firm or corporation. As commercial calcium is crystalline,

Especial attention is called to the fact which makes the person who morely uses or sells an infringing product just as liable to damages as the manufacturer of it. This cautionary notice is given to save innocent parties from litigation and damages to which they would be liable if they use or sell any such calcium carbide (by whatever name it may be called) manufactured by any other person firm or corporation

The public is especially advised that important suits have been brought by Union Carbide Company, and are now pending in the United States Circuit Courts in New York and Ohio against parties using and selling the product manufactured by the American Carbolite Company, and that these suits will be followed by such others as may be deemed necessary to protect this company in its patented product Calcium Carbide. The pending suits are being vigorously pushed by the undersigned with all available energy, and such progress has already been made that a finding and judgement sustaining the rights of the Union Carbide Company may reasonably be expected in the not distant future.

Dec. 1907. Union Carbide Company.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it is the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor, but it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and she needs depend upon,

How Woxall Was Named.

Near Schrecksville, Pa., is a village that bears the name of Woxall. This wonderful name was the result of an error upon the part of the postoffice department in Washington. The place was known many years ago as "Coppenstein," or "Crowtown," and later as Mechanicsville, but when a postoffice was established there in 1888 neither of these names was satisfactory, and it was decided to choose a new cognomen. Many were the suggestions submitted to the postoffice department, but all were found to be too nearly like the name of some other postoffice to be acceptable. One day the village storekeeper saw the word "Noxall" upon a piece of calico and called the attention of several friends to it. At once all agreed that "Noxall" would be a fine name for their town. So the postoffice authorities were notified. Soon a letter came from Washington approving the name that had been chosen, but in the letter it was spelled "Woxall." So Woxall became the name of the village.—Philadelphia Record.

To Calculate Longevity.

Bacon took a deep interest in longevity and its earmarks," said a physician, "and Bacon's signs of long life and of short life are as true today as they ever were. You won't live long, Bacon pointed out, if you have soft, fine hair, a fine skin, quick growth, large hand, early sexual development, small mouth, brittle and separated teeth and fat ears. Your life, barring accidents, will be very nearly if you have slow growth, coarse hair, a rough skin, deep wrinkles in the forehead, firm teeth, a large mouth, wide nostrils, strong teeth set close together and a hard, grisly ear."

Dogs That Weary.

If you have ever seen a dog that had had his master in a hunting field for a few hours you would know that the elements is very wearing upon them. But the hunting dog is not the only one that suffers from this cause. Even the lowly mongrel, that has to forage for himself, and the dog never subject from husbands, suffer at times from the effects of the heat, and become limp and Wilful Ignorance.

Subscriber (to Medical editor)—Sorry, doctor, to trouble you, but I've got a pain in my left leg. Can you tell me what to do for it?

Medical Editor—Why, certainly, I'll be glad to. Just cut off your left leg and you'll never have any more pain in it.

His Modest Claim.

A claim for damages against a railroad company is so often a license for exorbitant charges that a simple bill, such as was received by an American railroad company many years ago, even apart from its humorous aspect, is refreshing. It ran as follows:

The —— and —— Railroad company to John Smith Dr.

July 19, 1871.—To running your Locomotive into my wife; as per Doctor's bill for curing her $24.50
To smashing her hat and spilling her hat 2.37
To upsetting my deer horn (wagon) and breaking it 8.00
To hurting me 50.00
$82.87

There is authority for stating that the claim was paid immediately.—Scrap Book.

Her Chilly Retort.

The late Dr. —— of Malden, after pouring forth the story of his undying love in the most touching manner for over an hour to a young woman who he hoped would become his fourth wife, was refused the second time. He started for the door, but, looking around, he said in a most thunderous tone, "By heavens, you are the coldest woman I ever saw!"

The young woman looked up and answered sweetly:

"Oh, no, doctor; you have seen three colder than I!"—Boston Herald.

A Curious Notice.

This curious official notice was once published in Germany: "At the request of Herr Wilhelm Leipsic of Innsbruck the seaman, John Litgood, who was drowned in May, 1899, on a journey from Stockholm to Hamburg in the Knight Friedrich, is hereby called upon by the coheirs to appear and report himself on or before April 1, 1901, under pain of being declared dead."

Financial Note.

Jerrold—Could you pay me that 30 shillings you owe me? I owe Hobart 40 shillings and want to pay him. Can I borrow 10 shillings off you?

Hobart—Well, I'll tell you what. You pay Johnson what you owe him, and then I'll borrow 10 shillings off Johnson and pay you.

Dejected.

Pretty Young Thing (to the poet)—I believe that in your heart of hearts you're glad to hear what we're engaged to be. In front running, you know. You see we are to furnish copy immediately before. I'm trying not to bear it.—Chicago Tribune.

The Old Year and the New

ANOTHER year has found us just as we were getting comfortably used to the idea that summer had really gone.

Busy people never have time to dwell very much on the passing of the seasons.

The days are so full of tasks and Father Time is always catching up and getting ahead of us in spite of his advanced age.

It is always the same old story!

Spring surprises us with its blossoms and its bursting brooks and then summer has come and gone before we know it.

Very few of us stop to think that this swiftness of time in its passing indicates that we are really living rather than lolling through life.

It is only when the days hang upon our hands that we know how blessed are those other times when we have to make lists of the many things we have to do and get up early mornings to begin them.

Of course we are likely to complain that we get so little done, especially at this time, when the calendars tell us that another 365 days have become a part of yesterday's 7,000 years.

We look back regretfully and repine that we have so little to record in the way of achievement, beyond the mere act of living from day to day and from week to week.

But living in the right spirit, striving, if not always accomplishing and completing the tasks we set ourselves, is nothing to regret.

It comes near to that simple life that sounds so grand and inspiring when it is lived in the woods, but which is quite as fine when lived in a big city.

There is no doubt that when we try to set up standards of happiness and contentment and peace at the close of a year that has had its rifts of cloudshine and its stretches of shade, that it is impossible to put wealth, or fame, or success, personal popularity, beauty or even health itself forward as the great, good thing that makes life worth living.

The thing that counts is the ability and the desire to feel an interest in things, in events and persons—in the game of life itself.

All the other blessings pall unless that interest remains. It is very closely akin to health for it is a part of youth, of vitality, of life.

It has become the general practice to speed the departure of the old year with every indication of rejoicing, welcoming in the new with acclaim and expressions of satisfaction.

It is natural and wholesome to look forward, but those of us who fail to include the brick of gratitude in the building of our characters should learn to omit our complaints of the luck the old year has brought us.

In truth, the new year will be to a great extent like the old—what we make it and how we take it.

Things will happen in accordance with the same laws that guide the big earth of which we are a small part.

So we can greet 1906 in a calm and happy manner, rather than with any insufestations of frenzied joy at its coming, and let us have the good-manners to speed our parting guest, 1905, politely.

With all his faults we know him for what he was and the new year is as yet a stranger to us.

We can hope and believe that all good things will come with him, but let us avoid the hackneyed congratulation on the passing of a twelve-month that probably treated us better than we deserved.

The dawning of another January is invariably the time for what are called "good resolutions," which translate themselves into rash promises, usually broken before the new year is well under way.

That was the old-fashioned way of expressing an intention to reform, and many faithful and people kept on from youth to old age making these good resolutions every 31st of December, finding themselves each year further from perfection than ever.

Good resolutions are not at present, or at least not so notey as they used to be at this time.

They have become popular material for the comic papers and everybody knows what a joke they are.

Nevertheless, the close of a year is a capital time to take a look back, a retrospect in which we can see the faults that are on the mend with us, or the ones that have grown stronger and grown stronger.

Maybe some new tendency has sprung up which does not promise well.

At all events if we are able to get a new view of our characters it is through a searchlight cast home through the window of introspection.

It is only when we blindly console ourselves as right in everything that we are all wrong.

It is only when we blindly console ourselves as right in everything that we are all wrong.

So if your look back shows you mistakes and errors and misdeeds, be glad that the New Year gives you a clean slate to try for the right road and the true goal.

Be thankful for the mental perspective when you see it with clear sight—with new true eyes.

There is no need of making resolutions, for right seeing means right thinking and right thinking is the path to right living.

Perhaps your faults are those mean little ones which you would like to exchange in a bunch for one noble sin, but there are no exchanges of that sort or we should all be noble sinners.

The petty faults are the thorns that cluster round some of the finest roses in life's big garden, crowding, jarring, overtopping one another in their eagerness to get to the light.

Maybe the old year has been a good friend in some special instances that you can recall.

Perhaps it brought you back with a short, sharp shock from a too arrogant happiness or an overconfident success.

Be glad of that jar, even though it kept you stirred up for awhile.

Perhaps the past 12 months have healed some breath or brought some ship home, the white sails of which you have been watching wistfully for months or years far out at sea.

Be glad of that.

Perhaps some millstone has fallen from you and you stand free at last on the great highway with long, manacled arms reached out to the sky.

Be glad!

Or peace has settled on a troubled ocean and you can greet the sunrise with a smile and a prayer of thankfulness for another day.

Maybe there is a cradle in one corner of your home this New Year's eve with a most important guest cuddled in down blankets and rose-leaf palms upturned for your kisses.

No need to tell you to be glad.

Or success has come to crown some effort of which you have toiled rather wearily, hardly daring to hope.

Or if it has been withheld, be glad that you have nevertheless tried. It will all come to you some day.

The old year has taught us lessons.

Let us profit by them and enter into the new armed with experience rather than plunge into it as though it were a rose garden.

It is quite as full of danger and conflict and clouds as the old friend that is going.

Let us wish it will have even as much sunshine and gladness and joy.

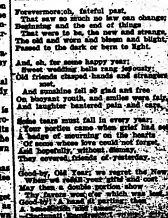
We can meet it with splendid hope and lively faith—for those two qualities are what make our dreams come true.

Let us cherish a few good hopes that it may bring us the things we stand in need of—health, happiness, good friends anccess, joy and the clear vision that will teach us to discern the false from the true.

May it leave us our beliefs and our ideals.

Teach us to love more and to hate not at all.

To be content with the blessings that we have.



To cultivate sweetness and good nature rather than exclusiveness.

To meet the world with a smile.

To stifle criticism of things and people.

Never to make little of our own.

THE POOR OLD YEAR.

Hit Him Again. He's Got No Friends.

GOOD-BY, OLD YEAR.

By Clifford Kana Stout.

Good-by, Old Year, your mission ends
With midnight chimes and all is done;
The records writ with joy or loss,
The days profitless and days won.
Are hung as trophies round the rime,
And those are written with other time.

Farewell, faithful past,
That saw so much so few can change;
Beginning the end of things
Dead vows to be, the new and strange.
The old and worn and the fresh and bright,
Head to the dark or born to light.

And, oh, for some happy year!
Forever shedding balm upon
Old friends clasped hands and strengthen cast.
And sunshine fall all glad and free
On buoyant youth, and smiles were fair,
And laughter banished pain and care.

Some tears must fall in every year;
Your portion came when grief had sway
A badge of sorrowing on the heart!
Of some whose love could not forget.
Oh, hopefully, without, farewell!
They served friends of yesterday.

Good-by, Old Year; we regret the New Brings us such poor gifts who come
May them a double portion show
Thy favors and of gentler mien
Come with a greeting, then
A benefactor, and not a foe.

Rheumatism Found Something Good Even in Railroad Accident.

A state senator of New York says he was riding in the smoking car on a fast one-night run in the northern part of the state two weeks ago, and in the seat in front of him sat a jovial drummer. He was one of those wide-awake, never-let-anyone-get-the-better-of-him style of men. Presently the train stopped to take water and the conductor neglected to send back a flagman. A limited express, running at the rate of ten miles an hour, came along and bumped the rear end of the first train. The drummer was lifted from his seat and pitched, head first, against the seat ahead. His silk hat was jammed clear down over his ears. He picked himself up and settled back in his seat. No bones had been broken. Then he pulled off his hat, drew a long breath and, straightening up, said: "Huily gee! Well, they didn't get by us, anyway!"

THOUGHT CHILD WOULD DIE.

Whole Body Covered with Cuban Itch —Cuticura Remedies Cured at Cost of Seventy-Five Cents.

"My little boy, when only six months of three months, caught the Cuban itch. Sores broke out from his head to the bottom of his feet. He would itch and claw himself and cry all the time. He could not sleep day or night, and a light dress is all he could wear. I called one of our best doctors to treat him, but he seemed to get worse. He suffered so terribly that my husband said he believed he would have to die. I had almost given up hope when a lady friend told me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I used the Cuticura Soap and applied the Cuticura Ointment and he at once fell into a sleep, and he slept with ease for the first time since two months. After three applications the sores began to dry up, and in just two weeks from the day I commenced to use the Cuticura Remedies my baby was entirely well. The treatment only cost 75c, and it would have gladly paid $100 if I could not have got it cheaper. I feel safe in saying that the Cuticura Remedies saved his life. He is now a boy of five years. Mrs. Zana Miller, Union City, Ind., R. F. D. No. 1, Branch Co., Mich., May 17, 1906."

NOT WHAT HE MEANT.

"I am delighted to see you! It seems good to see old faces again."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

GREAT RELIEF

"Are you still troubled by your neighbor's chickens?" asked one man of another.

"Not a bit," was the answer. "They are kept shut up now."

"How did you manage it?"

"Why, every night I put a lot of eggs in the grass very carefully, and every morning, when my neighbor was looking, I went out and brought them in."

Not for That Kind of Fire.
The Edmonton firemen are complaining about people sending in alarms from the new boxes by trying to post letters in them. A young fellow was noticed the other day gazing lovingly at a letter as he stood on the street corner. After fondling it for a moment, he went up to a fire alarm box and tried to get it inside. A passer-by, who had been watching him, however, intervened: "I know your heart's on fire," he observed, "but I think you had hotter use the box at the next corner."
